LOS ANGELES COUNTY FLOOD CONTROL DISTRICT, Appellant,

v.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON COMPANY (a California corporation), Respondent.

L. A. 24935.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
Dec. 19, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 14, 1959.

Action by flood control district for declaratory relief against public utilities maintaining facilities that must be relocated in public streets to make way for the construction of storm drains by the district, wherein a public utility cross-complained. A severance was granted as to the utility. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., the flood control district appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that the cost of relocating utilities in public streets made necessary by construction of storm drains by the flood control district must be borne by the utilities involved.

Judgment reversed with directions.

Carter, Schauer and McComb, JJ., dissented.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇐688

Generally, a public utility accepts franchise rights in public streets subject to an implied obligation to relocate its facilities therein at its own expense when necessary to make way for proper governmental use of the streets.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇐708

The laying of storm drains by a municipality is a governmental function as distinct from a proprietary function.

3. Levees and Flood Control ⇐20

Fact that principal use of drains using the public streets would be to drain the entire area served and drainage of the streets was only incidental thereto did not require that the flood control district pay for the relocation of facilities of public utilities that must be relocated to make way for construction of the storm drains by the district, since such use does not affect the character of the public use or limit the public's right in the public streets. West's Ann.Pub.Util.Code, §§ 6201–6302; Los Angeles County Flood Control Act, § 2, West's Ann.Water Code, App. § 28–2; West's Ann.Const. art. 11, § 19.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇐57

Grants of power to municipalities are to be strictly construed and any doubts resolved against the existence of the power claimed.

5. Levees and Flood Control ⇐1

The Los Angeles County Flood Control Act authorizing the district to construct, maintain and operate drains involves the exercise of the police power of the state. West's Ann.Water Code, App. § 28–2.

6. Gas ⇐7(1)

Where gas company accepted its franchise rights in public streets subject to implied obligations to relocate its facilities at its own expense when necessary to make way for proper governmental uses of the streets, there was no need in the Los Angeles County Flood Control Act authorizing the district to construct, maintain and operate drains to impose such obligations on the gas company to relocate its facilities at its own expense when necessary to make way for proper governmental uses of the streets. Los Angeles County Flood Control Act, § 2, West's Ann.Water Code, App. § 28–2.

7. Levees and Flood Control ⇐20

The amendment to the Los Angeles County Flood Control Act providing that nothing in the act shall authorize the district in exercising its powers to require the relocation of any facility or any other structure unless just compensation therefor be first made as required by the constitution is not construable as meaning that compensation is to be made in the manner and to the extent that would be "required" if the constitutional provisions required compensation, so as to obligate the district to pay for utility relocations unless constitutional provisions so required. Los Angeles County Flood Control Act, § 16 as amended 1953, West's Ann.Water Code, App. § 28–16.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Required".

8. Gas ⇐7(1)

The provision of the Los Angeles County Flood Control Act granting the district a franchise to use the streets does not mean that the district rights are no greater than those of any other franchise holder and hence that it must bear the costs of relocating the facilities of an earlier user of the streets such as a gas company. Los Angeles County Flood Control Act, §§ 15, 16, West's Ann.Water Code, App. §§ 28–15, 28–16.

9. Levees and Flood Control ⇐20

Enumeration in the Franchise Act of 1937 what the legislature considers the most important of a utility's obligation could not under the maxim "expressio unius exclusio alterius est" be interpreted as an express direction of the legislature to pass a utility's common-law obligations over to the taxpayers of relocating its utilities at its own expense to make way for construction of storm drains by flood control district in the public streets. West's Ann.Pub.Util. Code, §§ 6294, 6297, 6201–6302; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1069.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Plaintiff, Los Angeles County Flood Control District, appeals from a judgment entered in favor of defendant, Southern California Edison Company, in an action brought for declaratory relief against numerous public utilities maintaining facilities that must be relocated in the public streets to make way for the construction of storm drains by the District. Edison cross-complained to recover the costs of certain relocations and for declaratory relief with respect to others not included in the complaint. A severance was granted as to Edison, and the only parties to the trial and this appeal are Edison and the District.

The relocations involved are all located within various cities in the County of Los Angeles other than the City of Los Angeles. No question is presented as to the cost of relocating facilities in the unincorporated area of the county or within the City of Los Angeles. In the cities that are involved, Edison operates under various types of franchises; franchises granted pursuant to Article XI, section 19 of the California Constitution as it existed before 1911, franchises granted by charter cities, franchises granted by both charter and non-charter cities pursuant to the Franchise Act of 1937 (now Public Utilities Code §§ 6201–6302), and other franchises not granted under the 1937 Act but which Edison contends have the same legal effect for the purposes of this action.

The District is engaged in a comprehensive flood control program involving among other things the construction of storm drains throughout its territory. It is conceded that Edison may properly be required to relocate its facilities in the public streets to make way for the construction of the drains. The sole issue is whether Edison or the District must bear the cost of such relocations.

[1, 2] In Southern California Gas Company v. Los Angeles, 50 Cal.2d 713, 329 P. 2d 289, 290, we stated that "In the absence of a provision to the contrary it has generally been held that a public utility accepts franchise rights in public streets subject to an implied obligation to relocate its facilities therein at its own expense when necessary to make way for a proper governmental use of the streets. [Citations.] The laying of sewers is a governmental as distinct from a proprietary function under the foregoing rule. [Citations.]" In this respect no distinction has been made between sanitary sewers and storm drains or sewers. New Orleans Gas Co. v. Drainage Comm., 197 U.S. 453, 461–462, 25 S.Ct. 471, 49 L. Ed. 831; Chicago, B. & Q. Railway Co. v. State of Illinois ex rel. Drainage Com'rs, 200 U.S. 561, 591, 26 S.Ct. 341, 50 L.Ed. 596; see also, Matter of Leake & Watts Orphan Home, 92 N.Y. 116, 119; City of Cincinnati v. Penny, 21 Ohio St. 499, 508; Stoudinger v. City of Newark, 28 N.J.Eq. 446, 448; Cummins v. City of Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am.Rep. 618, 625; Scranton-Pascagoula Realty Co. v. City of Pascagoula, 157 Miss. 498, 128 So. 73, 74; Kiley v. Bond, 114 Mich. 447, 72 N.W. 253, 254.

[3] Edison contends, however, that the use of public streets for storm drains can only be considered a primary use of the streets when the principal purpose of the drains is to drain the streets themselves. When, as in this case, the principal use of the drains will be to drain the entire areas served and drainage of the streets will be only incidental thereto, Edison contends that use for drainage is on a parity with its own use, and that therefore the District must pay for relocating Edison's pre-existing facilities. We find no basis in the cases for the distinction Edison seeks to draw based on what may be the primary purpose of any particular drain. Thus in the New Orleans Gas Company case, the defendant's purpose was to provide drainage for the entire city and not merely the streets thereof. It would be manifestly impossible to provide drainage for the public streets without also draining the surrounding land, and the right of abutting owners to discharge surface waters onto the public streets is recognized as a customary use of the streets. Portman v. Clementina Co., 147 Cal.App.2d 651, 659–660, 305 P.2d 963; see also, Kramer v. City of Los Angeles, 147 Cal. 668, 674–676, 82 P. 334. Moreover, the fact that a comprehensive flood control system requires construction of trunk drains that primarily service areas other than the streets under or across which they are located does not affect the character of the public use or limit the public's right in the public streets. Thus, in the Los Angeles Gas Company case, although the city's sewer served incidentally at most the county street under which it passed, we held that the company's franchise obligations were not affected. "Such obligations rest on the paramount right of the people as a whole to use the public streets wherever located, and the fact that a franchise is granted by one political subdivision as an agent of the state [citations], does not defeat the right of another such agent acting in its governmental capacity to invoke the public right for the public benefit. [Citations.]" Southern California Gas Co. v. Los Angeles, 329 P.2d at page 291.

[4–6] Edison contends that any obligation to relocate its facilities at its own expense rests in the police power of the state and that the state has not delegated its police power in this respect to the District. It invokes the rule that grants of power to municipal corporations are to be strictly construed and any doubts resolved against the existence of the power claimed. See, Harden v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.2d 630, 641, 284 P.2d 9, and cases cited. Section 2 of the Los Angeles County Flood Control Act expressly authorizes the district to "construct, maintain and operate," the drains here involved. West's Water Code—Appendix, § 28–2. In doing so it is exercising the police power of the state. House v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 25 Cal.2d 384, 392, 153 P.2d 950; O'Hara v. Los Angeles County Flood etc. Dist., 19 Cal.2d 61, 64, 119 P.2d 23. By insisting that Edison is obligated to relocate its facilities at its own expense, the District is not seeking to exercise an implied authority to impose additional burdens upon Edison, but is relying on the claimed existence of obligations that arose when Edison accepted its various franchises. See, City of San Antonio v. San Antonio St. Ry. Co., 15 Tex. Civ.App. 1, 39 S.W. 136, 139; New Orleans Gaslight Company v. Drainage Commission of New Orleans, 111 La. 838, 35 So. 929, 933, affirmed 197 U.S. 453, 25 S.Ct. 471, 49 L.Ed. 831. If, as the District contends, Edison accepted its franchise rights in public streets subject to implied obligations to relocate its facilities at its own expense when necessary to make way for proper governmental uses of the streets, there was no need expressly to authorize the district to impose such obligations, for Edison had already assumed them.

[7] Edison contends, however, that the 1953 amendment to section 16 of the Los Angeles County Flood Control Act provides for the payment of its relocation costs by the District. The amendment, which follows the Act's enumeration of the powers of the board of supervisors of the District, states, "provided, however, that nothing in this act contained shall be deemed to authorize said district in exercising any of its powers to take, damage or destroy any property or to require the removal, relocation, alteration or destruction of any bridge, railroad, wire line, pipeline, facility or other structure unless just compensation therefor be first made, in the manner and to the extent required by the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of California." Stats.1953, Ch. 1139, p. 2635, § 1, West's Ann.Water Code, App. § 28–16. This provision cannot reasonably be interpreted, as Edison contends, to mean that compensation is to be made in the manner and to the extent that would be required if the constitutional provisions required compensation. It clearly provides for compensation only as "required" by those provisions. Had the Legislature intended that the District should go beyond constitutional requirements in making compensation it is reasonable to assume that it would have adopted language similar to that found in many other flood control acts adopted before, after, and contemporaneously with the 1953 amendment. For example the Marin County Flood Control and Water Conservation District Act provides that the district shall "in addition to the damage for the taking, injury, or destruction of property, also pay the cost of removal, reconstruction or relocation of any structure, railways, mains, pipes, conduits, wires, cable, poles, of any public utility which is required to be moved to a new location * * *." Stats.1953, c. 666, p. 1915, 1919; West Water Code—Appendix, § 68–5(13). It is true that if the amendment does no more than require compliance with the state and federal constitutions, its enactment was unnecessary, and given the Legislature's awareness of the problem as evidenced by provisions of other flood control acts enacted at the same session, it is at least dubious that by expressly reaffirming the District's constitutional obligations, it was intended by implication to negative others that might also exist. Had the Legislature in 1953 clearly not wanted the District to pay relocation expenses, it could have expressed this intent also more clearly than by merely reaffirming the District's constitutional obligations. Nevertheless, the fact remains that the plain language of the 1953 amendment provides for payment only to the "extent required" by the constitutional provisions, and if it is anything more than an admonition to obey the constitutions, it constitutes legislative recognition that the District is not obligated to pay for utility relocations unless constitutional provisions so require.

[8] Edison contends that section 15 of the Act grants the District a franchise to use the public streets and that therefore its rights therein are no greater than those of any other franchise holder and, accordingly, that the later user must bear the costs of relocating the earlier user's facilities. Essentially the same contention was answered adversely to Edison's position in the Southern California Gas Company case where we held that a franchise exercised by a city in its governmental capacity is not subordinate to a prior franchise granted to a public utility. Southern California Gas Co. v. Los Angeles, supra, 50 Cal.2d 713, 329 P.2d 289.

[9] Edison contends that the express terms of the Franchise Act of 1937 [1] define its obligation to relocate its facilities at its own expense and that as to franchises granted pursuant to that act any other similar obligations are excluded by clear implication. We rejected a similar contention based on the maxim expressio unius exclusio alterius est in the Southern California Gas Company case, and although there are some differences between the franchise provisions involved, the rule of strict construction of public grants in the public interest (Knoxville Water Company v. Knoxville, 200 U.S. 22, 33–34, 26 S.Ct. 224, 50 L.Ed. 353; City of Sacramento v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 173 Cal. 787, 791, 161 P. 978; County of L. A. v. Southern Cal. Tel. Co., 32 Cal.2d 378, 384, 196 P.2d 773; Civ.Code, § 1069) compels the same conclusion here. As in that case most of the provisions relied on as excluding any implied obligations may reasonably be interpreted as no more than partial expressions of common-law rights and obligations inserted out of an abundance of caution or by way of example only. It is true that section 6297 of the Public Utilities Code may go beyond a restatement of the common-law rule by requiring the utility to remove rather than merely relocate its facilities to make way for public travel, but if it does so, a point we need not decide, it supplies an additional reason why the maxim expressio unius does not apply. Had the statute referred only to removal it might cast doubt on the right to relocate instead when relocation would be sufficient to subserve the public interest. There was thus a special reason for mentioning relocation for the specified purposes in section 6297, and it may not therefore be inferred that relocation was included to exclude by implication obligations to relocate for other purposes. City of Lexington ex rel. Menefee v. Commercial Bank, 130 Mo.App. 687, 108 S.W. 1095, 1096. In short, here as in the Los Angeles Gas Company case, the enumeration of what were considered to be the most important of the utilities' obligations cannot reasonably be interpreted as an "express direction of the Legislature" passing the utilities' other common-law obligations over to the taxpayer. Transit Commission v. Long Island R. Co., 253 N.Y. 345, 171 N.E. 565, 568; New York Tunnel Authority v. Consolidated Edison Co., 295 N.Y. 467, 68 N.E.2d 445, 448–449; Town of St. Helena v. San Francisco etc. Ry., 24 Cal.App. 71, 78, 140 P. 600; County Court v. White, 79 W.Va. 475, 91 S.E. 350, 352, L.R.A.1917D, 660; Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co. v. City of Chicago, 413 Ill. 457, 109 N.E.2d 777, 787; Nicholas Di Menna & Sons v. City of New York, Sup., 114 N.Y.S.2d 347, 350.

No contention is made that the provisions of any of the franchises granted to

1. "The grantee of a franchise under this chapter shall construct, install, and maintain all pipes, conduits, poles, wires, and appurtenances in accordance and in conformity with all of the ordinances and rules adopted by the legislative body of the municipality in the exercise of its police powers and not in conflict with the paramount authority of the State, and, as to state highways, subject to the laws relating to the location and maintenance of such facilities therein." Pub. Util.Code, § 6294.

"The grantee shall remove or relocate without expense to the municipality any facilities installed, used, and maintained under the franchise if and when made necessary by any lawful change of grade, alignment, or width of any public street, way, alley, or place, including the constructure of any subway or viaduct, by the municipality." Pub.Util.Code, § 6297.

Edison other than pursuant to the 1937 Act are more favorable to its position than those considered above, and accordingly it is unnecessary to consider such other franchises separately.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to enter judgment for the District declaring its rights in accord with the views herein expressed.

I dissent.

The majority opinion in the case at bar is another link in the chain of confusion which exists in the opinions of this court which involve the exercise of the police power and the exercise of the power of eminent domain. I pointed out in my concurring opinion in Southern California Gas Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 50 Cal.2d 713, 329 P.2d 289, that cases in which the right of eminent domain was involved are cited as authority in cases involving the exercise of the police power and police power cases are cited in support of cases involving the eminent domain power.

I am unable to understand on just what theory the majority relies in the case under consideration. It appears that it must be the police power given to the flood control district by the majority of this court which is the basis for its holding that the Edison Company must relocate its facilities at its own expense.

It has long been a rule of law in this state that political subdivisions such as drainage districts, irrigation districts, and the like, are entities of limited powers—those whch have been expressly granted them by the Legislature. Stimson v. Alessandro Irr. Dist., 135 Cal. 389, 392, 393, 67 P. 496, 1034; City of Madera v. Black, 181 Cal. 306, 310–312, 184 P. 397; Leeman v. Perris Irrigation Dist., 140 Cal. 540, 543, 74 P. 24; Bottoms v. Madera Irr. Dist., 74 Cal.App. 681, 694, 695, 242 P. 100; Harden v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.2d 630, 642, 284 P.2d 9. The only qualification to this rule is that certain powers strictly necessary to carry out those expressly granted by the Legislature are implied.

The Los Angeles County Flood Control District was created by the Legislature in 1915 (Stats.1915, ch. 755, pp. 1502–1512, §§ 1–23 inclusive). The act is now found in Deering's Water Code as Act 4463, sections 1–23 inclusive, pages 325–354.

Section 2 sets forth the objectives of the act as providing for the control and conservation of the flood, storm and other waste waters of the district "and to conserve such waters for beneficial and useful purposes by spreading, storing, retaining or causing to percolate into the soil within said district, or to save or conserve in any manner, all or any of such waters, and to protect from damage from such flood or storm waters, the harbors, waterways, public highways and property in said district." The same section then provides: "Said Los Angeles County Flood Control District is hereby declared to be a body corporate and politic, and as such shall have power:

"1. To have perpetual succession.

"2. To sue and be sued * * *

"3. To adopt a seal * * *

"4. To take by grant, purchase, gift, devise or lease * * * real or personal property of every kind within or without the district necessary to the full exercise of its power.

"5. To acquire or contract to acquire lands, rights of way, easements, privileges and property of every kind, and construct, maintain and operate any and all works or improvements * * *

"6. To have and exercise the right of eminent domain, and in the manner provided by law for the condemnation of private property for public use, to take any property necessary to carry out any of the objects or purposes of this act, whether such property be already devoted to the same use by any district or other public corporation or agency or otherwise, and may condemn any existing works or improvements in said district now used to control flood or storm waters, or to conserve such flood or storm waters or to protect any property in said district from damage from such flood or storm waters." (Emphasis added.)

Subsection 7 provides for the incurment of debt and the issuance of bonds; subsection 7a provides for the borrowing of federal funds; subsection 7b provides for the sale of bonds to the county; subsection 8 provides for the collection of taxes; subsection 9 provides for the making of contracts; subsection 10 provides for the granting of easements; subsection 11 provides for the disposal of rubbish; subsection 12 provides for the payment of bond premiums; subsection 13 provides for the disposal of property. The subsections to section 2 as just set forth provide all the powers granted to the district by the Legislature. It is apparent that the district is not granted the right to exercise the state's police power.

Article I, section 14, of the California Constitution provides, in part, that "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner * * *." This refers to the right of eminent domain.

In 1953, section 16 of Act 4463 was amended to provide for certain powers in the board of supervisors in the exercise of the district's right of eminent domain. The amendment provides, in part, as follows: "[P]rovided, however, that nothing in this act contained shall be deemed to authorize said district in exercising any of its powers to take, damage or destroy any property or to require the removal, relocation, alteration or destruction of any bridge, railroad, wireline, pipeline, facility or other structure unless just compensation therefor be first made, in the manner and to the extent required by the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of California." (Emphasis added.)

In my opinion, the Legislature of this state could not have more clearly expressed its meaning: That the relocation of any facility was an exercise by the district of its power of eminent domain and that compensation should be made therefor as provided in the California Constitution, article I, section 14.

The reasoning found in the majority opinion on the meaning and effect of the 1953 amendment heretofore set forth, while extremely ambiguous and a masterpiece of confusion, apparently means that since the Constitution of California does not spell out in words of one syllable that relocations of various types of facilities are to be compensated in money, the Legislature did not really mean what it said—that it intended just compensation to be made for such relocations. It is first argued in the majority opinion that if the amendment only required the district to abide by its constitutional obligations, the amendment was unnecessary; and then that it was "dubious" that the Legislature intended by implication to negative "others" (probably constitutional obligations) that "might also exist." Then the following unclear language appears: "Had the Legislature in 1953 clearly not wanted the District to pay relocation expenses, it could have expressed this intent also more clearly than by merely reaffirming the District's constitutional obligations. Nevertheless, the fact remains that the plain language of the 1953 amendment provides for payment only to the 'extent required' by the constitutional provisions, and if it is anything more than an admonition to obey the constitutions, it constitutes legislative recognition that the District is not obligated to pay for utility relocations unless constitutional provisions so require." When the Legislature clearly states that compensation is to be made for relocations how is it possible for the majority to assume that the Legislature clearly did not want the district to pay for such relocations? The entire section (16) deals with the district's right of eminent domain and the supervisors' duties and powers in connection therewith. The Constitutions provide that private property shall not be taken or damaged without just compensation being made therefor. There is no reason whatsoever for the nebulous reasoning and negative thinking set forth in the majority opinion.

If we assume that the theory on which the conclusion reached by the majority is that the district is exercising the police power of the state, a complete answer is that the district has no police power. In the majority opinion is the following statement: "Section 2 of the Los Angeles County Flood Control Act expressly authorizes the district to 'construct, maintain and operate,' the drains here involved. West's Water Code—Appendix, § 28–2. In doing so it is exercising the police power of the state. House v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 25 Cal.2d 384, 392, 153 P.2d 950; O'Hara v. Los Angeles County Flood etc. Dist., 19 Cal.2d 61, 64, 119 P.2d 23." In constructing, maintaining and operating the drains here involved the district was exercising a power expressly granted to it by the Legislature of this state. It is true that the grant of the power was given by the state as an exercise of the state's police power but that is not to say that in the delegation of the powers specifically enumerated in the act creating the district the Legislature also granted to the district the state's police power in other respects. In the House case this court reversed a judgment of dismissal entered after the trial court had sustained a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint for damages to her property occasioned by the district's negligence in planning, construction and maintenance of certain flood control channel work. We noted that the plaintiff "rests her right of recovery upon article I, section 14, of the state Constitution, which provides that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation to the owner. The trial court erred in failing to sustain the constitutional basis of the plaintiff's claim under the distinguishable concept of her pleading." House v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 25 Cal.2d 384, 386, 153 P.2d 950, 951 (emphasis added). While the court spoke of the police power the case was not decided upon the theory that the flood control district was exercising the police power of the state. It was said: "While the police power is very broad in concept, it is not without restriction in relation to the taking or damaging of property. When it passes beyond proper bounds in its invasion of property rights, it in effect comes within the purview of the law of eminent domain and its exercise requires compensation. [Citations.] In fact, on the point of a governmental agency's liability for damages arising in connection with its undertaking construction work, the prevailing opinion in the Archer case [Archer v. City of Los Angeles, 19 Cal.2d 19, 119 P.2d 1] supra, does not purport to dispute the settled principle that public necessity limits the right to exact uncompensated submission from the property owner if his property be either damaged, taken or destroyed. Rather it is expressly stated there in the prevailing opinion (19 Cal.2d 23–24, 119 P.2d [1] at page 4): 'The state or its subdivisions may take or damage private property without compensation if such action is essential to safeguard public health, safety or morals. [Citing authorities.] In certain circumstances, however, the taking or damaging of private property for such a purpose is not prompted by so great a necessity as to be justified without proper compensation to the owner. [Citing authorities.]' (Italics added.) Thus there is recognized the incontestable proposition that the exercise of the police power, though an essential attribute of sovereignty for the public welfare and arbitrary in its nature, cannot extend beyond the necessities of the case and be made a cloak to destroy constitutional rights as to the inviolateness of private property." 25 Cal. 2d at pages 388, 389, 153 P.2d at page 952. The House case, with its reliance upon the Archer case, demonstrates again the confusion which exists in the cases. The House case involved an action against the flood control district. The Archer case involved an action against the city of Los Angeles. Article XI, section 11, of the California Constitution provides that "Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." This is known as the constitutional police power provision. It does not provide that any flood control, or sanitary, or mosquito abatement district may exercise the police power of the state. O'Hara v. Los Angeles County Flood Control etc. Dist., 19 Cal.2d 61, 119 P.2d 23, 24, also relied upon by the majority for its statement that the district was exercising the "police power" of the state was decided upon the theory that a lower riparian owner has no redress for injury to his land caused by improvements in the stream when there has been no diversion of water out of its natural channel. The following statement is found in the majority opinion in the O'Hara case: "Compensation for private property taken or damaged for a public use must be made under article I, section 14, only when the taking or damaging of property is not so essential to the public health, safety, and morals as to be justified under the 'police power,' and the injury is one which would give rise to a cause of action on the part of the owner if it were inflicted by a private person. Archer v. City of Los Angeles [19 Cal.2d 19, 119 P.2d 1], this day decided." Again, it will be noted, that while the flood control district was involved, the Archer case, which involved the city, was cited as authority. While the city of Los Angeles may, by constitutional authority, exercise both the police power and the power of eminent domain, a flood control district has only the authority and powers specifically delegated to it by the Legislature. In this particular instance the flood control district of Los Angeles County may exercise only the power of eminent domain and, by reason of the 1953 amendment to the act as heretofore set forth, the required relocation of certain enumerated facilities by the district is considered by the Legislature to be an exercise of its power of eminent domain and the owner of the facility must be compensated for such relocation. It is only where the state, or one of its political subdivisions having the right to exercise the police power, is involved that the so-called "twilight zone" comes into play and the heretofore quoted language from the Archer case is pertinent. In the case at bar, as in the House and O'Hara cases, a political subdivision, the Los Angeles Flood Control District, is involved and it is emphatically pointed out that the Los Angeles Flood Control District has no right to exercise the police power of the state inasmuch as the Legislature has not seen fit to so authorize it in the act which created it and the amendments thereto.

The 1953 amendment to the act was not an "unnecessary" legislative act as intimated in the majority opinion. The purpose thereof was to make certain that a required relocation of certain facilities by the district was part of its eminent domain power. While the language therein specifically requiring compensation to be paid therefor might be considered unnecessary in view of the constitutional requirement that just compensation be paid for the taking of private property, under the reasoning of the majority it was obviously necessary—even if, under the holding here, quite futile.

I recently prepared a concurring opinion upholding the right of the city of Los Angeles to require a utility company to relocate its facilities without compensation to make way for a sewer line which the city was installing in a public street or road (Southern California Gas Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 50 Cal.2d 713, 329 P.2d 289). In said opinion I stated that under the authorities the city was performing a governmental function and was exercising the police power granted to it by the Constitution of this state. It should be perfectly clear from that opinion that the rule announced in the majority opinion there cannot be relied upon in support of the position of the plaintiff here, as neither the Constitution nor the statutes of this state purport to give the plaintiff any of the power exercised by the city in that case.

In my opinion the judgment of the trial court in favor of defendant and cross-complainant, Southern California Edison Company, should be affirmed.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

I am in accord with the principles of law discussed by Mr. Justice CARTER and concur in his conclusion that the judgment of the trial court in favor of Southern California Edison Company should be affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 14, 1959.

Action for restitution. From an order of the Superior Court, San Joaquin County, George F. Buck, J., refusing to allow as costs on appeal, the amount of premium on a bond to preserve attachment pending the appeal, the plaintiff appeals. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that the evidence established that the bond was necessary so as to entitle the successful plaintiff to costs on appeal of the amount of premium on the bond.

Opinion, 323 P.2d 1039, vacated.

1. Costs ⇐251

The statute providing that the cost of attachment bond shall be included as costs allowed to a party entitled to costs unless the court determined that the bond "was" unnecessary, manifests the intention that the necessity for the bond be measured as of the time of perfecting the appeal. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 946, 1035.

2. Costs ⇐264

Evidence of property owned by judgment debtor in California established that it was necessary for the corporate creditor to file a bond to preserve attachment pending the appeal and hence the refusal to allow as costs on appeal the amount of premium on the bond was error. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 946, 1035.

In action for restitution, that plaintiff filed its notice of appeal 41 days after giving and receiving notice of entry of judgment did not render ineffective, bond given by plaintiff in order to preserve attachment pending an appeal so as to preclude recovery of premium on the bond as costs on successful prosecution of the appeal. CARTER, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order refusing to allow as costs on appeal the amount of the premium on a bond to preserve attachments pending appeal.

This is part of a long line of litigation which, it will be recalled, began when Emil Palermo, the owner and lessor of the Star Theater in Stockton, brought an action for declaratory relief against the lessee, Stockton Theatres, Inc., in an endeavor to have the lease declared void because the stockholders of the lessee were Japanese nationals. This court reversed the trial court (Palermo v. Stockton Theatres, Inc., 32 Cal.2d 53, 195 P.2d 1) holding that the lease was valid and that under it, Stockton Theatres was entitled to possession of the theater as tenant thereof. Stockton Theatres then brought an action for restitution, and after trial, in which plaintiff was held entitled to recover from Palermo the sum of $13,658.75, both parties appealed. Plaintiff prevailed on its appeal and the judgment of the lower court was modified to provide that Stockton Theatres recover the sum of $45,992.12 and that it was entitled to costs on appeal (Stockton Theatres, Inc., v. Palermo, 121 Cal.App.2d 616, 264 P.2d 74).

On the appeal in the restitution case, Stockton Theatres argued that it was entitled to a total amount of $130,000. The bond premium necessary for a sufficient bond to preserve its attachment during the pendency of the appeal amounted to a total sum of $6,980.49. When the remittitur came down, Stockton Theatres filed its memorandum of costs and disbursements on appeal; Palermo objected to the inclusion of the bond premium as an item of costs. The trial court granted Palermo's motion to tax costs on appeal as to this item on the ground that section 1035 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply at the appellate stage (Stockton Theatres, Inc., v. Palermo, 47 Cal.2d 469, 304 P.2d 7).[1]

Section 1035 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "Whenever in this code or by other provision of law costs are allowed to a party to an action or other proceeding, such costs shall include the premium on any surety bond which was procured by the party entitled to recover costs in connection with the action or proceeding unless the court determines that the bond was unnecessary." (Emphasis added.) We reversed and the "trial court [was] directed to determine the necessity for the bond required to preserve the attachment pending appeal, and, if it is determined that such bond was necessary, allow the amount of the premium paid therefor as an item of the costs on appeal to which plaintiff is entitled. The amount so allowed to be a lien upon any property of Palermo covered by the attachment heretofore levied." 47 Cal.2d 469, 478, 479, 304 P.2d 12.

Thereafter, the trial court, after taking evidence, determined that a bond was unnecessary "for the preservation of the attachment on appeal and the amounts of premium thereon is not a proper item of costs on appeal. * * *" Plaintiff then prosecuted this appeal.

Inasmuch as section 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure specifically states that "An appeal does not continue in force an attachment, unless an undertaking be executed and filed on the part of the appellant by at least two sureties, in double the amount of the debt claimed by him * * *" it appears that the trial court could not have meant that such bond was unnecessary "for the preservation of the attachment on appeal * * *" but intended to say that the bond was unnecessary because of defendant Palermo's financial standing.

The record at the last hearing shows that Palermo testified that on the day (August 10 or 11, 1948) Stockton Theatres filed its complaint in restitution he withdrew $27,000 from one bank account and took the money to Reno, Nevada, where he placed it in a safety deposit box; that he also withdrew over $10,000 from another bank account and took the money to Nevada; that the money was placed in the Reno safety deposit box for "protection"; that he opened two bank accounts in Stockton in his brother's name; that his brother was mentally incompetent; that his own name was on the accounts as "agent" and that he was the only one entitled to make withdrawals therefrom; that his brother had nothing whatsoever to do with the accounts; that he told his brother he was depositing in his name "to protect my interest so that I couldn't get any attachments slapped to me. * * *" In answer to the question "Why do you keep the bank accounts in the Bank of America in your brother's name?" Palermo replied: "Protection. I never know when I am going to be attached." When asked by whom he might be attached, he replied: "Well by anybody." The record shows that Mr. Palermo was extremely vague as to what happened to the money he had placed in the Reno safety deposit box; that he didn't "believe" he had ever deposited it in a California bank; that he used some of it to pay the judgments against him; that he had to borrow $20,000 from a bank to pay the judgments; that he had to put up stocks of his as collateral; that the judgment was paid by check drawn on the brother's account which he signed as "agent." The record shows, through the testimony of an officer of the bank, that the savings account was opened by Palermo in his brother's name with an initial deposit of $15,000; that the highest balance was $15,378; that the checking account in the brother's name was opened in 1950 with an initial deposit of $1,000; that the March, 1954 balance in the checking account was $3,329.11.

With respect to the real property owned by him, Palermo testified that the Star Theater was built in approximately 1930; that he inherited it from his father in 1941; that it was appraised for inheritance tax purposes at $33,000; that in 1951 the theater had a value of $110,000; that he based his valuation on the building on "what the monthly rent" would be; that the monthly rent from the whole building would run "over a thousand dollars"; that his reason for placing this valuation on the theater was that it had a seating capacity of 530; that he placed a rental valuation of $1.75 per month per seat and multiplied by the number of seats; that his reason for using the $1.75 per seat figure as a reasonable rental was that "I believe a couple years back I read it in the Box Office Magazine. They determined it that way. It is a theater magazine, I receive it. We always gave—I receive two different magazines. And there was a writeup in there." When asked if that was the only basis for his opinion that the reasonable rental value per seat was $1.75, he replied, "Yes, that is." Palermo also testified that the theater building included a candy store for which he received $100 per month rent, and a bar for which he received $80 a month rent; and that although his estimate of the reasonable rental value of the theater would amount to $927.50 per month (530 x $1.75), he had received between $300 and $360 per month rent from Stockton Theatres, Inc.

Palermo testified that the theater business, as distinguished from the real property, had a value of $60,000 in 1951; that he had no basis for this valuation; that someone (he was not sure who) had made him an offer to buy it at that time for that amount; that "The business itself has no value whatsoever unless there is a lease so that the person who buys the business can actually occupy the place of business and operate it as a motion picture theater; that to him it had a "very large value, that business does"; that at the time he left Stockton in 1948, after the filing of the restitution action, all the equipment, seats and furnishings of the Star Theater were in the name of Ray Rowen; that he had an arrangement with Rowen for buying it back; that he paid Rowen "about" $25 a month rental for the seats, equipment and furnishings.

Concerning the home owned by him, Palermo testified that in 1951 it was worth $10,000; that he sold it in 1955 for that amount; that he didn't know whether it had increased in value or not.

[1, 2] It will be recalled that in 1948 when Stockton Theatres brought the action for restitution it claimed it was entitled to the sum of $130,000 from Palermo. It appealed from the judgment of the trial court still contending it was entitled to that sum. Section 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an appeal does not continue in force an attachment unless the appellant procures a bond in double the amount claimed by him (see our opinion, Stockton Theatres, Inc., v. Palermo, 47 Cal.2d 469, 472, 473, 304 P.2d 7). Section 1035 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the cost of such a bond shall be included as a cost allowed to a party entitled to costs "unless the court determines that the bond was unnecessary." (Emphasis added.) It will be noted that the Legislature used the word "was," thereby declaring its intention that the necessity for the bond be measured as of the time of perfecting the appeal. Judgment was entered in the restitution action on April 27, 1951; Stockton Theatres filed its notice of appeal on June 7, 1951. The District Court of Appeal opinion in which the judgment was modified so as to increase it by the sum of $32,333.14 was rendered on November 30, 1953. Although Palermo testified that in 1951 the money had been removed from the Nevada safety deposit box and "returned to the State of California" no bank account owned or controlled by him reflects it, and it will be recalled that he testified that he did not "believe" he had ever deposited the money in a California bank. It will also be recalled that he continued to carry money in accounts in his incompetent brother's name so as to avoid attachments. It will also be recalled that at no time pertinent to this inquiry did either of these accounts contain sufficient sums to protect plaintiff had it recovered the sum claimed to be due it. The record further shows that Palermo owned, during this time, only the one-story brick building, and a home with an estimated value of $10,000. In view of his admissions that he removed his money to Nevada to "protect" it, that he carried other money in his brother's name to avoid attachments from any source, that he had sold all the theater equipment, furnishings, et cetera, to another person, it appears to us as a matter of law that the bond procured by plaintiff was necessary within the meaning of section 1035 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[3] Palermo earnestly argues that because plaintiff filed its notice of appeal 41 days after both giving and receiving notice of entry of judgment in the restitution case the bond was ineffective as a matter of law by reason of the provisions of section 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section, in addition to providing that an appeal does not preserve an attachment unless a bond is procured by the appellant as heretofore noted, provides "* * * and unless, within five days after written notice of the entry of the order appealed from, such appeal be perfected." This same argument was made by Palermo to the District Court of Appeal in Stockton Theaters v. Palermo, 109 Cal.App.2d 616, 617, 241 P.2d 54, where he sought to have terminated and discharged plaintiff's attachments on the ground that plaintiff's appeal was not filed within the time permitted by section 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court there denied Palermo's motion to vacate the attachments. Although the District Court of Appeal erroneously construed the effect of section 946 (see Stockton Theatres, Inc., v. Palermo, 47 Cal.2d 469, 474, 304 P.2d 7, 10), we held that portion of its opinion was dictum and not the law of the case. We said "In the instant case the court presupposed a situation for the purpose of illustrating its theory of how the statute should be construed. The illustration was clearly erroneous and it is obvious that the decision was not predicated upon the court's construction of the statute. Hence, we are not bound to follow the District Court's erroneous interpretation of the scope of section 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure under the doctrine of the law of the case." (Emphasis added.) We also said "If, as previously set forth, the District Court believed that the lien of attachment had 'merged with the judgment [and] said section [946] has no applicability,' it would appear that defendants' motion to discharge the attachment should have been granted rather than denied." There is no merit to Palermo's argument in this respect since the holding of the District Court of Appeal has long since become final.

Having concluded as a matter of law that the record shows that a bond was necessary to preserve the attachment within the meaning of section 1035 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the order is reversed with directions to the trial court to allow the premiums on said bond as a cost on appeal.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

In Stockton Theatres, Inc., v. Palermo (1956), 47 Cal.2d 469, 477 [10], 304 P.2d 7, we declared that "Having concluded that section 1035 of the Code of Civil Procedure permits as an item of costs on appeal the premium on a bond where one is required by law (Code Civ.Proc., § 946) in order to preserve an attachment, the cause must be reversed and remanded for a determination by the trial court as to whether or not a bond was necessary in the case under consideration." (Italics added.) The order taxing costs was reversed and the trial court "directed to determine the necessity for the bond required to preserve the attachment pending appeal, and, if it is determined that such bond was necessary, allow the amount of the premium paid therefor as an item of the costs on appeal to which plaintiff is entitled." (at pages 478–479 of 47 Cal.2d, at page 12 of 304 P.2d; italics added.)

Following a hearing, including the taking of evidence, the trial court "Determined that under the law and evidence it was unnecessary to file the corporate surety bond herein for the preservation of the attachment on appeal and the amount of premium thereon is not a proper item of costs on appeal." I believe that the trial court's determination, made pursuant to our express direction, is supported by the record and that we should uphold it.

This was an action brought by plaintiff for restitution of the theatre, in which plaintiff recovered judgment in the trial court for $13,658.75. An abstract of that judgment against defendant was recorded in the office of the County Recorder of the county (San Joaquin) in which the theatre (which defendant owns) is located. Both parties appealed from the judgment, with plaintiff claiming it was entitled to recover its entire demand of $130,000. It appears that the bond posted by plaintiff to preserve its attachment on appeal was in double the amount (see Code Civ.Proc., § 946) of $116,341.25 ($130,000 claimed by plaintiff, less $13,658.75 covered by the recorded abstract of judgment), and the bond premium of $6,980.49 which plaintiff now seeks to have taxed to defendant as one of the costs on appeal was based on such doubled amount. However, although plaintiff prevailed on the appeal, it prevailed to the extent of an increase of only $32,333.44 over its trial court judgment of $13,658.75, and not to the extent of the $116,341.25 increase which it had claimed on appeal and on which (doubled) the bond premium was based. (See Stockton Theatres, Inc., v. Palermo (1953), 121 Cal.App.2d 616, 632, 264 P.2d 74.) Thus the sum of $32,333.44 won by plaintiff on the appeal was the only claim with respect to which it was justified in fairness and in law to claim and recover "necessary" costs on appeal. Otherwise there would seem to be no reasonable limit in the amount which might be claimed against a defendant whose property has been attached on a claim however grossly in excess of the actual recovery by plaintiff on appeal. If plaintiff here had recovered only an additional $100 on the appeal, rather than $32,333.44, under the majority opinion it apparently would still be considered "necessary" as a matter of law that plaintiff preserve its attachment by a bond in double the amount of $116,341.25. The majority must consider the entire amount to be necessary as a matter of law because they reverse the trial court's findings on the evidence and remand the cause "with directions to the trial court to allow the [entire amount of] premiums on said bond." Surely a defendant should not be taxed with the premium incident to maintaining such an excessive claim.

In Moss v. Underwriters' Report, Inc., (1938), 12 Cal.2d 266, 274–275 [9–12], 83 P. 2d 503, it was pointed out that the statute (Code Civ.Proc., § 1033) which provides that a successful litigant furnish a memorandum of his costs and "necessary disbursements" in the action "does not contemplate that a defendant must pay all of the successful plaintiff's expenses in connection with the litigation," and that "the right to reimbursement for expenses depends upon the statutory provisions concerning costs and not upon the necessity, in the mind of the litigant, or his counsel, for the outlay." See also Simms v. County of Los Angeles, (1950), 35 Cal.2d 303, 319, 217 P.2d 936. In the present case the necessity, in the mind of plaintiff or his counsel, of maintaining an additional claim on appeal in the amount of $116,341.25 does not warrant taxing defendant as a matter of law with the cost thereof when plaintiff was successful to the extent of only $32,333.44.

Further, from testimony of defendant, which the trial court was free to accept as true, defendant owned during the period here involved unencumbered real property of a value in excess of $100,000 upon which plaintiff's judgment was a lien following recording of the abstract thereof. This evidence is plainly sufficient to support that court's implied finding that plaintiff's security for its total recovery of nearly $46,000 ($13,658.75 original judgment, plus $32,333.44 additional recovery on appeal) was ample, and that court's determination that the surety bond to preserve the attachment on appeal was wholly unnecessary. Section 1035 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the premium on the bond is not recoverable as costs if the court "determines that the bond was unnecessary." Pursuant to this court's direction, the trial court upon sufficient evidence has made its determination and I would uphold it and affirm the order appealed from.

Dec. 12, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 7, 1959.

Proceeding to set aside Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeal Board's decision dismissing appeal of petitioner from order and decision of Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control revoking petitioner's on-sale liquor license. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, Charles Wade Snook, J., rendered judgment for petitioner and Department and Board appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that Section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure providing that when service is made by depositing in mail if within a given number of days after such service the right is to be exercised or an act is to be done the time for exercising that right or performing that act is extended applies to extend the 40-day period prescribed by statute within which appeal to Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board from decision of Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, revoking license for sale of alcoholic beverages, may be filed, and hence mailing of notice of appeal on 40th day after party received decision revoking on-sale liquor license, which notice was received by the Board on the 41st day was sufficient to effect the appeal.

SHENK, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court, Alameda County, ordering a writ of mandate directing the Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board to set aside its order dismissing the petitioner's appeal from a decision of the department.

The question presented is whether section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to extend the forty day period prescribed by section 23081 of the Business and Professions Code for taking an appeal from a decision of the department.

The facts are undisputed. On July 25, 1956, the department rendered a decision recommending that the petitioner's on-sale license be revoked. A copy of the decision, addressed to the petitioner, was deposited by the department in the United States mail at Sacramento on July 26, 1956. The petitioner received it in Oakland on July 27, 1956. On September 4, 1956, he mailed a notice of appeal to the principal office of the board at Sacramento. This notice was received by the board on September 5, 1956. It thus appears that the notice of appeal was received by the board at Sacramento on the forty-first day after the copy of the decision was mailed to the petitioner. The board dismissed the appeal on the ground that it was not taken within the time prescribed by section 23081 of the Business and Professions Code. That section provides: "Within 40 days after the decision of the department is delivered or mailed to the parties, any party aggrieved * * * may appeal to the board * * *. The appeal shall be in writing * * *. A copy of the appeal shall be mailed by the appellant to each party who appeared * * * including the department which shall thereafter be treated * * * as a party * * *."

It is the board's position that the time for taking an appeal from a decision of the department is limited by section 23081 to forty days and that to be effective the notice of appeal must be filed with the board within that period. The petitioner contends that the period prescribed by section 23081 is extended by the provisions of section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and as extended, his notice was filed within the period provided by law.

Section 1013 provides: "In case of service by mail, the notice or other paper must be deposited in the United States post office * * * in a sealed envelope, with postage paid, addressed to the person on whom it is to be served * * *. The service is complete at the time of the deposit, but if, within a given number of days after such service, a right may be exercised, or an act is to be done by the adverse party, the time within which such right may be exercised or act be done, is extended one day, together with one day additional for every full 100 miles distance between the place of deposit and the place of address, if served by different post offices, but such extension shall not exceed thirty days in all." Section 25760 of the Business and Professions Code states: "Notice of any act of the department required by this division to be given * * * may be made personally or by mail. If made by mail, service shall be made in the manner prescribed by Section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In case of service by mail, the service is complete at the time of deposit in the United States Post Office."

[1] Both section 1013 and section 25760 provide that the service is complete at the time of deposit in the United States post office. It is this service which is referred to in section 1013 where it is stated "* * * but if, within a given number of days after such service * * *," a right is to be exercised, or an act is to be done, the time for exercising that right or performing that act is extended. Sections 23081 and 25760 contain nothing which would preclude the application of section 1013 in its entirety to the service of the board's decision and to the extension of the period in which an appeal can be taken from such decision. The Business and Professions Code and the Code of Civil Procedure are to be read and construed together under the "well-recognized rule that for purposes of statutory construction the codes are to be regarded as blending into each other and constituting but a single statute." In re Porterfield, 28 Cal.2d 91, 100, 168 P.2d 706, 712, 167 A.L.R. 675; see also, Armenta v. Churchill, 42 Cal.2d 448, 455, 267 P.2d 303; Gillespie v. City of Los Angeles, 36 Cal.2d 553, 558, 225 P.2d 522; In re Estate of Risse, 156 Cal. App.2d 412, 421, 319 P.2d 789; Ryder v. City of Los Altos, 125 Cal.App.2d 209, 211, 270 P.2d 532. Applying this rule both the petitioner and the department are authorized to make service in the manner provided by section 1013.

Section 1013 was held inapplicable to section 23081 in Van De Veer v. Dept. of Alcoholic, etc., Control, 155 Cal.App.2d 817, 318 P.2d 686, and Hollywood Circle, Inc. v. Dept. of Alcoholic Beverage Control, 153 Cal.App.2d 523, 314 P.2d 1007, 1010. In the Hollywood Circle case, the court held section 1013 inapplicable on the ground that "The Appeals Board is a constitutional governmental body. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 23075. There appears to be no intent by the people in enacting the current liquor control laws in their Constitution, nor by the legislature in implementing them, to extend in any manner the time for filing a notice of appeal specified in section 23081 of the Business and Professions Code." Courts too, are constitutional governmental bodies subject to strict time limits for hearing appeals. See In re Estate of Hanley, 23 Cal.2d 120, 122, 142 P.2d 423, 149 A.L.R. 1250. This, however, furnishes no ground for refusing to apply section 1013 to proceedings before those bodies. Any implications to the contrary in Anderson v. Dept. of Alcoholic Bev. Control, 159 Cal.App.2d 413, 324 P.2d 24; Van De Veer v. Dept. of Alcoholic, etc., Control, supra, 155 Cal.App.2d 817, 318 P.2d 686, and Hollywood Circle, Inc. v. Dept. of Alcoholic Beverage Control, supra, 153 Cal.App.2d 523, 314 P.2d 1007, are disapproved.

[2, 3] Sections 23081 and 25760 of the Business and Professions Code reasonably permit a construction which would include the application of section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure in its entirety to the filing of a notice of appeal from a decision of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control. That construction is consistent with the policy of the law which favors the preservation of the right of appeal and the hearing of appeals on their merits. See People v. Slobodion, 30 Cal.2d 362, 181 P.2d 868; Manning v. Gavin, 14 Cal.2d 44, 46, 92 P.2d 795; Haskins v. Crumley, 152 Cal.App.2d 64, 66, 312 P.2d 276; Wilbur v. Cull, 127 Cal.App.2d 655, 657, 274 P.2d 424. As stated in Wilbur v. Cull, supra, 127 Cal.App.2d at page 657, 274 P.2d at page 425, quoting from Anderson v. Standard Lumber Co., 60 Cal.App. 445, 448, 213 P. 65, "'Of course, the disposition of the courts is to hear appeals upon their merits and the sections of the code relating to the subject should be liberally construed with a view of promoting such purpose.'"

Intoxicating Liquors ⇐108(10)

Notices of appeal filed with Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control on the 41st day after mailing of notices of decision of revocation of licenses were timely, since section of Code of Civil Procedure pertaining to manner in which service by mail should be made extends by period of one day the time for filing of such appeal. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23081, 25601, 25658; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1013.

SHENK, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court, Alameda County, ordering a writ of mandate directing the respondent board to set aside an order dismissing appeals from decisions of the department and to consider an application for relief from an alleged clerical or inadvertent error in the preparation of a notice of appeal from decisions of the department.

A similar question was involved in Pesce v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, Cal., 333 P.2d 15.

On October 18, 1956, the department rendered two separately numbered decisions in file 42022. In the first, numbered 9560, the petitioners' wine and beer license was ordered revoked for violation of section 25601 of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Business and Professions Code, § 25601. In the second, numbered 1166, the license was suspended for fifteen days for violation of section 25658 of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Business and Professions Code, § 25658. The decisions were mailed to the licensees on October 18, 1956, and received by them at their place of business on October 19, 1956. On November 28, 1956, the forty-first day after notice of the department's decisions was mailed to the licensees, the licensees delivered a notice of appeal to the board. The notice stated that an appeal was taken from the decision of the department in the proceeding numbered "file no. 4202, reg. no. 1166." It thus appears that the notice of appeal incorrectly designated the file number and referred only to the proceeding in which the petitioners' license was suspended for fifteen days. On January 16, 1957, the licensees filed a "Correction and Clarification of Notice of Appeal." They alleged that their failure to properly identify the file number and to include in the notice of appeal the number of the proceeding in which their license was revoked was the result of typographical error and inadvertence.

The superior court ordered the board to set aside its order dismissing the appeals in both proceedings; to hear and determine the suspension order in number 1166 on its merits; to hear and determine the application for relief from the alleged inadvertence in omitting number 9560 from the caption of the notice of appeal, and to hear that appeal on the merits if such relief be granted.

The dismissal was based on the ground that the notice of appeal was not filed within the forty day period prescribed by section 23081 of the Business and Professions Code. The licensees contend that the period prescribed by that section for taking an appeal from a decision of the department is subject to the provisions of section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the reason that the notice of the department's decision was served upon them by mail, and as extended, the notice of appeal was timely. In Pesce v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, supra, it was held that those sections should be read together. Under such a construction the notice herein was given within the time provided by law.

The judgment is affirmed.

Robert WILLIAMS, Appellant.

Cr. 6275.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
Dec. 19, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 14, 1959.

Prosecution for selling of narcotics. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Herbert V. Walker, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that where police officer, the only witness for prosecution, testified that he made first purchase of narcotics from defendant through services of an informer and made the second purchase on basis of the first one but without informer's presence, refusal of court to compel disclosure of informer's identity resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

Judgment and order denying new trial reversed.

Opinion, 323 P.2d 824, vacated.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Defendant was convicted on two counts of selling narcotics in violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code, and he appeals, contending that the trial court erred in failing to strike the testimony of a police officer who refused to disclose the identity of an informer.

Officer Renty was the only witness for the prosecution, and he testified as follows with regard to two transactions which occurred about three months before defendant's indictment and arrest: On February 4, 1957, Renty was standing on East Fifth Street in Los Angeles with an informer who had been used by the police on other occasions. The informer called to defendant, addressing him as "Red," and, when defendant walked over to them, the informer told him that Renty "had the money," which meant, in narcotics parlance, that Renty wanted to buy narcotics. Defendant said that he "could do us some good," and, while the informer waited outside, Renty and defendant entered a nearby cafe, where Renty handed defendant a ten-dollar bill. Defendant gave him some narcotics and a one-dollar bill. On February 7, 1957, Renty was again in the area when he saw defendant and said that he had nine dollars. They entered the same cafe, and defendant sold Renty more narcotics. Renty had not known defendant prior to February 4, and, in consummating the second transaction, he was relying on the first one.

On cross-examination Renty refused to disclose the identity of the informer. Defendant testified to the effect that the officer was mistaken in identifying him as the one who had made the sales, and he moved to strike Renty's testimony as to both counts on the ground that the informer was a material witness whose identity was necessary to a fair presentation of the defense. The motions were denied.

[1] It has long been recognized that, although the government is generally privileged to withhold the identity of informers, the privilege must give way when it comes into conflict with the fundamental principle that a person accused of crime is entitled to a full and fair opportunity to defend himself. Regina v. Richardson

(Eng.), 3 F. & F. 693; see Marks v. Beyfus (Eng.), 25 Q.B.D. 494, 498. While the language employed in describing the restriction on the privilege is not always the same, it does not vary in any substantial respect. Thus, Wigmore states that disclosure may be compelled if it "appears necessary in order to avoid the risk of false testimony or to secure useful testimony" (8 Wigmore on Evidence (3d Ed. 1940) § 2374, p. 756), and the United States Supreme Court in its latest opinion on the question declares that a limitation arises from the fundamental requirements of fairness where disclosure is "relevant and helpful to the defense of an accused, or is essential to a fair determination of a cause." Roviaro v. United States, 353 U.S. 53, 60–61, 77 S.Ct. 623, 628, 1 L.Ed.2d 639.

[2] What is important is not the precise phraseology used but the firmly established principle that the privilege may not be invoked in a criminal case in which the identity of the informer is material to the defense and nondisclosure would result in denying the defendant a fair trial. Roviaro v. United States, supra, 353 U.S. 53, 60–62, 77 S.Ct. 623, 1 L.Ed.2d 639; Portomene v. United States, 5 Cir., 221 F. 2d 582, 584; Sorrentino v. United States, 9 Cir., 163 F.2d 627, 628–629; Wilson v. United States, 3 Cir., 59 F.2d 390, 391 et seq.; United States v. Blich, D.C., 45 F. 2d 627, 629; United States v. Keown, D.C., 19 F.Supp. 639; People v. Alvarez, 154 Cal.App.2d 694, 696, 316 P.2d 1006, et seq.; People v. Castiel, 153 Cal.App.2d 653, 656–659, 315 P.2d 79; People v. Lawrence, 149 Cal.App.2d 435, 450–452, 308 P.2d 821; Crosby v. State, 90 Ga.App. 63, 82 S.E.2d 38, 39–40; Hamilton v. State, 149 Miss. 251, 115 So. 427, 428; see Scher v. United States, 305 U.S. 251, 254, 59 S.Ct. 174, 83 L.Ed. 151; United States v. Conforti, 7 Cir., 200 F.2d 365, 367–369; United States v. Li Fat Tong, 2 Cir., 152 F.2d 650, 652; United States v. Heitner, 2 Cir., 149 F.2d 105, 107; Morgan, Basic Problems of Evidence (1954) p. 119; McCormick on Evidence (1954) § 148, pp. 310–311; 3 Wharton's Criminal Evidence (12th Ed. 1955) § 795, pp. 136–137.

A comparable rule exists with respect to the government's privilege to withhold documents in its possession. For many years courts have compelled the government to produce documents material to the defense in a criminal case. Jencks v. United States, 353 U.S. 657, 670 et seq., 77 S.Ct. 1007, 1 L.Ed.2d 1103; Gordon v. United States, 344 U.S. 414, 419, 73 S.Ct. 369, 97 L.Ed. 447; United States v. Andolschek, 2 Cir., 142 F.2d 503, 506; Powell v. Superior Court, 48 Cal.2d 704, 709, 312 P.2d 698; People v. Moses, 11 Ill.2d 84, 142 N.E.2d 1, 4; State v. Guagliardo, 146 La. 949, 84 So. 216, 219; People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569, 18 N.W. 362, 363–364; Centoamore v. State, 105 Neb. 452, 181 N.W. 182, 183–184; People v. Schainuck, 286 N.Y. 161, 36 N.E.2d 94, 96; see United States v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 1, 12, 73 S.Ct. 528, 97 L.Ed. 727; Parsons v. State, 251 Ala. 467, 38 So.2d 209, 216.

The scope of the limitation upon the privilege of concealing the identity of an informer may be better understood by considering some of the situations in which the problem frequently arises. Disclosure is required where the informer participated in the crime with which the defendant is charged. E. g., Portomene v. United States, supra, 5 Cir., 221 F.2d 582, 584; People v. Lawrence, supra, 149 Cal.App.2d 435, 450–452, 308 P.2d 821. However, the limitation is not confined to such cases, since it is based upon materiality of the informer's identity to the defense. Clearly, for example, an informer who took no part in the crime but was an eyewitness may be in a position to give highly significant testimony. See United States v. Conforti, supra, 7 Cir., 200 F.2d 365, 367–369. Also, where the informer did nothing more than give the police information leading to a search and seizure made without a warrant and alleged to be unlawful, courts have compelled disclosure if the informer's communication was the only justification for the action of the police. Wilson v. United States, supra, 3 Cir., 59 F.2d 390, 391 et seq.; United States v. Blich, supra, D.C., 45 F.2d 627, 629. In that type of case the identity of the informer is material because, unless he was a person upon whose credibility the police were entitled to rely, the necessary showing of reasonable cause for the search and seizure would not be present. On the other hand, the limitation upon the privilege does not apply, of course, in every criminal case. For example, disclosure has not been required where there was reasonable cause for a search and seizure apart from an informer's communication which led the police to suspect the defendant. Scher v. United States, supra, 305 U.S. 251, 254, 59 S.Ct. 174, 83 L.Ed. 151.

Three cases recently decided by this court are in accord with the established principles discussed above. Priestly v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39; People v. McShann, 50 Cal.2d 802, 330 P.2d 33; Mitchell v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 827, 330 P.2d 48. Those decisions in no way extend or proscribe either the privilege or the limitation to which it is subject; they hold that disclosure is to be made where, in connection with a claim of illegal search and seizure, there is no showing of reasonable cause, apart from the informer's communication (Priestly v. Superior Court, supra, 50 Cal.2d at page 815 et seq., 330 P.2d 39), or where, in view of the evidence, the informer would be a material witness on the issue of guilt and nondisclosure of his identity would deprive the defendant of a fair trial (People v. McShann, supra, 50 Cal.2d at page 808, 330 P.2d 33 et seq.; Mitchell v. Superior Court, supra, 50 Cal.2d at page 829, 330 P.2d 48).

[3] In the light of the undisputed evidence in the present case, the informer was clearly a material witness on the issue of guilt with respect to the first sale. He not only saw the seller of the narcotics, whom he knew prior to that occasion, but also was instrumental in bringing about the transaction. As a witness at the trial he might have testified that defendant was not the seller of the narcotics, and such testimony would have been especially important to the defense in view of the fact that the officer was the sole witness for the prosecution and that, so far as appears from the record, he saw the culprit for only a few minutes, three months prior to defendant's indictment and arrest. Under the circumstances, disclosure of the identity of the informer was necessary to a fair trial of count one.

Although the informer did not witness the second transaction, it was consummated in reliance upon the prior one, and the theory of the prosecution, as sought to be established by the officer's testimony, was that the same person, allegedly defendant, committed the two offenses. If the informer had contradicted the officer's identification of defendant as to the first sale, this would have been highly material evidence to show that the officer was also mistaken in connecting defendant with the second transaction.

The failure to compel disclosure of the informer's identity resulted in a miscarriage of justice with respect to both counts. See Cal.Const. art. VI, § 4½.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

SPENCE, Justice.

I concur in the reversal with respect to both counts, but I adhere to the views expressed in my concurring and dissenting opinion in People v. McShann, 50 Cal.2d 802, 330 P.2d 33.

There is a clear distinction between the present case and the McShann case. Here defendant was not arrested until three months after the alleged offenses had been committed. Officer Renty testified that defendant was the person who had made both sales. Defendant denied any participation in either sale. In other words, the defense was based upon the claim that Officer Renty had been mistaken in identifying defendant as the person who had made the two sales. Under these circumstances, the majority properly conclude that testimony of the informer as to the identity of the person involved could have been of material benefit to the defense.

In the McShann case, however, defendant was arrested at the time of the second offense, namely possession, while he actually had narcotics on his person. No question of identity was involved. Following the guiding principles declared in Roviaro v. United States, 353 U.S. 53, at page 62, 77 S.Ct. 623 at page 628, 1 L.Ed.2d 639, as to the conditions which require the disclosure of the name of the informer, and "balancing the public interest in protecting the flow of information against the individual's right to prepare his defense", I am of the opinion that the balance is in favor of the "individual's right" here but that the balance was in favor of the "public interest" in the McShann case insofar as the second count of possession was concerned.

August J. BUMB, Respondent,
v.
Minnie M. BENNETT et al., Appellants.
L. A. 24884.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
Dec. 12, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 7, 1959.

Action involving rights arising from a general assignment for benefit of partnership creditors. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, David Coleman, J., the defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that the assignment was not void because not complying with the statutory provisions respecting assignments for benefit of creditors but was valid as common-law assignment; that the recording was not necessary; that defendants had no standing to raise objections to enforcement of a condition in the assignment where they were not injured thereby; that the assignment sufficiently described the realty assigned and that the assignment was not invalid as authorizing the assignee to pay the individual partners' tax liabilities nor because of an alteration by the assignee for the purpose of allegedly increasing his compensation.

Judgment affirmed.

Vacating opinion, 326 P.2d 566.

1. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐22

An assignment of personalty for benefit of creditors may be valid as a common-law assignment although it is not made in conformity with the statutes. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 3449–3473.

2. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐22

An assignment of partnership property to assignee for benefit of creditors was not necessarily invalid because it did not comply with the statutes relating to statutory assignments for creditors, since the statute merely renders invalid certain transfers not accompanied by an immediate change of possession, and since there are other code provisions giving recognition to common-law assignments for benefit of creditors. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3440(e); West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1204.

3. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐22

Common-law assignments for creditors whether of real or personal property are valid because they existed at common law, and hence common-law assignments of both personalty and realty are permitted by law and neither is invalid because they do not conform to the Civil Code provisions relating to statutory assignments for benefit of creditors. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 3449–3473.

4. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐170

An assignment of partnership property to an assignee for benefit of creditors was not invalid because not recorded where the assignment was valid as a common-law assignment. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 3449–3473.

5. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐154(1)

A transfer is not invalid because of the failure to record it as a conveyance of real property, since an unrecorded deed or assignment is sufficient to pass title against a subsequent attaching creditor. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1215.

6. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐31

An assignment of partnership property to assignee for benefit of partnership creditors was not an assignment for benefit of creditors generally, where beneficiaries were limited to a particular class of creditors and to such other creditors as assented to its terms. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1215.

7. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐31

An assignment of partnership property to assignee for benefit of partnership creditors would not be invalid because limited to a particular class of creditors and to such others as assented to its terms since preferences are not illegal; Kaye v. Jacobs, 122 Cal.App. 421, 430, 10 P.2d 186 disapproved in part. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3432.

8. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐31

An assignment of partnership property to assignee for benefit of partnership creditors was not invalid as against defendants who were not injured by enforcement of the requirement that secured creditors must render their security or forfeit their right to participate in the estate. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 3449–3473.

9. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐47

Creditors who consented to assignment of partnership property to assignee for benefit of partnership creditors had no standing to object to the assignment. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 3449–3473.

10. Partnership ⇐151

As respects authority of partner to assign for benefit of creditors, evidence supported finding that property assigned to assignee for benefit of partnership creditors was an asset of the partnership. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 15008.

11. Partnership ⇐151

Where partnership property was used at the firm's place of business and held in the names of the individual partners as tenants in common, it could not be assigned for benefit of creditors by one partner without the express authorization of his copartner. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 15009, 15010.

12. Partnership ⇐151

Absent evidence that the copartner had abandoned the business, the partnership property could not be assigned for the benefit of creditors by one partner without the authorization of the other. West's Ann. Corp.Code, § 15009.

13. Evidence ⇐267

Where witness was testifying to the fact that a statement was made, the testimony was not hearsay.

14. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐52

There is no requirement that assent to assignment of partnership property for benefit of creditors be reduced to writing.

15. Frauds, Statute of ⇐143(2)

Where the assignment of partnership property for benefit of creditors might be voidable by the nonsigning partner but he had never objected, judgment creditors could not invoke the statute of frauds to avoid the assignment. West's Ann.Civ. Code §§ 1091, 1624, 1971, 2309; West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1973.

16. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐58

Where deed of assignment of partnership property for benefit of creditors transferred all the property of the assignor of every kind and nature both real, personal or mixed and any interest or equity therein not exempt from execution but did not specifically describe any real property, the phrase "all of the property of the assignor" was sufficient to describe the property to be conveyed.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "All Of The Property Of The Assignor".

17. Internal Revenue ⇐1717
Partnership ⇐181

Federal income tax obligations of individual partners are not liens on a partnership property nor are they entitled to priority of payment from that property.

18. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐90

Assignment of partnership property for creditors was not invalid because authorizing the assignee to pay the net proceeds to creditors after deducting moneys which assignee could pay to discharge any lien on property and an indebtedness under the law entitled to priority of payment including personal income taxes of the partners, since the assignment should not be construed as conferring authority of the assignee to pay individual partners' tax liabilities from partnership assets before applying the proceeds to discharge the partnership obligations where its language was consistent with a different and valid interpretation.

19. Alteration of Instruments ⇐2

It is not every material alteration of a written instrument which will invalidate it.

20. Alteration of Instruments ⇐11(2)
Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐184

An assignee for benefit of creditors holds a bare legal title in trust for the beneficiary, and hence his alteration of the assignment interest in a manner neither sanctioned by nor advantageous to the beneficiaries but solely to increase his own compensation should not deprive creditors of their rights under the assignment.

21. Alteration of Instruments ⇐11(2)

Alteration of assignment for benefit of creditors of a partnership by the assignee by striking out the word "net" in respect to his compensation did not render the assignment void where the alteration was neither sanctioned by nor advantageous to the parties beneficially interested. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 3449–3473.

SPENCE, Justice.

Defendants Minnie M. Bennett, Victoria E. Bloch and Leonard Bloch appeal from a judgment quieting title to a parcel of real property in plaintiff as assignee for the benefit of creditors of B. F. Wells & Son, a copartnership, and enjoining defendants from claiming any interest therein.

From and after December 30, 1955, the record owners of the property in dispute were "Bert F. Wells and Edward L. Wells, father and son, as Tenants in Common, doing business as B. F. Wells & Son." On May 25, 1956, B. F. Wells & Son, by Edward L. Wells, executed an assignment of all the partnership property to plaintiff as assignee for the benefit of the partnership creditors. The assignment was accepted by plaintiff at approximately 9:00 A.M. on May 29, 1956. On that same day, at 12:17 P.M., defendant Bennett, as the representative of certain unsecured creditors of B. F. Wells & Son, levied an attachment upon the real property here involved and, after judgment in her favor, assigned her rights to defendant Victoria E. Bloch, who thereafter purchased the property at execution sale. Defendant Leonard Bloch is the husband of defendant Victoria E. Bloch.

The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff based on findings that the realty was partnership property, that the partnership liabilities were greatly in excess of its assets, and that the assignment was valid and prior to the attachment. There can be no question but that the judgment was proper if the assignment was valid. Brainard v. Fitzgerald, 3 Cal.2d 157, 163, 44 P.2d 336. Defendants contend that it was not.

[1] Defendants first argue that the assignment is void because it did not comply with the code provisions relating to statutory assignments for the benefit of creditors. Civil Code, §§ 3449–3473. Defendants concede that an assignment of personal property for the benefit of creditors may be valid as a common-law assignment although it is not made in conformity with those sections. Brainard v. Fitzgerald, supra, 3 Cal. 2d 157, 44 P.2d 336. But they insist that common-law assignments of personalty are valid only because of legislative recognition of such assignments in section 3440, subdivision (e), of the Civil Code. Since that section has no application to transfers of realty, they conclude that assignments of real property are invalid unless the statutory provisions are observed.

[2] There is no merit in this contention. Section 3440 does not purport to validate any transfer of a debtor's property; it merely renders invalid certain transfers which are not accompanied by an immediate change of possession. And, contrary to defendants' contention, there are other provisions in our codes which give recognition to common-law assignments for the benefit of creditors. Thus section 1204 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for preferred labor claim liens against "any property" transferred by "any assignment, * * * whether formal or informal, * * * made for the benefit of creditors * * *."

[3] However, we need not further labor the question of legislative "recognition," for the validity of common-law assignments—whether of real or personal property—does not depend on such tenuous ground. They are valid because they existed at common law (See Billings v. Billings, 2 Cal. 107) and because the only presently effective statutory provisions (Civ.Code, §§ 3449–3473) which could be construed as invalidating them do not "affect the power of a person, although insolvent, * * * to transfer property * * *, in good faith to a particular creditor, or creditors, or to some other person or persons in trust for such particular creditor or creditors for the purpose of paying or securing the whole or part of a debt owing to such creditor or creditors * * *." (Civ.Code, § 3451; Brainard v. Fitzgerald, supra, 3 Cal.2d 157, 160–161, 44 P.2d 336; Jarvis v. Webber, 196 Cal. 86, 98, 236 P. 138.) It follows that common-law assignments of both personalty and realty are permitted by our laws, and that neither are invalid because they do not conform to the provisions of the Civil Code relating to statutory assignments for the benefit of creditors.

[4, 5] Defendants next contend that the assignment is void because it was not recorded. The assignment was not invalid as against defendants by reason of the sections requiring assignments for the benefit of creditors to be recorded (Civ.Code, §§ 3458, 3459, 3463–3466) since those sections do not apply to common-law assignments. Brainard v. Fitzgerald, supra, 3 Cal.2d 157, 161, 44 P.2d 336; see also Jarvis v. Webber, supra, 196 Cal. 86, 98, 236 P. 138; First Nat. Bank of Stockton v. Pomona Tile Mfg. Co., 82 Cal.App.2d 592, 608, 186 P.2d 693. Nor is the transfer invalid because of the failure to record it as a conveyance (Civ.Code, § 1215; Moore v. Schneider, 196 Cal. 380, 389, 238 P. 81) of real property, since an unrecorded deed or assignment is sufficient to pass title against a subsequent attaching creditor. Watkins v. Wilhoit, 104 Cal. 395, 398–399, 38 P. 53; Fares v. Morrison, 54 Cal.App.2d 773, 776, 129 P.2d 735.

Defendants also assail the assignment because it was not made for the benefit of creditors generally. The deed of assignment provided that "before secured creditors shall be paid hereunder they shall first be required to surrender to said Assignee the security so holden by them and accept the provisions of this agreement."

[6, 7] Since the beneficiaries of the assignment were limited to a particular class of creditors and to such other creditors as assented to its terms, it was not an assignment for the benefit of creditors generally. Jarvis v. Webber, supra, 196 Cal.

86, 98–99, 236 P. 138. But that fact, standing alone, does not render the transfer invalid, for "preferences are not illegal under our law." Brainard v. Fitzgerald, supra, 3 Cal.2d 157, 163, 44 P.2d 336, 339. An insolvent debtor may lawfully pay one or more of his creditors to the exclusion of others by a direct transfer. Civ.Code, § 3432. We can see no reason why he may not do the same thing by way of a transfer in trust where there is no basis for contending that the transfer is in fraud of creditors. See Brainard v. Fitzgerald, supra, 3 Cal.2d 157, 162, 44 P.2d 336; Jarvis v. Webber, supra, 196 Cal. 86, 98–99, 236 P. 138. It is true that Sabichi v. Chase, 108 Cal. 81, 41 P. 29, and Rapp v. Whittier, 113 Cal. 429, 45 P. 703, contain apparent holdings to the effect that preferential assignments are invalid. Those cases, however, are no longer in point. They were based on section 3457 of the Civil Code—a section subsequently made inapplicable to common-law assignments. (Stats.1905, ch. 466, § 1, p. 622; now Civ.Code, § 3451.) To the extent that Kaye v. Jacobs, 122 Cal. App. 421, 430, 10 P.2d 186, purports to follow the Sabichi case, it is disapproved.

[8, 9] Additionally, defendants maintain that the requirement that secured creditors must surrender their security or forfeit their right to participate in the estate is so unreasonable as to render the assignment void. But even assuming that this condition might render the assignment invalid as against a nonconsenting secured creditor, defendants have no standing to raise this objection since they could not be injured by enforcement of the condition. (Burrill, Voluntary Assignments for the Benefit of Creditors (1894), § 452, p. 600.) No other creditors are in a position to object since they have consented to the assignment. See Peterson v. Ball, 211 Cal. 461, 468, 296 P. 291, 74 A.L.R. 187; Garn v. Thorwaldson, 40 Cal.App. 62, 66, 180 P. 9; Stone-Ordean Wells Co. v. Anderson, 66 Mont. 64, 212 P. 853.

[10] Defendants further claim that the assignment is invalid because it was neither signed by B. F. Wells nor authorized by him in the manner prescribed by law. Record title to the property was in the name of the individual partners as tenants in common. However, the uncontradicted evidence showed that the property was purchased with partnership funds, that it constituted the place of business of the partnership, and that in every way it was treated as partnership property by the record owners. The trial court's finding that the property was an asset of the partnership was, therefore, amply supported. (Corporations Code, § 15008; see also Vineland Homes, Inc., v. Barish, 138 Cal.App.2d 747, 755–758, 292 P.2d 941; Rishwain v. Smith, 77 Cal.App.2d 524, 534, 175 P.2d 555; Parmelee v. Brainard, 62 Cal.App.2d 182, 184, 144 P.2d 381.)

[11, 12] As partnership property used as the firm's place of business and held in the names of the individual partners as tenants in common, it could not be conveyed by one partner without the express authorization of his co-partner. (Corp. Code, §§ 15009, 15010; Petrikis v. Hanges, 111 Cal.App.2d 734, 738–739, 245 P.2d 39.) And, absent evidence that the co-partner had abandoned the business, it could not be assigned for the benefit of creditors by one partner without the authorization of the other. (Corp.Code, § 15009; see also Richlin v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 197 Cal. 296, 304, 240 P. 782.)

[13] The assignment was executed in the name of the partnership by Edward L. Wells. It is not contended that Bert F. Wells had abandoned the business, but, over defendants' objection, Edward was permitted to testify that he had discussed the assignment with his partner, and that the latter had said, "Go ahead." Defendants contend that this testimony was inadmissible hearsay. Since the witness was testifying to the fact that the statement was made, the testimony was not hearsay. (6 Wigmore, Evidence (3d ed. 1940), § 1766, p. 177.) And unless the authorization was required to be in writing, it sufficiently expressed the assent of the non-signing partner.

[14, 15] As a matter of agency or partnership law, there is no requirement that the assent be reduced to writing. Hooper v. Baillie, 118 N.Y. 413, 23 N.E. 569; Crane, Partnership (2d ed. 1952), p. 267. But defendants maintain that the assignment operated as a conveyance of the property in dispute and therefore was required to be "subscribed by the party * * * assigning * * * the same, or by his lawful agent thereunto authorized by writing." (Code Civ.Proc. § 1971; see also Civ.Code, §§ 1091, 1624, 2309; Code Civ.Proc. § 1973.) While the assignment might be voidable by the non-signing partner, he has never objected and defendants, as judgment creditors, cannot invoke the statute of frauds to avoid the assignment. Wood Estate Co. v. Chanslor, 209 Cal. 241, 250–251, 286 P. 1001; Mitchell v. Locurto, 79 Cal.App.2d 507, 512–513, 179 P.2d 848; 6 C.J.S. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors § 374, p. 1419.

[16] Defendants next argue that the assignment insufficiently described the real estate assigned. "[A] description of the property by general terms, as is so generally the case in assignments, is no more void for uncertainty than it is in its less frequent use in deeds." (4 American Law of Property (1952), p. 781.) The deed of assignment purported to transfer "all of the property of the Assignor of every kind and nature and wheresoever situated, both real and personal or mixed, and any interest or equity therein not exempt from execution * * *." The assignment did not specifically describe any real property, but the phrase "all of the property of the Assignor" sufficiently described the property to be conveyed. Brusseau v. Hill, 201 Cal. 225, 230–231, 256 P. 419, 55 A.L.R. 157; Pettigrew v. Dobbelaar, 63 Cal. 396, 397.

Defendants further maintain that the assignment is invalid because it provided that the assignee was to pay the net proceeds to the creditors "after deducting all monies which said Assignee shall at his option pay to discharge any lien on any of said property and any indebtedness which under the law is entitled to priority of payment, including any and all personal income taxes which may be due from E. L. W[ells] and B. F. W[ells] and after paying all charges and expenses" of administration.

[17, 18] Admittedly, this provision could be read as directing the assignee to pay the individual partners' tax liabilities from the partnership assets before applying any of the proceeds to discharge the partnership obligations. But the assignment should not be construed as conferring this authority where its language is consistent with a different and valid interpretation. (Burrill, Voluntary Assignments for the Benefit of Creditors (1894), § 285, p. 382; Bump, Fraudulent Conveyances (2d ed. 1876), pp. 358–359.) The challenged clause can be read as authorizing the assignee to prefer only such income tax obligations as may be a lien on the partnership property or which, under the law, are entitled to priority of payment. The income tax obligations of the individual partners are not liens on the partnership property, as distinguished from the partners' shares in any surplus (United States v. Worley, 5 Cir., 213 F.2d 509; Adler v. Nicholas, 10 Cir., 166 F.2d 674) nor are they entitled to priority of payment from that property. United States v. Kaufman, 267 U.S. 408, 45 S.Ct. 322, 69 L.Ed. 685. Therefore, the assignee was not authorized to prefer or pay them, and the assignment is not void as reserving a benefit to the individual members of the firm.

Finally, defendants maintain that the assignment is void because the assignee drew three lines through the word "net" in the sentence providing that he was entitled to "ten per cent (10%) of all net funds coming into his possession pursuant to this agreement." The assignee admitted drawing the lines, but insisted that he did not strike the word. He explained that he initially thought that the insertion of the word "net" was "obviously * * * wrong," that he drew the lines through it, but after consulting with attorneys representing the creditors and the assignor, he "accepted the assignment on the basis that it was 10 per cent of all net funds and so signed it."

[19] The cancellation of the word "net" effected an alteration of the instrument. Since it purported to change the rights of the parties, it was material. Consolidated Loan Co. v. Harman, 150 Cal.App.2d 488, 491–492, 310 P.2d 450. However, not every material alteration of a written instrument will invalidate it. Thus an alteration by a stranger to the instrument or an agent acting beyond the scope of his authority is a mere spoliation and does not affect the right of the parties to enforce the instrument as it was originally written. Walsh v. Hunt, 120 Cal. 46, 53, 52 P. 115, 39 L.R.A. 697. It has also been said that "a material alteration of a deed by a trustee who holds the legal title for others, who are entitled to the enjoyment of the beneficial interest, does not invalidate the deed, for the trustee is not a party within a rule that a material alteration by a party to a deed, with a view to increase the benefit which he may take under it, renders it void." (8 Thompson, Real Property (perm. ed. 1940), § 4235, p. 16; see also 3 C.J.S. Alteration of Instruments § 53 p. 971.)

[20, 21] We are of the opinion that this latter rule correctly states the law and is controlling here. The assignee for the benefit of creditors, like a trustee, holds a bare legal title in trust for the beneficiaries. Accordingly, his alteration of the instrument in a manner neither sanctioned by, nor advantageous to, the parties beneficially interested, but solely for the purpose of increasing his own compensation, should not deprive the partnership creditors of their rights under the assignment. We have concluded, therefore, that the assignment was not rendered void by the alteration, and that plaintiff was entitled to quiet his title as assignee for the benefit of creditors.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

DOCTORS GENERAL HOSPITAL OF SAN JOSE, a corporation doing business as Buchanan Hospital, et al., Defendants, Doctors General Hospital of San Jose, a corporation doing business as Buchanan Hospital; Buchanan Hospital; Elma Kiese; and L. Lee, Appellants.

Civ. 9408.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 17, 1958.

Action against hospital, nurses and attending physician for wrongful death of mother who died of a hemorrhage from laceration of the cervix to relieve constrictive band of muscle during childbirth. From an order of the Superior Court, San Joaquin County, George F. Buck, J., granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial as to the hospital and nurses, the hospital and nurses appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence was sufficient to support finding that nurses, who attended mother, and who knew that she was bleeding excessively, were negligent in failing to report to their superior circumstances of mother's peril so that prompt and adequate measures could be taken to safeguard her life, and court did not abuse its discretion in granting a motion for new trial on ground that evidence was insufficient to sustain verdict in favor of hospital and nurses.

1. New Trial ⇐70

In action against hospital, nurses and attending physician for wrongful death of mother who died of a hemorrhage from laceration of the cervix to relieve constrictive band of muscle during childbirth, evidence was sufficient to support finding that nurses, who attended mother, and who knew that she was bleeding excessively, were negligent in failing to report to their superior circumstances of mother's peril so that prompt and adequate measures could be taken to safeguard her life, and court did not abuse its discretion in granting a motion for new trial on ground that evidence was insufficient to sustain verdict in favor of hospital and nurses.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐854(6), 933(1), 977(3)

Granting of motion for new trial rests within discretion of trial judge to such an extent that an appellate court will not interfere unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears, and all presumptions are in favor of the order, and it will be affirmed if it is sustainable on any ground.

3. New Trial ⇐71

Trial court, in considering a motion for new trial, is not bound by a conflict in the evidence.

4. Hospitals ⇐7

Extent and character of care that a hospital owes to its patients depends on circumstances of each particular case.

5. Hospitals ⇐7

A private hospital owes its patients duty of protection, and must exercise such reasonable care toward a patient as his known condition may require.

6. Hospitals ⇐7

Measure of duty of a hospital toward a patient is to exercise that degree of care, skill and diligence used by hospitals generally in that community and required by the express or implied contract of the undertaking, and a hospital is liable for want of ordinary care, whether from incompetency of a nurse or failure in duty by a fully qualified nurse.

7. Evidence ⇐538

In action against attending physician, hospital and nurses for wrongful death of mother following delivery of child, physician, who practiced in two hospitals in city located in same county 14 miles away, was qualified to testify as to standard of care of doctors and nurses in the locality and as to standard of care prevailing in hospitals of the same type and he was competent to testify as to negligence of nurses and attending physician.

8. Hospitals ⇐8

In action against hospital, attending physician and nurses for wrongful death of mother following delivery of child, whether negligence of nurses was a proximate cause of death was one of fact.

9. Hospitals ⇐8

In action against hospital, attending physician and nurses for wrongful death of mother who died of a hemorrhage from laceration of cervix several hours after delivery of child, evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that nurses, who attended mother and who were aware of excessive bleeding, were negligent and that such negligence was a contributing cause of death.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

[1] This is an appeal from an order granting a motion for a new trial as to defendants Doctors General Hospital of San Jose, doing business as Buchanan Hospital, Elma Kiese, and Mary Lynne Lee, sued as L. Lee, in an action brought to recover for the wrongful death of Bette Jo Goff, the wife of plaintiff Charles T. Goff, and the mother of plaintiffs Charles T. Goff, Jr., Kathleen Ann Goff and Bette Jo Goff. Defendant Vernon Ashley has not appealed from the judgment entered against him.

On October 26, 1955, Bette Jo Goff was admitted to Buchanan Hospital at the request of her physician, Vernon Ashley, for the purpose of having a child. Under instructions of her physician, Mrs. Goff was administered pituitrin, a drug used to induce labor. About 7:00 p. m. Mrs. Goff was taken to the delivery room where her child was born. Prior to the birth of the child Dr. Ashley made an incision just to the left of the 12:00 o'clock position of the cervix to relieve the constrictive band of muscle. This incision was not sutured, but pelvic packs were inserted to control the bleeding. Mrs. Goff was then returned to her room. Nurse Lee, who assisted during the birth of the child, told the doctor on three different occasions, the last about 9:30 p. m., that, in her opinion, the patient was bleeding too much. She testified that Dr. Ashley told her that the condition, as described, was normal. She also testified that Dr. Ashley instructed her on a testing method by which the rate of loss of blood could be measured. The nurse was instructed to time the period it took for the perineal pads to become soaked. At 9:45 she checked the patient and some blood was found on the pads, though they were in fair condition; at 10:15 the nurse checked the pads again and found that they were approaching the saturation point; at 10:30 the pads were found to be soaked with blood and the nurse changed them. During this period the nurse did not take the blood pressure, temperature, pulse or respiration of the decedent. She did not call the physician because, in her opinion, he would not have come anyhow. She also testified that she did not call him because the timing test had not been completed. The doctor's order sheet stated that he was to be called if the post partum flow was greater than normal. At 10:15 she thought an emergency existed. At 10:30 she thought the patient's condition was pretty serious. At 11:00 p. m. Miss Lee was relieved by Mrs. Kiese. She was advised by Miss Lee that Mrs. Goff was bleeding too much, and that Miss Lee was horrified by Dr. Ashley's treatment of the patient. About 11:10 Mrs. Kiese observed Mrs. Goff. The patient appeared to be going into shock. The nurse could not locate the patient's pulse, and she was cold and clammy. She called Dr. Ashley about 11:15, and he arrived at the hospital about 11:25. Mrs. Goff was taken to the delivery room where oxygen and adrenalin were administered. There was an attempt to give the patient a blood transfusion, but the doctor was unable to find a vein in which to insert a needle. Mrs. Goff died of a hemorrhage from a laceration of the cervix.

Dr. John F. Blinn, Jr., a physician and surgeon, with offices in Stockton, was found by the court to be qualified to testify as to the standard of care of doctors and nurses in the locality. Dr. Blinn testified that defendant Ashley's treatment of Mrs. Goff was not one which is ordinarily employed by physicians in good standing in the locality. The incision was not proper in technique and should have been sutured. He also did not meet the standard by not observing the laceration, and when he could not find the vein he should have cut down.

Dr. Blinn further testified that defendant Lee's care was not commensurate with the skill ordinarily used by nurses in good standing in the locality in that she should have observed the blood pressure, temperature, pulse and respiration of Mrs. Goff, and that such observations would have indicated Mrs. Goff's perilous condition; that she should not have acted on her own opinion of the doctor's attitude and qualification, but should have called him and should have notified her supervisor.

Dr. Blinn also testified that time was of the essence and that if proper medical care had been summoned sooner the chances of saving Mrs. Goff's life would have been greater.

The motion for a new trial was granted upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict in favor of appellants. Appellants contend that there is no substantial evidence to support a verdict contrary to the one that the jury rendered, and that, therefore, the order granting the motion for a new trial was erroneous.

[2, 3] The rules applicable to an appeal from an order of the trial court granting a motion for a new trial on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence are well settled and are succinctly expressed in the case of Ballard v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 28

"* * * [T]he granting of a motion for a new trial rests within the discretion of the trial judge to such an extent that an appellate court will not interfere unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears. All presumptions are in favor of the order and it will be affirmed if it is sustainable on any ground. Mazzotta v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 25 Cal.2d 165, 169, 153 P.2d 338, and cases cited. The trial court in considering a motion for new trial is not bound by a conflict in the evidence, and has not abused its discretion when there is any evidence which would support a judgment in favor of the moving party. Estate of Green, 25 Cal.2d 535, 542, 154 P.2d 692; Hames v. Rust, 14 Cal.2d 119, 124, 92 P.2d 1010. The only conflict may be the opposing inferences deducible from uncontradicted probative facts. In such case the trial court may draw inferences opposed to those accepted by the jury and may thus resolve the conflicting inferences in favor of the moving party, for 'It is only where it can be said as a matter of law that there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment that an appellate court will reverse the order of the trial court.' Brooks v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 27 Cal.2d 305, 307, 163 P.2d 689, 690; Malloway v. Hughes, 125 Cal.App. 573, 580, 13 P.2d 1062."

In the light of these well-settled rules, we have concluded that the order granting a new trial in the instant case must be affirmed.

[4–6] Any liability of the appellant hospital must necessarily be predicated on the doctrine of respondeat superior so we must determine whether there is any evidence in the record which would support a finding that either of the nurses was negligent, since Dr. Ashley was not an employee of the hospital. "The extent and character of the care that a hospital owes its patients depends on the circumstances of each particular case. A private hospital owes its patients the duty of protection, and must exercise such reasonable care toward a patient as his known condition may require. The measure of duty of a hospital is to exercise that degree of care, skill and diligence used by hospitals generally in that community, and required by the express or implied contract of the undertaking. A hospital is liable for want of ordinary care, whether from incompetency of a nurse or failure in duty by a fully qualified nurse * * *." (Wood v. Samaritan Institution, 26 Cal.2d 847, 851, 161 P.2d 556.) Appellant Lee knew that Mrs. Goff was bleeding. She did not take her pulse, blood pressure, temperature or respiration. She did not call Dr. Ashley even at 10:30 p. m. when she was aware that the bleeding was more than normal post partum flow, despite the fact that the doctor's order sheet stated he was to be called if there was more than the normal post partum flow.

Dr. Blinn testified that proper nursing care required that the nurses who were employees of the hospital should have reported the facts and circumstances to a superior in the hospital, with the end in view that prompt and adequate measures be taken to safeguard the life of Mrs. Goff. The following quotation from the memorandum opinion of the trial judge in granting the motion for a new trial is fully supported by the record:

"The evidence is clear that the two nurses realized the nature of the medical care that the doctor was administering to Mrs. Goff. The nurses knew that Mrs. Goff was in deadly peril and the nurses knew the cause and origin of that peril and they knew who was to blame for that peril. The first nurse told the second nurse that she was 'horrified.' It is elementary that the knowledge received during the course of their employment as nurses is in legal effect binding upon their employer, the defendant Hospital.

"It is apparent from the evidence with particular reference to the time of 9:00 P.M., and 10:30 P.M., and 11:00 P.M., that both nurses in the exercise of ordinary care could have taken action that would have guarded the safety of Mrs. Goff and that this nonfeasance contributed as a proximate cause to her death.

"Both nurses had enough time to have reported the facts and circumstances of Mrs. Goff's peril to a superior in the hospital corporation with the purpose that prompt and adequate measures be taken to safeguard the life of Mrs. Goff. In view of the testimony of Dr. Blinn there was enough time for those measures to have been effective."

We are satisfied that the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the appellant nurses, Lee and Kiese, were negligent and that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting the motion for a new trial on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence.

[7] Appellants contend that Dr. Blinn's testimony should not have been received because he was not qualified to testify as to the standard of care prevailing in the hospitals of the same type or similar to the appellant hospital or as to the duties and functions of nurses employed therein. Dr. Blinn practices in Stockton, which is 14 miles from Lodi. He is on the staff of two hospitals in Stockton, as well as being a member of the staff of the infirmary of the College of Pacific. The staff of a hospital determines the policies that are to be followed by the hospital and the course of conduct to be followed by the hospital personnel. This latter includes the duties of nurses in post partum care. Dr. Blinn could not testify to the actual standard of care in Lodi. He did practice in a city 14 miles away. Both cities are in the same county, and medical men practicing in the two cities belong to the same county medical association. Certainly, as to the negligence of Dr. Ashley, Dr. Blinn's testimony would be competent. See Sinz v. Owens, 33 Cal.2d 749, 205 P.2d 3, 8 A.L.R. 2d 757.) We are convinced also that Dr. Blinn would be competent to testify as to the negligence of the nurses. Surely, a qualified doctor would know what was standard procedure for nurses to follow. Hospitals are required to be licensed by the State of California and must conform to certain standards. Nurses who perform the duties assigned to appellant nurses in the instant case are required to be licensed registered nurses and are expected to practice their profession with due concern for the welfare of the patient. We are satisfied that Dr. Blinn, who is on the staff of two hospitals in the neighboring city of Stockton, was fully competent to testify as to the negligence of the appellant nurses.

[8, 9] Appellants also contend that if either of the appellant nurses was negligent her negligence was not a proximate cause of the death of Mrs. Goff. However, the question whether or not the negligence of the nurses was a proximate cause is one of fact. Conceding that Dr. Ashley was negligent, still if nurse Lee had called the doctor at 10:30 p. m., when she was aware the condition of the patient was critical, who can say that the same result would have occurred. The patient may not have been in shock. The doctor may have been able to insert a needle for a blood transfusion. The longer the delay, the more critical the condition of the patient became. Time was a most important factor. In the instant case a finding that the negligence of the nurse was a contributing cause of the death is supported by the record.

No other points raised require discussion.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

Civ. 9382.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 29, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Action to quiet title to real property. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Placer County, Leland J. Propp, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Warne, J. pro tem., held that title to the property was properly quieted in the plaintiff.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Trusts ⇐137

A trustee accepting a trust is estopped from contesting the title of the creator of the trust to the property conveyed to the trustee and from setting up a claim to the trust estate as against the beneficiary under the trust or denying title or estate of the person for whose benefit the trust was created or for whom he holds it.

2. Trusts ⇐137

If a trustee desires to set up a title to trust property in himself, he should refuse to accept the trust.

3. Trusts ⇐248

In action to quiet title to realty where decedent during her lifetime and after her death her successors had been in uninterrupted possession of the property for more than 20 years and defendant's possession as coexecutrix and cotrustee was at no time during that period as an individual but solely in her legal capacity and the plaintiff was in possession of the property first as executrix and later as trustee of the estate, title was properly quieted in the plaintiff.

4. Trusts ⇐248

In action to quiet title to realty where decedent acquired color of title to the parcels by decree quieting her title in 1926 and although the action did not name defendant's decedent as a party defendant he had the constructive notice of the plaintiff decedent's hostile claim and he voiced no objection thereto, title was properly quieted in plaintiff as trustee of the decedent's estate.

Mas Yonemura, Oakland, for respondent.

WARNE, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a decree and judgment quieting title to real property.

Mary Delome Trent, the mother of the appellant and the respondent herein, died testate in 1931. By her will she left all of her estate to her husband for life and after his death to her daughters Helen Trent Power and Evelyn Trent, now Evelyn Trent Jones, in trust, to be held until there were but two survivors of the testator's eight children. The two daughters were named as executrices of the estate and duly qualified as such.

The decedent was married to L. C. Trent, and during their lifetime and marriage they acquired the property in question in the name of L. C. Trent. It apparently was purchased out of community funds. However, in 1926, decedent acquired color of title to the property in her own name in a quiet title suit. Her husband was not a party to that action either as plaintiff or defendant.

During the course of administration of the estate of Mary Delome Trent, deceased, appellant and respondent as executrices thereof reported all of Parcel II and an undivided one-half interest in and to Parcel III, including a right of way or easement appurtenant to Parcel III, in the inventory and appraisement filed in said estate proceedings as property belonging to the estate of Mary Delome Trent; and thereafter, on October 24, 1932, the property was, by decree of distribution, distributed to L. C. Trent, the decedent's surviving spouse, for life, with the remainder at his death to Helen Trent Power and Evelyn Trent, as trustees, for the uses and purposes stated in decedent's last will and testament.

In June of 1932, L. C. Trent conveyed Parcel III to one Sophia Rosenberg, and on the same day Sophia Rosenberg, by deed, conveyed said parcel to L. C. Trent and Evelyn Trent, as joint tenants.

L. C. Trent died testate in March, 1935, and on April 8, 1935, a decree establishing the fact of his death and terminating the joint tenancy was entered, investing title to Parcel III in Evelyn.

Immediately after the death of their father, the two daughters, Helen and Evelyn, began their duties as trustees of the testamentary trust created by their mother's will; and in that capacity they collected the rents of the cottages on Parcel II, paid all the taxes, and, in general, cared for and managed the property. However, in 1955, Evelyn was removed as a trustee by order of court because of a conflict of interest created by her claim as executrix under her father's will that the real property involved herein belonged to the estate of her father. Under the terms of her father's will, she was his sole beneficiary and as such any real property which he owned at the time of his death vested in her. Although her father's will was in her possession at all times after his death, she did not file it for probate until 1954. In her petition for letters testamentary she listed Parcel II as part of the assets belonging to her father's estate.

Parcel II was improved during the lifetime of Mary Delome Trent. She constructed three rental cottages on said parcel and had another under construction at the time of her death. The cottage under construction was completed out of the income and assets of her estate during probate. All of the rental units mentioned herein were assumed to be on Parcel II, but in 1951 it was learned that one of the units encroached on Parcel III. The cottages on Parcel II were occupied by tenants of Mary Delome Trent's trust estate. All income from Parcels II and III were collected and reported as income of the testamentary trust; and all real property taxes and expenses and maintenance of said property were paid out of funds of said estate, with the exception that as to income from the cottage on the boundary between Parcel II and Parcel III an allocation was made in 1951 between appellant and respondent, since respondent conceded that an undivided one-half interest to Parcel III belonged to appellant individually.

Except for the conveyance to Sophia Rosenberg in 1932 of Parcel III, and the reconveyance of the joint tenancy deed from her, it does not appear that L. C. Trent made any claim to the real property involved herein following the death of his wife. There is no evidence that he disapproved of his wife's will. Nor did appellant Evelyn claim that said property belonged to her father or his estate until she filed his will for probate 23 years after the death of her mother.

After Evelyn filed her father's will for probate and listed the property mentioned as part of his estate, Helen, as trustee of her mother's testamentary trust, then brought this action to quiet title to Parcel II and to a one-half interest in Parcel III and to the right of way appurtenant to said Parcel III. The trial court found that "plaintiff and her predecessors in interest had been in the actual, exclusive and adverse possession of the whole of said real property and of each and every parcel thereof continuously for twenty years prior to the filing of the complaint, and claiming during all of said period title to the whole of said parcels of real property in fee; that during a period of more than twenty years continuously next preceding the filing of this complaint plaintiff has, as co-executrix, co-trustee and individual trustee of the estate of Mary Delome Trent, paid all of the taxes of every kind levied or assessed against, or any part thereof, and which were payable during the said period of twenty years continuously next preceding the filing of the complaint, save and except that since 1951, defendant has paid one-half of the taxes" on the parcel in which it is considered she owned a one-half interest. The trial court further found that the asserted claim of appellant, individually and as executrix of the estate of L. C. Trent, deceased, of an interest in and to the property in question was without any right whatever, and that said appellant has not, nor has ever had, any estate, right, title, or interest whatever in said land or premises, or any part thereof, save and except as to the undivided one-half interest in the parcel which we have described as No. III herein. Judgment was entered accordingly and this appeal followed.

[1–3] Appellant first contends that as to Parcel II she was never out of possession or ousted for the statutory period required to establish title by adverse possession. The facts, as heretofore stated, show that Mary Delome Trent, during her lifetime, and after her death her successors, as co-executrices of her estate and as co-trustees of her testamentary trust, have been in the uninterrupted possession of the property involved in this action for more than twenty years. Appellant's possession as a co-executrix and co-trustee was at no time during that period of years as an individual, but solely in her legal capacity. Respondent likewise was in the possession of the property in question, first as an executrix and later as a trustee of said estate. Appellant's claim that she, personally, was never out of possession as the one in whom the property would have vested upon the death of her father cannot under the circumstances be maintained. A trustee, accepting a trust, is estopped from contesting the title of the creator of the trust to the property conveyed to the trustee and from setting up a claim to the trust estate, as against the beneficiary under the trust, or denying the title or estate of the person for whose benefit the trust was created or for whom he holds it. In re Eustace' Estate, 198 Wash. 142, 87 P.2d 305, 307; 90 C.J.S. Trusts § 181, p. 71. If a trustee desires to set up a title to the trust property in himself, he should refuse to accept the trust. (1 Perry on Trusts and Trustees, 7th ed. 721, sec. 433.)

[4] Finally, with respect to Parcel III and the right of way appurtenant thereto, appellant contends that there can be no adverse possession as between co-tenants. Mary Delome Trent in her lifetime acquired color of title to these parcels by decree quieting her title in 1926, and although the quiet title action did not name L. C. Trent as a party defendant, the recording of the decree quieting title gave constructive notice of her hostile claim. In addition to the constructive notice given by said quiet title decree, the inference may be drawn that L. C. Trent had actual notice of Mary Delome Trent's claim to the whole of said parcels and voiced no objection thereto. Further, the decree quieting title in Mary Delome Trent was an independent source of title which formed the basis of including Parcels II and III, and the right of way appurtenant to Parcel III, in the decree of distribution in the Mary Delome Trent estate; and by the time that L. C. Trent died in 1935, the statutes of limitations had already run against him and those claiming under him.

The judgment is affirmed.

166 Cal.App.2d 501

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Phillip Errol FLYNN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6296.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 23, 1958.

As Modified Jan. 12, 1959.

Hearing Denied Feb. 18, 1959.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Otto J. Emme, J., for furnishing marijuana to a minor, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that an expert may base his opinion either on facts personally observed or on hypothesis that finds support in evidence.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐481, 1153(2)

It is primarily for trial court, in exercise of sound discretion, to determine competency and qualifications of an expert witness to give his opinion, and no specified limitations are imposed upon trial court in determining such qualifications; and its ruling will not be disturbed upon appeal unless manifest abuse of that discretion is made clearly to appear.

2. Criminal Law ⇐478(1)

On record presented, in prosecution for furnishing marijuana to a minor, it was not an abuse of discretion to find police officer qualified as an expert and to receive his response to a hypothetical question based upon testimony of minor. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11714.

3. Criminal Law ⇐486

An expert may base his opinion either on facts personally observed or on hypothesis that finds support in evidence.

4. Criminal Law ⇐452(1)

In prosecution for furnishing marijuana to a minor, trial court did not err in permitting minor to give her opinion, based on knowledge gained by prior use, that what she smoked in defendant's apartment was marijuana. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11714.

5. Witnesses ⇐262

Recalling for further cross-examination a witness who has been excused by all parties is a matter committed to sound discretion of trial court.

6. Criminal Law ⇐1170½(1)
Witnesses ⇐332

In prosecution for furnishing marijuana to a minor, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse to permit minor to be recalled for further cross-examination aimed at showing bias and implication of a promise of immunity; and, in any event, defendant could not have been prejudiced by trial court's ruling in view of fact that subject had theretofore been explored.

7. Criminal Law ⇐507(1)

Minor in question could not be considered an accomplice of defendant charged with furnishing marijuana to her. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11714; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1111.

J. Thomas Russell, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was accused of a violation of Section 11714 of the Health and Safety Code in that he did on or about August 19, 1957, furnish marijuana to Kathleen Briggs, a minor. Defendant was also charged with a prior conviction of the crime of Rape. He pleaded not guilty to the charge and denied the prior conviction, which was dismissed because the prior conviction was reduced to a misdemeanor by the imposition of a county jail sentence therein. Trial by jury resulted in a conviction of the crime charged in the information. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied and he was sentenced to state prison.

From the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

As to the factual background of this prosecution the record reveals that Kathleen Briggs testified she was seventeen years of age. On August 19, 1957, she accepted the invitation of one Mickey Russell "to get high on marijuana". Russell, whom the witness had known for some time, said he knew where they "can get some", and escorted her to the defendant's apartment, where they arrived about 2:30 a. m. The witness had met defendant only once before some weeks prior. Defendant was entertaining another young lady with whom the witness was acquainted. Defendant led the witness and her escort into his bedroom where he got into bed. After a brief conversation, "Mickey (Russell) said to Flynn (defendant) that he wanted to get high" and asked defendant if he had any "pot" (marijuana). Defendant replied, "It's under the dresser". Thereupon, "Mickey walked over to the dresser and reached underneath the dresser and brought a package out". According to the witness, the package was "a brown paper bag", which contained "a brownish-green leafy substance * * * stems like from a plant and * * * seeds". Mickey handed the bag to defendant who removed some white cigarette papers from it and glued two of them together. Defendant "took some of the material out of the bag" and used the papers to roll a cigarette, the ends of which were "tucked in". All four of those present in the room smoked the cigarette, each taking one or two puffs, inhaling, and then passing it to another. While they were smoking "a couple of the seeds popped". Defendant rolled three or four cigarettes and the parties smoked two. The witness gave the following description as to how defendant made a "cocktail" out of the first butt or "roach": "He took the tobacco out of one end of a regular size cigarette and put the roach inside of the cigarette and rolled the end back up and lit the cigarette and smoked it."

The cigarette had an odor like "burning weed or leaves burning". The witness became "high", "thirsty", "hungry"; her mouth got "dry"; she "felt relaxed".

The witness further testified she had commenced smoking marijuana about June of 1957 and prior to the occasion here in question, she had smoked approximately twenty or twenty-five such cigarettes. Over the objection of defendant on the ground of the incompetency of Miss Briggs to testify on the subject of marijuana, she was permitted to testify that on the aforesaid previous occasions, the cigarettes were rolled in the same fashion as on the morning with which we are here concerned, that she had heard "that pop noise"; had smelled the same odor of "burning leaves", and had experienced the same sensations of getting "high", dryness of mouth, thirst, hunger and relaxation. That she would generally start to feel "high" in three to six minutes and the effects would last from an hour to an hour and a half depending on how much she smoked. She experienced a feeling of depression as she was "coming down from the marijuana".

After about an hour and a half to two hours the witness and Russell left defendant's apartment.

On cross-examination Miss Briggs testified that she was arrested on August 29 by Officer Allen; that she had not been prosecuted; that no promise of any kind had been made to her by any member of the police department in consideration of her testifying; that she had made twelve to thirteen visits to the juvenile bureau of narcotics on each of which she had seen Officer Allen and "about every officer that is down at Georgia Street in the Narcotics Division"; that she had given three statements to police officers, that no promise of immunity had been made by any officer in consideration of her testifying in any other case.

Edwin O. Hall testified that he had been a police officer of the City of Los Angeles continuously from 1941 to the time of the trial, except for approximately three years of military service. Since January of 1949 he had been assigned exclusively to the narcotics division. During his first year and a half in that division he had been "Day Watch Commander" assigning cases and interviewing all persons involved in narcotic matters. He had spent two and one-half years as head of the "Addict Squad" which investigated users of narcotics and filed use or addiction reports. With respect to his experience with and knowledge of marijuana, he testified:

> "My training in the effects, appearance, and so forth, of marijuana has been field training by veteran narcotic officers, by reading various governmental publications and pamphlets, and some other publications. I have discussed it with some medical authorities, and then field investigations."

He had also taught and lectured at various colleges and junior colleges throughout the local area and had instructed at the Los Angeles Police Academy. He had lectured to the graduating interns at the College of Osteopathy at General Hospital and had been on a forum, attended by many prominent psychiatrists from throughout the United States, including Dr. Victor Vogell, whom Officer Hall considered to be the foremost authority on narcotics in the United States. Officer Hall had assisted in the writing of a pamphlet entitled "Youth and Narcotics" which was published by the Los Angeles Police Department. He had observed more than one hundred individuals actually smoking marijuana and had discussed with certain of them the effects therefrom. He had testified in connection with similar matters in approximately 300 other cases.

Officer Hall testified that in the jargon of the marijuana user, the term "pot" means marijuana; that the color of the marijuana depends on the age and manner of drying of the plant, in the earlier stages the leaves are green, and in the latter it becomes a dark brown; that usually two overlapping cigarette papers are used to roll a marijuana cigarette in order to get "a tighter wrap"; that the ends of a marijuana cigarette are usually "tucked in"; that the marijuana smoker takes "a long, slow drag on the cigarette and holds it within the lungs as long as possible" to get the "maximum effect"; that the odor of a burning marijuana cigarette is similar to that of burning leaves or grass; and that the term "cocktail" signifies a tobacco cigarette containing the marijuana roach in one end. Hall testified that the effects of smoking marijuana were dryness of the throat and mouth, hunger, "light-headedness or, as they say, high", abnormal behavior, thirst, then "(a)s he comes down" a feeling of depression. The intensiveness and duration of these sensations depend upon the tolerance of the smoker and the quantity smoked.

In response to a hypothetical question based upon the testimony of Miss Briggs, Hall expressed the opinion, over the objection of defendant on the ground of Hall's "lack of experience", that the "person did receive and smoke marijuana".

On cross-examination, Officer Hall testified in effect that when he entered the narcotics division there was no course offered anywhere on narcotics, therefore a school was started by the police department to train police officers in this field. He eventually "took over" the school which now furnishes men "to teach in the various universities on all phases of narcotics". Defendant's counsel subsequently asked Officer Hall: "Q. You are dean emeritus then of (that school)", to which Hall replied: "A. I like to think so, sir."

On re-direct examination Hall stated that there was no local physician and surgeon known to the police department who had sufficient experience with marijuana, as distinguished from opiates, to testify as an expert on marijuana addiction.

Sworn as a witness for the defense, Doctor M. A. Seymon testified that he was a physician and surgeon licensed to practice in this state. The witness testified: "I am a specialist in the treatment of alcoholics and drug addicts". Dr. Seymon was shown the hypothetical question theretofore propounded to the witness, Officer Hall, and when asked if he had an opinion on said question, replied, "My opinion is that this doesn't prove anything at all". Having read the symptoms referred to in the aforesaid question, the witness was asked to approximate from how many other substances those symptoms might emanate or result. He replied, "From many other drugs which have an effect on the sympathetic nervous system". When asked to approximate the number of drugs, if possible, he stated that "it could be ten or twelve drugs that could do the thing, at least".

"Q. Doctor, there is no specific for the test of smoking marihuana, is there? A. No, there is none.

"Q. Just from judging, observing the conduct of a person? A. No, there is not."

On cross-examination, the witness testified as follows:

"Q. By Mr. Amstutz (deputy district attorney): Doctor, you are familiar, are you, with some of the better known, or shall we say, commonly accepted symptoms in relation to people who have smoked marijuana? A. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Russell (counsel for defendant): That is objected to, if the court please, on the ground that it is not proper cross-examination.

"The Court: Objection is overruled.

"Q. By Mr. Amstutz: Among those symptoms, Doctor, have you ever heard the expression that those who might have smoked it felt high or lightheaded? A. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Russell: May my objection continue throughout this line of questioning, if the court please?

"The Court: Yes, you may have a running objection to this line of questioning.

"Q. By Mr. Amstutz: Have you also seen listed among those, Doctor, the fact that the mouth may or does become dry? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Or that there is a feeling of hunger? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Or that sound or sight might be distorted, or distance? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Doctor, do you know of any other weedy, if I may use that expression, substance and/or any narcotic which can be smoked or is smoked as a cigarette which would give some or all or any of the symptoms I just referred to? A. No."

Suzanne Russell, called as a witness on behalf of defendant, stated she was 17 years of age and that she had known Kathleen Briggs for about eight months. Questioned as to whether she knew of her general reputation in this community for truth, honesty and integrity, the reply was that she did. Upon being asked what was that reputation, she replied, "Very bad."

Sworn as a witness in his own behalf, defendant testified only to the fact that he had never been convicted of a felony.

As his first ground for reversal of the judgment and order herein appellant urges that the court erred in permitting a lay witness, Officer Hall, to answer a hypothetical question based upon the testimony given by Kathleen Briggs, 17 years of age. In support of this contention, appellant argues that Officer Hall "was not a graduate in any of the sciences and had no personal knowledge of or contact with any aspect of the subject matter of the question, there being no physical substance as an exhibit in evidence and never having seen or observed the witness concerned until weeks later." The gist of appellant's argument seems to be that Officer Hall was not qualified as an expert on marijuana and, though it be conceded he was, nevertheless he could not give an opinion based upon a hypothetical question.

Certain elementary principles relating to the qualifications and the opinion testimony of the expert witness are treated with unusual clarity in the case of Manney v. Housing Authority, 79 Cal.App.2d 453, 459, 460, 180 P.2d 69, 73, wherein the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Dooling, had this to say:

"The growth of the rule excluding opinion evidence and the development of the two well recognized exceptions to the rule are learnedly traced by Dean Wigmore on Evidence, 3d Ed., pp. 1 to 29. The two instances in which the opinions of witnesses are permitted in evidence are: 1. The opinions of experts are admitted in matters which are not within the common experience of men so that the special knowledge of a person of skill and experience in the particular field may enable him to form an opinion, where men of common experience would not be able to do so. (Citations.) 2. The opinions of nonexpert witnesses are admitted as a matter of practical necessity when the matters which they have observed are too complex or too subtle to enable them accurately to convey them to court or jury in any other manner. (Citations.)

"For a nonexpert to be competent to give an opinion under the second exception he must be testifying about facts that he has personally observed; but the expert in any case proper for the reception of expert testimony may give his opinion, although he did not personally observe the facts, basing his opinion upon the facts testified to by other witnesses put to him in the form of hypothetical questions." (Emphasis added.)

[1] Appellant concedes that it is primarily for the trial court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to determine the competency and qualifications of an expert witness to give his opinion, and that its ruling will not be disturbed upon appeal unless a manifest abuse of that discretion is made clearly to appear (Huffman v. Lindquist, 37 Cal.2d 465, 476, 234 P.2d 34, 29 A.L.R.2d 485). And to that may be added that no specified limitations are imposed upon the trial court in determining such qualifications (People v. Horowitz, 70 Cal.App.2d 675, 689, 161 P.2d 833). In the case just cited it it is further stated, at page 689 of 70 Cal. App.2d, at page 841 of 161 P.2d, "If the witness exhibits an unusual skill and knowledge gained from study and experience not possessed by the man on the street he is competent to give an opinion".

[2, 3] With the foregoing rules in mind, we are satisfied from the testimony given by Officer Hall and hereinbefore narrated, that he had a thorough knowledge of marijuana "* * * gained through experience in interviewing addicts and study, not possessed by the average man. He thus qualified as an expert and as such his opinion was properly received" (People v. Nunn, 46 Cal.2d 460, 466, 467, 296 P.2d 813, 817).

Appellant's argument that an expert cannot give an opinion based upon a hypothetical question is equally devoid of merit. He relies upon the headnote statement contained in People v. Johnson, 153 Cal.App.2d 564, 314 P.2d 751, that "An expert's opinion must be based on his own personal observations". However, a reading of that case discloses that no hypothetical question was involved.

The court therein simply held that in order for the expert witness properly to testify as to the effects of a test for addiction, known as the Nalline Test, it was necessary for the witness to have "personal knowledge of the practical results and effectiveness of the test" (People v. Johnson, supra, 153 Cal.App.2d at page 569, 314 P.2d at page 754). That the court did not hold that expert testimony based upon a hypothetical question was barred is further evidenced by the fact that in support of the necessity of personal observation under the facts of that case, the court cited only the case of George v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 33 Cal.2d 834, 205 P.2d 1037, and wherein is found, at page 844, of 33 Cal.2d, at page 1038 of 205 P.2d, the following succinct statement of the general rule: "Ordinarily an expert must base his opinion either on facts personally observed or on hypotheses that find support in the evidence". We perceive no error in the ruling of the court that Officer Hall was qualified as an expert on marijuana and was therefore entitled to give an opinion based upon the hypothetical question here under consideration.

Appellant's further contention that the hypothetical question propounded to Officer Hall "did not include all of the salient factors adduced by the evidence * * *", cannot be sustained. We have read the record and suffice it to say that, in the light thereof, the hypothetical question embraced all the elements of the testimony of the witness Kathleen Briggs, upon which it was based.

[4] It is next contended that the court erred in permitting the witness Kathleen Briggs to "give her opinion that what she smoked in the defendant's apartment was marijuana". No extended discussion is required on this assignment of error because the same contention was advanced in the case of People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 293 P.2d 40, and rejected. In that case two minor girls were permitted to testify that the cigarettes they smoked were marijuana, based on their knowledge of it from previous use. The ruling was sustained, the court holding that the weight of such testimony was for the jury. In the cited case, the court's summary of the minor girls' testimony as to their previous use of marijuana cigarettes, manner of smoking them and the effects therefrom, indicates a striking similarity to the testimony given by Kathleen Briggs in the instant case.

"Both girls testified that they had frequently smoked marijuana; they described the appearance of a marijuana cigarette, having tucked in ends; they related the custom of smoking such a cigarette in chain fashion in a group, each person taking one or two puffs and inhaling, then passing it to another; and they told of their 'high' feeling after about 15 minutes, their feeling of freedom from their cares, lasting about three to four hours, then their feeling of 'coming down,' that is, their feeling of depression, at which time they became hungry * * *." People v. Winston, supra, 46 Cal.2d at page 156, 293 P.2d at page 43.

Since the challenged testimony in the case now engaging our attention was substantially the same as that given by the minor girls in the Winston case, supra, it is obvious that the trial court herein did not err in ruling that the same was admissible. See also People v. Candalaria, 121 Cal.App. 2d 686, 689, 264 P.2d 71; People v. Drake, 151 Cal.App.2d 28, 44, 310 P.2d 997.

The next claim of error asserted by appellant is the refusal of the court to permit the witness Kathleen Briggs to be recalled for further cross-examination on the ground that his counsel had just discovered during the preceding noon recess that Miss Briggs had recently testified "* * * in four other cases, all involving minors and charging the same offense as herein, save one, with the same investigating officers in command". Appellant's counsel stated to the court that he wished to further cross-examine Miss Briggs "* * * for the sole purpose of showing her bias, her prejudice in this matter, and the implication and the deduction that can be drawn therefrom as to the promise of immunity * * *". The motion was denied.

[5] It is conceded by appellant that the recalling of a witness who has been excused by all parties, for further cross-examination is a matter committed to the sound discretion of the court (People v. Moan, 65 Cal. 532, 536, 4 P. 545; Litt v. Litt, 75 Cal. App.2d 242, 244, 170 P.2d 684; People v. Miller, 56 Cal.App. 472, 476, 477, 206 P. 89; 27 Cal.Jur. Witnesses, sec. 86, p. 111.)

[6] We are persuaded that in the case at bar, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellant's motion. During the extensive and intensive cross-examination of Miss Briggs by appellant's counsel when she was on the witness stand, we find the following:

"Q. (By Mr. Russell, appellant's counsel): I will ask you the question. What were your reasons for going down there (police headquarters) the 12 or 13 times? That is what I feel I have a right to know. A. I would meet Mr. Allen and Mr. Hathaway (police officers) in the mornings at the station to come down to the courthouse to go to court.

"Q. Not just on the Flynn case alone? A. No, sir.

"Q. On how many other cases, that is what I'm trying to find out. We will get at it that way.

"Mr. Amstutz: That is objected to as being immaterial, how many other cases, if the court please?

"The Court: Objection is sustained.

"Q. By Mr. Russell: I am going to assume that you testified in other cases by the process of subtraction, knowing how many times you have been in court on the Flynn case, which is three times, yesterday and today, and at the preliminary examination.

"Were you made any promises by Officer Allen or Officer Hathaway, or anyone else, when you went to court with them on these occasions on these other cases as to the fact that they would not prosecute, file any claim against you, or cause you not to be prosecuted if you testified as you did already, or would testify against Mr. Flynn? A. No, sir.

"Q. Did you expect it? A. No, sir, I did not.

"Q. Do you still expect to be arrested? A. No, I don't.

"Q. Why not? A. Because I haven't done anything to be arrested for, that is why."

From the foregoing it is manifest that appellant's counsel had obtained from the witness information that she had previously been to court with Officer Allen to testify "in many other cases". As to whether any promises of immunity or leniency had been offered for her testimony in such cases, Miss Briggs consistently denied any such promised reward, and with equal vigor asserted that she did not "expect to be arrested" because she had not "done anything to be arrested for". It appears to us that counsel had at considerable length explored the general subject of Miss Briggs' state of mind, not only in connection with the three cases to which he referred, but also as to all "other cases", and that further cross-examination along this line would necessarily be cumulative and repititious of matters already inquired into.

We are further persuaded that though it be assumed that the trial court might well have permitted the recall of Kathleen Briggs for further cross-examination nevertheless, appellant was not prejudiced by the adverse ruling on his motion. On her original cross-examination, the witness frankly admitted her prior use of marijuana, her many interviews with the police officers and her constant, complete and voluntary cooperation with and assistance to them in this and the "other cases" above referred to. From this testimony the jury could well have inferred that the testimony of the witness was subject to the distinct possibility, if not probability, that it was given in the hope of obtaining leniency. Thus, "(p)ractically everything that defendant was trying to develop through cross-examination along this line (was) * * * before the jury except an express agreement for leniency, but (Kathleen Briggs) specifically denied that any such promise had been made to (her)". People v. Winston, supra, 46 Cal.2d at pages 157, 158, 293 P.2d at page 44.

[7] Appellant's next assignment of error is the failure of the trial court to give an instruction in the language of Section 11714 of the Health and Safety Code. He urges that the court should have "* * * read (to the jury) the charging part of the Section (11714) commonly referred to and known as the 'transportation' section * * " rather than giving " * * only the second half of Section 11714". In support of his claim appellant argues that "One of the defenses urged by counsel for the defendant was that the witness, Kathleen Briggs, the minor, was a principal in the commission of the instant offense. Said defense was rendered a nullity by the failure of the court to read the charging part of the Section commonly referred to and known as the 'transportation' section. If the witness Briggs were an accomplice in the crime as alleged, the lack of corroboration of her testimony, as required by Section 1111 of the Penal Code, requires the court to give the further requested instruction offered by the defense: 'A court is advised to acquit the defendant on the charge set forth in the Information, etc. * * *'". We are satisfied no error was committed by the court in refusing to read to the jury Section 11714 of the Health and Safety Code in its entirety, and particularly in refusing to read that portion thereof referred to by appellant as the "transportation section". The reason advanced by appellant why the instruction should have been given, that is, that therefrom the jury might have considered Miss Briggs an accomplice, finds no support in the law. In People v. De Paula, 43 Cal.2d 643, 647, 276 P.2d 600, 603, it was expressly held that "Since the minor involved is the victim and the offense denounced by section 11714 of the Health and Safety Code is the harmful act to that victim with the resulting harm to society in general, it necessarily follows that in a prosecution under that section the minor involved cannot be held a principal in the sense of being subject to prosecution for the same identical offense, within the meaning of section 1111 of the Penal Code".

We have painstakingly read the reporter's transcript in this case containing some 350 pages; have carefully considered the assignments of error and have read appellant's briefs in connection therewith, from all of which we conclude that none of the rulings complained of militated against the substantial rights of appellant. He had a fair and impartial trial; in fact, the learned trial judge displayed to the defense unusual consideration and patience. The verdict of the jury was based on clear and convincing proof.

The judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are, and each is affirmed.

Harry BISCHOFF, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

NEWBY'S TIRE SERVICE, W. Mike Newby, Fred Lowery, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

No. 17685.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 24, 1958.

Action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when head of hammer one of defendants was using while making a tire change for plaintiff flew off and hit plaintiff, who was standing eight or nine feet away, in the face. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Santa Clara County, Harold Holden, J., the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that it was prejudicial error not to give plaintiff's requested instructions on res ipsa loquitur.

Judgment reversed.

Negligence ⇐138(2)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when head of hammer one of defendants was using while making a tire change for plaintiff flew off and hit plaintiff, who was standing eight or nine feet away, in the face, it was prejudicial error not to give plaintiff's requested instructions on res ipsa loquitur.

2. Negligence ⇐121(2)

Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur comes into play when accident is of a kind which ordinarily does not occur in absence of someone's negligence, and it is caused by an agency or instrumentality within exclusive control of defendant, and when it is not due to any voluntary action or contribution on part of plaintiff.

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when head of hammer which one of defendants was using while making a tire change for plaintiff flew off and hit plaintiff in the face, requested instruction by plaintiff that accident was of such a character that it spoke for itself and that defendants could not be held blameless except under a showing either of satisfactory explanation of accident or of such care in all possible respects as necessarily to lead to conclusion that accident could not have happened from want of care, was not objectionable on ground that instruction put ultimate burden of proof on defendants contrary to correct rule that res ipsa loquitur doctrine only shifts burden of going forward with the evidence.

4. Negligence ⇐138(2)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when head of hammer which one of defendants was using while changing a tire for plaintiff flew off and hit plaintiff in the face, requested instruction that it was only necessary for plaintiff, in order to establish a prima facie case, to prove fact of accident and injuries caused thereby, and that having done that he could rest, for inference then arose that accident occurred through negligence of defendants, and burden of explaining that defendants were not negligent was then cast upon them, and that to overcome inference of negligence defendants must show that accident was not caused by their negligence, was not improper.

Boccardo, Blum, Lull, Niland & Teerlink, San Jose, Edward J. Niland, San Jose, of counsel, for appellant.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

[1] Plaintiff drove his car to defendants' tire shop, removed one of the wheels and took it and a spare tire into the shop for a tire change. Defendant Fred Lowery removed the old tire and was installing the spare when the head of the hammer he was using flew off and hit plaintiff in the face. Verdict and judgment were for defendants.

Plaintiff's principal claim upon this appeal is the failure of the trial court to give his requested instructions on res ipsa loquitur. Our examination of the record convinces us there was sufficient evidentiary basis for the giving of instructions on that subject and that it was prejudicial error to give none.[1]

There is no dispute that the head of the hammer did fly off. There is a dispute about plaintiff's position at the time. Plaintiff testified he was standing about eight or nine feet away, and that no one had told him to stand further back or go somewhere else. Lowery testified that plaintiff "was knelt down, squatting" about three or four feet away, and had been told he had better move. Plaintiff testified that he requested tire irons be used in mounting the tire because sometimes a hammer will injure the bead. Lowery testified that no such request was made, and that a hammer such as was used would not damage the bead while a tire iron might. There was also some dispute as to the exact type of hammer that was used. Defendant produced a mallet with one rubber end and one metal end. Plaintiff testified that the hammer head which which struck him had one blunt rubber end and a steel claw on the other end. Plaintiff did not know which portion of the hammer struck his face.

1. In their brief, defendants claimed there was no basis for application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

During the oral argument, they conceded there was such a basis but claimed that plaintiff was not prejudiced by the failure to instruct on that subject because, they asserted, the inference of negligence upon their part was overcome by their testimony.

The fallacy of that argument is that, under the circumstances of this case, it was for the jury, under adequate instructions, to consider all of the evidence and determine whether the inference had in fact been overcome; not for a court to determine that question as a matter of law.

Lowery testified that if the handle of a hammer dries out, or if the steel wedge that is put in for the purpose of tightening the head on the hammer comes out, the head becomes loose. Usually a person can tell by the feel of the hammer while he is using it whether the head has become loosened. However, this particular time he did not detect the loosening, or else he would have fixed it immediately. Prior to plaintiff's accident, Lowery had never had an experience where he had no advance warning of the head becoming loosened.

Defendant Newby, who had had several years' experience as a service station attendant testified that this was the first time he could remember a hammer head flying off in his place of business and that it was almost impossible for a tight head to fly off.

[2] Here is evidence of the existence of the three factors which bring the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur into play: "(1) the accident must be of a kind which ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence; (2) it must have been caused by an agency or instrumentality within the exclusive control of the defendant; and (3) it must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff." Barrera v. De La Torre, 48 Cal.2d 166, 169, 308 P.2d 724, 726, citing Seneris v. Haas, 45 Cal. 2d 811, 823, 291 P.2d 915, 53 A.L.R.2d 124; Ybarra v. Spangard, 25 Cal.2d 486, 489, 154 P.2d 687, 162 A.L.R. 1258, and Prosser on Torts, 2d ed. 1955, p. 201.

Defendants contend that the last two conditions are not met in this case because "no harm would have befallen plaintiff had he merely exercised his own wits and knowledge as a craftsman and stood to either side of the line of downward swing of the hammer he was watching." The only case they cite is Weddle v. Heath, 211 Cal. 445, 295 P. 832, where a judgment in favor of plaintiff was reversed. That was a case of an electric motor and a pump connected by a moving belt with which plaintiff made contact, to his injury; machinery that was under his charge, and which he had set in motion. That is quite different from a tool that breaks, flies apart and hits a bystander. In the Weddle case the accident was due to plaintiff's voluntary act in going too close to the moving parts. Here, the position plaintiff took as a bystander had no causative connection with the separation of the hammer head from its handle, whatever bearing it may have had upon the issue of contributory negligence.

Zentz v. Coca Cola Bottling Co., 39 Cal. 2d 436, 444–445, 247 P.2d 344, 348, explains what is meant by the third condition in res ipsa cases: "Some cases have stated that the accident must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff. [Citing cases.] This is allied to the condition of control by the defendant and has also been employed as a means of showing that the defendant, rather than the plaintiff, had control and was responsible for the injury. See Escola v. Coca Cola Bottling Co., 24 Cal.2d 453, 458, 150 P.2d 436. It should not be confused with the problem of contributory negligence, as to which defendant has the burden of proof, and its purpose, like that of control by the defendant, is merely to assist the court in determining whether it is more probable than not that the defendant was responsible for the accident. As recently held by the Supreme Court of Oregon in a well reasoned opinion, a plaintiff may properly rely upon res ipsa loquitur even though he has participated in the events leading to the accident if the evidence excludes his conduct as the responsible cause. Gow v. Multnomah Hotel, 191 Or. 45, 224 P.2d 552, 555, 560, 228 P.2d 791." In the Gow case, plaintiff was injured when a counter stool on which he was sitting broke. The court cited numerous cases where res ipsa loquitur was held applicable even though contributory negligence was an issue in the case.

In Stanford v. Richmond Chase Co., 43 Cal.2d 287, 272 P.2d 764, the plaintiff was a driver of a tractor with two trailers. Defendants were loading the trailers with boxes by using two fork lifts. Plaintiff was unconscious when he was found and could not explain the manner of his injury. From the physical evidence, it was "apparent that there are only two possible explanations for the cause of plaintiff's injuries: either he was struck by a fork lift or he fell from some portion of his truck." 43 Cal.2d at page 292, 272 P.2d at page 766. Plaintiff's testimony was that before he lost consciousness he did not climb on any part of the truck. The defendants' evidence concerning the course taken by the fork lifts would tend to show that plaintiff could not have been struck while standing between the trailers. The court held that a res ipsa instruction was properly given, stating at page 292 of 43 Cal.2d, at page 766 of 272 P.2d: "The requirement of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur that the plaintiff must show that he did not contribute to the accident * * * is satisfied by the evidence that plaintiff was standing between the two trailers when he was struck, since the jury could properly conclude that a reasonable man, under the same circumstances, would expect that the space would be a safe one within which to stand."

Here, too, a reasonable man could conclude that standing eight or nine feet away from a person using a hammer would be a safe place to stand and that plaintiff's actions did not contribute to the accident in the sense that this condition is meant in res ipsa cases.

As to the other conditions, if plaintiff's position is not considered a "cause" of the accident, it is clear that the accident was caused by an instrumentality within the exclusive control of the defendant. There is no suggestion in the evidence that there was anything unusual or defective about the tire that could have caused the hammer head to fly off. And there was testimony of defendants themselves indicating that the accident does not usually occur in the absence of negligence. Defendant Lowery testified that although it is not unusual for hammer heads to loosen, usually a person can tell by the feel of the hammer during its use that it is loosening. Defendant Newby testified that it was almost impossible for a tight head to fly off. The conclusion could be drawn from Lowery's testimony that he did not feel the head loosening, that this was a very peculiar hammer which loosened and flew apart within the space of a single stroke. However, the inference that he was not paying close enough attention to his work seems the more probable one. From the evidence a jury reasonably could infer that an accident such as here took place probably would not have occurred in the absence of negligence. We conclude it was a case appropriate for the giving of an instruction on res ipsa loquitur.

[3] Defendants further contend that plaintiff's requested instructions incorrectly stated the law, as an additional reason why their refusal was proper. Their arguments consist of bare assertions without citation of a single case.

Plaintiff's first instruction [2] on this subject is a statement of the general principles governing the defendant's showing in a res ipsa case substantially as expressed in Dierman v. Providence Hospital, 31 Cal.2d 290, 295, 188 P.2d 12, which quoted from the Supreme Court's opinion rendered upon its denial of a hearing in Bourguignon v. Peninsular R. Co., 40 Cal.App. 689, 694–695, 181 P. 669. See also Fry v. Sheedy, 143

2. "You are instructed that the accident in this case is of such a character that it speaks for itself. Under such circumstances, the defendants will not be held blameless except under a showing either (1) of a satisfactory explanation of the accident; that is, an affirmative showing of a definite cause for the accident, in which cause no element of negligence on the part of the defendants inheres, or (2) of such care in all possible respects as necessarily to lead to the conclusion that the accident could not have happened from want of care, but must have been due to some unpreventable cause, although the exact cause is unknown. In the latter case, inasmuch as the process of reasoning is one of exclusion, the care shown must be satisfactory in the sense that it covers all causes which due care on the part of the defendants might have prevented."

Cal.App.2d 615, 619, 300 P.2d 242; and James v. American Buslines, 111 Cal.App. 2d 273, 276, 244 P.2d 503.

Defendants argue that the instruction puts the ultimate burden of proof on the defendants, contrary to the correct rule that the res ipsa doctrine only shifts the burden of going forward with the evidence. In the Dierman case, supra, the statement used in this instruction was quoted from the Bourguignon case to support the following propositions: "This is not to say that a defendant in a res ipsa loquitur case has the burden of proving himself free from negligence. It is not to say that a defendant must in every such case produce evidence of the actual cause of the accident. It is not to say that the question of the sufficiency of a defendant's explanation—or, if he cannot explain, the sufficiency of his evidence of due care and of impossibility of explanation—is not ordinarily for the jury." At page 295 of 31 Cal.2d, at page 14 of 188 P.2d. It would appear that to the Supreme Court the statement has the very meaning which defendants criticize it for not having.

[4] The second proposed instruction[3] is criticized for not taking into account plaintiff's possible contributory negligence. This instruction merely states that an inference of defendant's negligence arises. The jury was fully instructed on contributory negligence. To combine the instructions would only create confusion.

In addition, defendants say that the last sentence of the first paragraph of this instruction requires the inference to be "overcome" by the defendants and thus would cast upon them the burden of proving by a preponderance of evidence they were not negligent; also, that it is inconsistent with the remainder of the instruction and would, therefore, create confusion.

The word "overcome" does not necessarily have such a meaning. As said in Odden v. County Foresters etc. Board, 108 Cal.App.2d 48, 50, 238 P.2d 23, 24, a presumption "is overcome if sufficient evidence is introduced to balance the presumption." Here, such a meaning is clear in view of the context in which the word appears. It is explained, not contradicted, by the sentences which follow it in this instruction. Moreover, the court adequately instructed on the burden of proof. There was no need to deal with that subject in this instruction. See Gigliotti v. Nunes, 45 Cal.2d 85, 95, 286 P.2d 809.

The third proposed instruction is also objected to on the ground that it states nothing about plaintiff's possible contributory negligence, an argument not well taken for reasons already indicated.

The fourth proposed instruction is BAJI No. 206-B.[4] The form of this instruction was approved in Hinds v. Wheadon, 67 Cal.App.2d 456, 466, 154 P.2d 720; Bazzoli v. Nance's Sanitarium, Inc., 109 Cal.App. 2d 232, 239, 242, 240 P.2d 672; Meyers v.

3. "It is only necessary for the plaintiff, in order to establish a prima facie case, to prove the fact of the accident and the injuries caused thereby. Having done this, he may rest, for the inference then arises that the accident occurred through the negligence of the defendants, and the burden of explaining that defendants were not negligent is then cast upon them. In order to overcome this inference of negligence, the defendants must show that the accident was not caused by their negligence or was a result of an inevitable casualty, or of some cause which human care and foresight could not prevent.

"The rule of res ipsa loquitur is not merely a rule of evidence shifting the burden of going forward with proof, for the inference of negligence under the rule does not disappear when met with substantial credible evidence of due care. It remains in the case throughout, to be given consideration by the jury in your weighing of the whole case.

"I instruct you that such an inference of negligence is in itself sufficient to satisfy the burden placed upon plaintiff to prove his case by a preponderance of the evidence."

4. The instruction is referred to in defendant's brief as "garbled," but the only apparent change is the substitution of "reasonable care and diligence" for "ordinary care and diligence."

G. W. Thomas Drayage, etc., Co., 108 Cal. App.2d 529, 532–533, 239 P.2d 118; and Silva v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 119 Cal. App.2d 284, 287, 259 P.2d 743. Defendant's only complaint about it is that it "would have excluded from consideration the existence of the final operative cause of the plaintiff's injury," his position when hit. The distance plaintiff stood from Lowery during the substitution of tires (as to which there was a conflict of testimony) had no causative connection with the flight of the hammer head from its handle, whatever bearing it may have had on the issue of contributory negligence.

In view of these conclusions, it is unnecessary to consider other points discussed by the parties upon this appeal.

The judgment is reversed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Frederick Arnold LOAR, Defendant and Appellant (two cases).

Cr. 6270, 6349.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 9, 1958.

Defendant was convicted under two counts of the crime of forcible rape, and from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County and from an order denying a motion for new trial, Stanley Mosk, J., the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that the evidence sustained the conviction and that a motion for new trial for newly discovered evidence was properly denied.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1023(13)

In rape prosecution, although no judgment or probation order had been made or entered, defendant was entitled to file notice of appeal from an order denying his motion for a new trial. West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 261, subd. 3, 1237, subd. 1.

2. Criminal Law ⇐1134(4)

On appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial on ground of insufficiency of evidence to sustain a conviction, the appellate tribunal will determine only whether on the face of the evidence sufficient facts are shown to warrant the implied findings of the trial court.

3. Rape ⇐51(7)

Evidence sustained conviction for forcible rape as against claim that defendant was not sufficiently identified as perpetrator of the offenses. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 261, subd. 3.

4. Criminal Law ⇐566

Identification of a defendant in a criminal case may be sufficient though the person making it cannot remember the face of the defendant.

5. Criminal Law ⇐260(11)

Trial judge is the sole judge of the facts and the weight to be given the testimony, and although an appellate court may feel that identification evidence is not too strong, it cannot interfere where the evidence is legally sufficient.

6. Criminal Law ⇐351(1)

Where a person suspected of and charged with crime resorts to deception and falsehood, such is a circumstance tending to show consciousness of guilt.

7. Criminal Law ⇐938(1)

Newly discovered evidence, to warrant a new trial, must be such as would render a different result reasonably probable on a new trial and must be such as could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered and produced at the trial.

8. Criminal Law ⇐938(1), 1156(3)

Motion for new trial for newly discovered evidence is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court and its action will not be disturbed except for a clear abuse of discretion.

9. Criminal Law ⇐938(1)

On motion for new trial for newly discovered evidence, a showing must be made by the defendant that the evidence and not merely its materiality is newly discovered, the evidence must not be cumulative only and the facts must be shown by the best evidence of which the case admits.

10. Criminal Law ⇐938(1)

Claim of newly discovered evidence as basis for new trial is looked upon with distrust and with disfavor.

11. Criminal Law ⇐938(1)

In rape prosecution, denying new trial for newly discovered evidence was not an abuse of discretion where there was lack of diligence in procuring the evidence, it was not such as would render a different result reasonably probable upon a new trial and where much of the evidence submitted would be inadmissible as evidence even if a new trial were granted. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 261, subd. 3.

12. Criminal Law ⇐938(4)

In rape prosecution, newly discovered evidence of the prosecuting witness which is so closely related to evidence given by the witness that it might have been obtained on cross-examination is not ground for new trial. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 261, subd. 3.

Daniel Paul Rikalo, Encino, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Arthur C. de Goede, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

We are here confronted with two appeals taken in one action, and which by stipulation have been consolidated for hearing and decision upon a single set of briefs.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was charged in two counts with the crime of forcible rape (Penal Code, Section 261, subd. 3). In the first count the act was alleged to have been accomplished on or about October 31, 1957, with and upon Barbara Jean Wilson. The second count alleged the act was accomplished with and upon Geraldine Butterbaugh on or about December 9, 1957.

Defendant pleaded not guilty to both counts. He personally and all counsel waived trial by jury. By stipulation the cause was submitted on the testimony contained in the transcript of the proceedings had at the preliminary hearing with each side reserving the right to further introduce evidence and defendant reserving the right to cross-examine the witnesses for the People.

At the conclusion of the trial, the court found defendant guilty as charged on each of the two counts. His motion for a new trial was denied.

Under Section 5504 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, the court appointed three doctors to examine the appellant as to being a sexual psychopath.

[1] Although no judgment or probation order had been made or entered, defendant, as he was entitled to do, filed notice of appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial (Thurmond v. Superior Court, 49 Cal.2d 17, 21, 314 P.2d 6). The appeal in 2nd Criminal 6270 is prosecuted pursuant to the aforesaid notice.

Subsequently, defendant was found not to be a sexual psychopath. Proceedings were suspended and probation was granted for five years with the first year to be spent in the county jail. Appellant filed a notice of appeal from the "judgment of conviction" (Penal Code, Section 1237, subd. 1). The appeal in 2nd Criminal 6349 is prosecuted pursuant to the last mentioned notice.

As to the factual background surrounding this prosecution, the record reveals the following:

Count I

Barbara Jean Wilson, a junior high school student, was home alone in her bathroom at about 9:30 on the night of October 31, 1957, when she noticed the lights "flickered on and off". She remained in the bathroom for about thirty minutes, when the back door opened and "the lights were off". Miss Wilson then went to the service porch and "yelled * * * Whoever is in the back yard get out and leave me alone" or "leave the house alone". Thereupon, "* * * this figure jumped in at me." The witness testified that the intruder was "six feet, or five foot-eleven, or something like that", that he was wearing "levis, and he had a leather jacket, dark-colored jacket, a motorcycle jacket * * * he had a white hood over his head". Shown a black leather jacket with a buckle on it, which was taken from defendant at the time of his arrest, the witness testified, "It looks like the type of jacket that the person had on". The prosecutrix testified that the man "grabbed me by the throat and told me not to scream or he would kill me". The assailant then forced her into the living room where he commanded her to take off her clothing which she did. She then struggled with him but he overpowered her and forcibly accomplished an act of sexual intercourse upon the complainant notwithstanding her resistance. An automobile drove up in front of the house and the victim told her attacker her "parents were coming", whereupon he "ran off".

With regard to identification of the man who attacked her, the following occurred:

"Q. Now, during the time the person was in the house, he talked to you several times, is that true? A. Yes.

"Q. Did you go to a police lineup later on? A. Yes.

"Q. In the police lineup did they have a person in the lineup—the persons in the lineup talk? A. Yes.

"Q. Did you pick someone in the lineup as having a voice like this person who was in your home? A. I didn't personally pick him out, but after he was picked out, I recognized him.

"Mr. Spencer (attorney for defendant): I will object to that as not responsive.

"The Court: Objection sustained.

"Q. By Mr. Shea (Deputy District Attorney): Did you recognize one of the voices as being the voice of this person which was in your house on that date? A. Yes, I did.

"Q. Did you get to see who that person was in the lineup? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Is that person in the courtroom today? A. Yes.

"Q. Would you point him out? A. Sitting over there.

"Q. The man seated at the end of the table? A. Yes.

"The Court: The record will indicate that the witness has pointed to the defendant."

On cross-examination, the prosecutrix was interrogated as follows:

"Q. By Mr. Spencer: Let's get down to this police lineup. How many persons did you see in the lineup? A. I believe there was five or six.

"Q. Outside of the man seated at my left, there was only one other man in that group who was his approximate height, in the group, wasn't there? A. I couldn't be sure of that.

"Q. Do you remember two or three persons in the group that were obviously shorter than the man you saw? A. Yes.

"Q. Now, when they had these different individuals speak, you couldn't identify the defendant's voice as the voice you heard at your home on this particular occasion, could you? A. Yes, it is.

"Q. It was only after someone else, either the police or some other person told you that the defendant was the man in the room that night, that you now say he was, isn't that true? A. Yes."

On recross-examination the following occurred:

"Q. At least someone other than the police identified the defendant, is that right? Before that time you did not identify him? A. Yes.

"Q. Although you were asked if you could recognize him? A. Yes."

On redirect examination, the following testimony was given:

"Q. Was the voice you heard of the defendant, was that the same voice you heard at your house? A. Yes.

"Q. No one told you that was the same voice, did they? A. After he had been identified and he said some of the sentences, to me it was the same voice, it sounded like the same voice.

"The Court: What do you mean identified?

"The Witness: After the other person identified him as being the person in her house.

"Q. By Mr. Shea: That was some other girl? A. Yes.

"Q. Your identification is not entirely by a voice but it is more by the voice, is that correct? A. Yes.

"Q. Although his body shape is similar to the person who was in your house, is that correct? A. Yes."

Count II

Geraldine Butterbaugh was at home asleep about 2:30 a. m. on December 9, 1957. She was awakened by a loud crash of falling glass. As she started down the hallway she heard another crash. In answer to a question as to what she did, the prosecutrix stated, "I arose, I didn't try to turn on the light. My little boy called out and I went in to his bed and I saw that everything was all right there and I went back to my bedroom. I heard the second crash and I started down the hallway and was met by this hooded man with a flashlight. I screamed and he grabbed me around the throat. My back was against his chest. He tried to choke me. I realized he meant business. I didn't struggle and he said, 'I won't hurt you.'" Defendant forced her through the house and into the spare bedroom where he said he was going to rape her. At the command of defendant, the victim removed her clothes and he did likewise. Defendant said to the witness, "If you make a noise I'll kill you." Defendant thereupon accomplished his act of sexual intercourse upon her. Mrs. Butterbaugh was employed as office manager at the Golden State Dairies, where defendant was also employed.

Regarding her identification of defendant, the prosecutrix testified that she uses the telephone very frequently in her work. That she went to police headquarters where she was confronted by defendant after his arrest. That she listened to defendant's voice on two occasions. At the trial, the following occurred:

"Q. Did you recognize one of these persons' voices as that of the person who was in the room with you? A. Yes, I did."

The witness then identified defendant as the man she saw at the police station.

"Q. By Mr. Shea: Now, at the time the man was in your house did you pay particular attention to his voice? A. I certainly did.

"Q. Why did you do that? A. I felt that all I could identify was the voice.

"Q. You could not see him in the dark? A. I could not see him.

"Q. You say you work on the telephone? A. Yes, I do.

"Q. And it is very essential that you know voices? A. It certainly is.

"Q. Do you make a study of voices? A. I do.

"Q. Did the person in the room make any statements to you as to the possibility of becoming pregnant? A. Yes, he told me he could not hurt me—

"Mr. Spencer: I object to that as immaterial.

"The Court: Objection overruled.

"The Witness: Shall I answer?

"Mr. Shea: Yes.

"The Witness: He told me, "I can't hurt you, I am sterile.'"

On cross-examination the following transpired:

"Q. (By Mr. Spencer, attorney for defendant): You are basing this identification solely on the voice, is that right? A. Yes, sir."

Defendant was arrested about 3:30 on the morning of December 22, 1957, when he was observed crossing a street wearing a hood over his head. In his possession was found a flashlight and a diaper.

Sworn as a witness in his own behalf, defendant testified that at his work, because of refrigeration, he wears a hooded sweater. With reference to the night of October 31, 1957 (Count I) defendant testified he was at home that evening; that at approximately 10 p. m. he left his home and went to work where he remained until 7:00 the following morning. With regard to the night of December 9, 1957 (Count II) defendant testified he did not work but remained at home. He remembered the night in question because his son was afflicted with the measles. That his mother-in-law was at his home that night. With reference to his arrest, defendant testified that he was ill that day, but because of pressing financial obligations he decided rather than absent himself from work, he would "go up early and get my work done, and then Fritz would let me get off early". That he went to work about 9:00 p. m. and left his employment about 3:00 a. m. That he was dressed "the way I usually dress". He was on his way to a drug store, "to pick up a newspaper". Defendant admitted he had a flashlight when apprehended which he had secured at the plant where he works because "my mother-in-law had asked me to check some batteries and I was taking it home to check these batteries". Defendant explained his possession of the gloves by stating he uses them in his work when handling dry ice. As to the diaper found in his possession, defendant explained that, "It was in my pant leg when I left for work"; that it was used at home for his baby son. That after discovering it he placed the diaper in his pocket. In explanation of his failure to have any means of identification upon him when arrested, defendant testified, "* * * I never carry identification sir, when going to work there on account of the box freezes and the dampness gets into and runs your ID cards". Defendant denied either of the offenses charged against him.

Defendant's wife testified that he did not leave home for work on the night of October 31, 1957 (Count I) until approximately 10:00 p. m.; that she recalled the night because it was Halloween. (The victim in Count I was assaulted about 10:00 p. m. on that night.) The testimony of Mrs. Loar was corroborated by that of her mother, Maria Aloisio.

Ronnie David Gardner, an eleven-year-old boy who was acquainted with defendant and his wife, testified that on October 31, 1957 (Halloween night) he called at the Loar home shortly after 8:00 p. m. and that defendant, his wife, and the latter's mother were all there.

There was testimony by Reinhold Lauster and Carl Vreeken, Jr., fellow employees of defendant at Golden State Dairies, that a "lot of men" wear hoods during their work at the dairy plant.

We shall first give consideration to appellant's contention that the court erred and abused its discretion in denying his motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain his conviction.

[2–4] On appeal from such an order, the appellate tribunal, in reviewing sufficiency of the evidence, will determine only whether on the face of the evidence insufficient facts are shown to warrant the implied findings of the trial court (People v. Jones, 36 Cal.2d 373, 375, 224 P.2d 353). As was said in People v. Newland, 15 Cal. 2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778: "* * * it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below". Applying this rule to the case now engaging our attention, appellant's claim as to the insufficiency of the evidence cannot be sustained. Appellant earnestly insists that while the evidence may point the finger of suspicion at him, and might even indicate he had an opportunity to commit the offenses charged against him, it lacks that substantiality required to prove him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. With this we cannot agree. As to Count I the victim identified appellant as her assailant at a police lineup. While it is true she was not sure the first time she heard his voice, she did recognize appellant's voice at a subsequent time. That Miss Wilson had ample opportunity to study the voice of her attacker is evidenced by the fact that he talked to her several times. She also testified that the "body shape" of appellant was similar to that of her assailant. True, it was impossible for the prosecutrix to identify the man who assaulted her by his face, since the lights were off during the time they were together, but as was said in People v. Coley, 61 Cal.App.2d 810, 814, 143 P.2d 755, 757, quoting from People v. Wilson, 76 Cal.App. 688, 700, 245 P. 781, " 'It is not necessary that any of the witnesses called to identify the accused should have seen his face. "Identification," says the court in State v. Mason, 152 Minn. 306, 189 N.W. 452, "may be sufficient, though the person making it cannot remember the face. Identification based upon other peculiarities may be reasonably sure." There the Minnesota Supreme Court held that the identification may be sufficient though the witnesses say that they could not identify the accused from his face, the crime having been committed in the dark, but that they can identify him from his size, his general appearance, his talk, and his walk.'

[5] And in Connell v. Clark, 88 Cal. App.2d 941, 947, 200 P.2d 26, 29, we find the following: "It is universally recognized that the voice as well as the physical appearance of a person, is a means by which identification is made possible, there being no more similarity in the voices of different people than there is in their physical appearance. * * * Therefore testimony relating to the identity of the voice is competent, its probative value being a question of fact for the jury." It is well established in our law that the jury, or in this case the trial judge, is the sole judge of the facts and of the weight to be given to testimony, and though an appellate court may feel that the identification evidence is not too strong, yet it cannot interfere with or invade the province of the duly constituted arbiter of the facts, where the evidence is legally sufficient. Furthermore, there are other facts and circumstances shown in evidence tending to strengthen the identification of appellant as the man who assaulted the victims named in both counts of the information. The man who attacked Miss Wilson (Count I) wore a dark leather motorcycle-type jacket with a buckle and ornamental pieces of metal. A jacket owned by appellant was similar to this jacket and had a similar finish. Miss Wilson's assailant wore pants with a zipper, which were possibly levis. Appellant owns a pair of blue denims which have a zipper. Miss Wilson's assailant had a hood over his head. Appellant owns a sweat shirt with a hood and was wearing it when he was arrested.

When appellant broke into the Butterbaugh (Count II) and Molinar residences he wore a hood. (As to the Molinar residence, it might here be noted that at the preliminary examination, in addition to the two counts of the information, with which we are here concerned, appellant was also charged with attempted rape allegedly committed against one Catherine D. Molinar on October 14, 1957, but this count of the complaint was dismissed at the preliminary examination. However, her testimony is contained in the transcript of such examination and was used at the trial and on the motion for a new trial on the issue of identification of appellant.) Miss Wilson's assailant wore gloves. Appellant had a pair of gloves in his pocket when arrested and the man who attacked Mrs. Butterbaugh (Count II) wore gloves. Before Miss Wilson (Count I) was attacked, and while she was still alone in the house, the electric lights flickered on and off. Before breaking into the Molinar and Butterbaugh residences, the intruder had turned the lights off. Miss Wilson's assailant grabbed her by the throat, threatening to kill her if she made an outcry. The same procedure was utilized when the assault was made upon Mrs. Butterbaugh.

Appellant contends that Miss Wilson (Count I) was assaulted shortly after 9:00 p. m. on October 31, 1957, and that the evidence shows that he was at home between 8:00 p. m. and 10:00 p. m. on that night. However, as pointed out by respondent, "Of course, it was not incumbent on the trial court to believe the testimony on appellant's time of departure for work. However, even if it was accepted, appellant still had opportunity to make the alleged attack, for Miss Wilson's testimony indicates that her assailant entered the house about 10:00 p. m. Her lights flickered on and off at about 9:30 p. m. She stayed in the bathroom for about thirty minutes then went to the back porch on hearing the back door open. Her assailant jumped in at her, and was in the house ten to fifteen minutes. Her assailant left about two or three minutes after attacking her."

As to Count II, the victim Geraldine Butterbaugh identified appellant as her assailant at a police lineup by recognizing his voice. Mrs. Butterbaugh works on the telephone and studies voices because it is essential that she know them. She paid particular attention to her assailant's voice because she could not see him and felt that was the only way she could identify him. She never did get to see his face but had plenty of opportunity to hear his voice. Assailant was in the house about forty minutes.

The assailant took off all his clothes except his shoes before he attacked Mrs. Butterbaugh—some of his clothes were of the type that would come off and go on over the head. The sweat shirt in evidence which appellant owned is of this pull-over type. Mrs. Butterbaugh's assailant had a flashlight. Appellant had a flashlight when he was arrested. The reason appellant gave for having the flashlight, which he did not own, was that, at his mother-in-law's request, he wanted to test some batteries which she had at home, even though there was no flashlight at home for which the batteries might be used.

There is testimony of the defendant, his wife and his mother-in-law that he was home on the night of December 9, 1957. However, as pointed out in respondent's brief, "Since Mrs. Butterbaugh was criminally attacked on the morning of December 9, at 2:30 a. m., this testimony does not establish an alibi. Even assuming that the testimony was meant to refer to the night of December 8, the court did not have to accept it. The mother-in-law's testimony clearly indicates that she felt appellant always went to work about 10:00 p. m.—she testified appellant went to work about 10:00 p. m. on a day on which appellant did not have to go to work at all.

"When arrested at about 3:00 a. m. on December 22, 1957, appellant was walking in a direction away from his home. He had no identification. He was away from his work during his regular working hours."

[6] The trial court was not compelled to accept appellant's explanation of his unusual conduct in wearing the hood over his head when arrested nor of his possession of the diaper, flashlight and gloves. When a person suspected of and charged with crime resorts to deception and falsehood, that is a circumstance which, like flight and concealment, tends to show a consciousness of guilt, and thereby strengthen any inference of guilt arising from other established facts. All of the attacks occurred within walking distance of appellant's home, and when apprehended he carried no driver's license or other means of identification.

We are satisfied that appellant's contention that the evidence and the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom are insufficient to justify the trial court's finding of guilt, is not supported by the record or the law and therefore, the court below did not abuse its discretion in denying appellant's motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence.

[7–9] It is next urged by appellant that the court erred and further abused its discretion in denying him a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. With commendable candor, appellant's counsel concedes that newly discovered evidence to warrant a new trial must be such as would render a different result reasonably probable on a new trial (People v. Radz, 119 Cal.App. 435, 437, 6 P.2d 527); that the evidence must be such as could not, with reasonable diligence, have been discovered and produced at the trial; that such a motion is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed except for a clear abuse of discretion (People v. McGarry, 42 Cal.2d 429, 432, 267 P.2d 254). To the foregoing should be added that a showing must be made by appellant that the evidence, and not merely its materiality, be newly discovered; that the evidence be not cumulative only, and that all the aforesaid facts be shown by the best evidence of which the case admits (People v. McGarry, supra, 42 Cal.2d at page 433, 267 P.2d at page 256).

[10] It is now well established that the claim of newly discovered evidence is universally looked upon with distrust and disfavor (People v Greenwood, 47 Cal.2d 819, 821, 306 P.2d 427). The reason for this rule is thus stated in People v. Byrne, 160 Cal. 217, 225, 116 P. 521, 525: "Public policy demands that a litigant should be compelled to exhaust every reasonable effort to produce at his trial all existing evidence in his behalf. It has been said that the circumstance that the testimony has just been discovered when it is too late to introduce it is so suspicious that courts require the very strictest showing of diligence. People v. Freeman, 92 Cal. [359] 366, 28 P. 261. It is recognized, however, that despite the exercise of such effort, cases will sometimes occur where, after trial, new evidence most material to the issue and which would probably have produced a different result, is discovered. For such cases, the remedy of motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence has been given."

[11] In the light of the foregoing rules it cannot be said that the trial court abused its discretion in the case here under consideration.

In support of his motion for a new trial, appellant filed several affidavits. One was that of Barbara Jean Wilson, the victim in Count I of the information, in which she stated:

"With regard to identifying the suspect, my father took me to the police station on a Sunday. I don't remember the date. The police had 5 or 6 men in the lineup and we were in a room, the Molinar girl, her mother and I. Out of the five or six men three of them were too small and skinny. Two of them were large, one was real tall. All of the men talked but I was able to discount the words of the ones that didn't look like the man. After they all spoke, the police asked me to identify the one that committed the act and I told them that I couldn't. The Molinar girl's mother said that that could be him and she pointed or indicated Fred Loar. Her daughter agreed with this I. D. and they had the men talk again and I told the police that the man that Mrs. Molinar pointed out could be him. I did not make a positive identification. Only at one time during the lineup did the fellow that I said could be the one, sound like it may be the same voice; and only one time in court his voice sounded like it could be the same. The rest of the time it didn't." The substance of the foregoing is that Miss Wilson only identified appellant as her assailant after someone else (the mother of Catherine D. Molinar) had identified him as the person who had broken into the identifier's home on another occasion. This was also the substance of the affidavit of Miss Wilson's father, who also stated: "I saw the men in the lineup and there were no other men there with the same physical description as Fred Loar (appellant)." However, the facts stated in these affidavits were known to appellant at the preliminary examination, as is indicated by the transcript of that proceeding which was submitted to the trial court, and quotations from which we have herein narrated in summarizing the factual background surrounding this prosecution.

In another affidavit by Paul F. Eddy, a private investigator, the deponent states: "That in the course of his investigation he learned that one William Esterline, of 19136 Kittridge Street, Reseda, California, telephone number DIckens 2–5280, had approached the Defendant on February 8, 1958, the day before Defendant's hearing in Department 14 of the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles in re the instant matter, and asked the Defendant if he, the Defendant, had found or seen his, Esterline's hooded sweater which Esterline stated he had lost some five months previously; that the Defendant responded that he had not seen or found such hooded sweater". This can hardly be classed as newly discovered evidence since the affidavit itself shows that the day before appellant's trial, Mr. Esterline inquired of the appellant whether the latter had found or seen the sweater which Esterline had lost some five months previously. There remains the further fact that appellant had subpoenaed Mr. Esterline as a witness which would seem to indicate that any evidence the latter might be able to give was known to appellant at the time of trial.

There is some evidence contained in the affidavits which might be characterized as newly discovered evidence since it was unknown to appellant at the time of trial, nevertheless, the court did not abuse its discretion in denying a new trial, if such evidence would have been known to appellant had he made a reasonable effort to procure it before and at the trial (People v. Byrne, supra, 160 Cal. at page 226, 116 P. at page 525).

[12] As noted in respondent's brief, "The statements allegedly made by Mrs. Butterbaugh (victim in Count II), as related in the affidavits of (private investigator) Paul F. Eddy could all have been ascertained before the trial—at least there is no showing that Butterbaugh was unavailable. Appellant contends that he used reasonable diligence to uncover said evidence in that Butterbaugh was cross-examined at the preliminary hearing and did not reveal at that time that she had already been informed by the police whom she would be asked to identify and that she was of the opinion that appellant was a 'liar' and had a 'bad reputation'. But newly discovered evidence of the prosecuting witness which is so closely related to evidence given by said witness that it might have been obtained on a cross-examination is not ground for a new trial. (People v. Phelan, 123 Cal. 551, 568, 56 P. 424.)

"In the present case, circumstances of identification is certainly closely related to identification. It would also seem that the time to show bias of the prosecution witness (Butterbaugh allegedly was of the opinion that appellant was a "liar" and had a "bad reputation") would be on cross-examination and not after the appellant was found guilty. It should be noted that appellant had the opportunity to cross-examine Mrs. Butterbaugh (and Miss Wilson) twice—once at the preliminary hearing and once at the trial—and that appellant waived his right to cross-examine at the latter time as to all the prosecution witnesses."

The purported newly discovered evidence in the affidavit of Rosanne Okin with regard to a man who followed her and Miss Wilson (victim in Count I) on the night of the assault upon the latter, as they were on their way home from a Halloween party and that this man was not the appellant, would not in our opinion be such as to render a different result reasonably probable on a new trial, and there is no showing that deponent was unavailable to appellant before the trial.

As to the foregoing affidavit of William Esterline, it should be noted that at the trial it was stipulated that if the witness was called and sworn at the trial, he would testify to the disappearance of his "hooded shirt", as set forth in Mr. Esterline's affidavit, and such evidence was stricken on the ground it was immaterial. We are impressed that the trial court was justified in concluding that had due diligence been used, the evidence set forth in the supporting affidavits could have been produced at the trial.

We are further satisfied that appellant has not met the burden imposed upon him to show that the newly discovered evidence submitted by him on his motion for a new trial is such as to render a different result reasonably probable on a new trial. The affidavits indicate that Mrs. Butterbaugh (the victim in Count II), was advised by the police that the subject under arrest, and whom she was requested to identify, worked at the dairy where she was employed. That, "When I went down the list I knew he, Frederick Loar, was built trim. I eliminated the short, tall and old ones and I decided that he, Fred Loar, must be the one." That when asked by deponent Eddy, "You told us a few moments ago that you didn't know Loar (appellant). Just how were you able to pick his name out from all of the rest?" Mrs. Butterbaugh answered, "I knew he was a liar and I know what his reputation is around here." Such evidence might tend to impeach Mrs. Butterbaugh's unequivocal identification of appellant at the trial as her assailant, as would her opinion of appellant as being a liar and having a bad reputation in that it would tend to show bias, but in the light of the many other incriminating facts and circumstances heretofore adverted to, as well as the positive identification of appellant by Miss Wilson (the victim in Count I), we are unable to say that the foregoing evidence would render a different result reasonably probable on a retrial.

What we have just said is also applicable to the affidavit of Rosanne Okin which rejects appellant as the attacker of Miss Wilson (Count I). Miss Okin was the person heretofore referred to who was in the company of Miss Wilson (Count I) just prior to the attack upon the latter and who states that a man followed them who resembled appellant and was attired in a manner similar to that of the assailant of Miss Wilson. In her affidavit, Miss Okin states that after viewing appellant she is of the opinion he was not the man who followed them. Miss Okin bases her statement on the fact that the man she observed following her and Miss Wilson wore lighter clothing and had lighter hair than that of appellant, and that he had a more rounded nose. While this testimony cannot be characterized as inherently improbable, it must be remembered that Miss Okin made her observation at night at a cross-intersection with only an overhead street light to aid her. Miss Okin states that her view was a profile view but the person she observed was watching her as she approached the intersection where she made her observation. This evidence that there was some person other than the appellant in the vicinity of the Wilson home about an hour before Miss Wilson was attacked is clearly not of the type which would indicate a different result on a new trial.

We are also here confronted with the omission on the part of appellant to file an affidavit showing that he did not know of the existence of the evidence at the time of trial, that he used due diligence to discover the same, or that it could not have been discovered by the use of due diligence (People v. Farber, 19 Cal.App.2d 189, 192, 64 P.2d 1138). No explanation is given of the reason why the newly proffered evidence could not be discovered during the time that elapsed between the preliminary examination and the trial. Considering the disfavor and suspicion with which this ground of the motion is regarded, we think the affidavits as to diligence should have been more explicit than they were.

Furthermore, much of the evidence submitted would be inadmissible as evidence in behalf of appellant even were a new trial granted him. Considerable of the contents of Paul F. Eddy's affidavits consisted of hearsay evidence.

While a mere reading of the record in this case might well leave one in grave doubt on the question of appellant's guilt, there is certainly enough in the evidence to sustain the conclusion of the trial judge.

An earnest and apparently rather strong showing was made for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, but in the light of the well-settled rules applicable in the consideration of appeals from orders of trial courts denying such motions, we do not see how it can properly be held that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion in the instant case.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment (order granting probation) (2nd Criminal 6349), and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial (2nd Criminal 6270), are, and each is affirmed.

Mae V. BROWN, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

DOUGLAS AIRCRAFT COMPANY, Inc., a corporation, et al., Defendants, Douglas Aircraft Company, Inc., a corporation, Appellant.

Civ. 23299.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 16, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 11, 1959.

Libel action for damages against individual defendants and corporations. From an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, John J. McCarthy, J., plaintiff filed a motion to set aside judgment as to corporate defendant and corporation appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that where before corporation was served counsel, who stated that he represented corporation, appeared in court and entered into stipulation with plaintiff's counsel that default would not be taken against corporation on original complaint but that amended complaint might be served upon all defendants including corporation which was to answer within 30 days, and such stipulation was entered and made a part of court order, court had jurisdiction over corporation and default judgment entered upon corporation's motion after plaintiff's failure to file amended complaint was final, and court had no power thereafter to set it aside.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order granting a motion to set aside a judgment as to the above named corporate defendant.

An action for damages for libel was brought by the plaintiff against fifteen individual defendants and the Douglas Aircraft Company, the corporate defendant. Several of the individual defendants were served with summons and a copy of the complaint and thereupon such individual defendants demurred to, and moved to strike certain portions of the complaint. The demurrers and the motions to strike came on for hearing on April 11, 1956, and after some two hours of hearing, were continued for further hearing to April 19, 1956. Another of the individual defendants was served after April 11, 1956, and she filed a demurrer and motion to strike on April 19, 1956; a stipulation was then entered into between counsel, and the court ordered "that the demurrer to the complaint and the motion to strike filed herein today by defendant Mary A. Church may be heard at this time together with the demurrer and motion to strike already set for this time." After the matter of the demurrers and motions had been argued for another two hours on the 19th of April, the demurrers were sustained and the plaintiff was given forty-five days within which to amend. The motions to strike were ordered off calendar.

During the hearing on the 19th of April it was stated by counsel for the plaintiff, in effect, that he was about to serve Douglas Aircraft Company, the corporate defendant, who, with the individual defendants L. A. Peifer, Sonia Van Hooser Hazard and Winnie W. Barrett, had not as yet been served, and who, up to that time, had made no appearance in the action. Counsel for the appearing defendants stated that he was the attorney for Douglas Aircraft Company, and further stated in effect that he intended to demur and move to strike in its behalf as and when the summons and complaint were served. Apparently, in order to circumvent another lengthy hearing covering the identical matters which the court was then hearing, it was suggested and stipulated by opposing and appearing counsel in open court as follows:

> "* * * default will not be taken against the corporate defendant on the original complaint herein, but the amended complaint may be served upon counsel for the defendants who have appeared and thereupon the corporate defendant and all defendants who have appeared shall answer or plead to the 1st amended complaint within 30 days following service upon their counsel."

The stipulation was embodied in, and made a part of the court's order of that day wherein it ruled upon the demurrers, the motions to strike and the granting of time to the plaintiff within which to amend, and the granting of time to the corporate defendant within which to answer the amended complaint.

No amended pleading was filed within the forty-five days, namely on or before June 4, 1956. The corporate defendant waited until the 20th day of June, 1956, and then wrote a letter on that date to the plaintiff's attorneys stating, in effect, that the forty-five day period within which the amended complaint was to be filed had expired on June 4, 1956, and that counsel for the plaintiff was notified that he might have to and including Wednesday, June 27, 1956, in which to serve an amended complaint and that if not served on or prior to that date the company would take such steps as might be available to have the action terminated with prejudice to the plaintiff. On June 28, 1956, sixty-nine days after the demurrers were sustained and no amended complaint had been filed, the corporate defendant made an application to the court to dismiss the action with prejudice as to the plaintiff, and a judgment was so rendered and entered, and notice thereof was given to counsel for the plaintiff on June 29, 1956.

On October 17, 1957, one year and almost four months after entry of the judgment of dismissal, the plaintiff moved to set aside the judgment as to the corporate defendant, L. A. Peifer, Sonia Van Hooser Hazard and Winnie W. Barrett. The motion was made pursuant to the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure. The matter came on to be heard November 20, 1957, and was heard in part on that day and continued to December 11, 1957, when it was further heard, and the court then granted plaintiff's motion to set aside the judgment as to the corporate defendant and the above individually named defendants. This appeal is by the corporate defendant from that order.

The appellant contends that under the circumstances of this case it made a general appearance, that the trial court had jurisdiction over the person of the corporate defendant, and the judgment of dismissal was final and binding as between the plaintiff and the corporate defendant, and further that the court thereafter had no power to set the judgment aside. We agree with the appellant.

This case is unusual and anomalous in that it is the plaintiff, not the defendant, who seeks to demonstrate that the defendant made no appearance in the case. Counsel for the appellant has stated in the brief that he has been unable to find a case parallel to the situation presented here, and our own independent research has not disclosed any such case.

Section 1014, Code of Civil Procedure, read, at the time with which we are concerned, as follows:

> "A defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives the plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of appearance for him. After appearance, a defendant or his attorney is entitled to notice of all subsequent proceedings of which notice is required to be given. But where a defendant has not appeared, service of notice or papers need not be made upon him unless he is imprisoned for want of bail."

[1] A general appearance is not necessarily a formal, technical step or act. Witkin, California Procedure, Vol. I, § 66, p. 336. And, as further stated by Witkin, California Procedure, supra, at page 336:

> "The doctrine of appearance has more than one purpose and becomes relevant in several branches of the law of procedure:
> "(1) Its principal application is in the present topic of jurisdiction of the person. Appearance is considered herein as a form of consent to personal jurisdiction, dispensing with the requirement of service of process, and curing a defective service or other lack of notice."

[2] The corporate defendant, in this case, through its counsel knew of the pending action. The defendant obviously had a right to appear and defend in the action. In Wheatland v. Maloney, 110 Cal.App. 288, 294 P. 499, the plaintiff voluntarily dismissed a libel action before service or appearance of the defendants, and the defendants sought the statutory award of $100 attorneys' fees. In rejecting plaintiff's contention that they were not entitled, because of the lack of summons or appearance, the court said (110 Cal.App. at pages 290–291, 294 P. at page 500):

> "When a complaint is filed, service of summons is not a necessary prerequisite to the right of the defendant to appear and defend such action. The summons duly served is simply a mandate requiring the appearance of said defendant in said action under penalty of having judgment entered for failure so to do. A defendant, who knows an action was pending against him, could proceed to retain counsel and begin the preparation of his defense to said pending action. If defendant has a right to appear in an attack upon an alleged cause of action after complaint filed, then he has a right to appear by attorney. Having such a right in a pending action presupposes his right to retain or employ such an attorney."

There is no contention in this case that counsel for the corporate defendant was not authorized to appear for the company.

The plaintiff argues that the corporate defendant made no appearance at all, and that at best all that was done was that the corporate defendant asked for an extension of time within which to answer or to appear. However, it is clear that such is not the situation.

[3] The attorney for the company and the attorney for the plaintiff were physically present in court acting upon the matters which had to do with the very case in question. The court had the particular case, and none other, before it at the time and the attorney for the corporate defendant represented the other defendants in the case. The attorney for the corporate defendant, on its behalf, entered into the stipulation with the attorney for the plaintiff, and the court made the stipulation a part of its order of the day in the particular matter. The attorney for the corporate defendant made no objection to the court's taking jurisdiction over the person of the corporate defendant. Likewise, the plaintiff did not object to the court's taking jurisdiction over the corporate defendant, and her actions later indicate that she assumed that the court did have jurisdiction and that the corporate defendant had appeared in the case. The stipulation, it may be noted, did three things, namely, (1) it provided that no default would be taken against the corporate defendant on the original complaint. As a consequence, if the plaintiff had served the corporate defendant with process and more than ten days had elapsed thereafter, with no further appearance by the corporate defendant, still no default judgment could be secured; (2) it provided that an amended complaint could be served upon counsel for the corporate defendant, and in effect, therefore, that it would not be necessary to serve an officer of the corporation itself which, but for the appearance, would have been required, and (3) it provided that the corporate defendant would have thirty days following service of the amended complaint upon its counsel within which to plead thereto.

As counsel for appellant has pointed out, there is "no judicial litmus paper by which an appeals court can test the question of appearance." We look to the circumstances of the particular case.

In Judson v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 21 Cal.2d 11, at page 13, 129 P.2d 361, at page 362, it was said:

" 'Whether an appearance is general or special is determined by the character of the relief sought and not by the intention of the party that it shall or shall not operate as a general or special appearance. The statement of a defendant or party that he is making a special appearance is not necessarily conclusive. The test is—Did the party appear and object only to the consideration of the case or any procedure in it because the court had not acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant or party? If so, then the appearance is special. If, however, he appears and asks for any relief which could be given only to a party in a pending case, or which itself would be a regular proceeding in the case, it is a general appearance regardless of how adroitly, carefully or directly the appearance may be denominated or characterized as special. In re Clarke, 125 Cal. 388, 58 P. 22. The rule in this regard may be epitomized by saying that if a defendant by his appearance insists only upon the objection that he is not in court for want of jurisdiction over his person and confines his appearance for that purpose only, then he has made a special appearance, but if he raises any other question, or asks any relief which can only be granted upon the hypothesis that the court has jurisdiction of his person, then he had made a general appearance. Olcese v. Justice's Court, 156 Cal. 82, 103 P. 317; Zobel v. Zobel, 151 Cal. 98, 90 P. 191.'"

In Davenport v. Superior Court, 183 Cal. 506, at page 511, 191 P. 911, at page 913, it was said:

"An act of a defendant by which he intentionally submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court in that action for the purpose of obtaining any ruling or order of the court going to the merits of the case, as, for example, a motion to strike out part of the complaint, or the making of stipulations, as in the cases above mentioned, which may reasonably be construed to imply that the court has in that action acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, will be equivalent to an appearance, although not strictly in accordance with the terms of section 1014." (Emphasis added.)

The plaintiff recognized that an appearance was made by the corporate defendant, for in plaintiff's affidavit made in December, 1956, she stated: "* * * she was informed by her counsel Philip E. Poppler that the defendants Douglas Aircraft Company, Inc., and others had extended by oral stipulation the time within to file an Amended Complaint to and including June 27, 1956." It is readily apparent that if there had been no appearance upon the part of the corporate defendant she did not need any extension of time within which to file her amended pleading. Likewise, when she served her notice of motion to set aside the judgment, she served it upon counsel for the corporate defendant and not upon any officer of the corporation, as designated in section 6403, Corporations Code. Under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, a court may set aside a judgment claimed to be void only upon "notice to the other party."

[4] Furthermore, it is important to remember that in this particular case it is the defendant who argues that the court had jurisdiction, and not the plaintiff. The plaintiff would seem to want to appropriate from the corporate defendant a privilege which belonged to it and not to the plaintiff. As stated in Panama R. Co. v. Johnson, 2 Cir., 1923, 289 F. 964, at page 981:

"It is well-settled law that the jurisdiction of courts over the persons of the parties to the suit is one of personal privilege, and if a party appears, failing to make objection to the jurisdiction over his person in limine, the objection is waived. State of Rhode Island v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 657, 9 L.Ed. 1233; Toland v. Sprague, 12 Pet. 300, 9 L.Ed. 1093; Harkness v. Hyde, 98 U.S. 476, 25 L.Ed. 237. The failure to object at the proper time is a waiver of what is a personal privilege, and is a consent to the jurisdiction."

We have had no cases pointed out to us for our consideration wherein the plaintiff has complained that the actions of the defendant were not sufficient to constitute an appearance. This is obviously not the simple type of case wherein a defendant merely seeks an extension of time within which to appear in the case and then the plaintiff contends that the court had jurisdiction over the defendant. It is clear in our opinion that it was the intention of the corporate defendant to appear and submit to the jurisdiction of the court, and that it did so.

The plaintiff asserts that to reverse the order setting aside the judgment would be tantamount to putting the stamp of approval upon a forfeiture. The record does not bear out any such contention.

The order setting aside the judgment of dismissal is reversed.

Warren BARLOW, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Geraldine S. COLLINS, also known as Geraldine Collins Barlow, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 5783.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 16, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 11, 1959.

Action by plaintiff who had lived with defendant in a husband and wife relationship without benefit of marriage license or ceremony, for breach of contract, breach of trust and for an accounting and injunction based upon alleged agreement of the parties to pool their earnings. The Superior Court of Riverside County, Wallace P. Rouse, J. pro tem., entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, P. J., held that pleadings were sufficient to state a cause of action for breach of contract by defendant and for breach of trust and an accounting, and evidence sustained judgment giving $6,876.90 to plaintiff as his share of the amount which defendant withdrew from their joint bank account after they broke up.

1. Contracts ⇐112

Where man and woman agreed to live together as husband and wife without benefit of marriage license or marriage ceremony and agreed to pool their earnings and profits, such agreements are enforceable unless contract is made in contemplation of relationship.

2. Marriage ⇐54

Generally, when a man and woman live together as husband and wife and agree to pool their earnings and share jointly in joint accumulations, equity will protect the interest of each in such property, and even in absence of an express agreement to that effect the woman would be entitled to share in property jointly accumulated, in the proportion that her funds contributed towards its acquisition.

3. Partnership ⇐108

Generally, a partner may not sue his copartner in an action at law with respect to firm transactions until an accounting has been had and this rule is peculiarly applicable to claims for damages arising out of manner in which a partnership business has been conducted and to breaches of agreement as such, but reasons for applying rule are less forceful where wrongful acts complained of are not only a breach of contract but constitute a tort, especially where tort is of such a nature that it not only terminates partnership but wrongfully destroys it, as where erring partner converts the entire assets to his own use.

4. Estoppel ⇐68(6)

Where party brought action to obtain his alleged share of money held by defendant with whom plaintiff had lived in a husband and wife relationship without benefit of marriage license or ceremony upon alleged agreement to pool earnings and profits, fact that plaintiff had obtained a writ of attachment on cause of action for breach of contract and that such writ was dissolved before trial did not estop plaintiff from claiming equitable relief upon claim of action for breach of trust and an accounting.

5. Assignments ⇐31

Where plaintiff, who had lived with defendant in a husband and wife relationship without benefit of marriage license or ceremony, under alleged agreement to pool earnings and profits, brought action to obtain his share of joint bank account withdrawn entirely by defendant, since defendant had placed earnings and profits in joint account and had never parted with any of her money pursuant to pooling agreement, there was no assignment of her wages in violation of statute. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 300.

6. Limitation of Actions ⇐43, 46(6)

Statute of limitation runs from the time of breach or termination of agreement or when cause of action accrues.

7. Marriage ⇐54

In action by plaintiff, who had lived with defendant in a husband and wife relationship, under alleged agreement to pool earnings and profits, to recover from defendant his share of joint bank accounts which defendant had converted to her own use after parties had broken up, evidence sustained finding that the sum of $13,753.80 represented earnings and profits accumulated in accordance with their joint enterprise agreement and plaintiff was entitled to one half thereof.

Leonard A. Bock, Palm Springs, for appellant.

Thurman Arnold, Jr., Palm Springs, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff-respondent brought this action against defendant-appellant, in three separate causes of action alleging in general, breach of contract, breach of trust and for an accounting, and injunction. Therein, he alleged that beginning in the year 1948, up to 1956, excepting certain periods, plaintiff and defendant lived together as husband and wife, without the benefit of a marriage license or ceremony; that during these years they agreed to pool their earnings; that during that period they were both employed by third parties as a cook and waitress or were self-employed in the restaurant business as joint venturers or copartners; that they placed their joint earnings in a bank account in defendant's name for the benefit of both parties; that unhappy differences occurred between them about December 3, 1956, and defendant left with the proceeds; that plaintiff made demand upon her for his share of the proceeds or an accounting which was refused. An attachment was levied upon defendant's bank account. Judgment by default for $11,095 was given plaintiff. It was subsequently set aside and a temporary restraining order was dissolved. By stipulation the money attached was held by plaintiff's counsel in his trust fund account pending the outcome of the action. An execution levied on defendant's bank account in the total sum of the judgment was also set aside.

Defendant answered, admitted they lived together as such, between said dates, with the exception of certain intervals; denied any agreement to share any money; alleged she contributed more money to plaintiff's support than he contributed to hers; claimed plaintiff never gave her any money to deposit in the banks except the sum of $14,000 realized from the sale of a restaurant they jointly owned; and claimed that plaintiff retained one-half of this amount. She denied the other allegations of the complaint.

A pre-trial hearing was had. Later the trial court found generally that the parties lived together as alleged; that they agreed to pool their earnings and share equally in their accumulations; that defendant agreed to deposit them in banks in her name for their joint benefit; that said agreement was independent of and not in consideration of either of them living with the other but was in the nature of a joint enterprise; that the sum of $13,753.80 represented such earnings and profits so accumulated in accordance with their agreement; that unhappy differences arose and defendant refused to account to plaintiff for his share; that certain money had been deposited in certain specified banks and after allowing $7,000 to defendant (being a claimed inheritance from defendant's mother) as her separate property, a balance of $13,753.80 was jointly earned money and plaintiff was entitled to one-half of it or $6,876.90. Judgment was entered accordingly.

Defendant appealed and contends: (1) that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for breach of contract; (2) that plaintiff was estopped from claiming equitable relief since he elected to proceed on the theory of breach of contract by reason of obtaining a writ of attachment; (3) that plaintiff is barred, under section 300 of the Labor Code, from asserting any claim to defendant's wages; (4) that plaintiff was barred by the statute of limitations from asserting any claim to her share in the profits or wages accumulated beyond the period prescribed by the statute of limitations; (5) that the evidence in support of the judgment is inherently improbable; and (6) that the findings do not support the judgment.

The main claim under this heading is that one partner may not maintain an action against his copartner for claims growing out of the partnership until after the partnership has been dissolved and an accounting has been had, citing such authority as Hall v. Hagerman, 107 Cal.App. 2d 523, 237 P.2d 80; Martyn v. Leslie, 137 Cal.App.2d 41, 61, 290 P.2d 58; Shearer v. Davis, 67 Cal.App.2d 878, 879, 155 P. 2d 708; and Martin v. Going, 57 Cal.App. 631, 207 P. 935.

[1, 2] Under the first claim the complaint in the first cause of action did allege breach of contract and set forth in detail the particulars from which it was claimed such breach arose. It is true an attachment was levied but it was, before trial, dismissed or released. The second cause of action alleges a breach of trust and seeks an accounting. It incorporates the allegations of the first cause of action in support thereof. The court made general findings applicable to both counts. By obtaining the attachment there was no definite election of plaintiff to stand on the first count, as opposed to the election of the second count. Each stated similar facts and in substance the complaint stated a cause of action for claimed breach of an agreement to pool their earnings and profits. Such agreements have been held enforceable in protecting the interests of each in such property unless the contract is made in contemplation of such relationship. Bridges v. Bridges, 125 Cal.App.2d 359, 270 P.2d 69; Garcia v. Venegas, 106 Cal. App.2d 364, 368, 235 P.2d 89; Bacon v. Bacon, 21 Cal.App.2d 540, 69 P.2d 884. The general rule is that if a man and woman live together as husband and wife under an agreement to pool their earnings and share equally in their joint accumulations, equity will protect the interests of each in such property. Even in the absence of an express agreement to that effect, the woman would be entitled to share in the property jointly accumulated, in the proportion that her funds contributed towards its acquisition. Vallera v. Vallera, 21 Cal. 2d 681, 685, 134 P.2d 761. The pleadings were sufficient to state a cause of action in this respect.

[3] Defendant relies on the general rule that a partner may not sue his copartner in an action at law in respect to firm transactions until an accounting has been had. While this general rule is well established, a different rule or at least an exception to the general rule, has been quite generally recognized and has been indicated and applied in several cases in this state. The general rule is peculiarly applicable to claims for damages arising out of the manner in which a partnership business has been conducted and to breaches of said agreements as such. But the reasons for applying the general rule are less forceful where the wrongful acts complained of are not only a breach of contract but constitute a tort, and this is especially true where the tort is of such a nature that it not only terminates the partnership but wrongfully destroys it, and where the erring partner converts to his own use its entire assets. Laughlin v. Haberfelde, 72 Cal.App.2d 780, 165 P.2d 544; Tufts v. Mann, 116 Cal.App. 170, 2 P.2d 500; Keyes v. Nims, 43 Cal.App. 1, 184 P. 695.

[4–6] Under the second claim plaintiff was not estopped from claiming equitable relief. De Hart v. Allen, 49 Cal.App.2d 639, 122 P.2d 273. Third, plaintiff was not barred from claiming his purported share of the profits and his earnings which were found in defendant's bank account under section 300 of the Labor Code. Defendant placed her earnings and profits in said account. She never parted with any of her money pursuant to the pooling agreement. There was no assignment of her wages in violation of that section and defendant could not equitably assert such claim. Cline v. Festersen, 128 Cal.App.2d 380, 275 P.2d 149. Fourth, this same conclusion applies to the claimed bar of the statute of limitations. Such a statute would run from the time of the breach or termination of the agreement or when the cause of action accrues. Niles v. Louis H. Rapoport & Sons, 53 Cal.App.2d 644, 128 P.2d 50; Maguire v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062. Fifth, while there were considerable contradictions of both parties in reference to their financial affairs it cannot be said that plaintiff's testimony was inherently improbable. Sixth, the evidence and findings do support the judgment. Under this heading defendant makes numerous charges, including a claim that the court failed to take into account, in the accounting, and specifically failed to find as to the truth or falsity of defendant's statement that there was an item of $14,000 and several other claimed amounts which the parties had previously divided between them and that by again dividing her proportionate share of it, which was deposited in her bank account, defendant was being again charged for these earnings; that the court failed to specifically find as to whether the amount accumulated was from earnings or from profit, and failed to find when the agreement went into effect, whether it was effective during their separation of nearly two years, when she went away with another man, and as to who supported plaintiff for more than six months when he was unemployed; that a full accounting for loans, advances and contributions for the full period they were living together was not had, and that the court arbitrarily based its findings on what sums remained in her bank account at the termination of their agreement.

[7] Plaintiff testified generally that he commenced living with defendant as man and wife in 1948; that he was separated from his former wife at the time and defendant knew he was not divorced from her; that he was then employed as a cook and bartender and defendant was employed as a waitress; that they agreed to pool their earnings after taking out expenses and he turned the balance over to defendant to handle and to keep for both of them; that she kept it in a bank account and safety deposit box in her name for several reasons, i. e., because of probable demands of his former wife and on account of his drinking problem; that they subsequently went into business together on several occasions under the same arrangements; that they both drank a little and he knew generally what they had saved and made. He itemized the amounts paid and received from such sales and operations and said that the bank account constituted about the only record of their transactions and earnings; that in 1951 they went to Arizona and defendant took the money and deposited it there in her name, as before; that while there for the period of two years he was employed except for six months when he was away from employment because of a brawl in which he broke his leg; that defendant kept working; that they returned to California and they jointly went into business in Los Angeles; that he then opened up an additional separate bank account for himself (about $500), to pay for supplies and overhead; that they made about $14,000 that year; that together they bought $13,500 in war bonds, payable to her and on her death to plaintiff, from the money in her account; that equipment was purchased for other business enterprises in which they were jointly engaged; that they also purchased $300 in stock from said savings account; that in 1955 they "split up" and each had a separate apartment; that while she did not live with him, she came to his place nearly every night for two years; that he invested about $400 of his own money in another enterprise; that he was still giving his money to her to save for both of them even though she was working as a waitress at another place; that they went to Las Vegas in 1956 and lived together again as husband and wife under the same arrangement; that subsequently they went to Palm Springs and there they "broke up", due to his drinking; that all during that period they had a lot of "break-ups" each for a short time, and then they would resume their former status, both financial and otherwise; that one time she ran away with another man and was gone three or four weeks and on her return she told plaintiff she had no more money; that she said she had put up with him for a long time and he had nothing coming, and for him to "try and get it—sue me"; that he believed at that time she had between $22,000 and $23,000, and named the amounts and banks where this sum was deposited. He testified he never borrowed any money from her.

Savings account bank books of defendant were received in evidence and showed deposits and withdrawals over a two-year period. One showed a balance of $7,505.94 withdrawn on March 7, 1957; another a balance of $3,257.87 withdrawn on December 5, 1956; and a balance in another account of $2,360 on June 26, 1956. One showed a deposit of $10,000 on April 20, 1956, which was not withdrawn.

Defendant testified generally about their meeting and subsequent transactions. She said she left him about 50 times between 1948 and 1954, and she claims she had $7,000 of her own money from her mother's estate when she first met plaintiff, which she kept in the several banks named and in a specific safety deposit box (the officer at the bank denied any record of such safety deposit box or accounts); that after paying expenses she placed their savings in their accounts in several banks, and invested some of her money in some of these business enterprises; that she profited on some and lost on others; that she considered her wages and earnings she made in Arizona as her own; that each of the parties came out with a profit of $4,000 on one sale in 1953; that she purchased war bonds totaling $9,700 with her money; and that in making some of these investments she loaned plaintiff money which he did not repay.

Defendant was confronted with her verified affidavit used in support of her motion to set aside the default. Therein she alleged she and plaintiff split $14,000 as a result of joint restaurant operations. She later said this was untrue, that it was only $4,000 that she made out of it. She testified that when they separated she had $10,000 in one bank, $8,500 in another, and $3,000 in another. She said they did not pool their earnings; that plaintiff kept his and she kept hers; that they had no agreement about pooling their earnings; that she helped support plaintiff during his illness in Arizona and at other times. She admitted having saved $22,000 at the time of the separation but claims $7,000 was her own money; that she gave plaintiff $2,000 the first six months she knew him, $2,900 to invest in the several businesses, and extra money to support himself.

Apparently there was some discussion at the pre-trial hearing pertaining to a limitation in reference to the accounting, i. e., that the court, under the pleadings, did not desire to go into a complete accounting between the parties since they started living together but would limit it to the allegations of plaintiff's complaint. The complaint alleges the agreement to be that each party agreed to deposit his earnings and profits in bank accounts and each agreed to share such money as was deposited therein. Then follows the names of the banks and the amounts then on deposit. The prayer was for a division of the money in the bank accounts. From the evidence produced it appears that the court did, to a great extent, trace the money deposited to these accounts back to the time these parties started living together. A sharp conflict in the testimony of the two parties existed. Defendant testified as to a $7,000 inheritance, claimed to have been deposited in certain banks prior to this time. This testimony stands uncorroborated. She produced no other evidence of such deposit or of such inheritance. In fact, the testimony of the officers of those banks negative her claim in this respect. The court might well have believed that no such inheritance existed and that the money found in the bank account was the joint earnings and profits of the parties. However, it did give her credit for this sum. Under the pleadings no specific finding as to each item about which defendant testified was necessary. It did find that they did agree to pool their earnings, to share equally in the accumulations, and that the money deposited in the banks was to be shared equally, as indicated. It thereafter gave plaintiff $6,876.90. By inference, at least, the court found the allegations of defendant's answer to be untrue. The evidence fully supports the findings and the findings support the judgment. The other claims made do not appear to be meritorious.

Judgment affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

William A. GARCIA, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6288.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 15, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 11, 1959.

Prosecution for burglary. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Richard C. Fildew, J., entered judgment of conviction of second degree burglary and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction and remark of trial judge as to defendant's prior convictions, after verdict had been returned and jurors dismissed did not constitute misconduct.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1144(13), 1159(2)

Duty of reviewing court, where claim has been made as to insufficiency of evidence, is performed when it determines that there is substantial evidence tending to prove elements of crime and it must assume as true every fact that jury could have reasonably deduced from evidence and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict, but it may not weigh the evidence or inferences to be drawn.

2. Burglary ⇐41(3)

Where defendant was prosecuted for burglary in the second degree, prosecution had burden of proving beyond reasonable doubt that defendant entered house with intent to commit theft, and this could be proven circumstantially. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 459.

3. Burglary ⇐41(1)

Evidence sustained conviction of burglary in the second degree. Penal Code, § 459.

4. Criminal Law ⇐655(1)

In prosecution of defendant resulting in conviction of burglary in the second degree, judge's remark, after verdict had been returned and jurors dismissed, with respect to prior convictions of defendant which state did not file on, did not constitute misconduct. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 459.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1031(4)

Failure to interpose plea of once in jeopardy in trial court effects a waiver of same and hence cannot be raised and considered upon appeal for the first time. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1016, 1017.

William A. Garcia, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

The record discloses no good grounds for this appeal. Appellant asserts (1) insufficiency of the evidence, (2) misconduct of the trial judge, and (3) former jeopardy. None of these points has substantial support in the record.

Defendant was charged by information with four counts of burglary and three prior convictions of felony,—two robberies and one violation of § 503, Vehicle Code. Originally represented by the public defender, a lawyer of defendant's own selection was substituted at the beginning of the trial and the prior convictions were thereupon admitted. Defendant did not testify or call any witnesses in his own behalf. The trial ended in acquittal with respect to all charges except count III, which alleged that defendant committed burglary (Pen.Code, § 459) on September 29, 1957, in that he willfully entered the house occupied by Alex Corsero and Anna Corsero with intent to commit theft. Convicted of that charge, the offense was fixed at second degree burglary and defendant sentenced to prison for the term prescribed by law, the court making no finding as to the prior convictions.

The evidence shows that Alex Corsero left his residence, 651 Alpine Street, Los Angeles, at about 9:30 p. m. on September 29, 1957, taking with him his entire family except a 16-year-old son (who was probably absent on a mission of his own). Upon return at about 10 or 15 minutes before 1:00 a. m., the Corseros found all lights burning; part of a cake which had been on the table was lying on the floor; the screen in a window of the daughter's bedroom was raised; there were blood spots on the floor and bed; the girl's purse, which had been left on the bed, was lying on the floor and the contents scattered; also on the floor was icing from the cake; upon a glass in the bathroom were dirt and blood spots and cake icing; the father's wrist watch was missing from the said bedroom but none of the contents of the purse had been taken. Mr. Corsero heard a noise outside; went into the patio and found defendant sitting on the edge of a bench; when asked, "What are you doing here?" he said, "I am sleeping. I am sleeping." Corsero grabbed defendant, who tried to get away, but with the help of a friend Corsero held him face down on the ground until the police arrived. When they asked what he was doing there defendant said, "I live here," according to the daughter, Anna Corsero. Officer Sedgeman testified that defendant would not tell where he lived and when asked what he was doing there said, "it was a cousin's house"; he refused to answer questions as to what he was doing in the area and how old he was. The officer observed that defendant had a minor injury to the little finger of his right hand and there was fresh dried blood on it; under the finger nails of three other fingers of the same hand were moist white particles. The cake was white and had finger marks on it. Defendant had alcohol on his breath but was not intoxicated; had no difficulty with speech or walk. A search of his person revealed no watch nor was it found elsewhere. As above stated, defendant did not testify and called no witnesses.

[1] The duty of a reviewing court concerning a plea of insufficiency of the evidence has been performed when it determines that there is substantial evidence tending to prove the material elements of the crime. It must assume as true every fact that the jury reasonably could have deduced from the evidence and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict. It may not weigh the evidence or the inferences to be drawn. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778. "The 'test on appeal is whether there is substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the trier of fact. It is not whether guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt.'" People v. Poindexter, 51 Cal.2d 142, 330 P.2d 763, 767.

[2, 3] The prosecutor had the burden of proving beyond reasonable doubt that defendant entered the house with intent to commit theft (Pen.Code, § 459; People v. Wilson, 158 Cal.App.2d 553, 555, 322 P.2d 966); but this can be proved circumstantially (People v. Henderson, 138 Cal.App.2d 505, 509, 292 P.2d 267; People v. Franklin, 106 Cal.App.2d 528, 530, 235 P.2d 402; People v. Smith, 84 Cal.App.2d 509, 512, 190 P.2d 941), as was done in the present instance. Consideration of the recited facts in the light of the stated rules and the strengthening influence of defendant's own silence at the trial (see, People v. Adamson, 27 Cal.2d 478, 488, 165 P.2d 3; People v. Ashley, 42 Cal.2d 246, 268, 267 P.2d 271), leaves no doubt of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict of guilty upon count III.

[4] The asserted misconduct of the trial judge finds no support in the record. After the verdicts were returned and the jurors had been dismissed,—indeed it was a month later, at the time of sentencing—remarks were made by the judge which appellant now claims to have been prejudicially erroneous. Defendant's attorney made a plea for probation and at its conclusion the following occurred: "The Court: I can only mention this, Mr. Tighe; I must surely compliment you on the job that you did with the jury here. There were several other Counts that he was not convicted of. The report shows repeated typical offenses in his back record, that they did not file on because this was open and shut. I have never seen a lawyer do a better job with trying a case where the defendant was as guilty as this defendant was, and where there was absolutely no defense, and then to have the defendant convicted of second degree burglary. This man has at least six priors that we know of." Emphasis has been supplied to indicate the portions to which appellant directs attention. Obviously there was no misconduct here and the matter is not one which deserves further elaboration.

The claim of former jeopardy. There is nothing in the clerk's transcript or the reporter's transcript to suggest such a plea or contention. Both are wholly silent on the subject. Appellant now undertakes to say that he pleaded guilty to vagrancy (Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 12) based upon the occurrences of September 29, 1957, at the Corsero home, and that while he was serving a 30-day jail sentence the charge of burglary, previously dismissed, was renewed in the information which resulted in the conviction now under review, and that this worked double jeopardy.

[5] Section 1016, Penal Code, enumerates five kinds of pleas to an indictment or information, one of which is "once in jeopardy," and § 1017 says: "Every plea must be made in open court and may be oral or in writing, and must be entered upon the minutes of the court and must be taken down in shorthand by the official reporter if there is one present." Subdivision 3 of the section sets forth the form to be used. Failure to interpose this plea in the trial court effects a waiver of same and hence the claim cannot be raised and considered upon appeal for the first time. See, In re Harron, 191 Cal. 457, 467–468, 217 P. 728; In re Hess, 45 Cal.2d 171, 176, 288 P.2d 5; People v. Mims, 136 Cal.App.2d 828, 833, 289 P.2d 539; People v. Rogers, 150 Cal.App.2d 403, 415, 309 P.2d 949; Fricke, California Criminal Procedure (4th ed.), p. 154. Such is the situation at bar and the claim of former jeopardy, unsupported as it is, cannot be considered on appeal.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action for alleged malpractice in administering a hypodermic injection of sodium pentathol.

[1] Plaintiff does not question the sufficiency of the evidence, but she does contend that the court erred in failing to give to the jury her proposed instruction upon the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Under such circumstances, "in determining whether or not the evidence supports the theory of the requested instruction an appellate court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the party offering the instruction. Sills v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 40 Cal.2d 630, 255 P.2d 795." Edgett v. Fairchild, 153 Cal.App.2d 734, 738, 314 P.2d 973, 975.

The record, when viewed in light of the rule set forth in the cited case, shows that plaintiff, a housewife, 47 years of age, while under the care of the defendant Doctor Barr, was admitted as a patient to the Lakeside Community Hospital in Lakeport to determine the cause of her obesity. Although she was nervous and in somewhat poor health, she suffered no particular pain or other discomfort. During the first 12 days of her hospitalization numerous laboratory tests and examinations were made. Finally Doctor Barr ordered that she be given basal metabolism tests. Because of her nervous condition and emotional makeup, the doctor ordered one such test to be given her under sodium pentathol and another without. In accordance with the custom at the hospital, any doctor who was free would act as anesthetist. In this case it was the defendant Doctor Marsh. According to plaintiff's testimony, Marsh first endeavored to inject the left arm, and being unsuccessful there, proceeded directly to inject the inner aspect of her right knee. This was denied by Marsh who testified that he attempted to make the injection in both arms but was unable to find a vein, although he did obtain some blood from the left arm. Her further testimony was that at the point where the injection was made there was visible to her a small "raised bubble place" which she characterized as a "varicose vein." She further testified that although she became a bit "fuzzy" following the injection, she did not go to sleep; that the pain in her leg was immediate; that she was unable to complain vocally because of the rubber apparatus in her mouth which was attached to the equipment being used; and that upon being returned to her ward she felt "excruciating" pain in her leg. Marsh testified that when he saw her approximately an hour after the injection she made no complaint of pain. Barr, however, testified that when he saw her at approximately the same time she was complaining of pain in her leg; that he examined it and found a reddened area around the site of the injection which was more firm than the surrounding tissue. She suffered constant pain in her leg during the next 63 days, 55 of which she spent in the Lakewood Community Hospital undergoing treatment in an attempt to effect a cure of her injury. Within two or three days of the injection, a thrombosis developed, and shortly thereafter, at the site of the injection, a condition characterized as a "slough ulcer" developed. From 1953, when she first went to Doctor Barr, plaintiff had been given sodium pentathol under his direction on at least four occasions and had shown no allergy to it, nor had she suffered harm from its injection. One of such injections had been given by Doctor Marsh, and all were given in the plaintiff's arm. Following her dismissal from the hospital in October of 1954, she continued to have extreme pain in her leg. In January of 1956 she engaged Doctor Kenney of Santa Rosa. He testified that his examination of plaintiff's leg disclosed a scar into which ran two visible varicose veins. He placed her in a hospital for nine days, during which time he and other doctors in consultation with him made a further study of her condition. He concluded that she had phlebitis, an inflammation of the vein; anterior tibial strain due to the manner in which she walked to alleviate the pain; and that at the point of the original injection she was suffering from causalgia, an "irritating type of pain * * due to some type of irritation within the blood vessel." Under the same anesthetic, which he injected into her arm, Doctor Kenney performed surgery to the leg and removed the vein, which was diagnosed as varicose, from the groin to the ankle and also removed the scar on her knee. At the same time an incision was made on her right flank and a piece of the sympathetic nerve removed.

Following submission of the case to the jury, and after some deliberation, it was requested the testimony and deposition of the defendant Marsh be re-read. The jury again retired and shortly thereafter returned with a verdict of nine to three in favor of the defendants.

[2] The conditions to be met before the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable are too well established to warrant citation of authority. They are that the accident or injury must be of a kind which ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence; that it must be caused by an agency or instrument in the control of the defendant; and that it must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff. There can be no question that in the present case the last two conditions have been met. It is only the first that presents difficulty of disposition.

The testimony pertinent to the first condition may be summarized as follows: Doctor Barr testified under cross-examination that in the exercise of the standard of care in that community, a physician would not inject sodium pentathol into a varicose vein, the reason being that the walls of such veins do not have normal tensile strength; that they tear easily and do not have the resistence to irritants that normal veins have. Doctor Roberson, a local physician called by defendants, testified under cross-examination that only in an emergency would he inject a varicose vein, and that the standard of practice in the community forbade such an injection. Another defense witness, Doctor Wylie, did not share the apprehension expressed by the other experts concerning an injection directly into a varicose vein. The defendant Marsh testified that he had seen leakage and it had happened to him "* * * scores of times, but never a reaction like this patient had." Both Barr and Kenney testified that plaintiff's difficulties were the result of the injection. While one Doctor Woods testified that there was no doubt the ulcer was the result of some extravasation of the agent outside the vein, all of the expert testimony was to the effect that in such an injection one could expect some extravasation.

The question whether plaintiff's injuries resulting from the sodium pentathol injection are of the type which ordinarily do not occur in the absence of negligent administration of the drug necessitates two inquiries: (1) Has the plaintiff produced sufficient evidence to permit the jury to draw an inference of negligence? (2) In the light of the evidence offered, does the balance of probabilities favor the conclusion of negligence? As to the latter inquiry, as been stated: "That conclusion is not the court to draw, or to refuse to draw as there is enough to permit the draw it; and even though the court it itself infer negligence, it must still leave the question to the jury where reasonable men may differ as to the balance of probabilities." Res Ipsa Loquitur in California, Prosser, 37 Cal.L.Rev. 183, 194–195.

[3, 4] However, before the latter inquiry can be answered, there must be a determination of the question whether "plaintiff has produced sufficient evidence to permit the jury to draw the inference." While some confusion has existed in the cases as to whether such determination devolves upon the court or the trier of fact, it appears to us that the decision in Seneris v. Haas, 45 Cal.2d 811, 827, 291 P.2d 915, 924, 53 A.L.R. 2d 124, in which the court states, "the existence of the conditions upon which the operation of the doctrine is to be predicated is a question of fact and the right of the jury to find those facts must be carefully preserved," clearly indicates that the question whether the plaintiff has produced sufficient evidence to permit the jury to draw an inference of negligence is one which is within the exclusive province of the trier of fact.

[5] Consequently, upon the authority of the Seneris decision, we are compelled to conclude that the trial court erred in refusing instructions on res ipsa loquitur.

[6] Although unnecessary to this opinion, yet in view of the possibility of a new trial, we note that instructions were given upon the presumption of due care; that the mere happening of an accident does not support an inference of negligence; and upon unavoidable accident. Such instructions, under the facts and circumstances of this case, were likewise erroneous. See Shaw v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 50 Cal.2d 153, 323 P.2d 391; Maertins v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals, 162 Cal.App.2d 661, 328 P.2d 494; Brenner v. Beardsley, 159 Cal.App.2d 304, 323 P.2d 841; Butigan v. Yellow Cab Co., 49 Cal.2d 652, 320 P.2d 500.

The judgment is reversed.

Civ. 17941.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 16, 1958.

Action in which plaintiff appeals from judgment of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Theresa Meikle, J., dismissing action. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that where before stipulated time of trial had expired a jury was impaneled and sworn, action had been brought to trial within time fixed by written stipulation and it was error for court to dismiss action under provision of statute requiring any action not brought to trial within five years after filing thereof to be dismissed except where parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended.

Where parties entered into written stipulation extending time of trial until a certain date which was more than five years after action had been filed, and before expiration of last day as provided in stipulation a jury was impaneled and sworn and then court was asked to continue case for several days because of illness of counsel, action was "brought to trial" within time fixed by written stipulation and it was error for court to dismiss action under statute providing for mandatory dismissal of any action which has not been brought to trial within five years after filing of same, except where parties had stipulated in writing that time might be extended. DOOLING, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of dismissal. The complaint in this action was filed on September 11, 1951. By written stipulation the time of trial was extended until May 11, 1957. On May 9, 1957, the parties regularly appeared in court for trial and a jury was impaneled and sworn. On May 10, 1957, which was a Friday, counsel for plaintiff asked the court to continue the case to Monday, May 13, because, as he stated, he was too ill to proceed with the trial. Counsel for plaintiff was granted a continuance until May 13 in the face of a statement by counsel for defendant that if such continuance was granted counsel for defendant would move for a dismissal of the action under the mandatory five-year provision of section 583, Code of Civil Procedure. Such motion was made on May 13, 1957, and granted by the court.

The pertinent provision of section 583 reads:

"Any action * * * shall be dismissed * * * unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the plaintiff has filed his action, except where the parties have filed a stipulation in writing that the time may be extended * * *"

Appellant argues that because the last day of the stipulated extension fell on a Saturday, a non-judicial day, he had in any event until the next Monday, May 13, to bring the action to trial under section 583. We do not find it necessary to decide this question.

The cases are clear that where the trial is before the court, without a jury, the action is not ordinarily "brought to trial" until at least one witness is sworn and gives some testimony. (16 Cal.Jur.2d, Dismissal, § 33, p. 188; § 35, pp. 192–194.) However the question has apparently never been presented whether under section 583, where the case is set for trial before a jury, the case is "brought to trial" when the parties commence the examination of prospective jurors and the impanelment of the jury.

Our Supreme Court in Silcox v. Lang, 78 Cal. 118, 124, 20 P. 297, 301, said: "The impaneling of a jury is a part of the trial, within the meaning of the Code, and any ruling of the court with respect thereto, if erroneous, is an error of law occurring at the trial * * *" (Emphasis ours.) This case was decided in 1889 and section 583 was not adopted until 1905. (Stats. 1905, p. 244, ch. 271.) We are entitled to assume that in using the language "brought to trial" the Legislature was aware of this previous judicial determination that the impanelment of the jury is a part of the trial. (45 Cal.Jur.2d, Statutes, §§ 101–102; pp. 615–617.)

The holding of our court in Silcox v. Lang, supra, that the impanelment of the jury is a part of the trial not only comports with the common understanding among lawyers and judges, but finds support in the rulings of the courts of other jurisdictions in a variety of circumstances. In the following cases, both civil and criminal, the courts have held that the impanelment of the jury is a part of the trial. Civil cases: Wilhite v. Agbayani, 2 Ill. App.2d 29, 118 N.E.2d 440, 442; Meyer v. Welsbacher, 80 Ohio App. 200, 75 N.E.2d 89, 90; Inter-Ocean Casualty Co. v. Copeland, 184 Ark. 648, 43 S.W.2d 65, 67; St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. v. King Wrought Iron Bridge Co., 23 Minn. 186, 188; Criminal cases: Hopt v. Utah, 110 U.S. 574, 578, 4 S.Ct. 202, 28 L.Ed. 262; Caples v. State, 3 Okl.Cr. 72, 104 P. 493, 502 et seq.; Henry v. State, 10 Okl.Cr. 369, 136 P. 982, 986; State v. Neal, 350 Mo. 1002, 169 S.W.2d 686, 693; State v. Crocket, 90 Mo. 37, 1 S.W. 753, 755.

Under the facts of this case we are satisfied that the action was brought to trial within the time fixed by the written stipulation of the parties, and it was error for the court to dismiss it under the five-year provision of section 583.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an election contest involving the office of County Supervisor, Fifth Supervisorial District in the county of Imperial. The proceeding was brought under the provisions of section 8511, subd. (e), of the Elections Code, which provides, as far as is material here, as follows:

"8511. Grounds for contest. Any elector of a county, city, or of any political subdivision of either, may contest any election held therein, for any of the following causes: * * *

"(e) That the precinct board in conducting the election or in canvassing the returns, made errors sufficient to change the result of the election as to any person who has been declared elected."

The agreed statement on appeal herein shows the following facts: On or about the 3rd day of June, 1958, an election was held to elect a member of the board of supervisors from the fifth supervisorial district in the county of Imperial, State of California. There were only two candidates named on the ballot at said election for said office, namely, J. R. Snyder and R. B. Langley. After said election the votes were canvassed and showed that J. R. Snyder received a total of 774 votes, and R. B. Langley received a total of 788 votes. On the 16th day of June, 1958, the duly appointed officers canvassing the returns of said election certified the result of the election and declared that R. B. Langley, contestee herein, was elected to the office of supervisor for the fifth supervisorial district. A certificate of election was issued to contestee on July 2, 1958, by the county clerk. On or about the 9th day of July, 1958, contestors herein filed a "Statement to Contest Election Proceedings" under Division 10, Chapter 2, of the Elections Code of the State of California (Elec. Code, sec. 8511, subd. (e). The statement to contest alleged in part that "the precinct boards in conducting the election or in canvassing the returns, made errors sufficient to change the result of the election", as to any person who has been declared elected. Pursuant to said statement to contest, a hearing was scheduled in accordance with law, and on the 21st day of August, 1958, a recount of the ballots cast at all the precincts was had before the above entitled court, with all interested parties being present, and contestors and contestee were represented by counsel. Upon completion of the recount, the court found that J. R. Snyder received a total of 808 legal votes and R. B. Langley received a total of 808 legal votes, a tie vote.

Thereafter, on the 29th day of August, 1958, the court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law. They state in part that the court found J. R. Snyder received 808 votes and R. B. Langley received 808 votes, and a tie vote. The court concluded that the contestors take nothing by their proceedings and that the same be dismissed. On August 29, 1958, the court signed and filed its judgment based on said findings of fact and conclusions of law, providing therein that the contestors take nothing by their proceedings and that the same be dismissed.

Contestors, who appeal from the judgment, contend that the trial court should have rendered a judgment annulling the declaration and certificate of election and decreeing that neither candidate was elected.

In McClintock v. Abel, 21 Cal.App.2d 11, 68 P.2d 273, plaintiff and defendant were the only candidates for the office of supervisor of Kern County whose names appeared on the ballot in the primary election. After the canvassing of the returns by the board of supervisors it appeared that defendant had received a majority of all votes cast for that office. On September 8, 1936, a certificate of election was issued to him and on October 7, 1936, plaintiff filed his contest of election. On appeal it was held that the effect of section 2¾ of article 2 of the Constitution, which provides in part as follows: "Any candidate for a judicial, school, county, township, or other nonpartisan office who at a primary election shall receive votes on a majority of all the ballots cast for candidates for the office for which such candidate seeks nomination, shall be elected to such office.", has been to transmute a primary election, held for the purpose of nominating candidates, into a general election of those nonpartisan candidates receiving in the primary a majority of all votes cast for their respective offices; that section 1111 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure (now Elections Code, sections 8511 et seq.) sets up the legal machinery for the contest of an election to a public office; that this chapter of the code concerns itself with the contest of elections and has nothing to do with the contest of a nomination in a primary election.

In Doran v. Biscailuz, 128 Cal.App.2d 55, 274 P.2d 691, 695, in an action instituted to contest the right of the sheriff of Los Angeles County to the office to which he had been elected in the primary election held on June 8, 1954, the court held that "An elector may contest a general election on the ground that the person who has been declared elected to an office was not at the time of the election eligible to that office (Elections Code, § 8511, subd. (b).) The procedure to be followed in the contest is set out in the Elections Code, §§ 8530 and 8531." The above cases are cited and commented upon in County of Alameda v. Sweeney, 151 Cal.App.2d 505, 511, 312 P. 2d 419.

Section 8556 of the Elections Code provides that after hearing the proofs and allegations of the parties the court shall pronounce judgment in the premises either confirming or annulling and setting aside the election. If it appears that a person other than the defendant has the highest number of votes, the court must declare that person elected (Elec. Code, sec. 8557.) Section 8570 provides that the person declared elected by the superior court is entitled to a certificate of election to be issued by the county clerk, and section 8571 provides that if the clerk has issued an election certificate to any person other than the one declared elected by the court, such certificate is annulled by the judgment of the court.

In 17 Cal.Jur.2d, section 212, page 477, it is said that under the above provisions a contestant cannot have himself declared elected unless he proves that he received the highest number of votes, citing Keller v. Chapman, 34 Cal. 635, and Shinn v. Heusner, 91 Cal.App.2d 248, 204 P.2d 886. In the latter case respondent Heusner, who was the incumbent supervisor of the third supervisorial district in El Dorado County, was opposed for reelection by appellant Shinn at an election held June 1, 1948. The final count gave Heusner 431 votes, including 32 by absentee ballots, and gave Shinn 425 votes, including 4 by absentee ballots. The contestant contended that certain of the absentee ballots should not have been counted, and that if the same were eliminated he would be the winner by 22 votes. Judgment for the contestee was affirmed and the court said on page 251 of 91 Cal.App.2d, on page 888 of 204 P.2d:

> "While the prayer of plaintiff's complaint is that the court annul the absentee ballots submitted by Heusner, that the latter be debarred from holding public office, and that plaintiff be declared elected, if the real purpose of the action is to secure the position for plaintiff, the debarring of respondent would not have the effect of entitling plaintiff to such office unless enough absentee ballots were annulled that it could be said that contestant received the majority of the votes cast. See Bush v. Head, 154 Cal. 277, 284, 97 P. 512; People [ex rel. Drew] v. Rodgers, 118 Cal. 393, 396, 46 P. 740, 50 P. 668; Campbell v. Free, 7 Cal. App. 151, 153, 93 P. 1060; Budway v. Hollibaugh, 68 Cal.App.2d 473, 476, 157 P.2d 30."

It is further stated in said section 212 that where a contest results in a tie vote, the election is not annulled or the contestant elected, since he has not obtained the highest number of votes, but the judgment is that the proceeding be dismissed and the contestant take nothing.

Section 8512 of the Elections Code provides as follows:

"Irregular and improper conduct of judges. No irregularity or improper conduct in the proceedings of the judges, or any of them, is such malconduct as avoids an election, unless the irregularity or improper conduct is such as to procure the defendant to be declared either elected or one of those receiving an equal and highest number of votes where no one person has received the highest number of votes, when he had not received that number of legal votes."

Section 8514 of the same code provides the following:

"Illegal vote. An election shall not be set aside on account of illegal votes, unless it appear that a number of illegal votes has been given to the person whose right to the office is contested or who has been certified as having tied for first place, which, if taken from him, would reduce the number of his legal votes below the number of votes given to some other person for the same office, after deducting therefrom the illegal votes which may be shown to have been given to that other person."

Snibley v. Palmtag, 128 Cal. 283, 60 P. 860, was an election contest for the office of supervisor of San Benito County under section 1111 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure (now 8511 et seq. of the Elections Code). The trial court found that there was a tie vote. The ground of contest was "on account of illegal votes". The court said:

"The proceeding is statutory, and can be inaugurated in four different cases, stated in section 1111, Code Civ. Proc. The fourth ground is, 'On account of illegal votes.' That some other person received more votes than the person declared elected, or an equal number with such person, is not made a ground of contest. Section 1114, [of the Code of Civil Procedure] reads as follows: 'Nothing in the fourth ground of contest specified in section eleven hundred and eleven, is to be so construed as to authorize an election to be set aside on account of illegal votes, unless it appear that a number of illegal votes has been given to the person whose right to the office is contested, which, if taken from him, would reduce the number of his legal votes below the number of votes given to some other person for the same office, after deducting therefrom the illegal votes which may be shown to have been given to such other person.'

"Section 1123 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows: 'If in any case it appears that another person than the one returned has the highest number of legal votes, the court must declare such person elected.' Under these provisions it is obvious that the judgment annulling the election is unauthorized by the statute, or by the facts found. The judgment should have been that the contestant take nothing by the proceeding, and it be dismissed, and the cause is remanded, with direction that the superior court make such modification."

In this connection the Code Commission notes on section 8511 (West's Annotated Codes, Elections Code) are in part as follows:

> "Why subdivision (b) should not apply in contesting elections resulting in a tie, does not appear, but under C.C. P. 1124 (now Elec.Code, secs. 8511, 8514) it clearly does not. As the law now stands, subdivision (e) also does not apply in the case of tie votes. This may have been the result of an oversight. When C.C.P. 1124 was enacted, C.C.P. 1111 contained only four grounds of contest. When C.C.P. 1111 was amended in 1935 (Stats.1935, c. 406, p. 1458) it may be that C.C.P. 1124 would have been amended had it been called to the attention of the Legislature."

In Wright v. Ashton, 143 Cal. 544, 77 P. 477, in an election contest involving the office of a justice of the peace, the contest was instituted on the ground that the boards of election in each of the two precincts of the township had been guilty of malconduct, in that they had miscounted the ballots, and that in each of the precincts illegal votes had been given to the contestee, Frank Ashton. The case was submitted to the court for decision solely on the recount of the ballots. The court found thereon that there were 265 legal votes cast for said office at said election, of which Ashton received 79, Wright 79, Simmons 77, and Wixon 30. Judgment was thereupon entered that Wright take nothing by the action, and that the action be dismissed. This judgment was affirmed on appeal.

Section 1112 of the Code of Civil Procedure (now section 8512 of the Elections Code) then read as follows:

> "No irregularity or improper conduct in the proceedings of the judges, or any of them, is such malconduct as avoids an election, unless the irregularity or improper conduct is such as to procure the person whose right to the office is contested to be declared elected, when he had not received the highest number of legal votes."

It was appellant's claim that based on this section the election of the contestee should have been annulled. In construing the then applicable code sections the court said [143 Cal. 544, 77 P. 478]:

> "The statute provides that the right of any person declared elected may be contested, first, on account of the malconduct of election officers, and, fourth, on account of illegal votes. Code Civ.Proc., § 1111, subds. 1, 4. Section 1114, Code Civ.Proc., provides that 'nothing in the fourth ground of contest specified in section 1111 is to be so construed as to authorize an election to be set aside on account of illegal votes, unless it appear that a number of illegal votes has been given to the person whose right to the office is contested, which, if taken from him, would reduce the number of his legal votes below the number of votes given to some other person for the same office, after deducting therefrom the illegal votes which may be shown to have been given to such other person.' There is apparent no sound reason why the election should be annulled where one of two persons receiving an equal and the highest vote has been procured to be declared elected because of the irregularity or improper conduct in the proceedings of the judges of election, and not be annulled when such result was procured by illegal votes. Yet such would be the result if appellant's construction of section 1112, Code Civ.Proc., in this regard, be correct, for there can be no question as to the proper construction of section 1114, Code Civ.Proc. If the concluding provision of section 1112, Code Civ. Proc., viz., 'when he had not received the highest number of legal votes,' be read as meaning 'when he had not received as many votes as were given to some other person'—a construction supported by section 1067, Pol.Code—the section is brought into harmony with section 1114, Code Civ.Proc., the language of which latter section strongly indicates the intention of the Legislature that an election shall not be set aside for either malconduct on the part of the judges, or illegal votes, where the true result can be, and is with certainty ascertained by the trial court, unless it appears that another person than the one declared elected has in fact received a higher number of legal votes.

"This much has been said in support of the construction already given to these sections by this court, for it is undoubtedly settled by the decisions that where the question on an election contest is as to whether the person declared elected did in fact receive the highest number of legal votes, the election will not, under our statutory provisions, be annulled unless it appears that another person received a higher vote."

When Wright v. Ashton, supra, was decided subdivision (e) of section 8511 of the Elections Code was not a ground for contest of an election and the court was there concerned with a contest based upon malconduct of the boards of election in that they had miscounted the ballots. Then, as now, section 1114 of the Code of Civil Procedure (now section 8514 of the Elections Code) provided that an election should not be set aside on account of illegal votes unless it appear that a number of illegal votes has been given to the person whose right to the office is contested, which, if taken from him, would reduce the number of his legal votes below the number of votes given to some other person for the same office, after deducting therefrom the illegal votes which may be shown to have been given to such other person. In the instant case, as in the Wright case, supra, 143 Cal. at page 547, 77 P. at page 479, "There is apparent no sound reason why the election should be annulled where one of two persons receiving an equal and the highest vote has been procured to be declared elected because of the irregularity or improper conduct in the proceedings of the judges of election, and not be annulled when such result was procured by illegal votes."

Section 8556 of the Elections Code provides that the court pronounce judgment either confirming or annulling and setting aside the election and no provision is made therein to apply when the election results in a tie vote. Since J. R. Snyder, the candidate opposing Langley failed to prove that he received the highest number of votes cast at said election he could not have himself declared elected. 17 Cal.Jur.2d, sec. 212, p. 477, supra. While it appears that an election may be contested on the ground stated in subdivision (e) of said section 8511 of the Elections Code, no provision is made for annulling the election in the event of a tie vote. Contestors argue that if the trial court had given its judgment annulling the certificate of election and declaring a tie vote, the names of both candidates would have been placed on the ballots as candidates for the supervisorial office at the ensuing election, all in accordance with sections 2743 to 2745, inclusive, of the Elections Code. However, these sections relate to nominations at a primary election. Section 8701 of the Elections Code, applying to elections other than primary elections, provides that in any election, except that for Governor or Lieutenant Governor, the election board shall determine a tie vote for candidates voted for wholly within one county. This proceeding does not involve the annulment of the election. Since the trial court found that neither candidate received a majority of the votes cast at said election, neither candidate could be declared elected by the court and the judgment dismissing the proceedings was proper.

Judgment affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

George E. HURLBURT, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 3535.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 18, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 11, 1959.

Prosecution for violation of section 288 of Penal Code. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Melvyn I. Cronin, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that trial court erred in ruling that defense counsel could neither cross-examine complaining witness nor introduce testimony on question as to whether witness had, in the past, made similar charges against other men, which charges witness had admitted were false or which were proven to be false.

1. Witnesses ⇐344(2)

Generally, specific acts of wrongdoing may not be used to impeach a witness. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

2. Witnesses ⇐344(2)

Rule declared by statute authorizing impeachment of witness by evidence that general reputation for truth, honesty or integrity is bad but not by evidence of particular wrongful acts, is a sound one but is not absolute, and in sex cases of various sorts, exceptions to its application have been recognized. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

3. Criminal Law ⇐768(1), 1173(2)

It is reversible error to fail to instruct that because sex charges are easy to make and hard to disprove testimony of prosecutrix must be carefully scrutinized, and even qualifying normal instruction by stating that nevertheless if jury believes that defendant is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, a guilty verdict should be returned, is reversible error.

4. Witnesses ⇐268(1)

Defense should be allowed the widest latitude in cross-examination of prosecutrix in sex cases. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

5. Witnesses ⇐352

Where issue goes beyond general reputation of witness for truth, honesty, or integrity, and involves truthfulness of basic fact in issue evidence of particular wrongful acts may be admissible. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

6. Infants ⇐20

Rape ⇐40(2)

Evidence of specific acts of prior unchastity of a complaining witness in a statutory rape charge or case involving violation of section 288 of Penal Code is not admissible because consent is not involved, but if consent is in issue as in a forcible rape charge, evidence of prior particular acts of unchastity is admissible on issue of consent. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 2051; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288.

7. Witnesses ⇐372(1)

An attitude of animosity toward defendant in a sex case by prosecutrix may be shown.

8. Criminal Law ⇐338(1)

Total value and relevancy of evidence does not necessarily determine its admissibility.

9. Witnesses ⇐349, 352

In prosecution for violation of section 288 of Penal Code, trial court erred in refusing defense counsel opportunity of either cross-examining witness or introducing evidence on question as to whether witness had, in the past, made similar charges against other men which were later admitted by witness to be false or which were later proven to be false. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

Stanley Brooks, San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., John S. McInerny, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

In a prosecution for a violation of section 288 of the Penal Code the trial court ruled that defense counsel could neither cross-examine the complaining witness nor introduce evidence on the question as to whether the witness had, in the past, made similar charges against other men, which charges the witness had admitted were false or were proved to be false. In our opinion such rulings were erroneous, and under the facts, prejudicial.

As is usual in such cases, the prosecution was forced to rely primarily on the testimony of the complaining witness to establish its case, while the defense, by necessity, was forced to rely almost entirely on the denials of the defendant. Thus, the credibility of the complaining witness was one of the basic issues presented to the jury.

The alleged victim, Maria, on November 23, 1957, the date of the charged offense, was nine years old. On that Saturday evening Maria's mother left Maria and several younger children with the defendant at his apartment for him to care for while the mother went out for the night. When the mother brought Maria and the other children to defendant's apartment, the defendant was in the kitchen of his residence having drinks with his newly married daughter, her husband, and a neighbor. Defendant frankly admitted that he had had several drinks that evening, but there is no evidence that he was intoxicated. Shortly after Maria's mother left, the daughter and her husband left on a date, intending to return home later that evening, and the neighbor returned to her home. Almost immediately thereafter three of the youngest children were put to bed in an upstairs bedroom by Maria and defendant. Maria then undressed, put on her nightgown, and went to bed. Defendant returned downstairs and prepared to retire on the sofa. Maria had difficulty getting to sleep and came downstairs to get something to eat and to watch television. In a short time the electricity went off. It is an admitted fact that there was an electrical failure in the area that night which lasted for some time.

When the lights went out Maria returned upstairs and went to sleep. Shortly after the lights went out a neighbor called at the defendant's apartment and borrowed a candle from defendant, remaining some time to talk to defendant. The defendant was downstairs when the witness arrived and gave her the candle.

Maria testified that while the lights were still out she was awakened by the defendant who was pulling up her nightgown, and that then the defendant committed the indecent acts upon her body which constitute the basis of the 288 charge. Maria also testified that while the defendant was committing these acts she told him that she had to go to the lavatory, that he desisted, and that when she returned from the bathroom he made no attempt to resume the acts, but returned downstairs in search of cigarettes.

The time intervals are not too clear from the testimony, but apparently before the acts are supposed to have occurred the adult daughter of defendant had telephoned stating that she and her husband would be right home. Apparently the lights went out about 10:40 and the defendant's daughter and her husband arrived home about 10:45 p.m. Maria admitted that when the daughter came home, Maria got up and kissed her and talked to her, and, although she was frightened by what had happened, she said nothing about it.

It also appears that Maria's mother came to defendant's apartment Sunday, and that she and Maria spent that day with defendant and spent Sunday night at his residence. Admittedly Maria, on Sunday, said nothing to her mother about what she claims had happened on Saturday evening. Complaint was first made on Monday morning when Maria and her mother returned to their home.

The defendant flatly denied the testimony of Maria and attempted to account for all of his time and actions on the night in question.

During the cross-examination of Maria counsel asked the witness whether she had not made prior false accusations of a similar nature against other men. The precise questions asked, the objections and the court rulings were as follows:

"Q. Maria, have you ever lied to your mother concerning a thing of this nature? A. No.

"Mr. Rudden [Prosecutor]: Incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

"The Court: Just a minute.

"Mr. Rudden: And it is objected to for that reason.

"The Court: Yes, it is objectionable. The objection will be sustained and the answer will be stricken and the jury instructed to disregard the answer. * * *

"Q. Now, Maria, do you recall telling Betty and your mother some time ago concerning the identical same facts as these facts you have testified to?

"Mr. Rudden: Objected to as improper cross-examination, compound, complex and calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness.

"The Court: Yes, I think I'll have to sustain the objection, counsel.

"Mr. Perasso [Defendant's counsel]: On what basis, your Honor?

"The Court: On all of the grounds. * * * The Court will sustain the objection on all the grounds offered. If you want to cross-examine the witness or impeach her you are certainly entitled to do that, but I do not think that the question is proper at all.

"Mr. Perasso: I will rephrase it.

"The Court: Or, if you want to establish a motive there is a way to do that too.

"Mr. Perasso: Q. Did you once before, Maria, accuse someone else of the very same thing?

"Mr. Rudden: Incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

"The Court: The objection will be sustained.

"Mr. Perasso: I won't pursue that at this moment."

Later in the trial, upon further cross-examination of this witness, the defendant's counsel attempted to establish the fact that the complaining witness had prior knowledge of the nature of the charge to which she had testified. Objections were properly sustained to these questions, whereupon counsel made an offer of proof. The principal offer was to show that the complaining witness had prior knowledge of the nature of the offense in question, but counsel also offered to show that the witness had made similar charges in the past which had proved to be false. Thus, counsel offered to show that in the immediate past she had made an identical charge against Bud Calleen, whom her mother had "been running around with or going with," and "she made the identical statement at a prior time against another person after which she said it was a lie." The trial court sustained the prosecuting attorney's objection, stating "I think you are entitled to proceed to attack the girl's reputation in other ways, but not by a particular act or anything of that sort."

[1, 2] The sole point urged on this appeal is that it was error to exclude evidence of the fact that the complaining witness had made prior false accusations that other men had committed acts against her similar to those charged against the defendant. Respondent supports the ruling by contending that specific acts of wrongdoing may not be used to impeach a witness. This is undoubtedly the general rule, and is codified in this state. Section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "A witness may be impeached by the party against whom he was called, * * * by evidence that his general reputation for truth, honesty, or integrity is bad, but not by evidence of particular wrongful acts, except that it may be shown by the examination of the witness, or the record of the judgment, that he had been convicted of a felony unless he has previously received a full and unconditional pardon, based upon a certificate of rehabilitation." The rule declared by this section is a sound one, but it is not absolute. In sex cases of various sorts, exceptions to its application have been recognized. As early as 1856 the California Supreme Court referred with approval to the language first used by Lord Hale many years before to the effect that no charge is more easily made and more difficult to disprove than a sex charge, particularly if made by a young child. The court said that "In such cases the accused is almost defenceless." People v. Benson, 6 Cal. 221, 223.

[3] Of course, it has been the rule in this state for many years that it is reversible error to fail to instruct that because such charges are easy to make and hard to disprove the testimony of the prosecutrix must be carefully scrutinized. People v. Putnam, 20 Cal.2d 885, 129 P.2d 367; People v. Garrett, 27 Cal.App.2d 249, 81 P.2d 241. In fact, even qualifying the normal instruction by stating that, nevertheless if the jury believes that the defendant is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt a guilty verdict should be returned, is reversible error. People v. Lyons, 47 Cal.2d 311, 303 P.2d 329.

[4] Several times the California courts have insisted that the defense be allowed the widest latitude in the cross-examination of the prosecutrix in such cases. People v. Baldwin, 117 Cal. 244, 49 P. 186; People v. Goldberg, 110 Cal.App.2d 17, 242 P.2d 116; People v. Vaughan, 131 Cal.App. 265, 21 P.2d 438.

These cases are cited not because they are direct authority on the issue here presented but because they indicate that the California courts have not been blind to the possibility that a prosecutrix may be untruthful in such cases, and that a defendant is practically powerless to defend against such a charge. Dean Wigmore felt so strongly about the problem that he recommended that the rule be, by statute if necessary, that the complaining witness, in all such cases, should be subjected to a psychiatric examination. III Wigmore on Evidence, § 924a, p. 459.[1]

[5, 6] The rule contained in section 2051 is a sound one, and exists in most jurisdictions. It is that, while a witness may be impeached "by evidence that his general reputation for truth, honesty, or integrity is bad," evidence of specific acts of bad character, except as to conviction of a felony, is generally not admissible. But where the issue goes beyond general reputation and involves the truthfulness of the basic fact in issue, evidence of particular wrongful acts may be admissible. Thus, evidence of specific acts of prior unchastity of a complaining witness in statutory rape or 288 cases is not admissible, because consent is not involved. People v. Harlan, 133 Cal. 16, 65 P. 9; People v. Benc, 130 Cal. 159, 62 P. 404; People v. Johnson, 106 Cal. 289, 39 P. 622; People v. Bell, 96 Cal.App. 503, 274 P. 393; People v. Williams, 52 Cal.App. 609, 199 P. 56. But if consent is the issue, as it is in a forcible rape charge, evidence of prior particular acts of unchastity is admissible on the issue of consent. People v. Murphy, 53 Cal.App. 474, 200 P. 484; People v. Kruvosky, 53 Cal.App. 744, 200 P. 831; People v. Walker, 150 Cal.App.2d 594, 310 P.2d 110; People v. Battilana, 52 Cal.App.2d 685, 126 P.2d 923.

1. One state, at least, has held that it was error not to submit the prosecutrix to a psychological examination to test her truthfulness. The state is Indiana. Burton v. State, 111 N.E.2d 892. This case was later overruled in Wedmore v. State, Ind., 143 N.E.2d 649; see also People v. Stice, 161 Cal.App.2d 610, 327 P.2d 201, where the defendant's motion in a 288 case to have the prosecutrix subjected to a psychiatric examination was denied and the appellate court held the "matter was one within the discretion of the trial judge." 161 Cal.App. 2d at page 613, 327 P.2d at page 203.

On the specific question of whether specific acts of making false sex charges is or is not admissible, Dean Wigmore (III Evidence, § 963, p. 519) indicates that there is a conflict of authority.[2] There is substantial authority that such evidence is admissible not simply to impeach the prosecutrix, but as independent evidence that the charged crime was not in fact committed. People v. Evans, 1888, 72 Mich. 367, 40 N.W. 473, appears to be the leading case. In that case the defendant was charged with the rape of his 14-year old daughter. Counsel asked the prosecuting witness (40 N.W. at page 477): "Rose, haven't you made other charges of this same nature against other men that were perfectly innocent?" An objection was interposed, to which the trial court ruled: "You may ask the question, but you will have to accept her statement," whereupon the witness answered in the negative. Later another witness was asked (40 N.W. at page 478): "Did you ever have any conversation with Rose about a charge she made at one time against George Evans having made a similar assault upon her?" Answer: "Yes, sir; she said ———" An objection was sustained and the trial court did not allow the question or answer. An offer of proof was made by defendant's counsel that the prosecuting witness had made similar accusations against a number of men, family members and others. The Michigan Supreme Court reversed, stating (40 N.W. at page 478): "If she was accustomed, and had on numerous occasions, as claimed by counsel for * * * [defendant], made statements charging, not only her brothers, but numerous other men of that community, with other similar offenses, and then admitted the falsity of such charges, it would have a tendency to show a morbid condition of mind or body, and go a long way in explaining this charge, which, under the circumstances, and the surroundings shown to exist, seems almost unaccountable."

The Evans case was re-affirmed in People v. Wilson, 170 Mich. 669, 137 N.W. 92, 41 L.R.A.,N.S., 216. There at the trial the question was posed to the prosecutrix (137 N.W. at page 92): "haven't you made the same complaint against a number of other men?" An objection was sustained on the grounds that a witness may not be impeached by showing her unchastity. In reversing, the court said (137 N.W. at page 93): "Counsel for the people cite cases to the effect that other specific acts of unchastity cannot be shown in such a case; also, that the girl's general reputation for unchastity is not involved in a case where the girl is under the age of legal consent. We agree * * * but * * * do not understand by the line of evidence offered that any attack was being made upon the chastity of this girl. As cross-examination, as laying the foundation for collateral impeachment, and as an offer of independent evidence relating to similar charges and their denials, we are constrained to hold that the court erred in excluding the offered testimony." See also State v. Poston, 199 Iowa 1073, 203 N.W. 257; Dawes v. State, 34 Okl. 225, 246 P. 482. There are contrary cases. See Peters v. State, 103 Ark. 119, 146 S.W. 491, and cases cited in III Wigmore on Evidence, § 963, note 2, p. 520.

[7] The specific problem does not seem to have been fully discussed by the California cases, but there are analogous situations where evidence of specific wrongful acts has been held admissible. Thus, in a forcible rape case, it has been held that the question asked of the prosecutrix if she had not conspired "to put up jobs" on defendant in the past should have been allowed as laying the foundation for independent evidence that she had. People v. Lambert, 120 Cal. 170, 52 P. 307. In People v. Gardner, 98 Cal. 127, 32 P. 880, a statutory rape case, it was held that testimony of a third party witness to the effect that in the past the prosecutrix was "putting up jobs" on defendant to extort money from him would have been admissible to show interest or prejudice had a proper foundation for the question been laid. In People v. Adams, 92 Cal.App. 6, 267 P. 906, a forcible rape case, it was held that it was proper for the defendant to show that a conspiracy existed between the prosecutrix and others to extort money from the defendant. It is also settled that an attitude of animosity toward the defendant by the prosecutrix may be shown. People v. Reyes, 194 Cal. 650, 229 P. 947, a 288 case; see also People v. McAfee, 82 Cal. App. 389, 255 P. 839, an incest case; People v. Williams, 52 Cal.App. 609, 199 P. 56, a statutory rape case. It has also been held that the fact the prosecuting witness has been coached is relevant on the basic issue of the truth of the charge. People v. Watrous, 7 Cal.App.2d 7, 45 P.2d 380—a 288 case involving a four-year old girl; People v. Wilder, 151 Cal.App.2d 698, 312 P.2d 425. In these various situations the state of mind of the prosecutrix may be shown by specific acts.

2. He indicates that such testimony is offered not as to general reputation but to indicate the state of mind of the prosecutrix which "partakes of the nature of corruption and of bias."

There are two California cases that mention the problem here involved. In People v. Russell, 80 Cal.App. 243, at page 246, 251 P. 699, at page 700, a 288 prosecution, it is stated: "While the prosecutrix was being cross-examined she was asked if she had not made similar charges against other men and that she had been found guilty of immoral behavior. It is settled law that such evidence was not admissible as going to the credibility of the witness." There is no further analysis of the problem. The only authority cited for the quoted rule is People v. Murphy, 53 Cal.App. 474, 200 P. 484. That case simply held that the general moral delinquency of the complaining witness cannot be admitted to impeach her testimony. Thus, the authority cited does not support the rule that prior false accusations by the prosecutrix of the same type may not be inquired into in a 288 case.

A somewhat similar statement to the one above quoted appears also in People v. Stice, 161 Cal.App.2d 610, 327 P.2d 201, 202, in which the appellate court justifies the exclusion of such testimony on the ground that a "witness for the People may not be impeached on cross-examination by questions as to specific acts of unchastity." Obviously, the fact that prior unchaste acts may not be used to impeach is not relevant to the question of whether or not prior false accusations of the same type may be admissible.

[8] The attorney general concedes that evidence of prior false accusations in such a case might have probative value, and is relevant on the issue involved, but quite properly points out that probative value and relevancy do not necessarily determine admissibility. We agree. The attorney general then argues that the only purpose of such evidence is to impeach the prosecutrix on her general reputation and that section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure precludes impeachment by proof of specific untruthful acts.

[9] This is not a complete answer to the problem. As already pointed out, the California courts have been quite liberal in admitting evidence that may be impeaching, but does more than merely generally impeach. Thus, where the state of mind of the prosecutrix is relevant, showings of possible motives for the charge, instances of extortion by the prosecutrix against the defendant, animosity of the prosecutrix, and the possibility that the witness has been coached, all have been held admissible. None of these is of as great probative value or relevancy as evidence of prior false accusations of the same charge involved in the main case. Such evidence is not offered for the purpose of impeaching or discrediting the general character or reputation of the witness, but is offered to disprove the very charge before the court. It is relevant as to the state of mind of the prosecutrix. Because of its high degree of relevancy and its high probative value, such evidence should be admitted. From the very character of the offense involved the jury has very little to go on in such cases. They have usually nothing more than the testimony of a young child and the denials of the defendant. This fact, which, as already pointed out, has frequently been recognized by the courts and text writers, indicates that a liberal rule should be adopted so that the jury have before it as much relevant information as is legally permissible so that it can reach a just verdict. The point does not have to be labored that the chances of the verdict of the jury being correct will definitely be enhanced if the jury has before it the fact that the prosecutrix had, on occasions in the past, made similar charges against the defendant or others which were subsequently denied or proved false. The courts have been quite liberal, and properly so, in allowing the admission of evidence of the prior acts of the defendant toward the prosecutrix. People v. Anthony, 185 Cal. 152, 196 P. 47. Equally relevant, and for the same reasons, is evidence that the prosecutrix has in the past lied about the type of acts charged to defendant.

In stating that the courts should be liberal in this field in order that the ends of justice best be served, a word of warning is called for. Because of the fear that a grave injustice to the defendant may occur, the courts should not forget the rights of the People. There are men who do commit the sort of acts here involved. Such men are a danger to society, and should be kept out of circulation. The State has a duty and a real interest in protecting its young people from such detestable and criminal behavior. The courts should protect this interest. While it frequently has been recognized that charges of this type are easy to make and hard to disprove, it should also be noted that charges that the child prosecutrix has lied about such matters in the past can also be easily made. The courts should be vigilant in seeing to it that the privilege of cross-examination here approved should not be abused. But, weighing all of these possibilities, it is our opinion that the ends of justice will best be served if the jury is permitted to know that in the past this seemingly young and innocent child has made false charges about such matters. Such rule, in our opinion, does not violate the sound provisions of section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

John Elton BULLOCK, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6201.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 23, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of forging a fictitious name. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Maurice C. Sparling, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where it was stipulated that witness by reason of his education, study and experience qualified as expert in art of handwriting, his testimony respecting handwriting on check which defendant had deposited in bank and handwriting of defendant on sheriff's department form was admissible although it was based solely on visual examination.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇨491(1)

In prosecution for forging a fictitious name, wherein it was stipulated that witness by reason of his education, study and experience was qualified as an expert in art of handwriting, his testimony respecting handwriting of defendant based on comparison of signature on check deposited by defendant and handwriting of defendant on sheriff's department form was admissible although witness based his opinions solely on visual examination and it was not necessary for witness to have seen defendant write or have seen writing purporting to be his, upon which he had acted or had been charged. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 470; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1870, subd. 9, 1943, 1944.

John Elton Bullock, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County containing five counts, defendant was accused in Count I of the crime of forging a fictitious name (Penal Code, Section 470). The remaining four counts charged separate offenses of issuing a check without sufficient funds (Penal Code, Section 476a).

In Count I, it was charged that defendant wilfully and with intent to defraud John Shrayer and Bank of America, South Whittier Branch, made, passed, uttered and published a fictitious check in the sum of $2,172 on or about April 26, 1957, knowing the check to be fictitious.

In Count II, it was alleged that defendant wilfully and with intent to defraud Esther Jessup, Thriftimart, and Bank of America, South Whittier Branch, made, drew, uttered and delivered a check in the sum of $50 on or about April 28, 1957, knowing that he had neither funds in nor sufficient credit with the drawee bank to meet the check.

In Count III, it was charged that defendant had committed the same offense on or about May 2, 1957, by making, drawing, uttering and delivering a check in the sum of $50 with intent to defraud Frieda Edgerton, Thriftimart and Bank of America, South Whittier Branch.

In Count IV, it was alleged that defendant had committed the same offense on or about May 6, 1957, by making, drawing, uttering, and delivering a check in the sum of $75 with intent to defraud Joe Brown, Market Basket and Bank of America, South Whittier Branch.

In Count V, it was charged that defendant had committed the same offense on or about May 26, 1957, by making, drawing, uttering, and delivering a check in the sum of $50 with intent to defraud Lois Dafoe, Nixon's Market and Bank of America, South Whittier Branch.

The information also charged three prior felony convictions, two for forgery and one for issuing checks without sufficient funds.

Defendant entered pleas of not guilty as to each count of the information and denied the alleged prior convictions. Trial by jury was duly waived and by stipulation the cause was submitted to the court on the testimony adduced at the preliminary examination, each side reserving the right to offer additional evidence. Defendant did not testify or offer any evidence in his behalf.

Defendant was found guilty on all counts of the information, no finding was made as to the alleged prior convictions, his motion for a new trial was denied, and he was sentenced to state prison. From the judgment of conviction, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

As to the factual background of this prosecution, the record reveals that defendant maintained an account in Bank of America, South Whittier Branch, under the name of Jay Reed Enterprises. On April 26, 1957, he presented a check in the sum of $2,172 for deposit to his account to John Shrayer, an employee of the Bank of America, South Whittier Branch. The check was drawn on the Bank of America, Fresno Main Office, and was dated April 24, 1957. The payee was Jay Reed Enterprises and the signature of the drawer was "E. G. Griffiths". The check was credited to defendant's account and he subsequently drew four checks against the account: a check for $50 on April 28; a check for $50 on May 2; a check for $75 on May 5; and a check for $50 on May 26. These checks were honored on the dates they bore and were received by the persons named in the information, each of whom gave to defendant the money received for said checks. If the aforesaid check for $2,172, signed "E. G. Griffiths", had been dishonored on the date it was presented, there would not have been funds in defendant's account to meet the subsequent checks.

The check signed "E. G. Griffiths" was dishonored by the Bank of America, Fresno Main Office. There was no account in the name of "E. G. Griffiths" in that bank, nor was there any record concerning such a person. The Fresno bank Main Office had no arrangements for credit with any "E. G. Griffiths" or with the defendant, and the South Whittier Branch had no arrangements for credit to defendant or to Jay Reed Enterprises.

It was stipulated that John Harris, an examiner of questioned documents, "is an expert in the comparison and identification of handwriting". He testified that in his opinion the signature "E. G. Griffiths" appearing on the face of the check for $2,172 (People's Exhibit 1) and the handwriting specimens supplied by defendant were written by the same hand.

Appellant's sole contention on this appeal is that although the witness Harris was called as an expert on handwriting and his qualifications as an expert in the field of comparison and identification of handwriting were stipulated nevertheless, the witness "presented his evidence strictly as a layman" because, says appellant, "There is no evidence of an expert's method of comparison or identification of People's Exhibit 1, the signature 'E. G. Griffiths' on the $2172.00 check and People's Exhibit 6, Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department form, the handwriting 'John Elton Bullock'" (defendant). As to the method utilized by Mr. Harris in arriving at his opinion the record reflects the following:

"Q. (By Mr. Umann, counsel for appellant): What type of examination did you make, a visual? A. Well, just normal visual examination.

"Q. Anything more than that? A. No, I made no photographs of it or didn't examine it under a microscope.

"Q. Are there any other types of tests that you could have made? A. Not that would be necessary in this case.

"Q. Now, the visual tests were made without the aid of any magnifying glass or microscope; is that correct? A. That's right.

* * * * * *

"Q. You did base your opinion on certain factors that you observed; is that right? A. Well, yes, the characteristics of the handwriting.

"Q. Now, did you find any similarities upon which to base this opinion? A. Well, I certainly did or I wouldn't have reached a conclusion that they were both the same handwriting."

[1, 2] It is appellant's contention in effect that a handwriting expert who bases his opinion solely on a visual examination testifies as a layman and the admissibility of his testimony is governed by the provisions of Section 1943 of the Code of Civil Procedure—that is, he must have seen the subject write or have seen writing purporting to be his, upon which he has acted or been charged, and has thereby acquired a knowledge of the subject's writing. Appellant cites no authority for this proposition and we are satisfied it is without merit. When, as in the instant case, it was stipulated that the witness Harris, by reason of his education, study and experience was qualified as an expert in the art of handwriting, his testimony respecting the handwriting of appellant was admissible (People v. De Mordaigle, 138 Cal. App.2d 435, 440, 292 P.2d 3; Code Civ. Proc. § 1944; Code Civ.Proc. Sec. 1870, subd. 9; 19 Cal.Jur.2d, Evidence, Sects. 352, 354). We are satisfied the testimony of Mr. Harris, based as it was on his experience, knowledge and skill in a field in which his competency was stipulated, was clearly admissible. While the particular method adopted by him might go to the weight of his testimony, it clearly does not warrant its rejection. The weight and effect of the opinion of the expert witness, or the results of comparisons of the handwritings, was a matter for the duly constituted arbiter of the facts.

[3] Furthermore, since no timely objection to the introduction of this evidence was made in trial court, the objection thereto, on this appeal, comes too late (People v. Millum, 42 Cal.2d 524, 528, 267 P.2d 1039).

Appellant relies upon the cases of People v. Simon, 107 Cal.App.2d 105, 120, 121, 236 P.2d 855 and People v. Zoffel, 35 Cal. App.2d 215, 221, 95 P.2d 160, 163, but in these cases, the court was not concerned with testimony given by an expert witness. People v. Simon, supra, simply holds that under Section 1943 of the Code of Civil Procedure a non-expert or lay witness may testify as to the identity of handwriting of the purported writer where a proper foundation has been laid showing the knowledge required by the aforesaid section of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the Zoffel case, supra, it is held that certain cards bearing the name of the accused were inadmissible because the defendant "* * * was not present when the cards were found, was not proved to have ever been in the apartment, and no evidence was offered that they were in her handwriting." (Emphasis added.) Both cases involve questions and issues not present in the case at bar.

The judgment is affirmed.

LILLIE, J., concurs.

FOURT, Justice.

I concur in the judgment, however, I would direct that the defendant be returned to the superior court, and that the trial court be directed to make the finding required by law as to the prior convictions.

The reporter's transcript discloses the following:

"The Court: People vs. John Elton Bullock. You are John Elton Bullock?

"The Defendant: Yes.

"The Court: The Court has read and considered the reporter's transcript of the preliminary examination in this proceeding and has considered People's Exhibit 7 having to do with the alleged priors against the defendant.

"Mr. Klein: People rest, your Honor.

"Mr. Umann: And the defendant rests, your Honor. The matter is all contained within the transcript. As to the priors, however, I discussed that with the District Attorney. He has no objection in the event the Court is so disposed to permit them to go over depending upon the decision of the Court.

"The Court: Is the matter submitted without argument?

"Mr. Klein: Yes, your Honor.

"The Court: The Court finds the defendant guilty on each of the five counts of the Information, guilty as charged.

"Mr. Umann: At this time we request the matter of the priors go over and waive time for sentence, and ask for permission to file a written application for probation.

"The Court: Permission will be granted."

(It was stipulated that the person named in the certified copies of the prison records was the defendant in this case.)

On January 6, 1958, the time set for the hearing of a motion for a new trial, and the time set for considering the probation officer's report, and for judgment and sentence, the following occurred:

"The Court: Well, with his past record, which, as you say, is going back to 1916, but there is forgery, forgery, escape, checks, swindling, checks, wanted checks, forgery, fugitive, wanted checks. And I would judge at least thirty aliases and names which he has gone under, starting out again under his same old procedure. He doesn't seem to have learned anything, this being a $2,172.00 check. The probation officer says the defendant was extremely evasive, fretful, frequently changed his replies.

"The Sheriff states that he had checks all over, based on the same fictitious name check; between the time he was let out on bail another check, seven thirty, dated August 17, 1957.

"When I saw that, I was just disgusted. The Court just doesn't believe that the defendant is in a position to be helped by any leniency.

"No legal cause appearing why judgment should not now be pronounced, it is the judgment and sentence of this Court that the defendant be sentenced to State's Prison for the term prescribed by law. The defendant is remanded to the custody of the Sheriff, to be by him delivered to the Director of Corrections, Chino Institution for Men, Chino, California. Probation is denied.

* * * * * *

"The Clerk: No finding as to the priors, Judge?

"Mr. Umann: In view of the time of the priors, we ask that they be stricken in the interests of justice, your Honor.

"The Court: The Court is deliberately making no finding as to the priors in order to give the Adult Authority greater latitude in the handling of the defendant. (Emphasis added.)

"Mr. Umann: Thank you very much."

Pending the appeal, bail was then reduced from the sum of $3,000 as set and furnished in the first instance, to $2,000.

The certified copies of the former prison records, which were before the judge, were not questioned. They show on their face that the defendant was convicted of forgery of uttering a forged check in Ohio, and that he was sentenced to the state penitentiary and admitted therein on November 25, 1916, and conditionally released March, 1920, and released on parole July 15, 1926, and granted final release from parole in July, 1936.

In Michigan, on November 10, 1920, he was sentenced to the state prison on being convicted of "forgery and uttering" and served a term in that prison therefor. He then apparently escaped from the Michigan state prison, but was sometime later caught and returned.

In Los Angeles county, in 1932, he was convicted of several counts of forgery and issuing checks without sufficient funds, and was sentenced therefor to the state prison and served a term in Folsom prison. It is interesting to note that in that series of cases the defendant admitted at least one of the then prior convictions. He was released and discharged from parole in 1938.

It is clear that when the legislature provided for added penalties in cases where the defendant had suffered one or more prior felony convictions, it had in mind, or believed that if a defendant had not benefited by his prior experience and continually displayed a tendency to commit substantially the same offenses over and over again, he should by his subsequent crime or crimes receive a greater punishment or a longer period of incarceration than would be the case of a first offender. This case is such an instance. The judge, first of all, failed to make the finding required by section 1158 of the Penal Code, which reads in part as follows:

"Whenever the fact of a previous conviction of another offense is charged in an accusatory pleading, and the defendant is found guilty of the offense with which he is charged, the jury, or the judge if a jury trial is waived, must unless the answer of the defendant admits such previous conviction, find whether or not he has suffered such previous conviction. * * *" (Emphasis added.)

It is apparent that no finding was made in this particular instance because to do so would have required a finding that the prior convictions were true. Had they been true, and it is obvious that they are, then the defendant would not have been eligible even to apply for probation, let alone have it granted.

As the matter now stands, the defendant is eligible to be treated as a first offender, and as though he had never before committed a public offense, whereas, if the truth had been found, he would be placed in the category where certain minimums must be complied with. Penal Code, § 3024(c).[1]

I am convinced that the rise in the crime rate in this state will never be curbed, or even held at its present level, by following the procedures used and adopted in this case. Furthermore, I can see no reason whatsoever for judges failing to do that which the statutes obviously require—namely, as in this case, finding whether the prior convictions were true or untrue. To do otherwise is to fail to dispose of a substantial element in the case.

1. "The following shall be the minimum term of sentence and imprisonment in certain cases, notwithstanding any other provisions of this code, or any provision of law specifying a lesser sentence: * * *

"(c) For the person previously convicted of a felony either in this State or elsewhere, but not armed with a deadly weapon at the time of his commission of the offense, or a concealed deadly weapon at the time of his arrest, two years; * * *."

Joseph KEJR, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

NATURAL RESOURCES, INC., a California corporation, P. E. Whitten and Mendocino Logging Company, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 9366.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 24, 1958.

Action was brought to quiet title to timber land against defendants, who claimed under grantee of ambiguous quitclaim deed and holding agreement. The Superior Court, Mendocino County, Lilburn Gibson, J., entered judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that evidence sustained finding that it was the intent of the grantors and grantee, who was a real estate broker, that grantee had no power to bind grantors by any contract he might make concerning timber land or timber except with consent of grantors, and that therefore grantee's attempt to contract away right to timber without consent of grantors was nugatory.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Logs and Logging ⇨2

Where quitclaim deed of timberland and holding agreement were executed simultaneously, and deed contained statement that interest conveyed was subject to holding agreement, deed and holding agreement were required to be construed together as though they were one document.

2. Logs and Logging ⇨2

Where quitclaim deed of timberland and holding agreement, which were required to be construed together, were ambiguous and uncertain as to just what title and powers grantee had, trial court, in action to quiet title, as aid in discovering intent of parties, could look to circumstances surrounding the making of the deed and holding agreement, including the object, nature, and subject matter thereof, and preliminary negotiations between the parties, and thus place itself in same situation in which parties found themselves at time of execution of deed and holding agreement.

3. Brokers ⇐106

4. Principal and Agent ⇐170(3)

Rule that where rights of third persons depend on election of principal, principal must disaffirm unauthorized act of agent within reasonable time after acquiring knowledge thereof, or principal's silence may be deemed ratification or acquiescence, in order to protect unsuspecting third party, was not applicable, where there were no unsuspecting third parties involved.

Darling, Shattuck & Edmonds, Donald K. Hall, Los Angeles, for appellants.

David B. Fyfe, San Rafael, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff-respondent brought this action against defendant-appellant Mendocino Logging Company and defendant-appellant Construction Engineers, Incorporated, to quiet title to forty acres of timber land in Mendocino County. The appeal is from a judgment decreeing that plaintiff is the owner of the property and quieting his title thereto. The complaint is in the usual brief form of an action to quiet title. Appellants' answers denied the allegations of plaintiff's ownership and affirmatively pleaded that they owned the timber on the land.

On September 27, 1948, six people, four of whom bore the name "Hopkins" and two of whom bore the name "Raderchak", and all of whom were related, were the owners of the subject property. We shall refer to this group as "Hopkins". On that day, and simultaneously, they executed two documents with O. O. Barker. One was a quitclaim deed and the other was a document called a holding agreement. The deed contained a statement that the interest thereby conveyed was subject to the holding agreement. The deed was recorded. The holding agreement was not. The trial court found on sufficient evidence that appellant Construction Engineers, Inc., had both actual and constructive notice of the existence and contents of the holding agreement at the time it now claims to have acquired title to the timber on the property by a contract of sale from Barker. Construction Engineers, Inc. later assigned its interest in the timber to appellant Mendocino Logging Company which, as the court found, also took with notice of the holding agreement.

The holding agreement begins by reciting that the parties have a mutual interest in the forty acres described therein, and then continues to state the following: That it is desirable "that no transfer of any interest which each of us may hold in the property be transferred or assigned without the mutual consent of all", including Barker; that Barker is to act as the representative of Hopkins in the performance of certain things which by the agreement he agrees to perform; that Barker is to accept a transfer of the property to him by deed and is to hold the transfer and deed for the following uses and purposes: (a) In his discretion to bring a suit to quiet title if needed, (b) If necessary, to engage the services of a surveyor to survey and cruise the land in order that he may be "in a position to effectively negotiate either resale of the premises, or if he deems it more desirable, agreements for sale of timber only without conveying the lands", (c) To advance necessary expenses for surveys, quiet title actions or in any other manner other than by action, and to prorate to each of the owners the expenses thereof, (d) As remuneration, Barker was to receive 10 per cent of the revenue resulting either from a sale or from income derived from any contract for the sale of the timber which he might make. It is stated that Barker, by written acceptance of the agreement became obligated "to carry forth the purposes of this holding agreement for the joint and mutual interests of all of the parties." For the holding agreement the parties used a printed form on which the property description was filled in. It was in evidence that the form was commonly used by Barker along with quitclaim deeds in aggregating small timber holdings for the purpose of being able to offer large tracts of timber for sale. Barker purported to sell the timber on some 7,000 acres of land of which the forty acres, the subject of this action, was a part. The consent of Hopkins to the contract of sale was not obtained.

It is appellants' primary contention that Barker had power not only to negotiate for a sale of the timber, but to sell and transfer the same and bind Hopkins by his acts.

After a time, five of the Hopkins group conveyed their interests in the forty acres to plaintiff. During the trial Barker quitclaimed such interest in the land and timber as he might have to plaintiff. The decree quieted plaintiff's title to an undivided five-sixths interest in the land and timber thereon.

It appears that Barker was a licensed real estate broker whose principal business was negotiating sales of timber lands to logging companies. His method of operation was to have owners quitclaim their property to him subject to holding agreements similar to the holding agreement executed between himself and Hopkins. He would then endeavor to sell the timber or the land in large blocks rather than in the smaller units covered by the individual transactions between himself and small owners. When representatives of Construction Engineers, Inc., were negotiating with Barker for the purchase of the timber on the 7,000 acres covered by the contract later executed by Barker, they had before them many of these holding agreements and in many instances used them for the purpose of describing parcels of the lands included in the contract with Barker. It appears also that Barker told them of the existence of the holding agreements and some reference was made in the contract between Construction Engineers, Inc., and Barker to the effect that some of the lands were under holding agreements.

[1, 2] When the quitclaim deed and the holding agreement are construed together, as they must be, as though they were one document, it becomes apparent at once that the holding agreement placed limitations upon the title purportedly conveyed by the deed to Barker and upon his power to deal with the land and timber. It is equally apparent that the two documents are ambiguous and uncertain as to just what title and powers Barker had. Considerable evidence concerning the negotiations between the parties was introduced. As said in Universal Sales Corporation Ltd. v. California Press Mfg. Co., 20 Cal.2d 751, 761, 128 P.2d 665, 671:

> "As an aid in discovering the all-important element of intent of the parties to the contract, the trial court may look to the circumstances surrounding the making of the agreement * * *, including the object, nature and subject matter of the writing * * *, and the preliminary negotiations between the parties * * *, and thus place itself in the same situation in which the parties found themselves at the time of contracting."

[3] With the instruments and the evidence before it, the trial court determined that Barker was given no power to bind Hopkins by any contract he might make concerning the property or the timber, except as they, in some effective way, consented thereto. The record amply supports this determination of the trial court. Although as a part of the transaction between them the Hopkins group gave to Barker a quitclaim deed, they tied that deed to the holding agreement by apt reference. It is expressly stated therein that no transfer of any interest which the parties hold in the property can be transferred or assigned without the mutual consent of all. If there be any ambiguity in this provision as one limiting the title and the power of Barker, the trial court was fully authorized in interpreting the contract as denying to him any power to transfer or assign any interest in the property without Hopkins' consent. We think it unnecessary to labor the point and we uphold the conclusion of the trial court that, to the actual as well as to the constructive knowledge of appellants, Barker's attempt, if it was in fact that, to contract away the right to the timber without the consent of Hopkins was nugatory and that by the execution of that agreement by Barker, without such consent no interest in the property passed.

Appellants also contend that Hopkins consented to the sale of the timber. They argue as follows: Barker first sold the property to Hopkins in 1947. In 1948 he received the quitclaim deed and the holding agreement. Much correspondence was exchanged between him and Hopkins concerning disposition of the property. On December 27, 1949, one of the Hopkins group wrote to Barker complaining that Barker was slow in putting the property on the market and was quoting an inadequate price. The writer said: "That you are fully within the rights granted you is a fact of which we are well aware. However, we are hard put to reconcile some of your past statements with the price you have put upon our land. Upon two separate occasions you assured us that the timber would be on its way to market * * * The power of sale that you have gives you leave to exercise your judgment regarding the best deal for us. We do not dispute your judgment, we merely would like to know the basis for it." The letter, say appellants, was a recognition of Barker's authority to sell or at least evidences a consent. Only one person was writing and it was not shown he had authority to speak for all; and what was said was in conflict with the language of the holding agreement and the oral testimony. It was for the trial court to draw or not to draw the inferences argued for by appellants.

[4] Appellants claim ratification of the contract of sale. They argue that on December 27, 1949, Barker advised Hopkins that he was negotiating a deal with Construction Engineers, Inc.; that eight days later the contract was signed; that in January following Barker published, in a periodical he disseminated and to which Hopkins subscribed, a statement that he had sold the 7,000 acres of timber under a contract which included the Hopkins' timber; that like publications were made later; that not until 1955 did they deed their land to respondent; that in the interim they made no objection to the contract of sale. Appellants say that by their conduct they acquiesced in Barker's acts and could no longer deny his authority. They invoke the rule stated in Gates v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 120 Cal.App.2d 571, 576–577, 261 P.2d 545, that where the rights of third persons depend on his election a principal must disaffirm an unauthorized act of his agent within a reasonable time after acquiring knowledge thereof, else his silence may be deemed ratification or acquiescence in order to protect an unsuspecting third party. The statement of the rule demonstrates its inapplicability to this case. Among other things, there were no unsuspecting third parties. Appellants knew Barker was unauthorized. At most, the plea of ratification or acquiescence and the supporting evidence posed an issue of fact for the trial court which that court resolved against appellants.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Civ. 23134, 23335.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 17, 1958.

Hearing Granted Feb. 11, 1959.

Suit seeking a determination of the proper method of evaluating for taxation, the lessee's interest under a tideland lease through application of valuation method known as "capitalization of income." From judgments of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, H. Eugene Breitenbach and John F. Aiso, JJ., the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that where assessor in valuing lessee's interest under a tideland use undertook to capitalize the gross income to be derived by a purchaser of the leasehold from use of the premises without reference to rents he would have to pay to the lessor and leasehold was valued as if it bestowed a rent-free occupancy on the tenant, valuation of lessee's interest was erroneous.

Judgment reversed with instructions.

1. Taxation ⇐348

"Capitalization of income", as a method of valuation of leasehold interest, is employed as a means of approximating the market value of such interests, meaning the price which would be paid by a willing buyer to a willing seller, both parties being fully advised of all pertinent facts and neither acting under compulsion and a reasonable time being allowed for the production of a purchaser and is the price which such buyer would pay for an assignment of the leasehold interest.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Capitalization of Income".

2. Taxation ⇐348

Lessees' interest in a lease of an improved land has market value for taxation purposes, only if the fair rental value exceeds the rent value payable under the terms of the lease, thus giving it a "bonus" value.

3. Taxation ⇐348

"Income capitalization" as a basis of valuing leasehold interest for taxation, starts from net income and consists of projecting that income into the future over a given period, having due regard to the risk of nonreceipt and interest upon the use of invested capital and then discounting same at a given rate.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Income Capitalization".

The Problem

The problem common to these cases (heard together in this court) is a determination of the proper method of evaluating for taxation the lessee's interest under a tideland lease through application of the valuation method known as capitalization of income.

Summary of Conclusions

[1-3] The fee being exempt from taxation, the only assessable interest in the land is the possessory right conferred by a leasehold (or occupancy permit) upon a private person or entity. As valuation through comparison with other sales is a practical impossibility, all parties agree that the capitalization of income is an acceptable method of valuation of such leaseholds. It is employed as a means of approximating the market value of such possessory interests, meaning the price which would be paid by a willing buyer to a willing seller, both parties being fully advised of all pertinent facts, neither of them acting under compulsion of any kind and a reasonable time being allowed for the production of a purchaser. It is the price which such a buyer would pay for an assignment of the leasehold interest. The authorities agree that the lessee's interest in a lease of unimproved land has market value only if the fair rental value exceeds the rent payable under the terms of the lease, thus giving it a "bonus" value. No informed and sane purchaser will buy any leasehold of unimproved property where stipulated rents exceed the present rental value (the economic value) of the property. It is excess of rental value over agreed rent which alone gives value to the leasehold. The authorities also agree that income capitalization starts with net income and consists of projecting that income into the future over a given period, having due regard to risk of non-receipt and interest upon the use of invested capital, then discounting same at a given rate, with the result representing the present worth of the future net income plus interest for the use of the invested capital. This can succeed (under existing formulae such as Hoskold's or Inwood's tables) only if net income (e. g., the bonus value of a leasehold) is used as the basis of the computation. In the instant cases the county assessor undertook to capitalize the gross income to be derived by a purchaser of the leasehold from the use of the premises, without reference to the rents he will have to pay to the lessor; thereby having reached a satisfactory result, the assessor undertook to call it the fair market value of the lessee's possessory interest. The leasehold was valued as if it bestowed a rent-free occupancy on the tenant. This finds no support in any recognized authority cited or known to us. It seems to be derived from a manual for "Appraisal of Possessory Interests and Equities Therein," prepared by Mr. Oscar C. Brothers (formerly of the Los Angeles County Assessor's office) and issued by the State Board of Equalization. The county assessor, apparently adopting the ideas of Mr. Brothers, conceived the theory that the De Luz line of cases authorizes the severance of a leasehold into two parts, (1) a property interest, and (2) contractual obligations,—with the tax assessment limited to the property interest without regard to the condition attached to its very existence, i. e., payment of accruing rents. This is an unrealistic approach, is not consonant with precedents, is not sanctioned by the De Luz and companion cases, supra, and results in an unlawful assessment and tax.

The Facts

The Texas Company, plaintiff and appellant in No. 23134, held on the first Monday of March, 1956, three tideland leases or permits from the Board of Harbor Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles, covering certain tidelands and carrying fixed rental charges. The agreed rents then in effect were: For Lease No. 1: $7,681.83 per quarter plus $3,990.68 per annum for a pipe-line easement included in the leased property, plus wharfage charges. For Lease No. 2: $5,585.73 per quarter plus wharfage charges. For Lease No. 3: $2,331 per quarter. Each lease expires on July 23, 1967, and requires readjustment of the rent as of February 11, 1963. Each provides for termination upon default in payment of rent. The total annual rents (exclusive of wharfage) amount to $66,384.92; the accruals between the assessment date and the rental readjustment date of February 11, 1963, would aggregate about a half million dollars. Lease No. 1 was assessed at $93,730 upon which a tax of $6,703.85 was levied and collected; No. 2 was assessed at $84,300 and a tax of $6,038.57 paid; No. 3 was assessed at $21,890, a tax of $1,568.02 being paid thereon. All these payments were made under protest. The improvements were separately assessed and are not involved in this action. Appropriate proceedings before the County Board of Equalization having been unsuccessfully pursued, this action was brought for recovery of said taxes and was seasonably filed. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained with leave to amend but plaintiff elected to stand upon the original complaint and has appealed from the judgment entered in favor of defendants. That complaint alleges, and the demurrer necessarily admits, that "for and during each quarterly period between the assessment date and July 23, 1967, the amount of the rentals payable therein is and will be in excess of the cash value of the use and occupation of said land during such quarter. In other words, there was, on said assessment date, no excess of the cash value of the use of such land over and above the said rentals."

Each of the plaintiffs in the case of Forster Shipbuilding Co., Inc., No. 23335, held on the first Monday of March, 1957, certain "harbor orders" or "revocable permits" leasing to it the right to occupancy of certain tidelands belonging to the City of Los Angeles.

The Forster lease specified a rental of $7,419.40 per year. For that tax year the assessor valued the "possessory interest" in the land at $2,170 and the "possessory interest" in the improvements at $8,530. An attempt to procure relief from the County Board of Equalization failed and the tax, $765.29, was paid under protest. Thereupon suit was brought against city and county to recover the amount paid as tax upon the possessory interest in the land, namely, $155.20. The complaint alleged that the assessor "did value the alleged possessory interest as if no rent had been paid or was required to be paid under and pursuant to said contract for the use and occupancy of said property." This the demurrer admits. The complaint is in five counts, the allegations of each being substantially the same except as to the applicable figures.

In Count 2 plaintiff Wilmington Boat Works, Inc. alleges that it held a like lease to tideland in March, 1957, with rental prescribed at $7,085.60 per year; that its possessory interest in the land was assessed at $13,910 for the said year 1957, and its possessory interest in the improvements at $25,780. The total tax, $2,843.07, was paid under protest and, after unsuccessful application for relief from the County Board of Equalization, suit was brought for recovery of $934.08, which amount represents the tax upon the possessory interest in the land. Like allegations are made as in the Forster Shipbuilding Company count as to method of assessment and invalidity of same.

In Count 3 Fellows and Stewart, Inc. sues for tax paid under protest in the sum of $6,543.84. Its rent was $18,840.63 per year and its complaint alleges illegality of assessment of its possessory interest in the land for the same reasons as its co-plaintiffs.

Count 4. Al Larson Boat Shop sues for $1,082.14 as tax paid upon its possessory interest in the land. Its prescribed rent is $5,038.20 per year.

Count 5. Harbor Boat Building Co. Rent, $15,481.56 per year. Sues for $1,529.87 as the amount of tax unlawfully levied upon its possessory interests in the land and improvements, paid under protest.

As in the Texas case a general demurrer was sustained, plaintiffs elected to stand upon their complaint and appealed from the judgment entered upon demurrer.

None of the claims asserted in these suits (except Harbor Boat Building Co.) relates to the assessment of the possessory interest in the improvements, only to the separately assessed interest in the real estate. There is no problem of amortization or payment upon a mortgage indebtedness present in either case. The validity of the assessments is to be determined exactly as would such impositions upon vacant land.

The Law

The basic principles governing this case are declared in De Luz Homes, Inc., v. County of San Diego, 45 Cal.2d 546, 290 P. 2d 544, but, as later shown, that opinion has been misinterpreted by the assessor and counsel for respondents with respect to its application to the matter of rents payable by the hypothetical assignee of an uncomplicated lease such as those held by appellants. De Luz says, 45 Cal.2d at pages 561–566, 290 P.2d at page 554: "The standard of valuation prescribed by the Legislature is that, '[A]ll taxable property shall be assessed at its full cash value.' Rev. & TaxCode, § 401. 'Full cash value,' as defined in section 110 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, 'means the amount at which property would be taken in payment of a just debt from a solvent debtor.' It provides, in other words, for an assessment at the price that property would bring to its owner if it were offered for sale on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other. It is a measure of desirability translated into money amounts * * * and might be called the market value of property for use in its present condition. * * * [45 Cal.2d at page 561, 290 P.2d at page 554]

"Since nonexempt possessory interests in land and improvements, such as the leasehold estates involved in the present actions, are taxable property [citations], they too must be assessed at 'full cash value.' * * * [45 Cal.2d at page 562, 290 P.2d at page 554]

"Since the possessory interest must be assessed in accord with the standard of valuation applicable to all other property, its estimated value is the price it would bring if offered on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other, and this hypothetical market price is its value even though a sale of the property has not been made or contemplated. * * * [45 Cal.2d at page 563, 290 P.2d at page 555]

"In the present case, the assessor purported to value the leaseholds by the capitalization of income method, a generally accepted method of valuing property from which income may be or is derived. [Citations.] According to this method, the value of property is the sum of anticipated future installments of net income from the property, less an allowance for interest and the risk of partial or no receipt. (See, American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers, The Appraisal of Real Estate, ch. 17, 18; Babcock, The Valuation of Real Estate, pp. 39, 127–129; 1 Bonbright, The Valuation of Property, ch. XI.) '[I]t involves a capitalization or discounted valuation of the realized or prospective net monetary income derivable by continuous exploitation rather than by resale.' (1 Bonbright, op. cit. supra, p. 230.) The first step in the process is to determine prospective net income and this is done by estimating future gross income and deducting therefrom expected necessary expenses incident to maintenance and operation of the property. * * * [45 Cal.2d at page 564, 290 P.2d at page 555]

"Since it is generally accepted that a person who agrees to receive payment in the future is entitled to interest both for waiting and the risk of partial or no receipt, the second step is to discount each future installment of income by a rate of interest that takes into account the hazards of the investment and the accepted concepts of a 'fair return.' The sum of the discounted installments is the present value of the property. * * * [45 Cal.2d at page 565, 290 P.2d at page 556].

"In valuing property, the assessor must adhere to the statutory standard of 'full cash value', and must therefore estimate the price the property would bring on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other. The net earnings to be capitalized, therefore, are not those of the present owner of the property, but those that would be anticipated by a prospective purchaser. 'Anticipated future earning power is the sole matter of consequence, since reported earnings are already water under the mill.' (Bonbright, op. cit. supra, p. 229; see also Babcock, op. cit. supra, pp. 229–230.) * * * If a purchaser would buy a given property on an open market, the property has a value equal to the price such purchaser might be expected to pay.

"The standard of 'full cash value' applies equally to a leasehold interest. Accordingly, the assessor must estimate the price a leasehold would bring on an open market under conditions in which neither buyer nor seller could take advantage of the exigencies of the other. He must therefore capitalize, not the anticipated net earnings of the present lessee, but those of a prospective assignee." 45 Cal.2d at page 566, 290 P.2d at page 556.

At this point the court turns to the special type of lease before it and the main contention of the taxpayer, namely, that amortization of cost of construction of improvements should be deducted from gross income to arrive at a proper basis for capitalization. To this matter we will return after considering the principles applicable to a simple possessory right to the land unrelated to any amortization of the existing lessee's improvements or mortgage payments.

A ground lease, considered apart from any improvements (as must be done here because of separate assessment of possessory interests in land and improvements), has no value to the lessee or a prospective assignee (a purchaser) unless the fair rental value exceeds the rent specified in the lease. If the reverse is true the leasehold has no value and of course no purchaser can be found for it. To value it by the capitalization method this difference, the bonus value where it exists, must be the basis of the computation. The rents payable by a purchaser-assignee cannot be divorced from the problem, for the right of possession is conditioned upon payment of the specified rents regardless of any contractual relation between the landlord and the one in possession. Upon default in payment the tenant's possession immediately becomes subject to termination, and this is true regardless of any default clause in the lease. 30 Cal. Jur.2d § 183, p. 329; § 280, p. 422; Tiffany on Real Property (3rd ed.), § 915, p. 586; 52 C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant § 718b, p. 583.

The capitalization process is thus described in Schmutz, on The Appraisal Process, page 87: "§ 1603. Income is not value. However, it is the yardstick by which value is measured. The connecting link between income and value is known as the capitalization rate. This is a discount rate; and, the capitalization process is a discounting process. § 1604. The capitalization of income, irrespective of the technique employed, is a simplified method of finding the sum of the present value (the value after discounting for loss of interest) of each future annual amount of the income expectancy. § 1605. By way of illustration, a net rental income of $1,000 collectible at the end of one year has a present day value of $1,000 less interest for one year; that due in 2-years has a present value of $1,000 less interest for 2-years; and so on. The sum of the discounted future amounts is called the capitalized value; and the interest rate at which the future amounts are discounted is called the capitalization rate." Page 88: "§ 1608. The income capitalization approach commences with the preparation of: (a) An estimate of the amount of the reasonably expectable future gross income, which may or may not be indicated by past and present incomes; (b) An estimate of the amount of the reasonably expectable future operating expense, taxes, insurance, etc.; and (c) By subtraction of the latter from the former to indicate the amount of the probable future net income. § 1609. The next steps in the process involve: (d) The estimation of the probable duration of the net income; (e) The estimation of the size of the capitalization (discount) rate; and (f) The selection of the technique by which the data is to be processed."

It is axiomatic that the basic factor is future net income from the interest to be appraised. "It is only in those cases where the net income from the property is in excess of the rent reserved that the tenant's interest becomes valuable." (Taxation of Leasehold Interest, 21 Cal.Law Rev., 596, 603.)

"The lessee's interest, or the 'leasehold estate,' normally consists in the right of the use of the property in a stipulated manner and on the payment of agreed rentals. From the standpoint of value, the lessee's interest is to be found in any excess of annual benefits derived from the use of that property over the annual burdens or rents paid. * *

"It should be noted that, whereas all realty has value, our problem when dealing with a possessory interest is to assign a portion of the total value of the realty to the possessory interest. It may be that the possessory interest has little or no value. When a municipality charges full rent for the use of its land by a private person, and no improvement has been erected on that land, no value exists for the lessee. Consequently, the possessory interest is valueless. Mathematically, the sum of (1) the present worth of all future rents, and (2) the reversionary value of that land, should equal the entire value of the land, thus leaving no value for the leasehold estate, when a fair rent is being paid and no improvement is on the land.

"It is only under two conditions that considerable value can accrue to the lessee and create a possessory interest. The first condition comes into existence when the lease was made at a rent under the present fair rental of the land. This could happen for a number of reasons. Usually, the lease was made a number of years ago during a period when the land had a lesser value than at present. Ofttimes, a favorable rent is offered as an inducement to private industry for locating in the community. The second condition under which a leasehold estate may attain value is created upon the construction of a sizeable improvement. Here, however, the lessee usually has a diminishing interest in the improvement until such time as the full present value of the improvement reverts to the lessor." (Taxation of Possessory Interests, by Abram F. Goldman, 23 So.Cal.Law Rev., 169, 171–172.)

"It is entirely proper that the net income should be the basis of the capitalization process because while gross income, operating expenses, and certain fixed charges are considered in the income approach to value, it is net income productivity which creates value. Regardless of the gross income which may be produced, if the operating expenses and fixed charges are such that no net income remains after their payment, prudent capital would scarcely seek such an enterprise as an investment. * * * The net income before amortization or capital recapture provision is the proper amount to be multiplied by the factor because the recapture of capital is provided for in the factor. If the net income after capital recapture provision were used, the result would be erroneous because provision for that item would have been made twice." (Capitalizing Income Into Value, by David L. Montonna. Reprinted in Selected Readings in Real Estate Appraisal, issued by

"On the other hand, the value of the property to the lessee will depend upon the amount of his net income, after all operating expenses and his obligation to the lessor have been paid." (Contract v. Economic Rent, by Ivan A. Thorson. Reprinted in last cited "Selected Readings," at p. 1197.)

"Earning Expectancy Refers to Net Earnings.—Earning expectancy, in form for use in valuation, must be a prediction of future net incomes. This means net in the sense that it is the actual difference between the yearly 'puts' and 'takes.' It is the predicated net collections before allowances for depreciation, obsolescence, financial charges, and other allowances which are not actually items of paid expense. Net earnings therefore include both the interest returns on invested capital and installments representing a return of the invested capital. In other words earning expectancy includes only actual revenues or actual expense items such as rentals, gas bills, taxes, insurance premiums, and wages." (Emphasis added.) (Babcock on Valuation of Real Estate, p. 229.) The same author, discussing the Valuation of Leasehold Estates, says at page 364: "In the valuation process, the valuator usually commences with a valuation of the property in fee simple, assuming that there is no ground lease. He then proceeds to determine the return on the leasehold estate by deducting the ground rentals from the total real estate returns which he has predicted. This amount year by year is then divided between the return on the leasehold interest in the building and the return on the leasehold interest in the land." (Emphasis added.)

Schmutz, The Appraisal Process, page 264: "§ 3515. The Lessee's interest, also known as the Leasehold, is the right of use and occupancy. The measure of the value of a Lessee's interest is: (a) The present worth of the difference between the fair value of the property, the economic rent, and the contract rent, if the latter is the lesser, which also is known as the 'bonus value' in a lease; (b) The present value (not cost) of the improvements constructed by the Lessee; and, (c) The present value of any adjustments in favor of the Lessee at the end of the lease term, for improvements constructed by Lessee and left for the Lessor, or otherwise. § 3516. In order that the Lessee have a valuable interest in leased property, it is essential that Lessee could sublet for a higher rent than Lessee is obligated to pay; and, or, that valuable improvements have been made by the Lessee. In brief, the market value of the interest of the Lessee is the amount Lessee can expect for an assignment of its lease. § 3517. By way of illustration, in the example mentioned in Paragraph 3511, a vacant lot, the value of the Lessee's interest is zero. It is assumed that the Lessee is paying the full amount of the fair ground rent, and therefore has no bonus value; and, it is further assumed that there are no improvements on the land, and thus no improvement value."

A correct application of the capitalization process to a lessee's interest is described in 21 California Law Review, at page 601, as follows: "In the few instances in which the courts have given careful consideration to the method of evaluating the leasehold interest the usual procedure has been to determine the lessee's interest without having first computed the value of the lessor's estate. In such cases the lessee's interest is measured by the excess of net income the property may yield over the rent reserved. * * * In any event, the value of the lessee's interest at any time is the present worth of the difference between the rent reserved and the net income the property will yield during the term of the lease." In 23 Southern California Law Review, at page 195: "The correct procedure to be used is one that takes as its major factor, the excess of annual benefits over annual burdens." Schmutz, The Appraisal Process, page 265: "§ 3518: However, in the modification of the problem, as stated in paragraph 3512, where it is assumed that the land value at the time of the appraisal is $150,000 and, as a consequence, the fair rental value is $9,000 per year (6% on $150,000), and the rental obligations of the Lessee is $6,000 per year, it follows that the Lessee has a rental saving of $3,000 per year (for 76 years). Further assuming that there are no improvements made by the Lessee, then the computation of the market value of the Lessee's interest is as follows:

"Present Worth of Net Gain,

Or saving in rent, or annual profit in the event of subletting the property:

The P. W. of $1 per annum for 76 years at 6% = 16.468

Then 16.468 x $3,000 = $49,404"[1]

[4] Unless De Luz and companion cases, supra, hold otherwise, the result seems clear that the method of valuation employed by the assessor in the instant case is fundamentally unsound because it ignores rents to be paid by the prospective purchaser and hence the resulting assessment and tax are unlawful. Correctly interpreted, De Luz and related cases do not sanction the capitalization of prospective gross income without regard to rents necessary to be paid by the lessee in order to produce that gross income.

The De Luz cases deal with a unique situation which presented questions different from those inherent in the causes at bar. In each instance (De Luz Homes, Inc. v. County of San Diego, supra, 45 Cal.2d 546, 290 P.2d 544; Fairfield Gardens, Inc. v. County of Solano, 45 Cal.2d 575, 290 P.2d 562; Victor Valley Housing Corporation v. County of San Bernardino, 45 Cal.2d 580, 290 P.2d 565 and El Toro Development Co. v. County of Orange, 45 Cal.2d 586, 290 P.2d 569) the taxpayer was lessee of a government-owned property which was devoted to a housing project for military and civilian personnel stationed at a military camp,—Camp Pendleton, Travis Air Force Base, George Air Force Base and El Toro Marine Air Base, respectively. The leases extended for 75 years, were in the same form and made pursuant to the Wherry Act (12 U.S.C.A. §§ 1748–1748h); each required the lessee to erect a housing project at its own cost; the Federal Housing Commissioner was authorized to insure mortgages on the property; the buildings and other improvements became the property of the United States as completed; ranges, refrigerators and similar items must remain on the premises and became the property of the United States after full payment of the mortgage debt. Construction of the Camp Pendleton project cost in excess of $4,516,000, and De Luz borrowed through mortgage of its leasehold $4,516,000 and furnished the lender a mortgage insurance policy issued by the Federal Housing Administration. Like procedure was followed in the other cases. Travis Air Force Base cost the lessee $8,295,500 and

1. "The lessee's interest is sometimes called the leasehold. It is the market value of the lease. If the leased property is unimproved, the lessee's interest, if any, is simply the bonus value in the lease. * * *

"For the purpose of illustration; let it be assumed that a vacant lot was (in the past) leased for a term of 50 years at a net ground rental of $6,000 per year, which at that time was 6 percent net on a land value of $100,000. However, at the time of appraisal (10 years later) the land has increased in value to $120,000 and the reasonable ground rental $7,200 per year.

"The lease has 40 years to run. The lessee's interest is the present worth of $1,200 per year ($7,200 — $6,000) for 40 years. This is $1,200 X 15.046, factor for 40 years at 6 percent, or $18,055. This is the lessee's interest in the land. The lessor's interest (in the land) would be $120,000 less $18,055, or $101,945. * * *

"Not only is it possible for a lessee's interest in real estate to be composed of a bonus value, when the ground rental is less than it should be at the time of the appraisal, in addition to the value of the lessee's improvements, but it is also possible, and even common, for a lessee's interest to be less than the value of its improvement. This condition exists when the ground rent being paid by the lessee is excessive and, as a consequence, absorbs some of the property income that should be imputable to the structure."

was mortgaged for the same amount. George Air Force Base cost $4,419,000; was mortgaged for said sum. El Toro Marine Air Base cost $4,543,000, and was mortgaged for the full amount. Each lease carried a nominal rental of $100 per year. The lessee was required, among other things, to accumulate a fund for replacing worn out improvements and equipment throughout the term of the lease. The basic contest in each case was over allowance or disallowance of amortization of the cost of the improvements; this seems to have also taken the form of a claim to deduction for payments upon the principal of the mortgage loan. If allowed, each leasehold would have had a value much less than that fixed by the assessor, who declined to make any deduction from the capitalization base on that account. The De Luz case, supra, also involved military bases known as Wire Mountain Homes Number 1 and Wire Mountain Homes Number 2, built and held under similar leases. The lessees contended that disbursements would exceed income until the mortgage was paid in full and the possessory interest should be valued at zero. Fairfield contended its leasehold was worth no more than $20. Victor Valley and El Toro made similar contentions.

The trial court found that none of the leaseholds involved in the De Luz case had taxable value at the time of assessment. The Supreme Court reversed. After announcing the general principles hereinbefore quoted, the opinion considers the claim of a right to amortization deductions in reaching a base for capitalization and incidentally a right to deduction of rents paid by the taxpayer (the theoretical assignor), rents so nominal that they were treated as de minimis in the Fairfield opinion, supra, at page 579. In this connection the court said, in De Luz, supra, 45 Cal.2d at page 566, 290 P.2d at page 556: "The net earnings to be capitalized, therefore, are not those of the present owner of the property, but those that would be anticipated by a prospective purchaser. * * * The present owner may have invested well or poorly, may have contracted to pay very high or very low rent, and may have built expensive improvements or none at all. To value property by capitalizing his anticipated net earnings would make the value of property equal to the present value of his profits; since, however, the legislative standard of value is 'full cash value', it is clear that whatever may be the rationale of the property tax, it is not the profitableness of property to its present owner." Also: "To a prospective assignee, anticipated net earnings equal expected gross income less necessary expenditures for maintenance, operation, and taxes. No deduction is made for the cost of the lease to the present lessee, i. e., his charges for rent and amortization of improvements, for to a prospective assignee the value of a leasehold is measured solely by anticipated gross income less expected necessary expenditures." (Emphasis added.) We deem it a fair interpretation of the opinion to say that all rentals mentioned therein were those which had been paid by the existing lessee, not those to be paid in the future by an assignee of the lease. The context so indicates and the record shows that prior to the rendition of the opinion all counsel agreed upon the propriety of deduction of rents in finding a base for capitalization.

The case of Blinn Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 216 Cal. 474, 14 P.2d 512, 84 A.L.R. 1304, was disapproved (at pages 569–570 of 45 Cal.2d, at page 559 of 290 P.2d) so far as it recognized the propriety of deducting amortization items and rents in arriving at net income of the present lessee, the theoretical assignor of the lease. At page 567 of 45 Cal.2d, at page 557 of 290 P.2d it is said: "The unamortized cost reflected on the balance sheet has no relation to the 'full cash value,' i. e., the price that a willing buyer would pay a willing seller. Furthermore, in determining the income to be capitalized to establish value for appraisal purposes, no deduction can be made for amortization." Also: "Rent paid for a leasehold interest, like the cost of improvements that revert to the lessor, is part of the cost or purchase price of the leasehold, and to include a deduction for it, is likewise to include an item of expense based on the answer, i. e., the value of the property. Thus, it would not only be anomalous to deduct any part of that value, the very answer sought, from the income that is to be capitalized to obtain that answer, it would be a duplication, for the interest rate applied in capitalizing net income provides for a return of capital value as well as interest. (American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers, The Appraisal of Real Estate, p. 321; ibid., p. 214; Babcock, op. cit. supra, p. 230; see example given below.)

"It is apparent, therefore, that in requiring the assessor to deduct the present lessee's charges for rent and amortization from estimated gross income the court in the Blinn case confused income for accounting purposes with income for appraisal purposes."

[5] It is well to remember at this point that "[i]t is elementary that the language used in any opinion is to be understood in the light of the facts and the issue then before the court." Porter v. Bakersfield & Kern Elec. Ry. Co., 36 Cal.2d 582, 590, 225 P.2d 223, 228. "[I]t is a familiar rule that expressions used in judicial opinions are always to be construed and limited by reference to the matters under consideration, and that they cannot be safely applied in their largest and most universal sense to dissimiliar cases." City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 250, 27 P. 604, 606.

The court's reference in De Luz, supra, to page 230 of Babcock on Valuation of Real Estate, furnishes evidence of the restricted sense in which the language just quoted from De Luz, pages 567–568 of 45 Cal.2d, page 557 of 290 P.2d, was used. Babcock there says: "In other words earning expectancy includes only actual revenues or actual expense items such as rentals, gas bills, taxes, insurance premiums, and wages." (Emphasis added.) Elsewhere reference is made in De Luz to page 364 of Babcock which is quoted supra. At page 567 of 45 Cal.2d, at page 557 of 290 P.2d, in De Luz, Babcock is quoted as follows: "'[I]n valuation, net earnings are net "before depreciation," i.e., net earnings are a combination of income and capital returns and are computed as the actual difference between the "puts" and "takes." Appraising presupposes a purchaser, and the valuation is made at a figure which the net earnings can support including a return of capital equal to the successive losses of value expected in the depreciation of the property.'"

In the aggregate these passages rule out the thought that future rentals are to be disregarded in the case of valuation of a mere lease of unimproved land.

While the Blinn treatment of amortization was disapproved in De Luz, the case of Hammond Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 104 Cal.App. 235, 285 P. 896, 899, was not overruled or expressly disapproved. It involved no question of amortization; the possessory interests in land and improvements were separately assessed, as in the present instance. "The deputy assessor stated that in arriving at the value of the leasehold interest, the land itself was first taken at a valuation of $13,000 per acre, which corresponded with the value of surrounding property; then the annual average rent per acre, representing the income from the investment, was capitalized on the basis of an annual interest return of 6 per cent, and the difference between the value of the land and the capitalized rent charge or income represented the average value of the possessory interest per acre." 104 Cal.App. at page 242, 285 P. at page 899. This was held to be proper, the court saying, at page 246, of 104 Cal.App., at page 901 of 285 P.: "The board determined that the method pursued by the assessor was a correct method, and that his assessment was a fair and just valuation for purposes of taxation. The evidence before the trial court tends to confirm the judgment of the board, and supports the court's finding that plaintiff's interest was not assessed improperly, or in excess of its cash value, but only in proportion to the value of the possessory right." Essentially this process is the one advocated by appellants at bar, for it takes cognizance of rents payable by the lessee. Footnote 10 of the De Luz opinion, 45 Cal. 2d on page 570, 290 P.2d on page 559, says that "the District Court of Appeal, in affirming a judgment denying recovery of taxes on a possessory interest, explained a method of valuation that deducted the lessee's rent from imputed gross income and that was presented in evidence to the county board of supervisors by the assessing authorities. 104 Cal.App. at page 244, 285 P. at page 900. That method did not control the decision of the court in the Hammond case, see especially, 104 Cal.App. at page 246, 285 P. at page 901, and it should not be inferred that it now controls assessing authorities." It is not clear whether this footnote emphasizes use of "imputed income" (rejected in De Luz, 45 Cal.2d at page 571, 290 P.2d at page 560) or deduction of rents. It does no more than throw a mantle of doubt upon the Hammond decision. It certainly does not overrule it or foreclose reexamination of the question.

It seems to be generally agreed throughout the United States that the basis for valuation of a leasehold in an eminent domain proceeding is its bonus value, the excess of fair rental value over agreed rents if any there be. Orgel, on Valuation Under Eminent Domain, § 126, p. 536: "It is usually assumed that this market value is equal to the excess of the rental value over the rent reserved." In an article entitled "Some Legal and Appraisal Considerations in Leasehold Valuation under Eminent Domain", by John P. Horgan, 5 Hastings Law Journal 34, 36, it is said: "It is apparent from the cases in California that this state follows the general rule as to the measure of the value of a condemned leasehold interest. That measure is the difference between th economic rent and the contract rent. Obviously, if the economic rent, which is the price which could be obtained on a sale of the lease in the open market, is equal to or less than the contract rent provided for in the lease, then the lease has no market value and the ousted tenant has no compensable claim for damages.

"In situations where the economic rent exceeds the contract rent, giving a market value to the lease, this excess is sometimes spoken of as the bonus value of the lease. More properly, however, it is the market value." At page 38: "The principles deducible from the cases of many jurisdictions and from the text writers support the conclusion that where the entire remaining interest of a tenant under a lease is taken the damages payable to the tenant are measured by the market or bonus value, if any, of the unexpired term." To the same effect, see, 29 C.J.S. Eminent Domain § 143 b, p. 988; 3 A.L.R.2d 286, 291–294; 17 Cal.Jur.2d, § 36, p. 616; § 99, p. 666. In principle there is no perceivable distinction between eminent domain and taxation in this respect. If one whose property is taken in invitum can recover only the value computed upon his net income, it seems equally true as a matter of fairness and, indeed, due process of law that he should not be taxed upon a much higher valuation computed upon the basis of his gross income.

Finally, the interpretation placed upon De Luz and related opinions by respondents would lead to an illegal assessment and taxation of the fee which is exempt because of its tideland status. Calif.Const. Art. XIII, § 1. An intention to ignore this constitutional provision or to sanction a tax which in effect violates it cannot be attributed to our Supreme Court.

The interests of lessor and lessee constitute the totality of ownership in leased property; in sum they equal the value of the fee. The lessor's interest for valuation purposes represents the capitalized value of the rents to be received by it less necessary outlays; that of the lessee, the capitalized value of his estimated gross income less obligatory rentals and other necessary disbursements. "Basically the valuation of a leasehold is a matter of dividing the value of the property free of the lease, into separate values imputable to the fee and leasehold interests. The sum of the values of the fee subject to the lease and leasehold interests should tend to be the same as the value of the property free and clear. However, under certain circumstances, the sum of these different interests may be worth more or less than the freehold. It could be more only if a financially capable lessee were liable for contract rent in excess of the present fair economic rent." ("Factors Influencing Fee and Leasehold Interests." Published by American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers in "The Appraisal of Real Estate" at p. 419.) "First and foremost it must be acknowledged that the combined interests of both lessor and lessee in any property cannot exceed the feehold value of such a property." (Appraising Leasehold Estates, by Stanley L. McMichael. Published in "Selected Readings in Real Estate Appraisal" by American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers, p. 1188.)

"The appraisal of the value of any interest in a leased property commences with the appraisal of the value of the Freehold, i. e., the combined value of all interests in the property, giving recognition to the existing leases and sub-leases. This combined value may be greater than the value which the property would have if it were not leased. If, however, the combined interests of all parties in a leased property sum-up to more than the value of the property on an unleased basis, then, and in such event, the freehold is composed of both tangible and intangible properties. This, the 'Two-property Concept' is described in Paragraphs 311–319 in this book." (Schmutz, The Appraisal Process, § 3507 p. 262.)

"Taken together the sum of the lessor's and the lessee's interests represents the total value of the property. * * * That portion left to the lessor consists only of two parts, the right to receive the rents reserved and the estate of reversion; the residue of the property rights belongs to the lessee. The value of the lessor's estate, then, must always consist of (1) the present worth, at the time of the assessment, of the future series of rent payments reserved by the terms of the lease, and (2) the present worth, at the time of the assessment, of the reversion. If the lease remains in force he can receive nothing more than the sum of these two valuable interests. Whatever value the property may have at any period during the term of the lease in excess of the sum of these two items represents the value of the tenant's interest. The value of the lessee's estate, then, may be determined by subtracting the value of the lessor's interests from the total appraised value of the property." (21 Cal.Law.Rev. 600.)

The problem under consideration is one of ad valorem taxation, nothing else. In the gross income used by the assessor in making the instant appraisements there is included an item payable to the lessor, rents, which must be the basis of capitalization when valuing the lessor's interest; that value is to be deducted from the value of the fee in order to reach a tax basis for the lessee's interest. When this step is omitted and the lessee is taxed upon a sum which includes the amount apportionable to the lessor (and subject to tax payable by him in the case of a private landlord), the impost is truly levied upon the exempt interest of the lessor. That the lessee does not own that interest is immaterial as is the further fact that the lessor does not have to pay any tax. See, United States v. County of Allegheny, 322 U.S. 174, 186, 189, 64 S.Ct. 908, 88 L.Ed. 1209. When the exempt interest is assessed and the tax imposed upon the lessee the rule of exemption has been violated and the lessee has been required to pay pro tanto a tax which nobody owes.

Parr-Richmond Industrial Corp. v. Boyd, 43 Cal.2d 157, 272 P.2d 16, is in point. Plaintiff had a possessory interest in certain government-owned property which had been offered for sale; it had made a bid which was accepted and which contemplated a merchantable title or no deal. While this was being worked out, and on the tax day, plaintiff was in possession by consent of the War Assets Administration. In the following June good title was made to plaintiff. The assessor imposed a tax upon all of said realty, assessed it to plaintiff in the same manner and with the same effect as if it owned the fee. Plaintiff conceded liability for a tax upon a possessory interest but, having paid under protest, sued to recover that part of the tax which was properly apportionable to the owner of the fee. It prevailed and the judgment was affirmed, the court saying, 43 Cal.2d at page 169, 272 P.2d at page 24: "In determining the tax on plaintiff's possessory interest the trial court followed the formula similarly used in Kaiser Co. v. Reid, 30 Cal.2d 610, 184 P.2d 879, which was a valuation method theretofore judicially approved in cases presenting analogous considerations affecting possessory rights. Blinn Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 216 Cal. 474, 478–479, 14 P.2d 512, 84 A.L.R. 1304; Hammond Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 104 Cal.App. 235, 244–245, 285 P. 896. The tax as so computed was then deducted from the amount of tax claimed by defendants, and the judgments herein were entered for the difference." We perceive no difference in principle between that case and the situation at bar.

Also pertinent and persuasive is The California Company v. State of Mississippi, 221 Miss. 766, 74 So.2d 856, which involved a severance tax. Plaintiff was lessee of certain government-owned oil lands and the government was entitled to receive one-eighth of all oil produced. The statute required payment by the person in charge of production operations, who was authorized to deduct it proportionately from the persons owing the tax. In this instance the tax was measured by the entire production, including the government's one-eighth; it would not consent to a deduction of its proportionate share of the tax, plaintiff paid same in full and sued to recover one-eighth of the amount. From an adverse judgment it appealed and obtained a reversal, the Supreme Court holding that the tax was a direct levy upon oil belonging to the government. At pages 857 and 858, of 74 So.2d, the court said: "Under the statutory formula, the United States is a 'producer', and as such the Mississippi oil severance tax is levied upon it to the extent of the one-eighth interest owned by the United States. Consequently, Chapter 134, Laws of 1944, is unconstitutional insofar as it attempts to impose a severance tax upon the United States of America. * * * The California Company was entitled to a credit for the amount of the tax which would ordinarily be charged to the holder of the royalty interest." See, also, United States v. County of Allegheny, supra, 322 U.S. 174, 186, 189, 64 S.Ct. 908, 88 L.Ed. 1209; Gottstein v. Adams, 202 Cal. 581, 584, 262 P. 314.

[6] Counsel for the Legislative Committee of California Association of Port Authorities, appearing as amicus curiae, stresses an argument that the county's application of the De Luz ruling to the situation before us effects a diversion of the economic impact of the tax to all Port Authorities, in that they are placed under the practical necessity of lowering their lease rentals to compete successfully with private owners of similar properties; that this is likewise true of municipally owned airports, warehouses and other facilities. Lessors of privately owned lands, according to long established custom, suffer an assessment of the fee without segregation of the lessee's interest, then pay the tax themselves, thus reducing the prescribed rentals indirectly to an extent of two per cent, or three or four per cent as the case may be. Owners of exempt lands can rent in competition with such private property by prescribing the same rents upon the theory that there will be no bonus value to the lease and hence no tax upon the possessory interest; the owner of the tax exempt fee thus has an advantage over the private owner of similar property. But when a tax is imposed upon the possessory interest so substantial as to make rent plus tax exceed rent paid to the private owner, the prospective lessee of public property is no longer interested, for his ultimate burden is substantially greater than that of the lessee of private land. Hence the public owners must reduce their rents to stay in business and the economic burden of the tax rests upon the public owner of the land. While no allegation to this effect appears in either complaint, the facts asserted by counsel seem to be self-evident and hence cognizable here. True, the shifting of economic burden probably would not alone invalidate the tax (De Luz, supra, 45 Cal.2d at page 570, 290 P.2d at page 559; Timm Aircraft Corp. v. Byram, 34 Cal.2d 632, 636, 213 P.2d 715), but it is not to be lightly assumed that the Supreme Court swept away from public property such as tidelands the economic benefit of the constitutional tax exemption without specifically considering and declaring that result.

It is our conclusion that the subject assessments and the taxes based thereon are illegal because of refusal of the assessor and the County Board of Equalization to take into consideration future rents payable by a purchaser of the lease in arriving at a base for valuation by capitalization of net income.

Counsel for appellants in the Forster case have presented other interesting questions. They contend that the De Luz line of cases should have prospective application only, this through application of the principles discussed in County of Los Angeles v. Faus, 48 Cal.2d 672, 312 P.2d 680 and Abbott v. City of Los Angeles, 50 Cal. 2d 438, 326 P.2d 484. It is also argued that § 107.1, Revenue & Taxation Code,[2] is curative in nature and hence should be given retroactive effect, thus applying its healing balm to leases under consideration here.

As we see it, the Faus case, supra, does not apply because the Supreme Court in De Luz and related cases itself gave retroactive application to the doctrine therein declared, in that it applied the same to existing leases; that seems to leave no room for treating differently other leases in effect at the time of those decisions.

Section 107.1, Revenue & Taxation Code, has been held unconstitutional by the Attorney General (31 Ops.Cal.Atty. Gen. 17) but the Legislative Counsel (by letter of May 19, 1958, to Honorable Vin-

2. Rev. & Tax.Code, § 107.1: "Possessory interest: What to consist of when arising out of lease of exempted property: As personal property: Cash value: Basis of assessment: Application of section. A possessory interest, when arising out of a lease of exempt property, consists of the lessee's interest under such lease and is hereby declared to be personal property within the meaning of Section 14 of Article XIII of the Constitution of the State of California.

"The full cash value of such possessory interest is the excess, if any, of the value of the lease on the open market, as determined by the formula contained in the case of De Luz Homes, Inc. v. County of San Diego, 1955, 45 Cal.2d 546, [290 P.2d 544], over the present worth of the rentals under said lease for the unexpired term thereof.

"A possessory interest taxable under the provisions of this section shall be assessed to the lessee on the same basis or percentage of valuation employed as to other tangible property on the same roll.

"This section applies only to possessory interests created prior to the date on which the decision of the California Supreme Court in De Luz Homes, Inc. v. County of San Diego (1955), 45 Cal.2d 546, 290 P.2d 544, became final. It does not, however, apply to any of such interests created prior to that date that thereafter have been, or may hereafter be, extended or renewed, irrespective of whether the renewal or extension is provided for in the instrument creating the interest.

"This section does not apply to leasehold estates for the production of gas, petroleum and other hydrocarbon substances from beneath the surface of the earth, and other rights relating to such substances which constitute incorporeal hereditaments or profits a prendre."

cent Thomas) has ruled, after considering the Attorney General's opinion, that the statute is constitutional. If applicable to the situation presented at bar, the statute seems to proceed upon a misinterpretation of the De Luz opinion, and we do not feel obligated to pursue further the question of its validity or its effect if found valid.

Hence our decision does not rest upon the Faus doctrine or upon consideration of § 107.1, Revenue & Taxation Code. It rests upon the conclusion above stated, that the assessment was unlawful because it proceeded upon a faulty basis and a misinterpretation of the De Luz and related opinions.

Judgment in each case is reversed with instructions to overrule demurrer to complaint, with leave to defendants to answer within a reasonable time prescribed by the Superior Court.

James E. WRIGHT and Wayne Heape, Individually and doing business as Wright & Heape, a copartnership, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 9364.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 29, 1958.

Action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff as a result of operation of an automobile which was taken from defendants' used car lot by a named person. The Superior Court, Butte County, Dudley G. McGregor, J., sustained defendant's general demurrer without leave to amend and entered judgment of dismissal, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that complaint alleging that defendants were negligent in maintaining their used car lots so that persons were able to take automobiles therefrom, and alleging a second cause of action based on a named person's alleged operation of an automobile taken by him from the lot based on implied consent of defendants as set forth in the Vehicle Code, stated a cause of action based on such negligence, and implied consent, or if insufficient, could have been amended to state a cause of action based on such causes of action.

Judgment reversed in part, and in part affirmed.

1. Pleading ⇐225(1)

Unless it is palpably clear that a pleading is not susceptible of amendment so as to state a cause of action, a demurrer thereto should not be sustained without leave to amend.

Pleading ⇐246(3)

Complaint alleging that defendants were negligent in maintaining their used car lot so that persons were able to take automobiles therefrom, and alleging a second cause of action based on a named person's alleged operation of an automobile taken by him from the lot based on implied consent of defendants as set forth in the Vehicle Code, stated a cause of action for personal injuries based on such negligence, and implied consent, or if insufficient, could have been amended to state a cause of action based on such causes of action. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 402.

3. Automobiles ⇐238(1, 7)

Complaint for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff arising out of operation of an automobile taken from defendants' used car lot, failed to state a cause of action based on defendants' alleged maintenance of a nuisance in leaving automobiles on their lot with the ignition keys in the locks, and also failed to state a cause of action based on defendants' alleged wanton and reckless disregard of the safety of others in so maintaining their lot.

Glassman and Rose, San Rafael, Melvin M. Belli, San Francisco, for appellants.

Peters & Peters, Chico, for respondents.

PEEK, Acting Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal entered following the sustaining of defendants' general demurrer without leave to amend in a personal injury action.

A summary of the facts disclosed by plaintiffs' complaint shows that one Brown entered a used car lot owned and operated by defendants Wright & Heape and took a car belonging to defendants. The taking was made easy by the fact that defendants had purposely left the ignition keys in the locks of all cars on the lot. Shortly after the taking Brown collided with plaintiffs.

Specifically the complaint sets forth four causes of action. The first is based on the alleged negligence of defendants in maintaining the lot so that persons were able to take automobiles therefrom. The second is based upon Brown's alleged operation of the car with the implied consent of the defendants as defined in section 402 of the Vehicle Code. The third is based upon defendants' alleged maintenance of a nuisance in so leaving cars on the lot. And the fourth is based upon defendants' alleged wanton and reckless disregard of the safety of others in so maintaining the used car lot. Counsel for plaintiffs did not appear on the date set for hearing on defendants' demurrer nor at the continued hearing, and the same was sustained as to all causes of action without leave to amend. This appeal followed.

[1] At the outset the general rule must be borne in mind that unless it is palpably clear that a pleading is not susceptible of amendment so as to state a cause of action, a demurrer thereto should not be sustained without leave to amend. Kadota Fig Ass'n of Producers v. Case-Swayne Co., 73 Cal. App.2d 796, 798, 803–804, 167 P.2d 518.

[2] The first cause, after alleging the ownership and operation by defendants of the lot and the cars located thereon, then alleged that the vehicles were left unlocked by defendants in order " * * * to encourage the general public to examine, inspect and operate those certain vehicles on said used car lot, without regard for the fitness or competence of said general public so to do, and [defendants] knew or should have known that it was common knowledge among the general public in that locale that the keys were at all times left in the ignitions of said unlocked vehicles"; that on the date in question the defendants so negligently and carelessly maintained the lot and the vehicles thereon as to cause the premises to be "* * * unenclosed, unguarded, unprotected and unsupervised * * *"; and that by reason of the alleged carelessness and negligence of the defendants, Brown was induced to take a Buick automobile from the lot. Even if it may be said that such allegations were insufficient in that it does not appear therein that Brown was incompetent to operate a motor vehicle it is alleged in both the third and fourth causes of action that at the time of the taking he was in an intoxicated condition. Obviously, if such had been necessary, under the first cause this fact could easily have been added by amendment.

The second cause of action alleged the operation of the car with the knowledge and consent of the defendant as provided in section 402 of the Vehicle Code; that by reason of such negligent operation, it struck the vehicle in which plaintiffs were riding, and as a proximate result thereof they sustained the damages set forth in the complaint. Although such cause of action incorporated substantially all of the first cause of action, it did not incorporate that portion wherein it was alleged that the defendants were the owners of the car in question. Again, if this was insufficient under the circumstances, a simple amendment would have cured such defect.

In concluding as we do, we are not unmindful of the decisions in Richards v. Stanley, 43 Cal.2d 60, 271 P.2d 23, and Richardson v. Ham, 44 Cal.2d 772, 285 P.2d 269, 271, which cases are primarily relied upon by defendants in support of the trial court's order. In the Richards case a divided court held that an owner who had left her car parked on a public street unattended and unlocked, with the ignition key in the car, could not be held to be negligent under the facts in that particular case. The court noted, however, that the owner, under other facts, could be held to be negligent and specifically referred to leaving a car near a school where one might reasonably expect irresponsible children to tamper with it (see Restatement, Torts, sec. 302, item 7); or leaving a car with an intoxicated passenger therein. The Richardson case, which was filed shortly thereafter, showed that a bull dozer was left with its mechanism unlocked; that youths started the vehicle, and in the operation thereof caused serious damage to plaintiffs. There the court distinguished the Richards case and held: "The extreme danger created by a bull dozer in uncontrolled motion and the foreseeable risk of intermeddling fully justify imposing a duty on the owner to exercise reasonable care to protect third parties from injuries arising from its operation by intermeddlers."

[3] It is quite apparent that the instant case presents a factual situation far more serious that the parking of a single car on a city street as in the Richards case. Here it is alleged that defendants purposely left the keys in the ignitions of all vehicles parked on their lot which was at all times open and unattended, in order to encourage the general public to enter the lot, examine and operate the vehicles, and that they did so "without regard for the fitness or competence of said general public so to do." It is further alleged that this practice was a matter of common knowledge of the public in the vicinity of the lot, and of course the pertinent details regarding the area where the lot was located was something which could be developed further by plaintiffs at the time of trial.

We must conclude as did the trial court in regard to the third and fourth causes of action. Both of said causes of action are wholly insufficient to charge defendants with the maintenance of a nuisance as defined by section 3479 of the Civil Code, or to charge defendants with reckless and wanton misconduct. Nor does it appear that either of said causes could be so amended as to state a cause of action against the defendants.

As to the first and second causes of action, the judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer, allowing plaintiffs reasonable time in which to amend if they so desire. The judgment as to the third and fourth causes of action is affirmed.

Proceeding on receiver's second account and petition for discharge. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, James H. Oakley, J., discharged receiver, directed payment of all funds in his custody, and approved receiver's accounts, and appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that where order appointing receiver provided that he was to manage motel, to collect rents and profits and to apply them to payment of all necessary expenses including necessary costs of operation of business, order authorized receiver to make any repairs and purchase any furniture, if such expenditures were necessary for conducting business.

1. Receivers ⇐201

Although supporting vouchers were not filed with receiver's accounts and were never formally introduced in evidence at hearing for discharge of receiver in accordance with the usual and better practice, where they were admitted for identification, court declared recess in order to enable counsel for opposing party to examine them and receiver testified as to correctness of items in the accounts, approval of accounts was not improper.

2. Receivers ⇐201

It is the usual and better practice for supporting vouchers to be filed in connection with settling of receiver's accounts and an account should not be approved unless it is supported by vouchers or other proof.

3. Receivers ⇐114

Where order appointing receiver of motel provided that he was to collect rents and profits and to apply them to payment of all necessary expenses of property including necessary costs of operation of business, order authorized receiver to make any repairs and purchase any furniture if such expenditures were necessary for conducting business.

4. Receivers ⇐193

A court has power to authorize reimbursement of a receiver for expenditures if they are proper and are approved by court.

6. Mortgages ⇐474

Where receiver was appointed because note for which first deed of trust on motel was security was in default, property was foreclosed and assignees of beneficial interest of deed of trust acquired legal title, reason for appointment of receiver was then over, discharge of receiver was within discretion of trial court even though alleged assignee of debtor intervened asking that rights of parties be determined and that it be decreed that his rights were not divested and that sale was void.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

This is an appeal from orders discharging a receiver, directing the payment of all funds in his custody, and approving the receiver's accounts.

Louis Hozz and his wife, Ettie Hozz, were the assignees of the beneficial interest of a deed of trust and the assignees of a note executed by Victor Varga. The deed of trust provided that upon default the beneficiary could personally or through a receiver appointed by the court take possession of the property, operate it, conduct the business (a motel), collect the rents and income and perform such acts as would be necessary to conserve the value thereof. The Hozzes, after an alleged default in the payments due on the note, applied to the superior court for an order appointing a receiver. An order to show cause was issued, and after Varga failed to appear, a

Harry Heifetz was appointed receiver on May 7, 1954, and empowered "To take charge of, use, operate, manage and control the property * * * to conduct the business thereof, to collect the rents, issues, profits and income thereof, to apply the same to the payment of all unsual (sic) and necessary expenses of said property, including taxes, mortgage payments, management costs and all other regular and necessary costs of the operation of the business operated on said premises." On August 10, 1954, Varga and Henry J. Kleefisch filed a motion to vacate the order appointing a receiver. On November 19, 1954, Kleefisch abandoned his attempt to vacate the order and at the same time, after having received permission of the court, filed a complaint in intervention in which it was alleged that he was a party in interest against the original plaintiffs and Abe Hozz, the son of Louis and Ettie Hozz, who was named a defendant; that when the original note in the amount of $44,000 and the deed of trust were executed only $42,175 was actually due; that Varga was induced to sign a note for an amount $1,825 greater than the amount actually due; that on June 3, 1953, Varga executed a second note in the amount of $42,500 and delivered a deed of trust as security which provided that the trustees could sell the property if a default occurred in the payments of the note; that this second deed of trust and the note were assigned to Abe Hozz; that at the time Ettie and Louis Hozz became the assignees of the first note and deed of trust the payments were in default; that they took the note and deed of trust subject to the set-off of $1825; that in February, 1954, before any action was commenced, Varga conveyed his interest in the property to the intervenor; that Heifetz was appointed a receiver and took possession of the property; that Abe Hozz prepared a notice of default which alleged that the junior obligation was in default because of a failure to pay interest when due; that foreclosure proceedings were had; that the power of sale was exercised and the property sold to the Hozzes, acting through and by Abe Hozz; that the sale was contrary to equity and contrary to and in disregard of law; that the intervenor's rights were not divested by the sale; and that the amount in default on the second note, if any, was not a liquidated amount. The intervenor asked that the rights of the parties be determined, that it be decreed that his rights were not divested, that the sale be adjudged void, and that his title be determined.

Thereafter, on March 21, 1955, the receiver filed his first account. He asked that the account be approved and that an order be made allowing compensation for his own services and for the services performed for him by an attorney. In the interim Kleefisch died and Don Trevaskis, the executor of his estate, was substituted for him. On December 31, 1956, the receiver filed his second account and petitioned for discharge on the ground that the property for which he had been appointed receiver had been foreclosed; that Louis and Ettie Hozz had become the owners; that there was no longer any reason for the receivership to continue; that his accounts be approved; that attorney's fees be granted; and that the receiver be discharged.

The matter was heard by the court, and the court made an order settling and approving the first and second accounts of the receiver and providing also that "3. The attorney for said petitioner is hereby awarded $250.00 as and for attorney fees, and said Receiver is ordered to pay said attorney said amount," and that "4. The Receiver, Harry Heifetz, be, and he is hereby discharged as such Receiver, together with his surety, upon said Receiver rendering a closing Supplemental Statement of Account." The receiver filed this account, and the court, on May 22, 1957, ordered the receiver discharged and that he turn over any funds in his possession to Louis and Ettie Hozz. The executor of the intervenor's estate has appealed from each order.

[1, 2] Appellant's first contention is that the court erred in settling the two accounts of the receiver because none of the various items of account are supported by proper vouchers. In the instant case supporting vouchers were not filed with the accounts and were never formally introduced in evidence at the hearing, although they were admitted for identification and the court declared a recess in order to enable counsel for the appellant to examine them. It is, of course, the usual and better practice for supporting vouchers to be filed, and an account should not be approved unless it is supported by vouchers or other proof. High on Receivers, 4th ed., sec. 798; 75 C.J.S. Receivers § 375, p. 1040; See, also In re Estate of Rose, 63 Cal. 349; Purdy v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 521, 163 P. 893; In re Estate of McCabe, 87 Cal.App.2d 430, 197 P.2d 35. The receiver testified as to the correctness of the items in the account, and the court was, no doubt, satisfied with the sufficiency of the proof and that the expenditures listed in the accounts were proper items or it would not have approved the accounts. While the matter might well have been handled by the respective counsel with more particularity, we do not believe that it can be held that the court erred in approving the accounts.

[3, 4] Appellant also contends that the accounts disclose that the receiver disbursed the sum of $1,595.91 for repairs and furniture which appellant alleges the receiver was not empowered to do without a previous application to the court. The order appointing the receiver read that he was to "take charge of, use, operate, manage and control the property herein described and to conduct the business thereof, to collect the rents, issues, profits and income thereof, to apply the same to the payment of all unsual (sic) and necessary expenses of said property, including taxes, mortgage payments, management costs and all other regular and necessary costs of the operation of the business operated on said premises." We believe that the order authorized the receiver to make any repairs and purchase any furniture if such expenditures were necessary for the conducting of the business. The court in the instant case, no doubt, construed its own order appointing the receiver as authorizing the receiver to make such expenditures without further authorization. Furthermore, there is no rule of law that deprives a court of power to reimburse a receiver for expenditures if they are proper and are approved by the court. (42 Cal.Jur.2d, Receivers, sec. 107.) It is clear that the court considered that the expenditures were proper.

Appellant contends also that "The court not only erred but exceeded its power (jurisdiction) and authority in awarding attorney fees to attorney acting for receiver in violation of law."

[5] The attorney who acted as attorney for the receiver was also the attorney who acted as attorney for Louis and Ettie Hozz when they filed the petition which resulted in the appointment of the receiver. Rule 27(b) of the rules of the superior court forbids a receiver from employing an attorney without the approval of the court, and provides also that the application shall state that the attorney whom the receiver proposed to employ is not an attorney associated with any party to the proceeding. Appellant is correct in stating that the court could not properly, in the instant proceeding allow an attorney's fee to the attorney for the receiver, but it is clear from the record that the court did not make the allowance to the attorney for the receiver but to the attorney who represented the parties who were petitioners in the petition for the appointment of the receiver. Mr. Shone, the attorney for the receiver, stated frankly to the court that he could not be allowed any attorney's fees as counsel for the receiver, but that he was entitled to compensation for services as attorney in procuring the receivership, and the court stated: "On the cases cited I would be disposed to make the order on that basis, that is to say as compensation for procuring the receivership only, and I will do so, subject to checking the case cited." The order read "The attorney for said petitioner is hereby awarded $250.00 as and for attorney fees * * *", and we believe that in the light of the court's statement it should be construed as compensation for the work done by Mr. Shone in the proceeding to appoint the receiver. Thus construed it was a proper allowance, for as stated in Winslow v. Harold G. Ferguson Corp., 25 Cal.2d 274, at page 285, 153 P.2d 714, at page 719:

"* * * The expense incurred by a litigant for legal services in causing the appointment of a receiver is as much an expense of administration as the charge of the receiver's counsel and should have priority to the same extent. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Green, 79 F. 222, 24 C.C.A. 506; Muskegon Boiler Works v. Tennessee Valley I[ron] & R. Co., D.C., 274 F. 836; McLane v. Placerville & Sacramento Valley R. Co., 66 Cal. 606, 622, 623, 6 P. 748. As is stated in Re Estate of Marre, 18 Cal.2d 191, 192, 114 P.2d 591: 'Plaintiffs who have succeeded in protecting, preserving or increasing a fund for the benefit of themselves and others may be awarded compensation from the fund for the services of their attorneys.'"

[6] Appellant also contends that the court erred in discharging the receiver while the complaint in intervention was not determined. As stated in High on Receivers, 4th ed. 974, 975: "* * * The power of a court of equity to remove or discharge a receiver * * * may be regarded as well settled, and it may be exercised at any stage of the litigation. Indeed, it would seem to be a necessary adjunct of the power of appointment, and to be exercised as an incident to or consequence of that power; * * *" In this case the receiver was appointed because the note for which the first deed of trust was security was in default. The property was then foreclosed and the Hozzes had the legal title. The reason for the appointment was then over. It would seem that the matter of termination was within the discretion of the trial court even though the complaint of intervention was not determined.

No other points raised require discussion.

The orders are affirmed.

Joseph E. HENCK, Mary P. Henck, Joseph P. Henck, et al., Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 5775.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 17, 1958.

Grantees' action against grantors to quiet title as against any claims of grantors of easement for driveway purposes and for maintenance of storage tanks and pipelines in and across lot conveyed. Defendants relied upon implied reservation of easement. The Superior Court of San Bernardino County, A. D. Mitchell, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shepard, J., held that "necessity for reasonable enjoyment" is a question of fact to be decided by trial court when all of evidence is presented.

Affirmed.

2. Deeds ⇐90

Words of conveyance are to be construed more strictly against grantor than against grantee.

3. Easements ⇐15

6. Easements ⇐36(3)

In grantees' action against grantors to quiet title as against any claims of grantors to easement for driveway purposes and for maintenance of storage tanks and pipelines in and across lot conveyed, wherein grantors relied upon implied reservation of easement, evidence sustained findings for grantees.

SHEPARD, Justice.

In 1929 defendants owned Lots 1 and 2 of Block 10 "Arrowhead Lakeview Forest". They then sold Lot 1 to another person. After the sale of Lot 1, they purported by grant deed to convey to the State of California a "right of way and incidents thereto for said State Highway upon, over and across * * * blocks * * * 10 * * * as * * * designated upon that certain map entitled 'Arrowhead Lakeview Forest' * * * etc."

In the year 1947, defendants regained title to said Lot 1. They still owned Lot 2, so that they then owned both Lots 1 and 2. Lot 1 was improved with a store building and a gasoline pump. After this union of title defendants leveled a portion of Lot 2 and established a service station thereon, removing the old pump from in front of the store building on Lot 1, so that Lot 1 was then occupied by a store building and restaurant and Lot 2 by the gasoline service station. One end of the gasoline pump "island" is within five feet of the dividing line between the two lots and a portion of the underground gasoline tanks encroach several feet west of the dividing line and into Lot 1; two of the pipe caps for the filling of these tanks being thus located a few feet west of the said dividing line and on the surface of said Lot 1.

In 1950, defendant sold Lot 1 with the restaurant buildings on it to plaintiffs and retained Lot 2 with the service station. The result of this sale was and is that plaintiffs own a 105-foot frontage on the public highway and defendants own a 104-foot frontage on the public highway.

Until 1953, no trouble arose between these neighbors but in 1953 some irritation arose relating to the use for parking purposes of space unoccupied by buildings and alleged interference with driveway purposes. In 1954, plaintiffs had their lot surveyed and for the first time both parties became aware of the exact location of the true boundary line. In January, 1955, this action was filed to quiet title to Lot 1 as against any claims of defendants for driveway purposes and maintenance of storage tanks and pipelines in and across a portion of the southeasterly corner of Lot 1. Defendants answered and affirmatively claim the right to use for driveway purposes and for storage tank and pipeline facilities a portion of said southeasterly corner of Lot 1.

From a judgment for plaintiffs quieting plaintiffs' title as to Lot 1 but allowing defendants the right to service, refill and use said gasoline storage tanks defendants appeal. On the theory of implied reservation of easement for a right of way, defendants complain that the trial court should have allowed a right of way for the use of defendants across the southeast portion of said Lot 1 for use by defendants and their customers in the operation of the service station business. This is based on the contention that normally the customers of the service station drove into and out of the area occupied by the gasoline pump island across the southeasterly portion of said Lot 1, and that this was routine custom at the time of and before the transfer of Lot 1 to these plaintiffs and fully known to plaintiffs.

The rule of implied easements referred to by defendants comes to us from the common law and has been recognized by the courts of California in many decisions. A portion of it came into the Civil Code as it now exists in 1872 in section 1104, and has never been altered. However, section 1104 by its terms is only for the benefit of grantees so that it has no force here. The common law rule, as recognized in California, is expressed by the supreme court in the early case of Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 135, 140:

> "When the owner of lands divides his property into two parts, granting away one of them, he is taken by implication to include in his grant all such easements in the remaining part as are necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the part which he grants, in the form which it assumes at the time he transfers it. 'If the grantor has already treated this portion as a separate property, the mode in which he enjoyed it, or suffered it to be enjoyed, affords a very proper indication of what rights over his remaining land he intends to pass as accessory to it.'"

[1] Various facets of the rule have been emphasized or restated in succeeding cases. Thus in Cheda v. Bodkin, 173 Cal. 7, 14, 158 P. 1025, 1029, the court gives a broader application as well as the basic purpose when it says:

> "'It is a direct recognition of the principle long established and fully recognized by this court (Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 135; Quinlan v. Noble, 75 Cal. 250, 17 Pac. 69), that principle being that "where the owner of two tenements sells one of them, or the owner of the entire estate sells a portion of it, the purchaser takes the tenement or portion sold with all the benefits and with all the burdens that appear at the time of the sale to belong to it as between it and the property which the vendor retains,"'."

> "The intention, in view of all the circumstances, is the cardinal subject for inquiry."

In Fristoe v. Drapeau, 35 Cal.2d 5, 8(2), 215 P.2d 729, 732 the court said:

> "The purpose of the doctrine of implied easements is to give effect to the actual intent of the parties as shown by all the facts and circumstances."

Attendant upon and recognized as an appendage of the rule as it is applied in California, is "necessity for reasonable enjoyment." This question is one of fact to be decided by the trial court when all of the evidence is presented in the case.

> "Where there is a better and more convenient means of ingress and egress to and from the land conveyed, and the easement is not necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the part granted, no grant by implication arises. * * * 'The question as to whether or not the use was under a claim of right, or a mere matter of neighborly accommodation, was a question of fact to be determined by the court in the light of the relations of the parties, their conduct, the situation of the property, and all of the surrounding circumstances.'" Grimmesey v. Kirtlan, 93 Cal.App. 658, 664, 665, 270 P. 243, 245.

A further restatement of the rule of necessity appears in Navarro v. Paulley, 66 Cal.App.2d 827, 830, 153 P.2d 397, 398, quoting from 28 C.J.S. Easements § 33 p. 692:

> "'* * * the weight of authority sustains a rule less exacting than that of strict and indispensable necessity, namely, that the degree of necessity is such merely as renders the easement necessary for the convenient and comfortable enjoyment of the property as it existed when the severance was made. The test of necessity is whether the party claiming the right can, at reasonable cost, create a substitute on his own estate. It has been held that the rules as to ways of necessity should be applied.'

matter. In the performance of its duty the court determined against the defendant and appellant the essential fact of reasonable user at the time of the severance. With that determination this court can have nothing to do, if there is substantial evidence to support it."

[2–4] Because of the rule that the words of a conveyance are to be construed more strictly against the grantor than against the grantee, the court will be more circumspect in its approach to decreeing an easement by reservation in favor of a grantor than it will for a grantee. It must also be remembered that easements by implication are not favored. Orr v. Kirk, 100 Cal. App.2d 678, 681(3) (2), 224 P.2d 71.

The trial judge in this cause had before him a situation in which the highway frontage of Lot 2 is 104 feet immediately adjacent to the grounds of the defendants used for service station purposes while the frontage of plaintiffs is only 105 feet. He saw the premises, he weighed the testimony of the parties, his decision as to what was reasonably necessary cannot properly be interfered with by this court.

Respondents also claim that defendants are estopped from asserting an easement, and also raise the point that at the time defendants granted title to plaintiffs there could be no implied easement reserved because the State of California held a right of way for highway purposes over the portion of Lot 1 which is here involved. Because of the conclusions we have reached as to the trial court's decision on the merits of the controversy, we deem it unnecessary to pass on these latter points injected by respondents' brief.

The judgment is affirmed.

James ROBINSON, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6315.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 22, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 18, 1959.

Defendant was convicted by jury of possession of marijuana. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., entered judgment of conviction, and defendant appealed therefrom and from order denying motion for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that where officer testified on voir dire that confidential informer, who had given officer reliable information concerning narcotics on three previous occasions leading to arrests, told officer that informer had been in defendant's apartment the day before and had seen defendant sell marijuana and that defendant was in possession of marijuana there "now" at a certain location, and this was the only information upon which officer acted when one-half hour later he entered apartment and arrested defendant and searched premises and seized narcotics without warrant, defendant was entitled to disclosure of names of persons arrested on prior information given by informer and to disclosure of identity of informer.

Reversed and remanded for new trial.

1. Witnesses ⇐216

Where officer testified on voir dire that confidential informer, who had given officer reliable information concerning narcotics on three previous occasions leading to arrests, told officer that informer had been in defendant's apartment the day before and had seen defendant sell marijuana and that defendant was in possession of marijuana there "now" at a certain location, and this was the only information upon which officer acted when one-half hour later he entered apartment and arrested defendant and searched premises and seized narcotics without warrant, defendant was entitled to disclosure of names of persons arrested on prior information given by informer and to disclosure of identity of informer. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 5; West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Criminal Law ⇐394.5(4)

Where arrest and search of defendant's person and apartment were made without warrant, the burden of showing proper justification for arrest, search and seizure fell on the prosecution.

3. Arrest ⇐63(4)

Evidence that stranger left defendant's apartment and slammed the door shut was not sufficient evidence, apart from communication of confidential informer, to establish probable cause for arrest of defendant without warrant for a narcotics violation. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

4. Criminal Law ⇐394.5(1)

The trial court and not the police officer must determine whether the latter's action is based upon probable cause, and when the officer testifies that he based the legality of arrest without warrant on information given by confidential informer, the court in deciding that probable cause existed for such arrest must find that the informer was reliable, that the officer relied upon such information and that the officer is telling the truth.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1044

Where, at outset of voir dire examination, the defendant interposed objection to introduction of any evidence on the ground that defendant's apartment and person were searched without a warrant without probable cause, and at the close of the hearing on probable cause, after the trial court had ordered the prosecution to proceed on the merits, the defendant voiced his objection by stating that he believed his record to be adequately protected and that he would not object to the admission of evidence during the trial and the trial court affirmatively responded, the defendant, on appeal, could challenge the admission of the officer's testimony, notwithstanding that defendant had made no motion to strike the officer's testimony at the trial.

Earl Klein, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Arthur C. DeGoede, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

Defendant was convicted by a jury of possession of marijuana under section 11500, Health and Safety Code, and sentenced to the state prison. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and order denying motion for new trial.

The prosecution's evidence discloses that at approximately 8:30 p. m. on the evening of defendant's arrest, officer Charles Fantuzzi, in the presence of two other officers, received information from a confidential informant that he had been in defendant's apartment the day before, saw him sell marijuana and that he was in possession of marijuana there "now" at a certain location. One-half hour later the officers, without a search warrant or warrant of arrest, arrived at the premises. As they approached the front door of defendant's apartment, one Crowley emerged therefrom and upon learning they were police officers, slammed the door shut. They arrested Crowley and made entry. An altercation ensued, defendant claiming he did not know they were officers, and after handcuffing him, the officers searched the premises and found seven marijuana cigarettes on the floor of the hall leading to the bathroom and loose marijuana on the floor around and in the toilet bowl. Defendant told them he was not a peddler and that the marijuana was for his own use.

Defendant testified he did not use marijuana, did not have any in his possession, had none in the apartment, did not see any there and did not know the officers claimed they found marijuana in his apartment until they took him to the police station. He denied having made contrary statements to the officers.

At the hearing on probable cause in the absence of the jury, officer Fantuzzi was examined concerning defendant's arrest and subsequent search. At the outset the defense objected to the introduction of any evidence on the ground defendant's apartment and person were searched without probable cause. On voir dire, the officer testified he had known the informant for three years and the latter had given him reliable information concerning narcotics on three other occasions from August to October, 1957, leading to arrests or convictions; that he had learned from other officers he was reliable; and that the informant told him he had been in defendant's home the day before when defendant had sold marijuana and "the marijuana is there now," defendant's address, the location and that he lived there with a blond-haired woman.

On cross-examination, the defense asked officer Fantuzzi the names of the persons arrested on the three other occasions in reliance on previous information given by informant. The officer claimed "privilege on that answer." The prosecution objected on the ground that disclosure of the names would tend to lead to the identity of the informant. In sustaining the objection, the lower court declared: "Possibly, and then I don't know whether it is material." A second attempt to cross-examine the officer "on his reliability about the four (three) occasions" likewise resulted in a ruling precluding further inquiry on that point. The defense then asked officer Fantuzzi the identity of the informant. He claimed privilege (under section 1881(5), Code of Civil Procedure), refusing to divulge the name, which refusal the trial court upheld.

Thereafter, the trial judge ruled that the officers had "reasonable cause" and ordered the prosecution to proceed with the trial on the merits. The defense then stated: "I think the record is adequately protected, so that when the offer of evidence does come, I won't make any objection during the trial, because the court has already ruled it is admissible," to which the court affirmatively responded.

[1] Prejudicial error is claimed on two points—on voir dire the trial court limited cross-examination of the officer concerning the names of the persons previously arrested as a result of information supplied by the informant; and the trial judge did not require the officer on voir dire to disclose the identity of the informant. Appellant's real contention, however, is that his arrest was without probable cause making the subsequent search and seizure unlawful, and that in any event, he was entitled to have the name of the informant to aid him in the preparation of his defense. On the record before us we believe appellant's position on the issue of his arrest and search is well taken.

In answer to the claim that in preventing him from ascertaining the names of those arrested on prior information given by the informer, the trial court precluded defendant from inquiring into the reasonableness of the officer's reliance on the informer, which constituted the basis of his arrest and subsequent search, respondent argues that disclosure of their names might divulge the identity of the confidential informant and in any event, the names are immaterial as relating only to collateral issues.

[2] Since it was stipulated at the outset that the arrest and search of defendant's person and apartment were made without warrants, the burden of showing proper justification for the arrest, search and seizure then fell on the prosecution. Badillo v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 269, 294 P.2d 23. This it purported to assume on voir dire by eliciting testimony from officer Fantuzzi that the officers arrested defendant in reliance on information given to him by a confidential informant, upon which he had previously relied. If this was the only information upon which they acted in making forcible entry and arresting defendant, it is clear under the ruling of Priestly v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39, the objection to the question concerning the names of the arrestees should have been overruled.

[3] Officer Fantuzzi testified on voir dire that the arrest of defendant was made pursuant to the communication he received from the confidential informant. The record discloses that this was the only basis of defendant's arrest. Respondent argues briefly that "the police had more than mere information to sustain the arrest" and alludes to the evidence that prior to entry, one Crowley emerged from defendant's apartment and upon learning they were police officers, slammed the door. Although officer Fantuzzi related this evidence on voir dire, a reading of his testimony discloses that he described the occurrence only in passing and then as a part of a sequence of acts leading up to the entry of the premises. He testified to it at the end of his direct examination and not as a part of that upon which he based the arrest of defendant. Furthermore, he did not recount what if anything he did with Crowley or what if any connection Crowley had with defendant. He did not anywhere in his testimony refer to the encounter with Crowley as any justification for entry of the premises and the subsequent arrest of defendant. Even had he done so, we hardly think that evidence of a stranger leaving defendant's apartment and slamming the door shut is sufficient evidence apart from the communication of a confidential informant to establish probable cause for his arrest.

The objection that the disclosure of the names of the arrestees might divulge the identity of the informant is completely answered by the Supreme Court in Priestly v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39. Following the federal rule that requires the government to disclose the identity of the informant unless there is sufficient evidence apart from the confidential communication to establish probable cause the court held in 50 Cal.2d at page 818, 330 P.2d at page 43: "If testimony of communications from a confidential informer is necessary to establish the legality of a search, the defendant must be given a fair opportunity to rebut that testimony. He must therefore be permitted to ascertain the identity of the informer, since the legality of the officer's action depends upon the credibility of the information, not upon facts that he directly witnessed and upon which he could be cross-examined. * * * When the prosecution relies instead on communications from an informer to show reasonable cause and has itself elicited testimony as to those communications on direct examination, it is essential to a fair trial that the defendant have the right to cross-examine as to the source of those communications."

On the issue whether the defense had the right to a disclosure of the names to test the reasonableness of the officer's reliance on his informant and the credibility of the officer himself, we deem the answer to the question to which the objection was sustained to be material. The defendant had a right to learn the names of those previously arrested upon information given by the same informant, that he might ascertain if the officer was telling the truth or whether the officer used poor judgment in relying upon this particular informant. Certainly, had defendant, after learning the names, checked official records and found that these three persons had never actually been arrested or, if so, on a charge other than for narcotics offenses, the officer's credibility would have been irreparably shaken. Had a check revealed that the three had been arrested but not one had been held on preliminary hearing; or all or one or more had been released by police or their cases dismissed by the district attorney, this fact would surely have constituted a substantial showing that the officer exercised poor judgment in relying upon further information from the same informant which, of course, would go to the weight of the evidence.

[4] It must be borne in mind that the trial court and not the police officer must determine whether the latter's action is based upon probable cause, and when he testifies that he based the legality of an arrest on information given by a confidential informant, the court in deciding that probable cause existed for the arrest must find that the informant was reliable, the officer relied upon his information and the officer is telling the truth. "It is the officer's credibility and the soundness of his reasons for relying upon his informant that must impress the court before it can determine that the officer was authorized to make the arrest." People v. White, 159 Cal.App.2d 586, 324 P.2d 296, 298; People v. Weathers, 162 Cal.App.2d 545, 328 P.2d 222. It follows, therefore, on the hearing of probable cause, the defendant has the same right to present a defense on the determination of the reasonableness of the arrest or search as he does on the issue of his guilt at the trial. People v. Lawrence, 149 Cal. App.2d 435, 308 P.2d 821. Since the legality of officer Fantuzzi's conduct in arresting the defendant depended on his credibility and the truth of the information upon which he relied, defendant should have been permitted a fair opportunity to rebut his testimony. The evidence in this case presents a situation similar to that involving the search in Priestly v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39. The theory of the Supreme Court relating to disclosure of the identity of the informer in that case, we believe, should apply with equal force, under the circumstances of the case at bar, to the identity of the persons arrested on previous information given by the informer. The court said in 50 Cal.2d at page —, 330 P.2d at page 43: "If an officer were allowed to establish unimpeachably the lawfulness of a search merely by testifying that he received justifying information from a reliable person whose identity cannot be revealed, he would become the sole judge of what is probable cause to make the search. Such a holding would destroy the exclusionary rule. Only by requiring disclosure and giving the defendant an opportunity to present contrary or impeaching evidence as to the truth of the officer's testimony and the reasonableness of his reliance on the informer can the court make a fair determination of the issue." (Emphasis added.)

[5] Respondent has argued that appellant is precluded from taking advantage of the Supreme Court's pronouncements in Priestly v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39, because he made no motion to strike the officer's testimony. There is no merit to this contention. The record discloses that at the outset of the voir dire examination, the defense interposed an objection to the introduction of any evidence on the ground defendant's apartment and person were searched without probable cause. Of course, under the circumstances at bar, if the arrest was illegal, so then was the subsequent search and seizure. Again at the close of the hearing on probable cause, after the trial court had ordered the prosecution to proceed on the merits, defendant voiced his objection and believing his record to be adequately protected, advised the court that to eliminate interruption of the proceedings before the jury, he would not object during the trial. The response of the trial judge to this statement was "yes." It is well settled that where "the challenged evidence was obviously inadmissible at the time it was offered and appropriate objection was made to its introduction, a subsequent motion to strike is not necessary to preserve the error on appeal." Dolton v. Green, 72 Cal.App.2d 427, 440, 164 P.2d 795, 801.

We have considered appellant's second contention that it was error to refuse disclosure of the informer's identity on the ground that it prevented him from properly preparing his defense on the issue of guilt but deem it unnecessary to decide the same, having already concluded herein that the trial judge committed prejudicial error in denying defendant disclosure of the names of both those arrested and the informant on the determination of the issue of probable cause for defendant's arrest.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order denying motion for new trial are, and the same is each reversed, and the matter remanded for a new trial.

M. M. KOEHN, Petitioner and Respondent,

v.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION, DEPARTMENT OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL, Russell S. Munro, Director; E. L. Ledger, dba Ledger's Distributing Company, Respondents, Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board, Ralph McGill, Don Bonar, and Russell Mather, Members, Respondents and Appellants.

Civ. 17256.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 15, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 11, 1959.

Proceeding on a petition for writ of mandate praying for an order vacating an order of the Appeals Board dismissing an indefinite suspension of a wholesale liquor license as made by the State Board and directing the State Board to revoke the license. From a judgment of the Superior Court, County of Alameda, James R. Agee, J., the Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board and members appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that the State Board has jurisdiction to order reconsideration 48 days after decision; that judicial review could be had by mandamus and was not limited to certiorari; and that the District Court of Appeal would not decide issues not decided by the Superior Court or the Appeals Board.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇐482

Generally an administrative agency does not have the power to rehear or reopen its decision in the absence of statutory authority, and where that power is conferred by statute, the agency must exercise the power in accordance with the mode prescribed by the statute.

2. Statutes ⇐181(2)

Where language of a statute is, upon its face, reasonably susceptible of either of two constructions, one rendering it reasonable and harmonious and another which would be productive of absurd consequences, the former construction will be adopted.

3. Statutes ⇐219

The construction of a statute by the State Board is entitled to weight.

4. Intoxicating Liquors ⇐108(9)

Under the statute authorizing liquor control agency to order a reconsideration and providing that if no action is taken on a petition within the time allowed for ordering reconsideration the petition shall be denied, the stay provided for is not just to allow additional time for the filing of the petition but also to allow additional time to consider it and to order reconsideration if deemed advisable, and such would apply to a petition already filed, as well as to one that was to be filed. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 11521(a).

5. Intoxicating Liquors ⇐108(9)

Where defendant was charged with a violation of the Beverage Control Act by failing to engage in a bona fide wholesale liquor business and the State Board adopted the proposed decision of the hearing officer as its decision and defendant filed a petition for reconsideration and the State Board postponed the effective date of its order, State Board had jurisdiction to order a reconsideration of its decision 48 days thereafter. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 23779, 24201; West's Ann.Gov. Code, § 11521(a).

6. Mandamus ⇐174, 187(9)

In mandamus proceeding to vacate an order of Beverage Control Appeals Board dismissing an indefinite suspension as made by the State Board and directing the Board to revoke defendant's wholesale liquor license where there were no issues of fact to be tried and the only question was whether based upon admitted facts the State Board had jurisdiction to reconsider its decision which was a question of law, findings were unnecessary and their correctness need not be determined. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23779, 24201; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 11521(a).

7. Mandamus ⇐3(12)

Where the State Board of Beverage Control ordered the defendant's wholesale liquor license suspended and defendant filed a petition for reconsideration which was denied and the appeals board held that the State Board did not have jurisdiction and reversed its decision solely on that ground, petition for review of the action of the appeals board was not limited to certiorari but could be had by mandamus. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23082, 23084, 23091; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1067–1077, 1094.5; West's Ann.Labor Code, § 5950; West's Ann.Public Util.Code, §§ 1756, 1759; West's Ann.Const. art. 6, §§ 4b, 5; art. 20, § 22.

8. Intoxicating Liquors ⇐72
Mandamus ⇐3(12)

Since jurisdiction of the appeals board under the Beverage Control Act is derived directly from the Constitution, either mandamus or certiorari is available to test its decisions. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4b; art. 20, § 22.

9. Mandamus ⇐81

The statute providing that in review of administrative decisions on a writ of mandate court shall sit without a jury and declaring the kind of final order that is to be reviewed applies to decisions of the appeals boards under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act though the Board does not take evidence or exercise its discretion on the facts. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5.

10. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇐489

Statutory provisions that a decision shall be rendered within a defined period after hearing are generally construed as directory only, and failure to reach a final determination within the prescribed period does not deprive the agency of jurisdiction.

11. Intoxicating Liquors ⇐108(10)

Order entered by the appeals board under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act with respect to suspension of wholesale liquor license which was entered over five months after filing of the appeal was not invalid on the ground that the 60-day period stated in the statute is jurisdictional and that the appeals board lost its jurisdiction to act at the expiration of that time. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 7094, 23086, 23779, 24201.

12. Appeal and Error ⇐878(6)

Failure of parties to appeal from a judgment requires the appellate court to assume that they are satisfied with it.

13. Appeal and Error ⇐878(6)

Parties who have not appealed cannot attack findings and the only objections thereto which can be considered are those urged by the appellant.

14. Mandamus ⇐187(9)

In proceeding for mandate to vacate an order of the appeals board under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act dismissing an indefinite suspension of a wholesale liquor license as made by the State Board and directing the Board to revoke the license, where appeals board held that the State Board had no jurisdiction to grant reconsideration and refused to consider the merits of the final decision and the Superior Court reversed the appeal board's finding of lack of jurisdiction, but did not pass upon the merits of the State Board's decision but directed the Board to determine two other issues, request by respondents to the Court of Appeal to determine such issues would be denied under the circumstances. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23086, 23779, 24201.

BRAY, Justice.

The Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board (hereafter referred to as Appeals Board) appeals from a superior court judgment ordering issuance of a writ of mandate commanding said Appeals Board to vacate its order reversing the order of the State Board of Equalization[1] indefinitely suspending the beer and wine wholesale license of E. L. Ledger dba Ledger's Distributing Company and further ordering said Appeals Board to determine all issues left undecided on the appeal from the State Board's order.[2]

Record.

March 24, 1953, petitioner and respondent Koehn filed an accusation under section 40 of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act (now section 24201, Business and Professions Code) charging Ledger with a violation of section 6(f) of the act (now Bus. and Prof.Code, § 23779) in failing to actually engage in a bona fide wholesale liquor business under his license in that he made no sales for a period in excess of 45 days other than to himself. July 24, the hearing officer filed a proposed decision in which he found the charge not true and recommended that the accusation be dismissed. August 20, the State Board adopted the proposed decision as its decision, ordering it to become effective September 21. September 10, Koehn filed a petition for reconsideration. September 17, the State Board postponed the effective date of its order of August 20 to October 13. September 30 Ledger filed objections to the petition. October 8, the State Board granted the petition for reconsideration and ordered the matter referred to the hearing officer for additional hearing. November 24, the petition was heard. The written stipulation of Koehn and Ledger was filed to the effect that Ledger had made no sales at wholesale of either beer or wine to any retail licensee during the period August, 1948, to date. February 26, 1954, the hearing officer submitted a proposed decision finding that Ledger had made no sales during the period charged and recommended that the accusation be dismissed with a warning. September 16, the State Board declined to adopt the proposed decision and determined to decide the case pursuant to the provisions of subdivision (c) of section 11517, Administrative Procedure Act. December 16, the State Board ordered that Ledger's license be suspended indefinitely until such time as he might engage in a bona fide wholesale business. The decision was to become effective January 17, 1955. The certificate of this decision is dated December 28. Ledger filed a petition for reconsideration. This was denied January 11. February 4, Ledger filed with the Appeals Board an appeal from the decision of the State Board raising three points: (1) Did the State Board have jurisdiction to make its decision of December 28, 1954? (2) Did it proceed in the manner required by law in rejecting the stipulation for continuance entered into by the adverse parties? (3) Was the State Board's itnterpretation of the effect of section 23779, Business and Professions Code (formerly § 6(f), A.B.C. Act) accurate? July 20, 1955, the Appeals Board held that the State Board did not have jurisdiction and reversed its decision solely on that ground, stating that it felt that it was unnecessary to pass upon the other two points. Koehn then filed in the superior court a petition for writ of mandate praying for an order vacating the order of the Appeals Board dismissing the indefinite suspension as made by the State Board and directing the State Board to revoke Ledger's license. The superior court judgment was as hereinbefore set forth.

Questions Presented.

1. Did the State Board have jurisdiction to order reconsideration 48 days after decision? This, in turn, depends upon the power of the State Board to order a stay.

2. Were the findings proper?

3. Is judicial review of the Appeals Board's acts limited to certiorari in the District Court of Appeal?

4. Did the Appeals Board exceed its jurisdiction?

5. Should this court decide issues not decided by the superior court or the Appeals Board?

1. Stay Order.

August 20, 1953, was the date of the decision of the State Board. It was to become effective September 21. October 8, the order granting reconsideration was made. This was approximately 48 days after the decision. Admittedly, unless there was a valid stay order in effect, the power to grant reconsideration expired September 21. This brings us to the validity of the stay order made September 17 postponing the effective date to October 13. Appellant contends that section 11521(a), Government Code, which provides for a stay for the purpose of filing an application for reconsideration, is not applicable for the reason that the order of September 17, postponing the effective date of the decision, cannot be a stay for the purpose of filing an application for reconsideration, because such an application was then on file.

[1] It is the general rule that an administrative agency does not have the power to rehear or reopen its decision in the absence of statutory authority. Pacheco v. Clark, 1941, 44 Cal.App.2d 147, 153, 112 P.2d 67. Where that power is conferred by statute the agency must exercise the power in accordance with and in the mode prescribed by statute. 42 Am.Jur. 379; 73 C.J.S. Public Administrative Bodies and Procedure § 156, p. 492. In Moran v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 1948, 32 Cal. 2d 301, 304, 196 P.2d 20, it was stated that the administrative agency's power to order reconsideration expired on the effective date of the decision as set by the agency.

Section 11521(a), Government Code, provides: "The agency itself may order a reconsideration of all or part of the case on its own motion or on petition of any party. The power to order a reconsideration shall expire 30 days after the delivery or mailing of a decision to respondent, or on the date set by the agency itself as the effective date of the decision if such date occurs prior to the expiration of the 30-day period or at the termination of a stay of not to exceed 30 days which the agency may grant for the purpose of filing an application for reconsideration. If no action is taken on a petition within the time allowed for ordering reconsideration the petition shall be deemed denied." (Emphasis added.)

[2-6] Under this section, appellant concedes, had there not been an application for reconsideration on file, the State Board could at any time before the effective date of the decision, namely, September 17, have granted a stay of 30 days "for the purpose of filing an application for reconsideration," but as one was already on file before the effective date arrived, appellant contends that the board had no power to stay the order until the board could act upon such application. Such an interpretation would result in the absurd situation, that if one desiring reconsideration would withhold filing his petition the board could stay for 30 days the effective date of the decision, but if he filed such petition it could not and would have to determine his petition before the effective date of the order arrived. In interpreting section 11521(a) the following language is important: "If no action is taken on a petition within the time allowed for ordering reconsideration the petition shall be deemed denied." (Emphasis added.) Thus, the stay provided for is not just to allow additional time for the filing of the petition but is also to allow additional time to consider it and to order reconsideration if deemed advisable. This would necessarily apply to a petition already filed as well as to one that was to be filed. This is the common sense construction of the statute. See 23 Cal.Jur. p. 736, § 113.

Applicable here is the following from Goldsmith v. Board of Education, 66 Cal. App. 157, 163, 225 P. 783, 785: "It is a cardinal rule of statutory construction that, where the language of a statute is, upon its face, reasonably susceptible of either of two constructions, one which, in its application, will render it reasonable, fair, and just, and harmonious with its manifest purpose and another which, in its application, would be productive of absurd consequences, the former construction will be adopted." Moreover, the construction of the statute by the State Board is entitled to weight. See Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law, p. 529; 23 Cal.Jur. p. 776, § 152.

2. Findings.

[7] Appellant contends that in this type of proceeding findings are not required, and conversely that finding No. 7 to the effect that the postponement of the effective day of the decision was for the purpose of the State Board considering the petition for reconsideration then on file is not supported by any evidence; also that finding No. 7 to the effect that the State Board did have jurisdiction to grant reconsideration is not a finding of fact but a conclusion of law.

It has been held that in a mandamus proceeding if there has been a trial upon questions of fact, findings are necessary unless waived. Delany v. Toomey, 111 Cal.App.2d 570, 572, 245 P.2d 26. In our case there were no issues of fact to be tried; the only question submitted to the court was whether, based upon the admitted facts, the State Board had jurisdiction to reconsider its decision. This, of course, is a question of law. As findings were unnecessary their correctness need not be determined. We are only concerned with the court's determination of the issue of law.

3. Judicial Review.

[8-10] Appellant points to the fact that article XX, section 22, of the California Constitution, and sections 23082 and 23084, Business and Professions Code, provide in effect that the review of the acts of the State Board by the Appeals Board is limited to a quasi-judicial review of the actions of the State Board and that no new evidence may be taken. Appellant then contends that the only review of the Appeals Board's action can be by certiorari to the District Court of Appeal. It points to section 4b, article VI, Constitution, which states that the District Court of Appeal may exercise appellate jurisdiction "in proceedings of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition * * * and in such other special proceedings as may be provided by law * * *". (Emphasis added.) It then argues that the Legislature, in designating as the powers of the Appeals Board, the appellate review provisions of section 1094.5, Code of Civil Procedure (writ of mandamus) applicable to constitutional agencies (compare section 23084, Business and Professions Code with section 1094.5, Code of Civil Procedure as to constitutional agencies) intended by implication that the review provided for in section 23091, Business and Professions Code ("Final orders of the board shall be subject to judicial review as prescribed by law") would fall within the above quoted provision of the Constitution giving the District Court of Appeal original jurisdiction in "such other special proceedings as may be provided by law * * *". Such an interpretation of "judicial review as prescribed by law" is too narrow. "[L]aw" refers to section 1094.5, Code of Civil Procedure (mandamus) and sections 1067–1077, Code of Civil Procedure (certiorari). Both the District Courts of Appeal and the Supreme Court have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus and certiorari. In the instances where the sole jurisdiction of certiorari from the acts of an administrative agency is in the appellate courts such exclusive jurisdiction and the necessary procedure has been set forth by the Legislature. Thus sections 1756 and 1759 of the Public Utilities Code, providing certiorari from the acts of the Public Utilities Commission, has placed jurisdiction exclusively in the Supreme Court, and Labor Code, section 5950 providing certiorari from the acts of the Industrial Accident Commission has placed jurisdiction exclusively in the District Courts of Appeal. If, in connection with acts of the Appeals Board, the Legislature intended that certiorari should be the exclusive procedure and that the District Courts of Appeal should have exclusive jurisdiction, it is reasonable to assume that the Legislature would have said so, as it did in the Public Utilities Commission and Industrial Accident Commission matters.

In Covert v. State Board of Equalization, 1946, 29 Cal.2d 125, 173 P.2d 545, it was held that the State Board, although a statewide agency, had quasi-judicial powers "similar in some respects to those of a local administrative tribunal, a decision of which will be sustained if it has committed no error of law and if the evidence, although conflicting, is sufficient to support its findings of fact." 29 Cal.2d at page 131, 173 P.2d at page 548. Mandamus was recognized there as a proper proceeding in which to review the State Board's decision. In Boren v. State Personnel Board, 1951, 37 Cal.2d 634, 234 P.2d 981, the court stated that since the enactment of section 1094.5, Code of Civil Procedure (in 1945) it is no longer open to question that the writ of mandamus is appropriate for the purpose of inquiring into any final administrative order or decision of a statewide agency having quasi-judicial power. It also held that "since the jurisdiction of the State Personnel Board, including its adjudicating power, is derived directly from the Constitution * * * the writ of certiorari is also available to review the Board's decisions." 37 Cal.2d at page 637, 234 P.2d at page 983. The jurisdiction of the Appeals Board is likewise derived directly from the Constitution, so either mandamus or certiorari is available to test its decisions. Prior to the creation of the Appeals Board it was proper to use the writ of mandate to review determinations of statewide administrative agencies (either constitutional or statutory) and local boards. Code of Civil Procedure, section 1094.5, codified that law. See 10th Biennial Report of the Judicial Council, p. 45; also People v. County of Tulare, 1955, 45 Cal.2d 317, 319, 289 P.2d 11, 12, where in a tax case the court said, "The Legislature, in section 1094.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure, has provided an appropriate method of reviewing acts of a statewide administrative and quasi-judicial agency such as the State Board of Equalization." While none of these cases deal with decisions of the Appeals Board, as the board is of recent creation, we find nothing indicating that the rule of these cases should not apply to it. The main basis upon which appellant claims that section 1094.5, Code of Civil Procedure, does not apply is that the Appeals Board does not take evidence or exercise its discretion on the facts. But the only reasonable interpretation of the whole paragraph of section 1094.5(a), Code of Civil Procedure, demonstrates that it does apply to decisions of the Appeals Board. It is only stating that in reviewing administrative decisions on a writ of mandate, the court shall sit without a jury. It starts out: "Where the writ is issued for the purpose of inquiring into the validity of any final administrative order or decision made as the result of a proceeding in which by law a hearing is required to be given, evidence is required to be taken and discretion in the determination of facts is vested in the * * * board or officer * * *". (Emphasis added.) It is thus just stating the kind of final order. Such applies to the Appeals Board.

The decision of the Appeals Board is the result of a proceeding mentioned in the section and is the final decision sought to be reviewed. See Fiscus v. Dept. of Alcoholic Bev. Control, 1957, 155 Cal.App. 2d 234, 317 P.2d 993, 994, which held, because of the failure to exhaust administrative remedies by appealing to the Appeals Board, that a petitioner could not seek to review a decision of the department by mandamus. "'* * * The doctrine, whenever applicable, requires not merely the initiation of prescribed administrative procedures; it requires pursuing them to their appropriate conclusion and awaiting their final outcome before seeking judicial intervention * * *.'" (Emphasis added.) Thus the decision of the department could not be the final order or decision referred to in Code of Civil Procedure section 1094.5(a), as contended by the Appeals Board, since that section must be referring to judicially reviewable final orders or decisions and not any final order or decision which may be the result of, at different levels, a hearing and determination of facts. The Fiscus case, supra, reached its holding even though section 24301, Business and Professions Code, states that subject to article XX, section 22 of the Constitution, any ruling or order of the department is subject to review as provided by law in any court of competent jurisdiction. In reality the judicial review is of the department's decision, although it is taken from the order of the Appeals Board, since, under article XX, section 22, the only order the Appeals Board can make is for reversal or affirmance. "When the alternative writ of mandate was issued the return and answer of the appeals board raised not only the issue of whether the state board had acted within its jurisdiction, but also the issue whether the appeals board had acted within its jurisdiction and pursuant to its constitutional grant of authority." Koehn v. State Board of Equalization, supra, 1958, 50 Cal.2d 432, 326 P.2d 502, 505.

Both the Superior Courts and the District Courts of Appeal have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus and certiorari. Art. VI, §§ 4b and 5, Const. It has been the policy of both the Supreme Court and the District Courts of Appeal not to encourage original proceedings before it unless there are exceptional circumstances present. See 3 Witkin's California Procedure, p. 2470.

Thus, mandamus in the Superior Court lies to review the decision of the Appeals Board.

4. Appeals Board Jurisdiction.

[11, 12] Section 23086, Business and Professions Code (Alcoholic Beverage Control Act), provides: "Order: Time for entering. In all cases, the board shall enter its order within 60 days after the filing of an appeal." The Appeals Board order was entered over five months after the filing of the appeal. Respondent Koehn contends that the 60 day period stated in the section is jurisdictional and that the Appeals Board lost its jurisdiction to act at the expiration of that time. Applicable here is the language in Peak v. Industrial Accident Commission, 82 Cal.App.2d 926, 187 P.2d 905. There the commission made an award after the expiration of the 30 days mentioned in section 5800, Labor Code, which provides: "After final hearing by the commission, it shall, within thirty days, make and file * * * Its order

* * *" The court stated (82 Cal.App. 2d at page 932, 187 P.2d at page 909): "To hold that a failure of the commission to so act within the prescribed period causes the commission to lose jurisdiction * * * would be absurd." See 2 Cal.Jur.2d p. 180, § 94: "Statutory provisions providing that a decision shall be rendered within a defined period after hearing are generally construed to be directory only, and failure to reach a final determination within the prescribed period does not deprive the agency of jurisdiction." In Barry v. Contractors State License Board, 85 Cal.App. 2d 600, 193 P.2d 979, the registrar filed his decision recommending the revocation of a contractor's license after the expiration of the period required by the then section 7094, Business and Professions Code (since repealed). The court held the section to be directory only. We see no good reason for holding section 23086 other than directory.

5. Additional Issues.

[13, 14] As stated before, the Appeals Board held that the State Board had no jurisdiction to grant reconsideration and refused to consider the merits of the final decision of the State Board suspending Ledger's license. The superior court reversed the Appeal Board's finding of lack of jurisdiction, did not pass on the merits of the State Board's decision but directed the Appeals Board to determine the two other issues presented by the appeal to the Appeals Board. We are requested by respondent Koehn and by respondent State Board to determine these issues or at least to construe section 23779, Business and Professions Code, the section under which the State Board purported to act in suspending Ledger's license. Appellant opposes this request as do amici curiae representing Safeway Stores, Inc., Beverage Distributors, Inc., and respondent Ledger. The briefs of the amici curiae state that there are proceedings now pending before the State Board seeking revocation of liquor licenses of "four chains" apparently on the same grounds upon which the State Board acted in the Ledger matter. They point out that Koehn and the State Board did not appeal from the superior court judgment and that for us to disregard the portion of that judgment directing the Appeals Board to review the other issues presented to it would be, in effect, reversing pro tanto the judgment of the superior court. They also contend that the record before us is not sufficient to enable us to properly determine these other issues. The failure of parties to appeal from a judgment requires us to assume that they are satisfied with the judgment. See Kofsky v. Smart & Final Iris Co., 131 Cal. App.2d 530, 532, 281 P.2d 5. In Koehn's petition for mandamus he asked the superior court to revoke Ledger's license. The effect of our determining the merits of the appeal to the Appeals Board could possibly result in a reversal of the superior court's refusal to revoke the license from which refusal no appeal has been filed. "* * * 'it is well settled that parties who have not appealed cannot attack the findings and that the only objections thereto which can be considered are those urged by the appellant.'" Mott v. Horstmann, 1950, 36 Cal.2d 388, 393, 224 P.2d 11, 14; see also Palma v. Watson Surplus Lines Agency, 1957, 148 Cal.App.2d 879, 882, 307 P.2d 689; Phillips v. Phillips, 1953, 41 Cal.2d 869, 875, 264 P.2d 926. We see no reason for determining the questions referred by the trial court to the Appeals Board. Also, under the circumstances of this case, any construction we might give to section 23779, Business and Professions Code, would be merely dictum.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 22933.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 18, 1958.

Actions to recover money paid under mistake as to availability of transit privileges or service at defendants' Santa Barbara processing plant with respect to several carloads of dried beans and peas shipped from points in Idaho and Washington by way of Portland, thence to Santa Barbara and finally to eastern destinations. The Superior Court of Santa Barbara County, Ernest D. Wagner, J., rendered summary judgments for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that even though plaintiff had not filed affidavit in opposition to defendants' motion for summary judgment, court was entitled to accept as true facts alleged in defendants' affidavit only if such facts were within affiant's personal knowledge and were facts to which he could competently testify.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings.

1. Carriers ⇐189

"Transit privilege" enables commodities to be shipped from point A to point B, there to be stored, marketed or processed, and later reshipped to point C at a rate less than combined separate rates from A to B and B to C.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Transit Privilege".

2. Judgment ⇐186

Issue finding, rather than issue determination, is pivot upon which summary judgment law turns; and a hearing on motion for summary judgment is not a trial on merits. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 53, 437c.

3. Judgment ⇐186

On motion for summary judgment, resort may not be had to pleadings. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 53, 437c.

4. Judgment ⇐185.2(9)

A valid answer may not be stricken on motion for summary judgment unless plaintiff, by affidavit, shows such facts as may be deemed sufficient to present a triable issue; and plaintiff failing to file counter-affidavit in opposition to defendants' motion for summary judgment and failing to file motion for summary judgment and supporting affidavit in its own behalf could not have judgment even if defendants' affidavit established beyond peradventure validity of plaintiff's claims. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

5. Judgment ⇐185.2(8)

True nature of litigation must be ascertained from allegations contained in moving affidavit, and reference may not be had to allegations of complaint in order to ascertain existence of triable fact requiring denial of motion for summary judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

6. Judgment ⇐185.2(7)

Where moving affidavit was uncontroverted, trial court was entitled to accept as true, for purposes of motion for summary judgment, facts therein stated. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

7. Judgment ⇐181(4)

If there be any doubt as to propriety of motion for summary judgment, courts should, without hesitancy, deny same. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

8. Judgment ⇐185.2(7)

Even though plaintiff had not filed affidavit in opposition to defendants' motion for summary judgment, court was entitled to accept as true facts alleged in defendants' affidavit only if such facts were within affiant's personal knowledge and were facts to which he could competently testify. Absent fraud or collusion, carrier's payment of refunds is not against public policy or sound morals. Interstate Commerce Act, § 1 et seq., 49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

16. Judgment ⇐185.1(8)

In summary judgment proceedings, there can be no waiver of right to object to matter inadmissible by virtue of its incompetency, and supporting affidavit setting forth facts to which affiant could not competently testify could not, even in absence of objection to incompetent evidence, support judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 53, 437c.

17. Judgment ⇐185.1(8)

There first must be a sufficiently supportive affidavit before defects of any counteraffidavit, either of form or substance, need be examined on motion for summary judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 437c, 1905.

18. Judgment ⇐185.1(3)

In order that court's discretion may properly be exercised on motion for summary judgment, moving party unable to make showing except upon information and belief should at least present affidavit by someone who states of his own knowledge that such other persons do know or claim to know facts and have refused to make affidavits, and such affidavit ought to name other persons and set forth what each one knows or claims to know. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

LILLIE, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from summary judgments in defendants' favor in each of the above actions which were consolidated for the purpose of considering defendants' motions. Hereinafter, and for the purposes of this appeal, we shall treat the motions as a single pleading.

[1] From the affidavit supporting the motion, and the entire record before us, it appears that the instant litigation had its genesis in a dispute over the availability of transit privileges or service at defendants' Santa Barbara processing plant, with respect to several carloads of dried beans and peas shipped from points in Idaho and Washington by way of Portland, thence to Santa Barbara and finally to eastern destinations. The recognized privilege of transit enables a commodity to be shipped from point A to point B, there to be stored, marketed or processed, and later reshipped to point C at a rate less than the combined separate rates from A to B and B to C.

During the time in question defendants were engaged at Santa Barbara in the processing of beans and peas to be sold in eastern markets. They arranged to do business with growers in the Pacific Northwest and accordingly made certain inquiries from a Union Pacific freight agent in Idaho, there and then alleged by defendants to be likewise acting for plaintiff, who advised them that, under the rules and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transit privileges were available at Santa Barbara in connection with transcontinental rates from Portland, Oregon, and that defendants could avail themselves of such rates and transit service by paying the local rates from Idaho origins to Portland, plus the rates from Portland to eastern destinations. Between April of 1949 and February of 1951, defendants shipped from points in Idaho and Washington, by way of Portland, numerous carloads of dried beans and peas consigned to themselves at Santa Barbara. Plaintiff, as delivering carrier, collected charges at Santa Barbara based on the combination of local rates to and from Portland with respect to the Idaho shipments, and on the basis of the joint through rates via Portland on the Washington carloads. On the outbound shipments from Santa Barbara, after the transiting operation had been completed, tariff charges based on the transcontinental rate from Portland via Santa Barbara were assessed and paid to plaintiff. Thereafter, at defendants' request, plaintiff refunded to them that portion of the charge pertaining to the movement from Portland to the transit point at Santa Barbara, less the transit charge. These refunds were made because of the belief, then allegedly adhered to by both plaintiff and defendants, that dried beans and peas were "foodstuffs" which, under applicable tariff provisions, would authorize the transit operation at Santa Barbara. Later, it developed that this belief was erroneous and that the commodities in question were not "foodstuffs" within the definition of that term by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Plaintiff's four actions, alleging payment of money under mistake, sought recovery of a portion of the refunds paid to defendants, such portion representing the freight charges from Portland to Castle Crag, California, a point near Dunsmuir in the northern part of the state. As plaintiff points out in its brief, the total charges for the through movement would thus be based on the applicable rates from origin points to Castle Crag, plus the applicable rate from that point to final eastern destinations, plus transit charge. The selection of Castle Crag as a pivotal point may be explained by the fact that the Pacific coast territory for transit privilege purposes has been divided by the transcontinental lines, with the apparent approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, into three zones: (1) north of Castle Crag; (2) south of Mojave and San Luis Obispo, embracing Santa Barbara, and (3) between Castle Crag and the Mojave-San Luis Obispo line. Transit privileges, in connection with eastbound rates, are available only in that zone which embraces the point of origin.

Plaintiff's suits were held in abeyance pending a decision by the Interstate Commerce Commission on a complaint filed by the defendants in which it was initially claimed that the charges originally assessed by plaintiff and paid by defendants were applicable; subsequently the complaint was limited to the claim that plaintiff's failure to provide transit at Santa Barbara was unjust, unreasonable and unduly prejudicial and that the rates from the points of origin in Idaho and Washington destined to transcontinental destinations were unjustly and unreasonably high, particularly with respect to the Portland to Castle Crag segment or factor. Both contentions were rejected by the Commission, which concluded: "We find that the defendant's (Southern Pacific Company) failure to provide transit service at Santa Barbara on dried beans and peas originating in Idaho and Washington, in connection with transcontinental rates from Portland, is not shown to have been or to be unjust, unreasonable, or unduly prejudicial, and that the assailed rates on this traffic are not shown to have been or to be unjust or unreasonable. The complaint will be dismissed."

Following the rendition of this decision, defendants answered the complaints on file and denied the existence of any mutual mistake of fact. Shortly thereafter, they moved the court below for summary judgment based on a single affidavit executed by George M. Fish, as an individual defendant in one of the actions and as President of Seaboard Mills, a corporation, a defendant in each of the remaining suits, to which affidavit there was attached an unauthenticated copy of the Commission's report and order. A memorandum of authorities accompanied the motion. No counteraffidavit was executed by plaintiff, although it also filed a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition thereto. The trial court granted the motion for summary judgment, setting forth its reasons in a memorandum which has been made part of the record. It adopted the argument of defendants (1) that if the plaintiff made the refunds by mistake, the mistake was one of law and no recovery could be had; and (2) assuming that there was no mistake of law, then the contract was an illegal one and plaintiff could not recover since the courts will not assist any party to an illegal contract.

Appellant argues herein that it is suing to recover lawful tariff charges which it has the right and the obligation to collect under applicable provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, regardless of any circumstances that may be involved; and therefore it is immaterial whether the refund to defendants resulted from a mistake of law or pursuant to an illegal contract. Because, contends appellant, the issue here is purely one of law, it additionally requests this appellate court to exercise the powers conferred by section 53, Code of Civil Procedure, and not only reverse the lower court's judgment, but direct the entry of judgment for appellant. Respondents, on the other hand, submit that their uncontroverted affidavit is sufficient to support their judgment.

[2] With respect to appellant's contentions, it is necessary at the outset to observe, since the point is not once touched upon by appellant, that we are not here confronted with an appeal from a judgment after trial on the merits. To the contrary, the proceeding in the court below was a summary one, authorized and governed by section 437c. Code of Civil Procedure, which insofar as then pertinent read as follows: "In superior courts * * * when an answer is filed in any kind of action if it is claimed that * * * the action has no merit, on motion * * * supported by affidavit * * the complaint may be dismissed and judgment may be entered, in the discretion of the court unless the other party, by affidavit or affidavits shall show such facts as may be deemed by the judge hearing the motion sufficient to present a triable issue of fact."

"By an unbroken line of decision in this state since the date of the original enactment of section 437c, the principle has become well established that issue finding rather than issue determination is the pivot upon which the summary judgment law turns" (Walsh v. Walsh, 18 Cal.2d 439, 441, 116 P.2d 62; Poochigian v. Layne, 120 Cal. App.2d 757, 760, 261 P.2d 738); hence, a hearing on motion for summary judgment is not a trial on the merits (Luders v. Pummer, 152 Cal.App.2d 276, 279, 313 P.2d 38; Shea v. Leonis, 29 Cal.App.2d 184, 187, 84 P.2d 277).

[3, 4] We first dispose of appellant's contention that it is entitled to an entry of judgment in its favor upon a reversal herein, by reason of the asserted undisputed facts set forth in defendants' affidavit and the applicable law, notwithstanding appellant's failure to file a counteraffidavit on its own behalf. Actually, appellant herein seeks to rely upon respondents' affidavit supporting respondents' motion for summary judgment in the lower court. As section 437c clearly indicates, a complaint may be dismissed or answer stricken "unless the other party, by affidavit or affidavits shall show such facts as may be deemed * * * sufficient to present a triable issue of fact." Resort may not be had to the pleadings since "(i)t is not the purpose of the procedure under section 437c to test the sufficiency of the pleadings" (Eagle Oil & Refining Co. v. Prentice, 19 Cal.2d 553, 560, 122 P.2d 264, 268). Having failed to file a counteraffidavit in opposition to defendants' motion or a motion for summary judgment and supporting affidavit in its own behalf, appellant is thus limited to defendants' affidavit, and in effect is here asking this court to hold that the requirements of section 437c may be satisfied by its reliance on defendants' motion and affidavit and its failure to present even a supporting affidavit. A similar contention was rejected in Coyne v. Krempels, 36 Cal.2d 257, 262, 223 P.2d 244, 247, when the court said, "So construed, section 437c would be meaningless." To the same effect is Cone v. Union Oil Co., 129 Cal. App.2d 558, 563, 277 P.2d 464. In the Coyne case, supra, the defendant failed to file an affidavit and futilely argued that the allegations of fact in the affidavit supporting the motion were controverted by the denials in his answer. The situation here seems parallel albeit in reverse. Since a valid answer may not be stricken "unless the other party, by affidavit * * * shall show such facts as may be deemed * * * sufficient to present a triable issue" (Emphasis added), appellant may not prevail even if it be assumed that the respondents' affidavit established beyond peradventure the validity of appellant's claims. Furthermore, the relief here sought by appellant must be "on motion" duly made as provided by section 437c, and no such motion admittedly was ever presented on appellant's behalf. Absent any authority in the applicable statute, unlike the situation in other jurisdictions (48 A.L.R.2d 1188, 1197) we are powerless to enter any judgment against respondents since they are the sole moving parties; additionally, we are likewise not empowered to avail ourselves of the authority granted by section 53, Code of Civil Procedure, summary judgment being a proceeding governed exclusively by the provisions of section 437c.

[5, 6] We turn now to respondents' claim that their uncontroverted affidavit is sufficient to support the judgment appealed from. They correctly point out that reference may not be had to the allegations of the complaint in order to ascertain the existence of a triable fact, but that the true nature of the litigation must be ascertained from the allegations contained in the moving affidavit. Here such affidavit was uncontroverted, and the trial court was entitled to accept as true the facts therein stated (Cone v. Union Oil Co., supra, 129 Cal. App.2d 562, 277 P.2d 467). Certain portions therefrom have heretofore been mentioned, and it is respondents' position that the facts therein alleged make it manifest that appellant is not seeking to collect tariff charges but that the complaint is one for money paid by mistake of law. They lay stress on the error arising from the mistaken belief that dried peas and beans were "foodstuffs" within the rules and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission and argue that the voluntary payment of money by mistake in connection therewith, or as incidental to payments between shipper and carrier, does not convert an action for recovery of that money into one to enforce payment of shipping charges under the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S. C.A. § 1 et seq. A line of decisions, beginning with Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. T. M. Partridge Lumber Co., D.C.Minn., 17 F. 2d 657, appears to generally support respondents' position. In the Partridge case, supra, the defendant shipped a carload of cedar poles and paid the plaintiff carrier a sum in excess of the proper charge; later the plaintiff made a refund mistakenly in excess of the proper sum and sued to recover such excess. The court held that the action was not one to recover part of the carrier's charges but a suit on implied contract to refund money paid through mistake. In the recent case of St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co. v. Willard Mirror Co., D.C.1958, 160 F.Supp. 895, involving a summary judgment proceeding, the court adopted the reasoning of the Partridge case, stating that it was required to follow the appellate decisions of that circuit "regardless of what the trial court might think the law should be on a particular matter." 160 F. Supp. at page 899. Respondents point out that the Partridge case has never been overruled or modified, although it has been distinguished in later decisions, both federal and state. Respondents then assert, since appellant cannot recover on the theory that it is suing to collect tariff charges, it likewise cannot prevail on the claim of mistake because such mistake was one of law and not of fact. They cite the following from People v. Kelly, 35 Cal.App.2d 571, 574, 96 P.2d 372, 373: "A mistake of fact is where a person understands the facts to be other than they are; whereas a 'mistake of law' is where a person knows the facts as they really are, but has a mistaken belief as to the legal consequences of those facts." It is argued that appellant knew all the facts in the situation at bar, namely, the identity of the shipper, the identity of the goods and their consignees, except that appellant did not know that the shipments were "foodstuffs" within contemplation of the rules and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The mistake being assertedly one of law, respondents contend that appellant cannot recover, under the rule or policy of the law against reopening settled transactions where the transferee has made an honest claim and payment has been made without coercion or mistake of fact. Cooley v. County of Calaveras, 121 Cal. 482, 53 P. 1075. They cite a Washington decision, Southern Pacific Co. v. Frye & Bruhn, 82 Wash. 9, 143 P. 163, which they contend involves problems practically parallel to the instant situation, where the carrier's claims were rejected. We also take note of the extended argument supporting respondents' claims for an affirmance of the judgment on the alternative theory that the contract sued upon was an illegal one and neither party is entitled to recover. For reasons hereinafter appearing, extended comment on the substance of such argument is deemed unnecessary.

Opposed to the foregoing points asserted by respondents, appellant has listed an imposing list of authorities, mostly federal cases, dealing almost exclusively with their main contention that a common carrier is obligated and has a right to collect lawful tariff charges under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act. It traces the development of case law construing the Act, the purpose and intent of Congress in enacting the pertinent legislation and the various refinements which assertedly are now settled and determinative of the problem at hand. Emphasized is the finding of the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to respondents' complaint and which, it is argued, supports appellant's claim that the tariff charges were and are reasonable and should be paid in full. The case of Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. T. M. Partridge Lumber Co., supra, relied on by respondents, they seek to distinguish; similar efforts are directed to another of respondents' main authorities, Southern Pacific Co. v. Frye & Bruhn, supra. We hesitate to say that these efforts have not been successful, but observe, particularly with respect to the

[7–10] In the last analysis, however, this is a proceeding for summary judgment and we are bound by settled principles to be observed in the application of, and procedure under, section 437c. The procedure has been said to be "drastic and should be used with caution * * *." Eagle Oil & Refining Co. v. Prentice, 19 Cal.2d 553, 556, 122 P.2d 264, 265. Accordingly, if there be any "doubt as to the propriety of the motion, courts should, without hesitancy, deny the same." Whaley v. Fowler, 152 Cal.App.2d 379, 385, 313 P.2d 97, 100. Since appellant failed to file an affidavit in opposition, the lower court was entitled to accept as true the facts alleged in respondents' affidavit (Cone v. Union Oil Co., supra, 129 Cal.App.2d 562, 277 P.2d 467), provided such facts are within the affiant's personal knowledge and to which he could competently testify (Coyne v. Krempels, supra, 36 Cal.2d 261–262, 223 P.2d 246–247; Cone v. Union Oil Co., supra, 129 Cal.App.2d 562, 277 P.2d 467). In this latter respect, the crucial portions of section 437c read as follows: "The affidavit * * * in support of the motion must contain facts sufficient to entitle * * * defendant to a judgment * * * and the facts stated therein shall be within the personal knowledge of the affiant, and shall be set forth with particularity, and each affidavit shall show affirmatively that affiant, if sworn as a witness, can testify competently thereto" (Emphasis added.) Also, the procedure being a drastic one, the affidavit of the moving party must be strictly construed (Eagle Oil & Refining Co. v. Prentice, supra, 19 Cal.2d 556, 122 P.2d 265) and to meet the requirement of "particularity" found in the statute, the movant's affidavit should set forth evidentiary and not ultimate facts. Murphy v. Kelly, 137 Cal.App.2d 21, 30–31, 289 P.2d 565.

[11] With the foregoing principles in mind, an examination of respondents' affidavit discloses a lack of legitimate compliance with the statute's strict requirements. Thus, there is a claim therein that affiant Fish would be a competent witness, but no showing that he would be. True, he states that he is "one of the defendants" in one of the four actions and "an officer, to wit, the President of the defendant Seaboard Mills," the defendant in the remaining three actions, and that "the facts hereinafter set forth. * * * are within the personal knowledge of the affiant" and "that affiant, if sworn, can testify competently to such facts. * * *" However, there follows a series of averments, many of which could not be within affiant's personal knowledge and hence constitute hearsay, conclusion and opinion; and could not be factual proof required by the statute (Weichman v. Vetri, 100 Cal.App.2d 177, 179, 223 P.2d 288; Murphy v. Kelly, 137 Cal.App.2d 21, 28, 289 P.2d 565; Schessler v. Keck, 138 Cal.App.2d 663, 669, 292 P.2d 314). For example, after reference to the shipments from the points of origin to Santa Barbara, the affidavit states that prior thereto (no date being given) "defendants were informed by the freight agent of the Union Pacific Railroad Company at Nampa, Idaho, then and there acting as the servant, agent and employee of the plaintiff and in the ordinary and regular course of his duties as such agent of plaintiff, that under the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission * * * dried beans, peas and lentils from Idaho and other northwestern points could be shipped at local rates to Portland, Oregon, and that beyond Portland, Oregon, through rates east would apply on beans, peas and lentils stopped in transit in Santa Barbara * * " The statement that the Union Pacific agent was also the agent for plaintiff was a pure conclusion on affiant's part and, if sworn, affiant could not competently testify that such a relationship existed. Further conclusional in character, and also lacking in particularity, is the declaration attributed to the alleged agent that the shipments in question were subject to transit privileges; thus, it cannot be ascertained when and in what manner the representation was made, and there is no showing that the representation was within the scope of the agent's authority or that affiant could competently testify as to the extent of such authority. The affidavit continues: " * that defendant believed said representation of said agent of plaintiff that defendants were legally entitled to transit privileges * * * and affiant is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief alleges, that the said plaintiff at the said time and place and thereafter, until it was otherwise informed by one of its connecting carriers, so believed." Such an averment on its face is hearsay insofar as it seeks to establish the opinion or belief then adhered to by plaintiff. The affidavit then recites: "that at the time said representations were made by plaintiff to defendants as to the lawful tariff charges for the shipments then contemplated, and thereafter made * * * and at all times thereafter * * * both plaintiff and defendants knew that under the rules and regulations of the said Interstate Commerce Commission, transit charges at Santa Barbara * * * were available on 'foodstuffs' and at said time and thereafter during the entire period when said refunds were being made * * * both plaintiff and defendants believed that the said beans * * * were foodstuffs within the legal definition of the term as the same is used in the rules and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission * * * that plaintiff and defendants, at a time subsequent to the last of said refunds * * * ascertained that their legal conclusion that the said beans * * * were 'foodstuffs' was erroneous and they had, in that respect, mistaken the law." The foregoing matter is obviously so replete with conclusions and personal opinions and beliefs as to make it wholly deficient as a basis for a summary judgment. Allegations which follow, and need not be summarized or quoted, also depart from the strict requirements of the statute.

[12, 13] The cornerstone of respondents' defense was the mistake of law assertedly adhered to by appellant; absent an exposition of any evidentiary facts sufficient to establish the existence of such mistake, there is nothing upon which a summary judgment for respondents on that ground could validly be based. It is well settled that if a party is to prevail on his motion for summary judgment, his supporting affidavit must state facts covering every element necessary to sustain a judgment in his favor (Kimber v. Jones, 122 Cal.App.2d 914, 919, 265 P.2d 922). This, the respondents have not done by facts to which the affiant could competently testify. In this respect we also point out that the copy of the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, attached to the affidavit, was neither certified nor authenticated and was therefore incompetent as proof of its contents (section 1905, Code of Civil Procedure; Low v. Woodward Oil Co., Ltd., 133 Cal.App.2d 116, 122, 283 P.2d 720).

[14, 15] The same conclusion must also be reached regarding the alternative finding of the trial court that the contract was an illegal one and recovery thereby barred. While affiant could well have testified, if sworn, to the payment of refunds by appellant, the averment to that effect, standing alone, does not warrant a finding, especially in proceedings of this kind, that appellant had thereby broken the law and was barred from recovery. Before a court can dismiss a complaint under section 437c it must clearly appear that the action is without merit, and every reasonable doubt must be resolved in favor of the pleading (Arnold v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc., 23 Cal.2d 741, 744, 146 P.2d 684). The specific statute whose mandate has been violated is not referred to, and it cannot be said that the payment of refunds by a carrier, absent an allegation of fraud or collusion, is against public policy or sound morals. Indeed, authority exists that a carrier has a duty, as well as a right, to collect refunds paid by mistake or even by collusion (Gardner v. Rich Mfg. Co., 68 Cal.App.2d 725, 730, 158 P.2d 23; Butler v. Bell Oil & Refining Co., 70 Cal. App.2d 728, 730, 161 P.2d 559).

[16–18] As pointed out earlier in this opinion, no affidavit was presented by appellant in opposition to the motion. Upon oral argument, however, appellant indicated that it elected to take advantage of the defects in the moving affidavit if this court should find that the record did not justify a reversal for other reasons. Respondents, on the other hand, orally argued that incompetent evidence, unless objected to, will support a judgment. They further contended that some of the allegations necessarily had to be set forth upon information and belief because they were peculiarly and solely within the knowledge of the appellant. It is the rule in California that in summary judgment proceedings there can be no waiver of the right to object to matter inadmissible by virtue of its incompetency. In Gardenswartz v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 23 Cal.App.2d Supp. 745, 751, 68 P.2d 322, 325, it is declared: "Under this provision, summary judgment for plaintiff cannot be ordered, even though affidavits for the defendant be insufficient or absent, unless the plaintiff presents affidavits in support of his motion which comply with the section and show that he is entitled to judgment." (Emphasis added.) Cited as support for this conclusion is the Michigan case of MacClure v. Noble, 259 Mich. 601, 244 N.W. 174, where notice of the motion for summary judgment was served on the defendant's attorney and he did not appear. The affidavit having been found to be deficient, the court stated: "The failure of the defendants' attorney to appear and contest the motion was not a waiver of the necessity of plaintiff's compliance with the statute and rule." The Maryland case of Power v. Allied Asphalt Products Corporation, 162 Md. 175, 159 A. 251, involved a similar situation, it thus being claimed that defendant's failure to object to the faulty affidavit waived all errors therein contained. At page 253 of 159 A. the court said: "Referring to the objection last stated, it may be said that the doctrine of waiver has no application to the facts of this case. The plaintiff's right to a judgment under the act must depend not entirely upon the defendant's acts, but upon his own as well. The court in such cases sits in the exercise of a special, limited statutory jurisdiction, and, unless he does those things which the act prescribes as essential to jurisdiction under its terms, the plaintiff can claim none of the benefits." The Supreme Court in Coyne v. Krempels, 36 Cal.2d 257, 261, 223 P.2d 244, 246, thus reaffirmed the holding in Gardenswartz v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., supra: "Summary judgment for plaintiff is proper only if the affidavits in support of his motion state facts that, if proved, would be sufficient to sustain judgment in his favor and defendant does not 'by affidavit or affidavits * * * show such facts as may be deemed by the judge hearing the motion sufficient to present a triable issue of fact.'" To the same effect are Kelliher v. Kelliher, 101 Cal.App.2d 226, 231–232, 225 P.2d 554, and Desny v. Wilder, 46 Cal.2d 715, 725–726, 299 P.2d 257. Thus, there first must be a sufficiently supportive affidavit before the defects of any counteraffidavit, either of form or substance, need be examined; and, of course, no distinction is made in the statute as to the status of the moving party, whether plaintiff or defendant. With regard to respondents' claim that this is an instance in which the movant was unable to make a showing except upon information and belief; in order that the court's discretion may properly be exercised, the moving party "should at least present an affidavit by someone who states of his own knowledge that such other persons do know or claim to know the facts and have refused to make affidavits, and such affidavit ought to name the other persons and set forth what each one knows or claims to know * * *." Gardenswartz v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., supra, 23 Cal.App.2d Supp. 750, 68 P.2d 325. There was no such averment in the instant case.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

FAMILY SERVICE AGENCY OF SANTA BARBARA, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Joseph J. AMES and Lucille G. Ames, One Doe, Two Doe, and Three Doe, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 22915.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 18, 1958.

Quiet title action. The Superior Court of Santa Barbara County, Ernest D. Wagner, J., rendered summary judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that in absence of any allegations in affidavits excusing or explaining failure to attach copies of official records required by best evidence rule to establish necessary facts, deficiencies in affidavits could not be excused.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

1. Judgment ⇐186

In summary judgment proceedings, court is without authority to make findings of fact.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐134(1)

No appeal lies from an order granting summary judgment.

3. Judgment ⇐186

Propriety of granting or denying motion for summary judgment is determined by sufficiency of affidavits on file, and while pleadings serve to define issues, it is showing made by affidavits that is determinative. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

4. Judgment ⇐181(4)

If any doubt exists as to whether summary judgment should be granted, doubt should be resolved against moving party. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

5. Adverse Possession ⇐13

To acquire title by adverse possession, claimant must have been in actual and open and notorious possession of premises under color of title or claim continuously and without interruption for five years, and must have paid all taxes assessed.

6. Judgment ⇐185.2(3)

Before plaintiff can prevail on summary judgment, its affidavits must state facts covering every element necessary to sustain judgment in its favor. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

7. Evidence ⇐158(16)

That taxes had been assessed to, and paid by, plaintiff, seeking to acquire title to realty, rather than by defendants, claiming title by adverse possession, could not be proved by parol evidence and would have to be established by copies of official records. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1855, 1920, 1926.

8. Judgment ⇐185.1(8)

There can be no waiver, in summary judgment proceedings, of right to object to matter inadmissible by virtue of its incompetency. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

11. Judgment ⇐181(4)

Any doubt as to granting of summary judgment must be resolved against moving party. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

12. Judgment ⇐185.2(7)

As defendants' counteraffidavit, denying in substance claims made by plaintiff, might defeat plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, it would have to be accepted as true. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 437c.

Lynch & Reilly, Santa Barbara, for appellants.

Price, Postel & Parma, Santa Barbara, Robert M. Jones, San Francisco, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendants from a summary judgment in a quiet title action involving a parcel of property in the city of Santa Barbara.

The complaint contained two causes of action, the first in the usual form of quiet title and the second in damages for trespass. Defendants' answer denied the material allegations of the complaint, and as affirmative defenses asserted ownership in the land by a 1947 deed from one Melendez and ownership by adverse possession since 1929 through themselves and their predecessors in interest. Plaintiff thereafter filed a motion for summary judgment based on affidavits of certain of its officers and other individuals including city and county officials and employees. A counter-affidavit was filed by one of the defendants, and following a hearing the court granted the motion, and on August 5, 1957, signed an "Order on Motion for Summary Judgment" which included findings of fact, conclusions of law and an adjudication that title be quieted in plaintiff as against defendants, making no reference to the matter of damages. Present counsel for defendants had become attorneys of record only two days prior to the order. On September 3, 1957, without vacating its previous order, the court signed new findings of fact and conclusions of law covering the issues in the first cause of action and, by stipulation of the parties, the amount of damages. A formal judgment was signed and entered on September 3, 1957. Defendants appeal from that judgment and the judgment or "order" of August 5.

[1, 2] At the outset, it should be noted that in summary judgment proceedings the court is without authority to make findings of fact (Weichman v. Vetri, 100 Cal.App. 2d 177, 180, 223 P.2d 288) and in connection with the attempted appeal from the "order" of August 5, 1957, no appeal lies from an order granting summary judgment (Cullen v. Spremo, 142 Cal.App.2d 225, 232, 298 P.2d 579). However, we shall construe the August 5 "Order" as a judgment which was superseded by the judgment of September 3, and dismiss the attempted appeal from the former.

Appellants contend that the affidavits in support of the motion for summary judgment were insufficient as a matter of law to defeat their claims to ownership either by record title or by adverse possession. It is further contended that the motion was noticed upon the "papers, pleadings, files, records and proceedings in the action," contrary to settled rules in such proceedings which limit the court's consideration to affidavits only. An additional point relating to the findings on damages has been abandoned by stipulation.

[3, 4] A motion for summary judgment is provided by section 437c, Code of Civil Procedure, the pertinent portion of which then read as follows: "The affidavit or affidavits in support of the motion must contain facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff or defendant to a judgment in the action * * * and the facts stated therein shall be * * * set forth with particularity, and each affidavit shall show affirmatively that affiant, if sworn, * * * can testify competently thereto." The general principles to be observed in such proceedings are stated in Eagle Oil and Refining Co. v. Prentice, 19 Cal.2d 553, at page 555, 122 P.2d 264, at page 265: "The issue to be determined by the trial court in consideration of a motion thereunder is whether or not defendant has presented any facts which give rise to a triable issue or defense, and not to pass upon or determine the issue itself, that is, the true facts in the case." Stated otherwise, "issue finding rather than issue determination is the pivot upon which the summary judgment law turns" (Walsh v. Walsh, 18 Cal.2d 439, 441, 116 P.2d 62, 64). In Eagle Oil and Refining Co. v. Prentice, 19 Cal.2d 553, at page 556, 122 P.2d 264, at page 265, the court further declared: "(t)he procedure is drastic and should be used with caution in order that it may not become a substitute for existing methods in the determination of issues of fact." "For these reasons," the court continues, "the affidavits of the moving party * * * should be strictly construed and those of his opponent liberally construed." Furthermore, the propriety of granting or denying a motion for summary judgment is determined by the sufficiency of the affidavits on file (Coyne v. Krempels, 36 Cal.2d 257, 261, 223 P.2d 244). While the pleadings serve to define the issues, it is the showing made by the affidavits that is determinative since the court is thereby able to pierce the allegations of the pleadings to ascertain whether a genuine cause of action exists or a real defense has been interposed. Cone v. Union Oil Co., 129 Cal.App.2d 558, 562, 277 P.2d 464. Finally, if any doubt exists whether summary judgment be granted, it should be resolved against the moving party (Whaley v. Fowler, 152 Cal.App.2d 379, 381, 313 P.2d 97; Travelers Indemnity Co. v. McIntosh, 112 Cal.App.2d 177, 182, 245 P.2d 1065).

Appellants' answer set up an affirmative defense claiming ownership by deed and by adverse possession since 1929. Because the chief basis for this appeal concerns the insufficiency of respondent's affidavits to establish the lack of any triable issue as to adverse possession, we first consider the merits of that claim. If it is tenable, the motion should have been denied.

[5, 6] A claimant to title by adverse possession must establish five elements in connection with his occupancy: He must have been in (1) actual and (2) open and notorious possession of the premises, (3) under color of title or claim, (4) continuously and without interruption for five years and (5) must have paid all taxes assessed. West v. Evans, 29 Cal.2d 414, 417, 175 P.2d 219. For the purposes of this appeal, respondent concedes that appellants have satisfied the first four elements but claims a lack of compliance with the tax requirement. Proof thereof, then, is manifestly essential, since before plaintiff can prevail on summary judgment, its affidavits must state facts covering every element necessary to sustain a judgment in its favor (Murphy v. Kelly, 137 Cal.App.2d 21, 31, 289 P.2d 565).

The affidavit of William Moore, the city assessor, alleged that taxes were assessed on the disputed parcel to plaintiff (under its original corporate name) from 1939 to 1957, with certain immaterial exceptions, and at no time during that period was the property assessed to defendants. Contrary to the provisions of sections 1855, 1920 and 1926, Code of Civil Procedure, no copies of the tax records in question, certified or otherwise, were attached, nor did the affidavit allege any excuse or explanation for their nonproduction. The affidavit of A. M. Fanning, city tax collector, declared that all taxes against the parcel in suit between 1939 and 1957 were assessed to and paid by the plaintiff; that no overpayment was made during that period nor was payment made twice during any fiscal year. Again, no copies of the official records were attached to the affidavit, nor was any excuse or explanation for their nonproduction set forth. Jessie Loch, a deputy county tax collector, and Guy P. Sawyer, county assessor, also executed affidavits to the same general effect, as the matter involved records of their offices, but no copies of such records were attached and there was no explanation or excuse for their absence.

In opposition to the motion, a counter-affidavit of one of the appellants alleged that defendants and their predecessors in title had been in open, actual and notorious possession "in fee against the whole world" without interruption since 1939 and during that period had paid all taxes of every kind levied and assessed. Photostatic copies of tax receipts were attached to the counter-affidavit which further alleged that affiant had been informed "many times" by the office of the city tax collector that she was paying taxes on the lot in issue even though the lot number for assessment purposes had been changed at various times; that she believed lot 13, so numbered on the attached tax receipts, was the lot in issue and that it was so numbered at one time. In reply to the foregoing averments, respondent filed an affidavit executed by an employee of the city assessor's office to the effect that the lot in question had never been misnumbered.

Appellants contend that the affidavits of Moore, Fanning, Loch and Sawyer were all incompetent to establish the facts alleged. They rely on Low v. Woodward Oil Co., Ltd., 133 Cal.App.2d 116, 283 P.2d 720, where similar allegations were characterized as mere conclusions of law as to the matters in issue, and the court held that an affiant may not give testimony concerning the contents of a document in the absence of a showing which would excuse the production of the original or authenticated copies. The court therein stated at page 121 of 133 Cal.App.2d at page 723 of 283 P.2d: "Under such circumstances, where the affidavit of a movant depends upon written instruments, his affidavit is insufficient unless there is attached thereto the original documents, or a verified or certified copy of such instrument. (Citation.)" "A proper objection to such testimony would go to its competency" (Gardenswartz v. Equitable etc. Soc., 23 Cal.App.2d Supp. 745, 750, 68 P.2d 322, 324).

[7] In this state it is firmly established that the best evidence of the contents of a writing is the writing itself (18 Cal.Jur.2d 649). However, the above rule does not apply where the original is a record or document in the custody of a public officer, or when it has been recorded and the certified copy of the record is by law made evidence, in either of which cases a copy of the original or of the record must be produced (section 1855, subds. 3 and 4, Code of Civil Procedure). Hence, matters of record cannot be proved by parol and must be established by certified copies or a transcript of the record (18 Cal.Jur.2d 666). In Allen v. McKay & Co., 139 Cal. 94, 72 P. 713, in which claims of title by adverse possession were asserted and the date of a tax assessment became a material point, the court declared: "It certainly cannot be that such an act as the assessment of real property can be established * * * by parol proof, or by anything other than an official record * * *." 139 Cal. at page 101, 72 P. at page 715. To the same effect is Murphy v. Nielsen, 132 Cal.App.2d 396, 400, 282 P.2d 126.

Subdivision 5 of section 1855, Code of Civil Procedure, provides, however, that there can be no evidence of the contents of a writing, other than the writing itself, except "(w)hen the original consists of numerous accounts or other documents, which cannot be examined in Court without great loss of time, and the evidence sought from them is only the general result of the whole." This relaxation of the rule is usually invoked where the results sought to be achieved are negative and not affirmative, that is, not that the documents do but that they do not show a certain fact (San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Reynolds, 121 Cal. 74, 86, 53 P. 410). But that case, as well as Pacific Paving Company v. Gallett, 137 Cal. 174, 69 P. 985, in which the problem was also presented, did not involve a proceeding for summary judgment; furthermore, there were before the lower court either summarizing schedules or other documents concerning which the adverse party had both the right of inspection and the opportunity to cross-examine the custodian thereof. Thus, in San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Reynolds, 121 Cal. at page 86, 53 P. at page 414, supra, the witness "was rigidly cross-examined as to the items composing his schedules, and their correctness was established"; additionally, it was there represented by the respondent that the records "would weigh a ton" and "appellant concedes that this is not far from the truth." In the instant case, respondent admits that the various statements in the affidavits "smack of hearsay" but argues on appeal that the assessment rolls could not be attached to the affidavits, and excerpts therefrom would be inconclusive in that it would have to be shown that no pertinent facts were omitted. It is also asserted that the use of the originals would have disrupted the business of four governmental offices and the cost of substituting copies would have been prohibitive. Although respondent now gives this argument as a justification for presenting neither copies nor the original records in its brief on appeal, such explanation or any excuse for nonpresentation was not set forth in the controlling affidavits before the lower court. Respondent further states in its brief that appellants did not object to the nonproduction of the necessary attachments and hence waived any right to raise the point on appeal.

[10, 11] As previously pointed out, we are limited to the affidavits on file and the sufficiency thereof; and in the absence of any allegations therein excusing lack of compliance with the applicable subdivisions of section 1855, we cannot adopt respondent's present argument excusing the deficiencies in the affidavits. For us to do so would effect a liberal instead of a strict construction of the moving papers, wholly contrary to settled principles in proceedings of this kind (Desny v. Wilder, 46 Cal. 2d at page 725, 299 P.2d at page 261, supra). We repeat that the procedure of summary judgment has been said to be "drastic and should be used with caution" (Eagle Oil and Refining Co. v. Prentice, 19 Cal.2d 553, 556, 122 P.2d 264, 265), and any doubt as to the granting of such a judgment must be resolved against the moving party (Whaley v. Fowler, 152 Cal.App.2d 379, 381, 313 P.2d 97). Hence any seeming hardship or injustice is outweighed by policy considerations recognized in the decisions.

[12] Also, appellants' counteraffidavit has denied in substance the claims made by respondent and as they might defeat the motion must be accepted as true (Beck v. Reinholtz, 138 Cal.App.2d 719, 724, 292 P.2d 906). It appears they are seeking to bring themselves, if possible, within the rule governing acquisition of adverse possession by mistake (Sorensen v. Costa, 32 Cal.2d 453, 465, 196 P.2d 900) and while there are certain defects apparent in the counteraffidavit, it becomes unnecessary to discuss them since respondent's affidavits are not sufficient to sustain the judgment in its favor (Coyne v. Krempels, 36 Cal. 2d at page 261, 223 P.2d at page 246, supra; Gardenswartz v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 23 Cal.App.2d Supp. at page 751, 68 P.2d at page 325, supra).

In view of the foregoing, we deem it unnecessary to discuss other points raised by respondent, and considered by us, relating to the sufficiency of its affidavits on the question of ownership by title, and the lack of any deficiency in the motion for summary judgment, in that it was noticed upon the affidavits as well as "the papers, pleadings, files, records, and proceedings in the action." It should be understood that we have considered the pleadings and the facts solely from the standpoint of their competency upon a summary judgment proceeding.

The attempted appeal from the judgment denominated "Order on Motion for Summary Judgment" dated August 5, 1957, is dismissed; the judgment dated September 3, 1957, from which this appeal has been taken, is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Andrew John STEINBACH, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6251.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 17, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 11, 1959.

Prosecution resulting in defendant's conviction by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Orlando H. Rhodes, J., of manslaughter without gross negligence arising from driving of automobile and failing to stop after accident, and defendant appealed from orders denying motions in arrest of judgment and for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that the offense of manslaughter without gross negligence arising from operation of automobile is not included within the offense of failing to stop at scene of automobile accident, and judgment convicting defendant of both offenses did not constitute punishment of defendant twice for a single act.

Affirmed.

1. Indictment and Information ⇐191

Offense of manslaughter, without gross negligence, arising from operation of automobile, is not included in offense of failing to stop at scene of accident for purpose of giving assistance and information. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 192, subd. 3(a, b); West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 480.

2. Automobiles ⇐336

An essential element of violation of statute requiring driver of vehicle involved in accident resulting in injury or death to stop immediately is failure of driver to stop immediately and furnish assistance and information. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 480, 482(a).

3. Criminal Law ⇐1209

Judgment convicting defendant of manslaughter, without gross negligence, arising from operation of automobile and of violation of statute requiring driver of automobile involved in accident to stop immediately, did not constitute punishment of defendant twice for a single act. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 192, subd. 3(a), 654; West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 480, 482(a).

4. Automobiles ⇐357

In prosecution for manslaughter arising from operation of automobile and for violation of statute requiring driver of automobile involved in accident to stop immediately, trial court did not err in refusing to give instructions to the effect that information charging the two separate offenses in effect charged that defendant committed one or the other of such offenses. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 192, subd. 3(a), 654; West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 480, 482(a).

Bodkin, Breslin & Luddy, and Robert J. Sullivan, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and John M. Huntington, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was charged, in Count 1 of an information, with manslaughter in violation of section 192, subdivision 3(a), of the Penal Code (driving a vehicle in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony, with gross negligence; or in the commission of a lawful act, in an unlawful manner, with gross negligence). In Count 2, he was charged with violating section 480 of the Vehicle Code, a felony, in that he drove an automobile which was involved in an accident resulting in the death of Tom Parker, and he unlawfully failed to stop immediately and comply with statutory provisions relative to giving information and rendering aid.

In a trial by jury, he was convicted of manslaughter without gross negligence, a misdemeanor (violation of section 192, subdivision 3(b) of the Penal Code); and was convicted of violating section 480 of the Vehicle Code, a felony, as charged in Count 2. On Count 1, he was sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for one year. On Count 2, probation was granted on condition that he serve one year in the county jail. It was ordered that the jail terms run concurrently.

Defendant's notice of appeal recites that he appeals from the order denying his motion for a new trial, and from the order denying his motion in arrest of judgment. He states in his brief that he abandons his attempted appeals from the order denying his motion in arrest of judgment, and the order denying his motion for a new trial as to the conviction of manslaughter, a misdemeanor. The appeal for consideration herein is his appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial as to Count 2.

Appellant contends that a violation of section 192, subdivision 3(b), of the Penal Code (manslaughter, a misdemeanor) is a lesser and included offense in the offense of violation of section 480 of the Vehicle Code, a felony (referred to by him as "hit and run" driving, a felony), and that the conviction of the lesser offense (Count 1) was an acquittal of the greater offense (Count 2). Appellant contends further that if a violation of said section 192, subdivision 3(b), is not such a lesser and included offense, then the judgments herein punished twice for a single act contrary to the provisions of section 654 of the Penal Code.

On June 22, 1957, about 5:30 a. m., while Tom Parker was walking, in a southerly direction, on Pacific Avenue and near the left (east) side of a Pontiac automobile that was parked at the west curb, he was struck and killed by a Buick automobile that was being driven at a fast rate of speed, in a southerly direction, on that avenue. Before the Buick struck him, it struck the rear bumper of the Pontiac and caused a "big bang." The Buick did not stop at the scene of the accident but proceeded at an increased rate of speed, south on Pacific Avenue, about three short blocks and then turned east onto another street. When the Buick struck Mr. Parker it knocked him forward several feet and nearly into the middle of the street. After the accident, the body of decedent lay crosswise of the street with the head near the center of the street. The Buick was red, and there was chrome trimming on it. Fragments of red paint were found on the street about 50 feet north of the body and about 2 feet east of the left side of the parked Pontiac (the rear bumper of which had been struck by the Buick). A chrome strip was found on the street about 12 feet north of the body.

About two hours after the accident, defendant telephoned the police station and said that he wanted to report that his automobile had been stolen. Upon being requested to come to the station, he went there and reported that he had parked his red Buick automobile, bearing license No. MAR 729, in a certain parking lot and that the automobile had been stolen. About four hours later, police officers found the automobile, on a street, about four miles from the scene of the accident. At that time they observed that the right front fender and right door of the Buick had been damaged and that a chrome strip was missing from the right front fender.

There was evidence that particles of hair which were found on the Buick fender were similar to hair which was taken from the decedent's head. Also, there was evidence that fragments of paint which were found on the street, at the scene of the accident, came from the "same batch of mixed paints" as samples of paint which were removed from the Buick. Markings on the chrome strip (which strip was found in the street near the body) and photographs of the Buick indicate that the strip was the strip which was missing from the Buick.

A police officer testified that, in the afternoon of June 22, he and another officer had a conversation with defendant, wherein defendant said (in part) as follows: about 5:30 a. m. of that day he left a certain house and drove his car in a southerly direction on Pacific Avenue for a distance of approximately 100 feet, and then he drove on other streets and across a bridge; after he crossed the bridge he felt an impact on the right front fender of his car; then he saw the man whom his fender had struck; he continued driving and looked back and saw the man lying in the street; it appeared that the man was getting up on his hands and knees. Defendant also said that the reason he did not stop was that he did not think the man was hurt "too bad," and that he (defendant) had been drinking and there was a possibility that he might be arrested for "a 502" (driving while intoxicated).

As above stated, the first contention of appellant is that a violation of section 192, subdivision 3(b), of the Penal Code is a lesser and included offense in the offense of violation of section 480 of the Vehicle Code. Stated in another way (without designating the code sections), this contention is that the crime of manslaughter, a misdemeanor, resulting from the unlawful driving of an automobile (without gross negligence), is included in the offense whereby a driver of an automobile fails to stop immediately and render aid when a person has been struck and killed by the automobile while the automobile was being driven without gross negligence. Appellant asserts that the essence of the crime charged in Count 2, that is, violation of section 480 of the Vehicle Code, "is killing and fleeing"; that said section 192, subdivision 3(b), denounces "a special type of killing, i. e., without gross negligence, and it is this type of killing which we say is always included in a violation of section 480 of the Vehicle Code under circumstances as exist in the case at bar."

In People v. Greer, 30 Cal.2d 589, at page 596, 184 P.2d 512, at page 516, it was said: "The test in this state of a necessarily included offense is simply that where an offense cannot be committed without necessarily committing another offense, the latter is a necessarily included offense."

Section 192 of the Penal Code provides in part: "Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice. It is of three kinds: 1. * * * 2. * * 3. In the driving of a vehicle—(a) In the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony, with gross negligence; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, and with gross negligence. (b) In the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony, without gross negligence; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, but without gross negligence. This section shall not be construed as making any homicide in the driving of a vehicle punishable which is not a proximate result of the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony, or of the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner."

Section 480 of the Vehicle Code provides: "The driver of any vehicle involved in an accident resulting in injury to any person, other than himself, or death of any person shall immediately stop such vehicle at the scene of such accident and shall fulfill the requirements of Section 482(a) hereof and any person failing to stop or to comply with said requirements * * * is guilty of a public offense and * * * shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison * * * or in the county jail * * * or by fine * *." Section 482, subdivision (a), provides in part that a driver of any vehicle which is involved in such an accident shall render reasonable assistance to the injured person, and shall give to him certain information including the name and address of the driver, and the registration number of the vehicle he is driving.

[1, 2] Applying the above-mentioned test, regarding an included offense, it appears that the offense of violation of said section 480 can be committed without necessarily committing the offense of manslaughter. The offense of violation of said section 480 can be committed without unlawful driving or any negligence on the part of the driver of the vehicle, and without death resulting from the accident. The provision in said section, with respect to the operation of the vehicle, is that the driver of a vehicle which is "involved in an accident" resulting in an injury to another, or resulting in the death of any person, shall stop immediately. An essential element of violation of said section 480 is the failure of the driver to stop immediately and furnish assistance and information.

In a violation of said section 192, subdivision 3(b), essential elements are unlawful driving, and the death of the injured person as a proximate result of the unlawful driving. In People v. McKee, 80 Cal.App. 200, 251 P. 675, defendant was convicted of (1) manslaughter resulting from the negligent driving of an automobile, and (2) violating section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act (failing to stop and render aid after automobile accident). It was said therein at page 203 of 80 Cal. App., at page 677 of 251 P.: "Violation of section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act is not included within or in fact related to the offense of manslaughter. * * * The acts constituting the second offense did not really commence until after the woman had been struck [by the automobile], at which time the first offense had been completed."

The offense of violation of section 192, subdivision 3(b), of the Penal Code is not an included offense in the offense of violation of section 480 of the Vehicle Code.

[3] Appellant contends further, as above stated, that if a violation of said section 192, subdivision 3(b), is not such an included offense, then the judgments herein punished twice for a single act contrary to the provisions of section 654 of the Penal Code. Said section 654 provides in part: "An act or omission which is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of this Code may be punished under either of such provisions, but in no case can it be punished under more than one; an acquittal or conviction and sentence under either one bars a prosecution for the same act or omission under any other." Appellant argues that the two offenses herein arose out of a single act, and that the act cannot be divided and prosecuted as separate crimes. In People v. McKee, supra (wherein the defendant had been convicted of manslaughter resulting from driving an automobile, and convicted of failing to stop after the automobile accident), the defendant contended on appeal that he was twice placed in jeopardy for the same offense, "maintaining as the foundation for his argument that the transaction upon which the two offenses are based is but a single one." It was held therein (80 Cal.App., at page 203, 251 P. 677) that he was not twice in jeopardy for the same offense. In the present case, the contention with reference to being punished twice for the same offense is not sustainable.

[4] Appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to give an instruction, requested by defendant, which was as follows: "The charges contained in count — and count — of the information do not charge two separate offenses, but in effect charge that the defendant committed one or the other of such offenses. If you find that the defendant committed an act or acts constituting one of the crimes so charged, you then must determine which of the offenses charged was thereby committed * * * and if you find the defendant guilty of one of said offenses you must find him not guilty as to the other." The court did not err in refusing to give that instruction.

The appeals (1) from the order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment, and (2) from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial as to the conviction of manslaughter, a misdemeanor (Count 1), are dismissed. (Defendant stated that he abandoned those appeals.) The order denying the motion for a new trial as to Count 2 is affirmed.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION of the State of California, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 9299.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 18, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 11, 1959.

Action by truck company against State Board of Equalization for recovery of sales taxes paid under protest. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Jay L. Henry, J., rendered judgment for Board, and truck company appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that under statute exempting from sales and use tax the gross receipts from sales to common carrier of property shipped by seller via purchasing carrier under bill of lading to point outside state in conduct of carrier's business, truck company, which sold trucks to out-of-state carriers under bills of lading specifying that trucks were consigned to purchasing carrier at specific destination outside state and naming truck company as shipper and providing that consignee should pay freight, was exempt from sales and use tax, notwithstanding fact that both title and possession may have passed in state or fact that one of carriers, without knowledge of truck company, hauled payloads while engaged in transporting trucks out of state.

Reversed with instructions.

1. Licenses ⇐19(3)

Under statute exempting from sales and use tax the gross receipts from sale to common carrier of property shipped by seller via purchasing carrier under bill of lading in conduct of carrier's business, truck company, which sold trucks to out-of-state carriers under bills of lading specifying that trucks were consigned to purchasing carrier at specific destination outside state and naming truck company as shipper and providing that consignee should pay freight, was exempt from sales and use tax, notwithstanding fact that both title and possession may have passed in state or fact that one of carriers, without knowledge of truck company, hauled payloads while engaged in transporting trucks out of state. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, § 6385.

2. Licenses ⇐19(3)

Under statute exempting from sales and use tax the gross receipts from sales of property to common carrier shipped by seller via purchasing carrier under bill of lading whether freight is paid in advance or shipment is made with freight charges collect to point outside state, exemption includes transaction in which goods are sold to carrier and are shipped by seller via purchasing carrier with no freight charges at all except as a matter of form. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, § 6385.

3. Licenses ⇐19(3)

If standard set up by legislature with respect to sales and use taxes are met there can be no claim that avoidance of the tax proves bad faith.

4. Statutes ⇐219

Contemporaneous and practical construction of statute by those whose duty it is to carry it into effect, while not controlling in interpreting statute, is always given great respect.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, Oakland, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James E. Sabine, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Ernest P. Goodman, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff and appellant, H-R Truck & Equipment Company, hereinafter called truck company, instituted this action against the defendant and respondent, State Board of Equalization, for the recovery of sales taxes paid under protest. Truck company now appeals from the adverse judgment of the trial court. The action was tried on a stipulation of facts, which stipulation was, by reference, adopted by the trial court as its findings of fact.

The first issue presented involves the interpretation and application of a statute exempting certain transactions from taxation under the Sales and Use Tax Act. The section is numbered 6385 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, and it reads as follows:

> "There are exempted from the computation of the amount of the sales tax the gross receipts from sales of tangible personal property to a common carrier, shipped by the seller via the purchasing carrier under a bill of lading whether the freight is paid in advance, or the shipment is made freight charges collect, to a point outside this State and the property is actually transported to the out-of-state destination for use by the carrier in the conduct of its business as a common carrier."

It is the contention of appellant that all the requirements for exemption set up by section 6385 were fully met and that, therefore, the sales were not taxable. In support of this contention the truck company points to the following findings: The appellant truck company was, at all times material here, a dealer in trucks, truck tractors and parts and accessories therefor holding a retail seller's permit under the Sales and Use Tax Law. All sales involved were at retail. The measure of the tax (or volume of sales) on which the tax was imposed arose out of sales of trucks, truck tractors and truck parts, by appellant to truck common carriers engaged in interstate commerce, hauling by means of trucks and truck tractors under certificates of public convenience and necessity issued by the Bureau of Motor Carriers, Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States. These truck common carriers maintained local offices and freight stations in California and main offices in other states. The sales were made pursuant to oral contracts and as between the seller and the purchasers the parties understood that the seller would not be required to pay freight or cost of transportation to any out-of-state destination. The total price paid by the purchasers for each item was the price uniformly charged by the seller to all purchasers who bought, accepted and took possession of such goods at plaintiff's place of business in California. Payments for the purchases were received by the seller in California, but were made by such purchasers from their out-of-state places of business. The purchasing common carriers took delivery in California. (The stipulation of fact concerning deliveries and possession merely constituted a statement as to the taking of delivery or transfer of possession of the purchased property in sequence of events and was not intended as a stipulation to resolve the issue whether the purchasing carrier took delivery or possession of the property in California in their capacity as purchasers or as carriers.) At the time of taking delivery or possession, the purchasing carrier issued and gave to the seller documents designated as bills of lading. Such documents specified that the goods described therein were consigned to the respective purchasing carriers at the respective out-of-state destinations specified therein. The trucks and truck tractors were driven under their own automotive power by the drivers of each purchasing carrier to the specified out-of-state destinations over routes over which the purchasing carriers were authorized to transport cargo under common carrier rights, for use by each said carrier in the conduct of its business as a common carrier and were so used. No freight was in fact charged to the seller, nor collected by any of the purchasing carriers on such movement of trucks, truck tractors and truck tractor parts, equipment and accessories. Freight bills were made out by the purchasing carriers but the said freight was deadheaded. The term "deadhead" indicates that freight is not a revenue load in that the freight is carried as company business.

The documents issued and designated bills of lading showed the following: The issuing carrier acknowledged that it had "Received, subject to the classifications and tariffs in effect on the date of the issue of this Bill of Lading" the goods described in the bill "consigned, and destined as shown below" and that the carrier "agrees to carry to its usual place of delivery at said destination, if on its own * * * highway route or routes * * *" The bills also provided "It is mutually agreed, * * * that every service to be performed hereunder shall be subject to all the conditions not prohibited by law, whether printed or written, herein contained, including the conditions on back hereof, which are hereby agreed to by the shipper and accepted for himself and his assigns." The bills specified that the described goods were consigned to the issuing carrier at a specific designation outside the state and on the route of the carrier and named appellant truck company as the shipper. The bills also provided that the consignee should pay the freight and all other lawful charges accruing on the described property.

The trial court found that title to the goods passed to the buyers at the time the carriers took possession in California. The validity of this finding is supported by the evidence.

[1, 2] Neither party hereto challenges the validity of the exemption statute. The section refers to sales of tangible personal property to a common carrier and the sales here involved were such sales. It requires that the goods be shipped by the seller via the purchasing carrier under a bill of lading, and at least on the face of the transactions here involved that requirement is specifically met. The section states that whether freight is paid in advance or the shipment is made freight charges collect, the transaction shall be exempt if the property is actually transported to the out-of-state destination for use by the carrier in the conduct of its business as such and these requirements are likewise, at least on the face of the transactions, specifically met. We think they are also met in substance. The legislature has spoken and if it has spoken clearly its mandate must be obeyed as written. Notwithstanding both title and possession may have passed in California, it was open to the parties to agree that the goods still should be shipped by the seller via the purchasing carrier under a bill of lading. This was done, as is amply evidenced by the documents executed between the buyer and the seller as heretofore related. The section says nothing about the passage of title or possession. It is clear from the language used that the legislature included within the exemption granted transactions where, though the goods were sold to a carrier, they might be shipped by the seller to that carrier, via that carrier with freight charges collect, that is to say, with no freight charges at all except as a matter of form. Such a transaction contains within it some measure of artificiality but it is the exempting statute which envisages that very artificiality. Therefore, in testing whether or not a transaction meets the requirements for exemption, the form becomes substantial. We hold that the transactions were carried out in such a way as to achieve the exemption provided for by the statute.

[3] The principal contention of respondent is that the statute requires a bona fide relationship of shipper and carrier in order for a transaction to achieve exemption from the tax and that such bona fides did not exist here. We are not impressed with this argument. We see nothing in the way of a lack of good faith in a literal compliance with the statute. The legislature set up the standards of exemption. If they are met there can be no claim that the avoidance of the tax proves bad faith. "We do not speak of evasion, because, when the law draws a line, a case is on one side of it or the other, and if on the safe side is none the worse legally that a party has availed himself to the full of what the law permits." Bullen v. Wisconsin, 240 U. S. 625, 36 S.Ct. 473, 474, 60 L.Ed. 830, 831, 835. The seller was interested in avoiding the tax if that could legally be done. The issuance of the bill of lading and the other exemption requirements were material to him for that reason. Every retailer licensed under the sales and use tax is permitted to make sales which are exempt from tax, such as sales for resale, and is required in such cases to obtain required documents in proof of the exempt nature of the sales. Section 6385 sets up formal requirements and in these cases the truck company saw to it that they were complied with. In doing this it exercised a right given it by the law.

[4] The conclusion we have come to is supported by the practical interpretation of the exemption statute adopted by those whose duty it has been to enforce the sales and use tax. The contemporaneous and practical construction of a statute by those whose duty it is to carry it into effect, while not controlling, is always given great respect. Contemporaneous interpretation of a statute long acquiesced in by all persons who could possibly have an interest in the matter, has been held to be sufficient to justify a court in resolving any doubt it might have as to the meaning of ambiguous language employed by the legislature in favor of sustaining such long unquestioned interpretation. People v. Southern Pacific Company, 209 Cal. 578, 594, 290 P. 25.

The following transactions are recited in briefs of amici curiae: On November 18, 1948, and on January 27, 1949, the tax counsel for the board of equalization and the sales tax administrator respectively issued rulings holding that section 6385 applies with respect to certain sales of fuel oil to steamship companies. The rulings were issued in response to a memorandum outlining the basis upon which the transactions would be carried out and requesting a ruling thereon. It was pointed out that "It is proposed that the usual fuel oil contract used by Standard Oil Company of California be entered into between that company and any steamship company able to take advantage of the exemption. * * * The shipping company will be billed for the current price posted at the port of shipment, with freight charges to point of destination collect." A sample contract submitted with the memorandum to the Board of Equalization provided that the oil would be delivered by the seller on order of the buyer; that the price would be the seller's current price at time of each delivery for like deliveries as posted from time to time at the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce; that inspection and acceptance should take place at the time of delivery. The portion of the oil carried under the bill of lading to the out-of-state point was ruled exempt from tax under section 6385. The portion of the purchased oil which was consumed on the out-bound voyage and was not carried under the bill of lading was held taxable. On August 7, 1952, a similar ruling was made by the sales tax administrator, who wrote:

> "Under Section 6385 of the Revenue and Taxation Code the sale of fuel oil to steamship companies will be recognized as exempt from sales tax, which fuel oil is:
>
> "(a) Sold to a steamship company which is a common carrier, and which will use the fuel in the conduct of its business as a common carrier. For the purpose of establishing to the seller and the Board that the purchaser is a common carrier, and that the fuel oil will be used by the purchaser in the conduct of its business as a common carrier, purchasers will submit with each purchase a certificate in substance as follows:

"This is to certify that the XYZ Steamship Company, the purchaser of the above-described fuel oil is a common carrier; and that the fuel oil purchased free of sales tax is to be transported to an out-of-state destination for use by the XYZ Steamship Company in the conduct of its business as a common carrier * * *

"(b) Shipped by the seller via the facilities of the purchasing carrier under a bill of lading to an out-of-state point. Freight must be paid in advance or the shipment made freight charges collect. The freight must be shown on the bill of lading or accompanying freight bill and must be bona fide and bear a reasonable relation with freight rates set forth by established tariffs when such have been published.

"Sales of fuel oil with respect to which all of these conditions exist may be taken as a deduction on Item 11 of the seller's sales and use tax return under the caption 'Sales of Fuel Oil to Steamship Companies'.

"This letter supersedes the letter on the same subject dated January 27, 1949 * * * except the last paragraph thereof."

The last paragraph so referred to in the previous letter read as follows:

"It is understood that the tax applies with respect to sales of that fuel oil which will be consumed in the voyage from the California port where the oil is taken on to the first port of call outside of California."

It appears that in the work-out under these arrangements all the fuel oil purchased was carried in the deep tanks and bottom tanks of the carrier's vessel. A bill of lading would be issued for delivery of all fuel oil not needed for use of the vessel herself in going from a given point in California to the first port of call outside the state named in the bill of lading. The balance of the oil, used by the vessel after arriving at the port of delivery named in the bill of lading, was tax free. We are unable to distinguish the transactions which were the subject of these administrative rulings from the transactions in question in this case in any substantial way. The same artificiality appears in both sets of transactions, but, as we have said before, that artificiality is permitted by the exemption statute which contemplates that it may exist.

Respondent contends that even if exempt status was achieved by the transactions involved yet as to certain of the transactions included, to wit, sales made to Navajo Freight Lines, Inc., a corporation, one of the carriers, this status was lost by reason of the actions of that carrier in using trucks and tractors it was transporting to out-of-state destinations to haul payloads on the way. We do not agree. Assuming that exempt status had been achieved by the dealings between the truck company and Navajo, the action of Navajo with respect to hauling payloads while engaged in transporting out of state the objects of sale could not affect the interest of the truck company, it not appearing that it had any knowledge, notice or responsibility for the conduct of Navajo. It is not Navajo that seeks exemption. The only evidence on the subject is that these actions of Navajo here relied upon by respondent as resulting in the truck company losing its exempt status is that the truck company did not know of these things until some four years after they occurred. Under these circumstances the truck company cannot be charged a tax by reason of this subsequent conduct of Navajo.

The judgment appealed from is reversed with instructions to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of appellant for the repayment to appellant of the sums paid under protest.

Prosecution for unlawful possession of heroin. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Richard C. Fildew, J., entered judgment of conviction and one of the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that evidence sustained conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

Evidence sustained conviction for unlawful possession of heroin.

Bertram H. Ross, Los Angeles, under appointment by the District Court of Appeal, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendants Stewart and Leroy Hamilton were accused of unlawfully possessing heroin. In a nonjury trial they were convicted. Stewart appeals from the judgment. (There was no motion for a new trial. Probation was denied.)

Appellant contends that the evidence was not sufficient to support the judgment.

Officer Abbot testified that on August 30, 1957, about 5 a. m., he and Officer Ward were in a police car at the intersection of Normandie Avenue and Adams Boulevard in Los Angeles; he (witness) saw Leroy Hamilton, in front of a bar, on the southeast corner of that intersection, and at that time Hamilton was "jumping around and jigging like, very similar to a jitterbug, bouncing around"; the officers stopped and asked him what he was doing; he replied that he was just standing around and had nothing to do; the officers asked him for permission to search him; Hamilton turned all his pockets inside out; they searched him, and he did not have any narcotics; then the officers went across the street to a sandwich stand on the southwest corner of the intersection; soon thereafter, he (witness) saw defendant Stewart come from the bar (on the southeast corner of the intersection) and saw him meet Hamilton; then Stewart and Hamilton started east on the sidewalk on the south side of Adams Boulevard; he (witness) watched Hamilton all the time after he first saw Hamilton, and he watched Hamilton and Stewart all the time after Stewart came out of the bar; the street was well lighted; no one else was on the south side of the street from the time Hamilton was first observed until after the arrest; after Hamilton and Stewart had walked about 50 or 60 feet, he (witness) saw Stewart pass a package to Hamilton—they grasped hands; at that time they were about 110 feet east of the place where the officers were standing; then Hamilton put his hand in his right coat pocket; the officers followed them in the police car, and when the car was about 15 feet back of them, Hamilton whirled to his right side, pulled his hand out of his right coat pocket and dropped a package (Exhibit 1) into the street gutter; the police car was stopped immediately, and Officer Abbot picked up the package and went to Hamilton and stopped him; Officer Ward stopped Stewart who was then about 15 feet farther down the street; the defendants were arrested; Officer Abbot picked up the package within half a minute after it was dropped in the gutter; the officers searched Stewart and found that he had $124, but he did not have any narcotics.

The package which was dropped by Hamilton consisted of an envelope containing an eye dropper, a metal capsule, a hypodermic needle, and five bindles of heroin.

On cross-examination of Officer Abbot by counsel for Stewart, the officer was asked what he had heard about Stewart. The officer replied that he had heard that he was a large dealer in narcotics.

Defendant Stewart testified that he had known Hamilton for about six months—he was casually acquainted with him and knew him by the name of "Pete"; on the morning involved here, he (witness) had gone from Jefferson Avenue to a sandwich place at Normandie and Adams; while he was using the telephone at that place he saw two officers and a man across the street, and he saw that the officers were searching the man; when Stewart had finished telephoning, he walked east across the street and continued east on Adams Boulevard; Hamilton was also walking east on that boulevard, but Stewart was walking about five feet in front of him at all times; while they were walking, Hamilton picked up a little box, and then said that it was "An outfit"; thereafter they continued walking until they had gone about one and one-half blocks; at that time two police officers called Hamilton "to the car"; Hamilton went to the car; an officer called Stewart, and Stewart went to the car; he (Stewart) did not pass any narcotics to Hamilton, and he did not see anyone pick up narcotics from the gutter; he had not had regular employment for approximately three months; he won $105 in a gambling game during the evening preceding the arrest, and that money was part of the $124 which the officers took from him at the time of the arrest; he had been previously convicted of two felonies—burglary and transporting opium.

Hamilton testified that he did not receive anything from Stewart on the morning of the arrest; he (witness) did not throw any narcotics in the gutter, and did not see anyone pick up narcotics from the gutter; he had seen Stewart previously but never had any association with him.

[1, 2] The trial judge could reasonably find, among other things, from the evidence: that Hamilton did not have any narcotic on his person when the officer searched him in front of the bar (prior to the arrival of Stewart); that Officer Abbot kept Hamilton under observation after he was searched and until and after Stewart met Hamilton in front of the bar, and during the time prior to that meeting Hamilton did not obtain any narcotic from anyone or any place; that Officer Abbot kept Hamilton and Stewart under observation from the time they met in front of the bar until the arrest; that Stewart handed the package containing the heroin and narcotics injection equipment to Hamilton; and that Hamilton dropped the package into the gutter. The questions as to the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence were questions of fact for the determination of the trial judge. In People v. Belli, 127 Cal.App. 269, 15 P.2d 809, the defendant was charged with unlawful possession of morphine. In that case officers testified that they saw defendant walk westerly along the side of a street and saw him drop a package on the sidewalk; that at the same time they saw another man approaching the defendant from the opposite direction on the same side of the street and that immediately after defendant dropped the package the other man picked it up; thereafter one of the officers followed the other man, placed him under arrest, searched him, and found a package similar to the one that defendant had dropped on the sidewalk. The package contained morphine. The court said therein at page 271 of 127 Cal.App., at page 809 of 15 P.2d "[T]he truth of the matter was for the jury to decide, and it having accepted as true the testimony given by the narcotic agents, and there being nothing inherently improbable in such testimony, this court is bound thereby on appeal." In the present case the evidence was sufficient to support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Sarah Frances WEBER, also known as Sarah Frances Weber Lawson, Defendant and Respondent.

No. 17836.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 23, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 18, 1959.

Action to set aside deed and establish trust. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Richard H. Chamberlain, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that evidence would not sustain undue influence claim.

Affirmed.

1. Deeds ⇐211(4)

In action to set aside deed, evidence supported trial court's finding that presumption of undue influence, arising from confidential relationship between grantor and defendant, had been overcome.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐991, 1010(1)

Question as to whether presumption of undue influence upon grantor had been rebutted is a question for trier of fact, and reviewing court will not reverse if there is sufficient evidence to support finding.

3. Deeds ⇐72(3), 211(4)

Lack of independent legal advice is an important factor in determining whether presumption of undue influence upon grantor, arising from confidential relationship, has been overcome, and should be weighed by trier of fact; but independent legal advice is not an absolute essential to validity of deed.

4. Deeds ⇐72(2)

Such undue influence as will require setting aside deed can exist even where grantor is not mentally incompetent or weak-minded.

5. Trusts ⇐21(2), 59(1)

Agreement, reciting that property was transferred to defendant in joint tenancy for purpose of paying hospitalization expenses of decedent, that defendant agreed to be decedent's nurse and companion during decedent's lifetime and that property was to be preserved by defendant to use and benefit of decedent as long as she should live, was ambiguous, and did not create a trust; but even if such agreement did create a trust, it was rescinded when property was taken out of joint tenancy by decedent and put in defendant's name solely.

Kaiser & O'Neill, Jeremiah F. O'Neill, Jr., Robert A. Kaiser, Oakland, Smith & Smith, Melvin M. Belli, San Francisco, Caroline Rose, San Rafael, for appellants.

Augustin Donovan, Oakland, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Plaintiffs appeal from an adverse judgment, without jury trial, in an action to set aside a deed and to establish a trust, based upon four counts: (1) nondelivery of the deed; (2) unsoundness of mind of grantor; (3) undue influence of grantee; (4) that grantee holds certain property in trust pursuant to agreement.

Contentions.

1. That the findings that the actions of the grantor were free and voluntary and not the result of the undue influence of the grantee are not supported because a presumption of undue influence arose which was not rebutted.

2. That the agreement is a trust agreement and upon the death of the beneficiary the corpus reverted to the grantor's estate.

General Facts.

The grantor, Miss Sarah Sinclair, who lived alone, employed defendant in July, 1948, as companion and housekeeper. This employment continued until the death of Miss Sinclair, May 16, 1954. Plaintiffs are first cousins of Miss Sinclair. Apparently none of them were acquainted with her, except that Miss Sinclair had on occasion sent Christmas gifts to plaintiff E. J. Sinclair in Ireland. Other than that, Miss Sinclair, during her lifetime, had no contact with her blood relatives. Miss Sinclair owned real and personal property including securities, bank and savings accounts of approximately $625,000. At her death she had left only $30,000 in a joint tenancy account with defendant. Defendant as executrix of her estate filed an inventory valuing the property in the estate at $15. All the rest of it Miss Sinclair had given defendant over the years. Starting in 1949 Miss Sinclair began making a series of wills favorable to defendant. During the years Miss Sinclair had several attorneys and many wills, some of which were holographic.[1] In 1952 and thereafter the wills left the bulk of her estate to defendant. Finally they left practically all to defendant. In September, 1949, Miss Sinclair deeded her home to defendant, and from time to time placed moneys in the bank and savings and loan association in joint tenancy with defendant. In October, 1952, she and defendant entered into the agreement hereafter discussed. By the middle of 1953 the bulk of Miss Sinclair's property, consisting of cash and securities, had been transferred to the sole name of defendant.

1. Undue Influence.[2]

The court found that Miss Sinclair "had great trust and confidence in and affection for" defendant and that defendant did not take advantage of said trust or confidence and did not make any effort to control Miss Sinclair's disposition of any property.

[1] An examination of the transcript shows that the evidence is conflicting and while there was evidence from which the court could have found undue influence, nevertheless the evidence sufficiently supports the court's finding and was sufficient to overcome the presumption of undue influence arising from the confidential relationship between Miss Sinclair and defendant.

Prior to the employment of defendant, Miss Sinclair had a number of friends who it is claimed were gradually thereafter denied access to Miss Sinclair. Attorney R. H. Cross, a schoolmate, had drawn wills for Miss Sinclair in 1927 and in 1949. He also visited her many times as a friend. In her holographic will dated December 5, 1949, and a formal one drawn by him on December 19, 1949, he was bequeathed as a friend 200 shares of Transamerica stock. (Attorney Potstada testified that the latter will gave Mr. Cross all of her Transamerica stock (2,224 shares) and all of her Bank of America stock (1,854 shares).) This will made defendant the residuary legatee. Miss Sinclair had discussed with Mr. Cross deeding her property to defendant, but on his advice, she decided to let the property go to defendant under the residuary clause. In November, 1952, Miss Sinclair wrote Attorney Cross asking him to return this will. On taking the will to her home defendant informed him that Miss Sinclair "sees no one," "her face is all gone." He gave the will to defendant who evidenced "great satisfaction and glee." For a year prior to

1. In no will did Miss Sinclair leave any money or property to any of the plaintiffs. In various wills she left sums up to $5,000 to her sister-in-law Della. In the last will she left Della $50.

2. Plaintiffs do not contest the court's findings that Miss Sinclair was of sound mind and that the deed was delivered.

that time he had phoned the Sinclair residence many times but each time had been informed by defendant that Miss Sinclair was not available.

Miss C. J. M. Jones attended college with Miss Sinclair. They were close friends. On Christmas Eve, 1951, she went to Miss Sinclair's to give her a gift. Receiving no answer at the front door, Miss Jones went to the door of the kitchen where she saw a light. Upon calling Miss Sinclair's name the light went out. Arriving home she phoned Miss Sinclair, who said that hereafter Miss Jones should send things by mail. Thereafter when she phoned, Mrs. Weber would advise her that Miss Sinclair was resting, or out in the garden, or had some other excuse why Miss Sinclair could not speak to her.

Mrs. Emma Gibson's story was similar to that of Miss Jones. Mrs. Gibson had known and visited Miss Sinclair for years. But after defendant arrived defendant would tell her that Miss Sinclair was not well enough to come to the phone. She visited Miss Sinclair after the latter's operation in 1952 and they had a good visit, nothing out of the ordinary occurring. Miss Sinclair was happy to see her.

Mr. Jules Piccardo knew Miss Sinclair since 1936 and had acted as her banker. He had visited her socially and had entertained her in his home. He knew Miss Sinclair's sister-in-law Della and the relationship between Miss Sinclair and Della was very good. Miss Sinclair was very frugal and conservative. He and she had exchanged Christmas presents up to the last couple of years before her death.

Mr. Ralph Knapp, a realtor, knew Miss Sinclair since around 1914, both socially and through business. They exchanged Christmas cards up until the last three or four years. While he had been accustomed to stop in and see Miss Sinclair when he was in her neighborhood, he could not get in to see her in the last three or four years as defendant answered the door and would state that Miss Sinclair was not at home or give some such answer. He met her on the street while she was on the way to the doctor and she acted the same as ever toward him. Although she had aged considerably she was her own cheerful self. Although at other times he had been at her home when she was sick in bed, it struck him "very funny that every time I made a trip there she was not available."

Mr. Perry Spann, a retired contracting painter, had worked for Miss Sinclair from 1914 to 1951, doing all the painting work on her residence. In 1952 he stopped several times to see her when she was ill, but defendant would tell him that Miss Sinclair was upstairs, or resting, or did not feel like meeting anyone at present. On one occasion when defendant came to the door, Miss Sinclair was sitting in the hallway, and asked if that was Mr. Spann, and said, "Will you please have him come in?" She talked rationally, seemed to be evading something, and did not seem to be herself. He felt that she did not want him there. He never got in again.

Dr. Goodwin specialized in women's gereology and gynecology. Miss Sinclair was her patient from August, 1939, to February, 1952, seeing her once a week during that period. A great friendship arose between them and in the visits she made Miss Sinclair they would visit socially from 40 to 50 minutes. In addition they visited on the phone. In April, 1951, Miss Sinclair complained of pain in her face and cheek. She was referred to Dr. Lewis Morrison a specialist. He made smears which were negative for malignancy, and advised Miss Sinclair to see him once a month, which she did for two or three times. Dr. Goodwin asked her if she was following through with the Morrison treatments. She stated that she was not because it cost $7.50 a visit and she did not feel that she could spend that and that defendant felt that it was too much. Dr. Goodwin, as time went on, advised Miss Sinclair that there was a thickening of the bone in her face to which Miss Sinclair replied that defendant said that it was just the same and was not getting any larger. Miss Sinclair did not go to Dr. Morrison about it. In June, 1951, Miss Sinclair came to Dr. Goodwin's office complaining about her mouth. Dr. Goodwin found a mass protruding through the upper part of her hard palate and took Miss Sinclair to Dr. Morrison, who told Miss Sinclair that she must have surgery at once. Miss Sinclair stated that she would not make a decision until she discussed the matter with defendant. Later Miss Sinclair phoned that defendant said that it was all right to go ahead with the surgery. Dr. Goodwin asked Miss Sinclair at the hospital if she liked the room she was in. Miss Sinclair said that defendant "had inspected the room, and said she guessed it would do." Both Dr. Goodwin and Dr. Morrison advised Miss Sinclair that if she did not receive x-ray treatment the malignancy would spread faster. Miss Sinclair left the hospital February 9, 1952, and was to report February 12 for x-ray treatment. On February 11 a phone call had been left for Dr. Goodwin from Miss Sinclair asking to change the appointment. Dr. Goodwin phoned Miss Sinclair but defendant stated that Miss Sinclair had her plate out and could not talk. Dr. Goodwin had previously talked to Miss Sinclair on several occasions when the latter had her plate out. Miss Sinclair indicated to Dr. Goodwin that defendant discussed with her things of a personal nature so far as her household was concerned, and had control of things going on in the household. Defendant arranged for the painting of the house inside and out, installation of a sprinkling system, new fences, new stove, removal of a palm tree, employment of somebody to assist defendant in the house, and the purchase of other items for the house. Miss Sinclair told Dr. Goodwin that she would like to listen to Fulton Lewis Jr. on the radio, but that she did not dare as defendant "was a New Dealer and would not countenance having her listen to the program." Dr. Goodwin prescribed for Miss Sinclair a tonic that included a tablespoon of sherry wine. Miss Sinclair told the doctor that defendant "would have a fit if she knew she had any sherry." After February, 1952, Dr. Goodwin wrote several letters to Miss Sinclair, telephoned the house unsuccessfully as defendant would state that Miss Sinclair was out or resting. Miss Sinclair was frugal and thrifty, even to the extent that she wore darned stockings. Prior to 1952 Dr. Goodwin and Miss Sinclair exchanged Christmas gifts but thereafter the doctor never heard from her.

On October 9, 1952, Miss Sinclair and defendant went to the office of Attorney Kindig where Miss Sinclair executed a will in which, after making a number of bequests to friends in sums from $50 to $500 and $50 to her sister-in-law Della Sinclair, she bequeathed the residue of her estate to defendant.

Attorney Kindig testified that Miss Sinclair wanted to take care of defendant if defendant would take care of her as long as she lived, that she had already made out the deed to the real property but had not as yet delivered it, that she wanted to protect defendant if there was anything left after her operation and disability, and that she wanted to open joint bank accounts with defendant and to transfer to defendant all her securities. Miss Sinclair also wanted him to serve as her attorney for the rest of her life to look after her interests and estate and wanted him to share in her estate. He told Miss Sinclair that she should be protected as she might need the money later on. She told him to prepare the necessary documents. He then prepared cross-deeds for the real property, and wills for both Miss Sinclair and defendant. Defendant's will left all of her estate to Miss Sinclair. The latter's will left her residuary estate to defendant. Kindig also prepared and the parties signed the agreement hereafter discussed.

Two days later, October 11, a most peculiar agreement was entered into between defendant and Attorney Kindig. In it defendant retained him "to represent her as her attorney at law in a cause of action * * * regarding the estate of Sarah Sinclair and agrees to pay him for his services 50% if no contest of will. 50% if there be a contest of will." Kindig testified that defendant came to his office and stated that

Miss Sinclair had instructed her to come in and wanted him to draw an agreement with the terms as embodied in the last-mentioned agreement. A few days thereafter defendant returned to his office, saying "I have proven unfaithful to Miss Sinclair," and asked that the agreement be destroyed. He destroyed it.

In November Miss Sinclair wrote Kindig a letter terminating his services. However, she engaged him again the next month. In April, 1954, he discussed with defendant the alleged trust agreement. She told him it was none of his business, as his retention had been terminated. She said, "I have put her where I want her to be, where she should be," and "The property is mine, I can do as I please." Kindig had a claim for services of over $11,000 for services from September, 1952, to the date of her death.

October 11, 1952, Miss Sinclair wrote a "Last Will and Testament," addressed "To Whom It May Concern." Besides stating that Kindig had her securities (for transfer to her and defendant as joint tenants) which he was to return, she gave her home, all moneys and "all and sundry in my possession" to defendant. May 18, 1953, she executed a holographic codicil to her formal will of October 9, 1952. She ratified the former will except that she deleted a small money gift to Charlotte Jones and substituted Attorney Potstada for Kindig as alternate executor. She also wrote, "I do hereby declare that I have previously given and transferred freely and voluntarily certain stocks and other securities to Sarah Frances Weber, which transfer I hereby confirm."

In February, 1952, prior to the retention of Kindig, Miss Sinclair had engaged Attorney Rode to prepare a will. She had noted on the copy of a prior will the changes she wanted to make. She said she had already disposed of her real property as a gift. Defendant and Miss Sinclair came to his office after he had prepared the will. He asked defendant to leave. Then Miss Sinclair read the proposed will. He and his brother witnessed it. She appeared to be a woman of intelligence, of sound mind and competent to dispose of her estate. She was very definite in her desire to have defendant as the residuary legatee. The will, dated March 3, 1952, after certain small specific bequests, bequeathed the residue to defendant absolutely. October 6, 1952, Rode saw Miss Sinclair at her home. She was concerned as to whether substantially all of her estate would go to defendant under the will. She stated that she had given a deed to her home to defendant unequivocally and without reservation. She also was concerned over interference with her affairs by Della (the sister-in-law). She stated that Della had Cross call at her home to see her and she was indignant about it. She wanted to eliminate Della as a legatee. Defendant urged her to let it stand. Miss Sinclair asked whether anyone could contest the will as defendant would rather not take anything than have trouble over it. She was dissatisfied with Dr. Morrison, who had upset her considerably by his manner and use of coarse language. This dissatisfaction was aggravated by Dr. Goodwin who merely passed off her complaint with "that is just his way."

In January or early February, 1953, Attorney Potstada became the attorney for Miss Sinclair. He estimated the value of her properties then to be around $600,000 to $700,000. She told him that she wanted to transfer her securities outright to defendant, not in trust or joint tenancy, as they had been put by Mr. Kindig. She said that she had employed Attorney Kindig to transfer her properties to defendant but instead he transferred them in joint tenancy and subsequently refused to take them out of joint tenancy. She wanted Potstada to draw a new will to replace the one in which she left stock to Mr. Cross. Miss Sinclair feared that Della or Mr. Cross would get their hands on her property. Potstada arranged the transfer of the bulk of her securities to defendant because of that fear. Miss Sinclair considered defendant as her sister and the closest person to her. The bulk of her securities was transferred to defendant by July, 1953. Miss Sinclair left the Kindig will for minor changes. She said she would retain all the old wills. Potstada told her it was a good idea as further security, as all of the wills would have to be broken separately should the inter vivos transfers be overturned. With the view that there might be a contest of the will, Potstada had two other lawyers act as witnesses. In that will defendant was again named residuary legatee. Miss Sinclair paid him $5,000 for his services and a gift of 100 shares of Transamerica. Potstada had many conferences with Miss Sinclair in which she told him of her desire to transfer all her assets to defendant. Defendant was not present on most of these occasions. Miss Sinclair was "a very shrewd, intelligent and financially capable woman, and knew what she wanted to do." Prior to the death of Miss Sinclair he had never represented defendant. After Miss Sinclair's death defendant gave to Attorney Potstada federal bonds of approximately $40,000 value which defendant had received from Miss Sinclair.

Attorney Potstada testified that the services rendered defendant by him for which the $40,000 was paid, included representing her for a time in this particular action and also in the lawsuit brought against her by Attorney Kindig on the above mentioned agreement. He testified that in resisting a proceeding brought by Attorney Kindig to have a guardian appointed for Miss Sinclair on the ground that she was incompetent, he was acting for both Miss Sinclair and defendant.

The two lawyers who witnessed the will testified that Potstada had asked them to be particularly observant of Miss Sinclair since a contest was expected. One of them testified that he understood that the property had already been transferred and the will was a precautionary measure. Miss Sinclair seemed to be a "sharp little old lady."

As to the Kindig agreement, defendant testified that because of the condition of her eyesight she does not read and that it was not read to her. As stated above, Attorney Kindig testified that in a few days after its execution defendant came to him and demanded that the agreement be torn up.

In September, 1949, Miss Sinclair executed the deed of the home to defendant, handed it to her stating that it was a gift. Defendant kept the deed until 1953. In January of that year, upon the advice of Miss Sinclair, she gave it to Attorney Kindig to record. At that time defendant executed a deed back to Miss Sinclair and a will leaving everything to the latter. Kindig told defendant to keep them and that they were to protect Miss Sinclair in the event something happened to defendant. The same day, on Kindig's advice, since Miss Sinclair wanted to be sure that defendant got the money, defendant withdrew $47,200 from various joint accounts and put the money solely in her own name. In the same year all of the bank accounts, stocks and bonds were transferred to defendant, as Kindig had advised Miss Sinclar to do this since she was afraid someone would get her property even though she was leaving everything to defendant. After the operation in October, 1952, Miss Sinclair could not wear her false teeth and could not talk as the scar was still sore. She did not want to see anyone because of the disfigurement. Prior to the operation Emma Gibson had come to the house and on seeing the tumor on Miss Sinclair's cheek exclaimed, "Oh, Sarah, what has happened to you? How horrible you look!" She then turned and walked away. Miss Sinclair said, "Well, I must be a sight." After that Miss Sinclair did not want to see her friends, saying she was disfigured and could not talk. As to the telephone calls, defendant would ask Miss Sinclair if she wanted to talk. Miss Sinclair would always say she did not and could not because she did not have any teeth. In the summer of 1953 Cross told defendant that he had a letter from Della, and that Della was the proper one to take care of Miss Sinclair. He said that if defendant wanted to do it he would arrange for it. Defendant said she was not interested. When he left, Miss Sinclair who had heard the conversation said, "Such greed I have never heard of."

Dr. Presant saw Miss Sinclair professionally October 6, 1952. He referred her to Dr. Berkove for treatment. Her only concern at that time was whether defendant could visit her at the hospital. She was mentally alert, very intelligent, and a woman who would have her own way, very sweet but insistent that things be done as she wanted. Dr. Berkove removed a malignant tumor by cutting her cheek from the corner of the eye to the lip. He saw her daily from October 13 to 23, 1952, and thereafter until she went to the sanitarium, where he advised her to go. She impressed him as being very resourceful and mentally alert. On January 21, 1954, she, for the first time, showed memory loss by repeating several questions. Defendant said she also noticed this.

Tosh and Susumi Mitoma, brothers, came to Miss Sinclair's home once a week from 1947 until her death to do gardening. They arrived about 10:30 a. m. and remained until the middle of the afternoon. They usually spent about an hour after lunch talking to Miss Sinclair. Tosh testified that on one occasion she stated that she was going to will the home to defendant. Later she said she had done that and after 1952 she stated that she was turning the property and everything over to defendant, that she was giving defendant "The property, the house, and her business." Her business so far as the witness knew was "stocks." She said she did not have any relatives after her brother died and that defendant had been faithful to her. The relationship between defendant and Miss Sinclair was very congenial. "They were always going out together, more like sisters." Susumi, a graduate of the University of California in entomology, testified that he had "never met a sharper woman, more intelligent and capable in every way." Defendant and Miss Sinclair "seemed to hit it right off together and they became quite attached to one another. They seemed to complement each other in their personalities." "They always seemed to get along more like sisters than anything else." On one occasion Miss Sinclair told Tosh that she had turned over the house to defendant. "They were very happy, used to be quite a bit together, and laugh and joke all the time." Miss Sinclair did not like to meet people because of her scar as she was sensitive about it.

On March 22, 1953, Miss Sinclair wrote a very interesting four page statement in her own handwriting. The same day she sent to Attorney Potstada a copy of it which she also wrote out in longhand. In it she states why she has transferred and is transferring to defendant her stocks, bonds and savings account instead of placing them in trust or having them distributed under her will. She is fearful that Attorney Cross and her sister-in-law Della Sinclair, because of incidents which she relates, because of the fact that Attorney Cross is in correspondence with Della, and because of their solicitude for her health, were "planning a future for me, which would be most hateful to me and to which I shall not yield,—with God's help." She refers to the fact that Della had once sent her a gift of $10,000 but that when she learned from Della's "constant orders regulating my life" that Della "felt her gift to me, gave her the right to dominate my life" she returned the money. She also explains that Attorney Kindig had held back some of her securities when she had asked him for all of them and that she felt, upon reviewing, that the agreement she had entered into with him was "out of order * * * very unreasonable." Hence she had discharged him as her attorney. She ends the statement: "I would much prefer —as I have done and am doing now, to transfer these matters to my friend and constant companion, and to deliver them to her while I am still here, as it gives me faith to know that my wishes shall be consummated. I trust she will be spared to enjoy all she gets—if she gets it! Heaven knows. —I don't!"

She also wrote a note in which she stated that in April, 1953, she had given certain unnamed securities to defendant. Still another note stated that she did not want Kindig to act in any capacity as attorney for her or her estate, and "I, Sarah Sinclair, give, transfer and assign all of my negotiable bonds on this date [May 5, 1953] to Sarah Frances Weber as her own separate property without any conditions or reservations. I further acknowledge the actual delivery of these bonds by this instrument and all the interest I have therein."

Subsequent to the Potstada drawn will Miss Sinclair executed another holographic will, probably by copying a prior formal will. In it, after certain small gifts, she left the residue to defendant.

[2] "Where the burden shifts to the defendant to show fairness and good faith in the transaction as it does under the facts in this case, it is nevertheless incumbent upon the appellant in order to prevail upon the appeal to show that no credible evidence was produced from which the reasonable inference might be drawn that the grantor acted voluntarily and with full knowledge of the facts and a complete understanding of the effect of the transaction." (O'Neill v. Dennis, 1952, 109 Cal.App.2d 210, 212, 240 P.2d 376, 377. There the trial court had found no undue influence in a suit to cancel a deed for fraud where the defendant was a frequent visitor and there was a confidential relationship.) Or, as stated another way, the question of whether the presumption of undue influence has been rebutted is a question for the trier of fact and a reviewing court will not reverse if there is sufficient evidence to support a finding. Ginn v. Podesta, 1937, 8 Cal.2d 233, 235, 64 P.2d 1090; Camperi v. Chiechi, 1955, 134 Cal.App.2d 485, 504, 286 P.2d 399. It would seem that the letter written by Miss Sinclair to Mr. Potstada in explanation of her actions, alone, would be sufficient credible evidence to support the finding.

[3] Plaintiffs contend that in order to rebut the presumption of undue influence, it is necessary to show that Miss Sinclair had received independent advice in making the gifts to defendant and that she did not receive such advice. They contend that both Attorney Kindig and Attorney Potstada were really representing defendant and not Miss Sinclair. They cite Webb v. Saunders, 1947, 79 Cal.App.2d 863, 869, 181 P.2d 43, and Webb v. Saunders, 1949, 89 Cal.App.2d 732, 735, 201 P.2d 816. There are two answers to this contention. One is that the evidence shows that at no time prior to the death of Miss Sinclair did Attorney Potstada represent defendant, and hence Miss Sinclair received independent advice from him, if not also from Attorney Kindig. Moreover, she was advised from time to time by other attorneys. The second answer is that lack of independent legal advice, while an important factor in determining whether the presumption of undue influence from a confidential relationship has been overcome, and should be weighed by the trier of fact, is not an absolute essential. O'Neill v. Dennis, supra, 109 Cal. App.2d 210, 214, 240 P.2d 376; Roeder v. Roeder, 118 Cal.App.2d 572, 580, 258 P.2d 581.

The evidence clearly shows that at all times Miss Sinclair knew what she was doing, that she had no relatives who had been close to her in any degree, that she regarded defendant as a sister, that because of the solicitude of Della and Attorney Cross for her she was convinced that they wanted to control her life and property, something she did not want them to do, that her determination to give all her property to defendant was not due to undue influence upon her by defendant, and that the presumption due to the confidential relationship was fully overcome.

[4] Plaintiffs contend that the trial court's "Announcement of Decision" shows that it believed that no undue influence can be proved in any case unless weakness in mind of the grantor is shown. This, of course, is not the law. "A person does not have to be mentally incompetent or even weak-minded to repose confidence in another when the relationship justifies it." Kloehn v. Prendiville, 154 Cal.App.2d 156, 162, 316 P.2d 17, 22. However, the findings show that the court's decision was not based upon any such theory. The findings control over any announcement of decision. See Formosa Corp. v. Rogers, 1951, 108 Cal. App.2d 397, 239 P.2d 88; Sketchley v. Lipkin, 1950, 99 Cal.App.2d 849, 222 P.2d 927. Moreover, a reading of the announcement of decision does not support plaintiffs' contention. While the court did discuss unsoundness of mind, it must be remembered that one of the counts of the complaint upon which the court was required to find and did find, was unsoundness of mind.

2. The Agreement.

[5] The agreement drawn by Attorney Kindig and executed October 9, 1952, by Miss Sinclair and defendant states that Miss Sinclair is about to assign to defendant in joint tenancy certain bank accounts, stocks, bonds and other properties "for the purpose of paying and defraying the expenses of first party [Miss Sinclair] during the hospitalization of First Party and thereafter; And Whereas, Second Party agrees to be her dutiful constant nurse and companion during the lifetime of First Party" it is agreed "that said Second Party shall conduct, maintain and preserve said funds, property and accounts to the use and benefit of said First Party so long as said First Party shall live, unless earlier terminated in writing by said First Party." It then appoints Attorney Kindig as attorney in fact for both parties. Plaintiffs contend that this was a trust agreement wherein the property was transferred to both parties as trustees for the purposes therein stated with Miss Sinclair as the beneficiary and that upon her death the purposes were fulfilled and the corpus reverted to Miss Sinclair's estate as trustor. The agreement is ambiguous. It states that the purpose is to pay Miss Sinclair's expenses during hospitalization and thereafter. This is consistent with a trust theory. However, it next contains defendant's obligation to be Miss Sinclair's constant nurse and companion during Miss Sinclair's life. This is somewhat out of place in a trust agreement. Moreover, it seems to raise an inference that if defendant performed that obligation the property would go to her as joint tenant. The evidence clearly shows what was intended. As said by the trial judge, Honorable Richard R. Chamberlain: "Did The Agreement Of October 9, 1952, Create A Trust The Purposes Of Which Have Been Fulfilled, Resulting In An Obligation To The Defendant To Return Any Remaining Assets To Miss Sinclair's Estate?

"It would be an unnecessary elaboration of the Court's hereinabove summarized conclusions, to review the evidence bearing on the question just stated. Although Miss Sinclair by her voluntary acts placed her property either in the sole name of defendant or in the names of herself and defendant as joint tenants, she retained and exercised the power to draw checks on joint tenancy bank accounts until almost the date of her death; notwithstanding the Agreement expressed her purpose as that of paying and defraying her expenses during her hospitalization, the evidence shows that it was unnecessary for defendant to actually pay such expenses because Miss Sinclair herself attended to such payments up to three or four weeks before her death. And during the 18 months between the date of the Agreement and Miss Sinclair's death defendant continued 'to be her dutiful constant nurse and companion' as contemplated by the Agreement. It is apparent that Miss Sinclair fully understood that upon her death sole title to the property mentioned in the Agreement would vest in defendant as the surviving joint tenant."

Moreover, assuming the instrument to be a trust agreement as contended by plaintiffs, the parties clearly rescinded it. It, of course, did not purport to apply to the real property, deed to which was given defendant some time before. Subsequently to its execution Miss Sinclair had the money, stocks and bonds, with the exception of $30,000 above mentioned, taken out of joint tenancy and put in defendant's name solely. Thereafter she wrote the statement with copy to Potstada to the effect that she had transferred everything to defendant and giving the reasons; she also wrote that in April, 1953, she had given certain unnamed securities to defendant. On May 5, 1953, she wrote an assignment to defendant of all her bonds. Miss Sinclair's expressions and actions both before and after signing the agreement clearly show that the last thing she wanted was any of her property to go into her estate or to any of her relatives.

The judgment is affirmed.

Merlin A. DAVIS, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Raymond A. MILLIGAN, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 9484.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 19, 1958.

Action by business visitor against owner of land and service station thereon for personal injuries sustained as result of alleged negligence of station operator. The Superior Court, Butte County, Dudley G. McGregor, J., entered judgment of nonsuit on all causes of action and business visitor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Warne, J. pro tem. held that evidence was insufficient to support a finding that an employer-employee relationship existed between owner of realty and service station thereon and operator thereof who was allowed use of station on condition that he buy all his petroleum products from owner at a specified price, and evidence was insufficient to sustain a finding of a partnership between owner of realty and station operator.

Affirmed.

1. Trial ⇐142

A court can grant nonsuit only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving plaintiff's evidence all of the value to which it is legally entitled, including every legitimate inference which may be drawn therefrom, the result is a determination that there is no conflict of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were given.

2. Master and Servant ⇐330(3)

In action by business visitor to recover against owner of land and filling station thereon for personal injuries allegedly caused by negligence of operator who was allowed rent-free use of premises by owner upon operator's agreement to purchase all his petroleum products from owner at a specified price, evidence was insufficient to support a finding that an employer-employee relationship existed between owner of premises and operator of filling station.

3. Master and Servant ⇐1

Right to control another's work is essential to an employer-employee relationship.

4. Partnership ⇐55

In action by business visitor against owner of land and filling station thereon to recover for personal injuries sustained on premises due to alleged negligence of station operator who was allowed use of premises rent free upon oral agreement to purchase all petroleum products from owner at a specified price, there was no evidence to sustain finding of partnership between owner of station and operator. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 15006.

5. Negligence ⇐134(3)

In action by business visitor against owner of realty and filling station thereon to recover for personal injuries allegedly caused by negligence of station operator, who occupied premises rent free in return for an oral agreement to purchase from owner all petroleum products required at a certain specified price, evidence failed to support any finding that owner was in fact operator of station.

C. Keith Lyde, Oroville, for appellant.

Raymond A. Leonard, Oroville, for respondent.

WARNE, Justice pro tem.

Appellant appeals from the judgment of nonsuit rendered in favor of the respondent in an action for personal injuries.

Plaintiff while an invitee and business visitor at a service station operated by Myrle Stephens was thrown from a horse when the horse shied as the result of noise caused by Myrle Stephens kicking an iron device upon the grease lifting rack. Appellant received a severe back injury. Respondent Milligan was the owner of the real property, including the service station, where the accident occurred. Appellant filed his action against both Stephens and the respondent Milligan, but a few days prior to the trial he dismissed the action against Stephens.

Appellant's complaint was in four counts. The first cause of action alleged that Stephens was in control of and working on the premises of the service station, that the accident was caused by his negligence, and that such negligence was a proximate cause of appellant's injuries.

The second cause of action alleged that respondent was the owner and operator of the service station, and that Stephens was the employee and agent of respondent Milligan at the time of the alleged injury.

The third cause of action alleges that Stephens and Milligan were partners doing business on said premises at the time of the injury; and the fourth cause of action alleges that Milligan was the sole and exclusive owner in fee simple of the premises upon which the service station was situated, and was in possession and control of the premises at the time of the accident. The defendant Stephens answered, denying negligence on his part as alleged in Count I, and entered a general denial as to each of the remaining counts. He pleaded two defenses: (1) Contributory negligence on the part of the appellant, and (2) assumption of risk by the appellant.

Respondent Milligan answered Counts II, III and IV of the complaint, admitting that Stephens was in control of the service station, but denying the remaining allegation in each of said counts.

After appellant had presented his case and rested, respondent moved for a nonsuit on all causes of action. The motion was granted, and this appeal followed.

The questions presented upon this appeal are (1) whether Stephens was at the time of the accident the agent or employee of Milligan, (2) whether a partnership existed between Milligan and Stephens, and (3) whether Milligan was in sole possession and control of the premises.

[1] As stated in Robinson v. George, 16 Cal.2d 238, 241, 105 P.2d 914, 916: "In reviewing a judgment of nonsuit, it must always be borne in mind that a court can grant a nonsuit only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving plaintiff's evidence all of the value to which it is legally entitled, including every legitimate inference which may be drawn therefrom, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were given. (Citing cases.)"

In the light of these rules, we shall consider plaintiff's case.

The evidence shows that Stephens was in possession of the premises under an oral agreement. However, Stephens testified that Milligan promised him a written agreement, but wanted him to first try out the station and then they would contract; that he rented it for two months before he asked Milligan for a contract; that Milligan was the distributor for the Norwalk people in that area and that Stephens had to buy his gasoline and oil from Milligan; that Milligan owned the station; that when they made the "deal", as he called it, Milligan figured the gasoline out and showed him what the gasoline cost him and what he could sell it for, that he would make a profit for his work, that Milligan would make a profit on the gasoline and oil which he sold to Stephens and that would be the rent, and "that way he didn't have to pay any rent on the place, that was the deal"; that he agreed upon a price he would pay Milligan for the gasoline delivered to him; that what he sold it for was his own business; that at the time he was questioned about "this affair which was within two weeks after the accident", he made and signed the following statement: "I have no written agreement with Ekonomy Oil Company, I have a verbal agreement with Ekonomy Oil Company, that is, A. B. Milligan, that I am to buy my gasoline and three kinds of oil that he handles. Any other accessories that I may choose to handle I can buy where I please. I pay no rent for the service station property at Brown and Midway in Durham. The only consideration for my use of the above service station property is that I buy my gasoline and the oil Mr. Milligan sells from him. I pay Mr. Milligan for the products he delivers to me and sell to my customers, I buy at the dealer price. If I give credit to any of my customers that is on my own. It is none of Mr. Milligan's business what I do or how I sell. Mr. Milligan exercises no supervision over my station"; that he did not share his profits with Milligan; that Milligan never paid him any salary of any kind, nor did he ever file any partnership income tax; that Milligan visited the station from time to time and made suggestions, but never actually ordered him "around" or told him "to do this or that" or he would fire him; that he tried to do everything Milligan wanted him to do in order to get along with him because he knew if he did not go by Milligan's suggestions he would be put out; that he wanted a contract so that he could run the service station as he wanted to; that one of the considerations for Milligan leasing (emphasis added) the property to him was that he was to keep open seven days a week; that he paid the sales tax on candy, soda pop, tires and things like that, and that the sales tax on the gasoline which Milligan sold him was probably paid by Milligan and included in the purchase price; that a seller's permit was issued to him personally by the State Board of Equalization; that he bought all the grease guns and everything off of Milligan and that Milligan sold him the equipment but agreed that if he ever gave up the station he, Milligan, would buy it back; that Milligan advertised the gasoline (presumably the brand which he carried) in order to stimulate the sales in all the stations which he owned. It also appears that Milligan had a key to the premises during the entire time that Stephens operated the service station. However, there is no evidence in the record that Milligan used this key other than to let Stephens into the service station when he, Stephens, had locked himself out.

Respondent Milligan testified that he was in the petroleum business; that the owned four service stations, one in Durham and three in Chico; that prior to May 3, 1956, Stephens came to his office to see about taking over the service station in Durham, and that he took it over; that Stephens did not operate it for him, but operated it for himself; that although he owned the station he had no interest in Stephens' business; that he was the exclusive dealer for Norwalk petroleum products for that district; that he made a profit per gallon of gasoline sold as a broker; that before Stephens took over the service station it was agreed that Stephens was to sell his gasoline and oil and pay no rent; that he presented a written agreement to Stephens, but Stephens did not want it; that the more gasoline Stephens was able to sell the more money he, Milligan, as a broker would make; that he was not in control of the service station so far as the "policies were concerned"; that he had a policy of insurance as an owner and operator to cover the times when he operated the station himself. As to what Milligan was to receive from Stephens for the use of the premises, we quote from the record:

"Q. So now * * * yesterday as I understood it you didn't testify that the profits that you made as a distributor * * * or broker as you put it, that that was rent on the premises. A. It was my entire income on everything.

"Q. But that wasn't rent that you charged on the premises, was it? A. No, that was profit on the merchandise. * * * In fact, that would take in everything. * * *

"Q. It is just a profit? A. If you have a certain investment you have to get a certain amount of money out of it and they would have to sell that much products through the place.

"Q. It is an allowance on your premises? A. Yes, to take care of your overhead on the premises and your cost of operating it, it is good business."

Respondent also testified that he had agreed to furnish and maintain the pumps, hoist, compressor, one sixty gallon kerosene tank, one sixty-two gallon portable tank, or whatever tank he had, four thirty gallon Hi Boy lube tanks, and the service station building, anything that he owned. However, he did not agree to maintain anything that Stephens owned.

[2, 3] Appellant contends first that the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that an employer-employee relationship existed between Milligan and Stephens, and, therefore, the court erred in granting the nonsuit. We do not agree. The testimony is undisputed that Stephens was in possession of the premises under an oral agreement. There is not a scintilla of evidence that Stephens considered himself an employee of Milligan. Nor is the evidence sufficient to warrant such a presumption. As we view Stephen's testimony, he was a tenant from month to month expecting to get a lease for a definite period of time. While Milligan made suggestions from time to time as to what should be done, such as keeping the restrooms clean and other helpful suggestions, there is no evidence that he actually supervised Stephens. The fact that Stephens stated, "Well, I knowed if I didn't go by his suggestions he would put me out", does not mean that Milligan had the right to "fire" Stephens as contended by appellant. Putting him out or terminating the occupancy of the premises is entirely different than terminating an employment. There is nothing in the oral agreement by which Milligan retained the right to control and direct the mode or manner in which the work of operating the station was done. Nor does it appear that Milligan exercised a particular control over the details of Stephens' work. The requirement that the service station should be kept open for seven days a week was part of the consideration for the agreement. It does not appear herein that Milligan possessed the right to control Stephens' work, which is essential to an employer-employee relationship. Robinson v. George, supra. The making of suggestions and the right to order the doing of certain work are entirely different matters.

[4] Appellant contends next that there is evidence of a partnership. To the contrary, we find no evidence of a partnership relationship existing between Stephens and Milligan. Stephens did not share his profits in the operation of the service station business with Milligan, nor did Milligan share the profits which he received as a broker or distributor from the oil and gasoline which he sold to Stephens. They were two different profits entirely. Nor is there any evidence that they were co-owners of the business. A partnership is an association of two or more persons to carry on as co-owners a business for profit. Sec. 15006(1), Corporations Code.

[5] Lastly, we find no evidence in the record to support respondent's contention that Milligan was the operator of the station. What we have already stated is equally applicable to this contention.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION, a local administrative board; Harry Albert, a member of said board; Hayden F. Jones, a member of said board; Winston W. Crouch, a member of said board; and Hurl H. Churchill, Clerk of the Municipal Court of the County of Los Angeles, State of California, El Monte Judicial District, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 23318.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 15, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 11, 1959.

Mandamus proceeding brought to compel petitioner's reinstatement as deputy clerk grade IV of municipal court. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Otto J. Emme, J., denied the petition, and the petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that statute blanketing deputy clerk of justice court into municipal court did not imply legislative approval of deputy clerk for all time regardless of whether she performed her duties properly, and that she had been blanketed into position subject to civil service requirements of efficiency and to its procedure for correction of inadequacy; and held that, therefore, proceeding culminating in reduction in grade involved no collateral attack upon a legislative determination.

Affirmed.

1. Officers ⇐72(1)

In proceeding under civil service rules culminating in deputy municipal court clerk's reduction in rank from grade IV to grade I, hearing officer's findings were lamentably inartful, but were not fatally so.

2. Mandamus ⇐168(4)

In mandamus proceeding brought to compel petitioner's reinstatement as deputy clerk grade IV of municipal court, evidence sustained trial judge's finding that petitioner had not in fact been tried upon an issue not alleged in reduction letter, and that hearing officer's gratuitous conclusion that petitioner was not physically or emotionally able to perform duties of grade IV rank was mere surplusage.

3. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇐484

Findings of administrative tribunals are liberally construed.

4. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇐764

Error in administrative proceeding does not vitiate ruling unless shown to have been actually prejudicial.

5. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇐753

Theory pursued by administrative agency in reaching its conclusion is not important if facts warrant action taken.

6. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇐473

Hearing officer's observing of witnesses while testifying did not constitute taking of evidence outside hearing and was not an improper or secret method of taking evidence.

7. Officers ⇐72(1)

In proceeding under civil service rules culminating in deputy municipal court clerk's reduction in rank from grade IV to grade I, wherein ultimate charge was failure to exercise diligence, intelligence or interest in pursuit of duties, it was not necessary to establish all of constituent facts alleged, and it was sufficient that evidence proved enough of them to show ultimate charge to be true.

8. Officers ⇐72(1)

In proceeding under civil service rules culminating in deputy municipal court clerk's reduction in rank from grade IV to grade I, evidence sustained finding of failure to exercise diligence, intelligence or interest in pursuit of duties of the higher rank.

9. Officers ⇐69.10

Statute blanketing deputy clerk of justice court into municipal court did not imply legislative approval of deputy clerk for all time regardless of whether she performed her duties properly, and she was blanketed into position subject to civil service requirements of efficiency and to its procedure for correction of inadequacy; and, therefore, proceeding culminating in reduction in grade involved no collateral attack upon a legislative determination.

Guerin, Guerin & Graham, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Joel R. Bennett, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondents.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Appellant, as petitioner, sought in the superior court mandamus to compel respondent Los Angeles County Civil Service Commission to reinstate her as Deputy Clerk Grade IV of the Municipal Court of El Monte Judicial District, Los Angeles County. She was reduced in rank from grade IV to grade I by order of the commission and that order was affirmed by the superior court through denial of appellant's petition for mandamus; from that judgment she appeals.

Appellant was a deputy or assistant clerk of the justice court of El Monte township and as such was blanketed into the municipal court for that district by the statute which reorganized the inferior courts in 1951, thus becoming, as the parties concede, entitled to the protection of the provisions of the Los Angeles County Charter and the rules of the Los Angeles County Civil Service Commission in matters of discharge and reduction. She was acting clerk for a short period; took the examination for appointment as clerk but failed to pass. Mr. Hurl H. Churchill succeeded her when he became permanent clerk on November 1, 1954.

Pursuant to rule 19.02 of the Rules of the Civil Service Commission he undertook to reduce appellant on December 6, 1956, from grade IV deputy clerk to grade I deputy clerk. This was done by letter stating reasons for reduction as required by said rule. In due course issue was joined and a hearing held before a member of the commission who was designated as hearing officer for that purpose. Appellant's major contentions revolve around the findings made by the hearing officer. To that matter our discussion will be directed first.

The rule requires that "[s]uch reasons [for demotion] shall state the specific grounds and the particular facts upon which the * * * reduction is based * * *." Mr. Churchill's letter of reduction charged that "[y]ou have failed to exercise diligence, intelligence or interest in the pursuit of your duties, even following counseling at the time you were given your Performance Evaluation Report a year ago showing a 'Below Standard' rating * * *." It further stated that an investigation had been made and "the following specific facts were established, which constitute the grounds for the foregoing action." Then followed nine paragraphs of specific facts, some of which were admitted by appellant's answer and request for hearing.

The first of these specific paragraphs alleged that appellant on November 9, 1956, issued and delivered to the sheriff a commitment of one David Vallejo to the county jail for 90 days, although the judge had sentenced him to 60 days only. Appellant admitted this allegation and averred that the error was corrected without damage to anyone, relying upon the fact that a deputy from the Transportation Bureau called her attention to the error. At his request she checked the memorandum made by the judge and found the sentence to be 60 days. According to Mr. Churchill, who was present: "On back of the file where the judge writes the order for commitment was a notation of sixty days in County Jail. Mrs. Steele said, 'Well, they won't send him to the Honor Farm.' It also showed, 'recommended to Honor Farm.' 'They won't send him for less than the ninety days.' The officer said, 'Oh, yes they will. They'll send him for just thirty days.' I said to Mrs. Steele, 'It makes no difference what jail will do when they get the commitment according to what the judge says.' Mrs. Steele changed the wording of ninety to sixty and handed it back."

Also included in paragraph (1) of the letter of reduction was the further statement that the Vallejo commitment "followed your issuance of a commitment against defendant Clarence August Walters on January 21, 1955 in case No. M–5552 for $158.00 or 30 days in the County Jail instead of the duly pronounced and written and entered sentence of $20.00 or 4 days in the County Jail, thereby requiring the said defendant to serve 30 full days in jail instead of 4, no part of said fine having been paid." Mrs. Steele denied this but the facts were clearly proved.[1] Judge John K. Otis, presiding in that judicial district, received a letter of February 21, 1955, from Walter whom he had sentenced to pay $20 or serve four days in jail. It said: "On Jan. 21, 55, I apeared before you on a 1735½. You gave me $20 or 4 days, but in the Co. Jail they had it $150.00 or 30 days. I done the 30 days, got out Feb. 20, '55. Why?" Judge Otis had Churchill verify the facts and then talked with appellant. After she had read the letter at the judge's request the following occurred, according to Judge Otis' testimony: "When she did, and I said, 'Carolyn, this man has served thirty days when I only sentenced him to spend four days in the County Jail'; she said, 'Yes, I know. I made a mistake.' I said, 'Well, it's a very serious mistake. The man has been deprived of his liberty for twenty-six extra days.' She said, 'Well, Judge, look at his drunk arrest record. He's had a lot of drunk arrests. He had it coming to him.' I said, 'Carolyn, I'm amazed that you would make that statement. It isn't a question of whether you think the man should be serving thirty days or whether he has a long record and therefore should serve thirty days. The point is the Court sentenced him to four days in the County Jail, and it isn't for you to say whether he should serve thirty days or four days. I felt that he should serve four days. I am surprised that you should make that statement. It's a very tragic error.' She made no comments with that, and that was the end of the conversation." The hearing officer and the commission found this specification to be true and the trial judge properly held the finding is supported by substantial evidence.

Appellant admitted the statement of paragraph 3(b) of the reduction letter, namely, that she in the case of Prunty v. Pascoe had made an entry in the register of actions on October 25, 1956, of "'(1–Galceran)[2] Cause called'" with nothing further except the entry of the judgment; no showing of appearances or fact of rendition of judgment; but appellant alleged that this was done in accordance with Churchill's instructions. This he refuted. The commission's finding was contrary to appellant's contention and the trial judge properly held that substantial evidence supported that finding.

Appellant also admitted the specification that she on October 10, 1956, failed to inform the bailiff in charge of jurors to notify prospective jurors not to appear for trial of a certain case on October 18, the defendant having entered a plea of guilty; that it was her duty so to do, and, as a result thereof, a large number of jurors appeared and were paid $3 each, plus mileage.

Appellant denied, but the commission found to be true, the specification of the letter that she had presented to the judge nine orders for appearance of prospective jurors which were signed by him and ready for mailing, but that not one of them "had the time of day inserted in the place of the time court convened, nor the name of the judge. One (M–9601) had the name of the defendant where the case number should be, and vice versa. You had rubber-stamped on each order the date of 'October 21, 1956' as the date the judge signed each order, whereas the actual date he made and signed each order was November 21, 1956, many of such cases not having even been filed by October 21, 1956." The trial judge found the evidence sufficient to sustain the commission's finding in this regard and was justified in so doing.

1. The Superior Court judge found that there was no allegation of proximate cause in the reducing letter but we consider this immaterial. Moreover, the fact of proximate cause plainly appears from the record.

2. The name of the judge presiding.

The letter charged that appellant told the defendant in People v. Kulyas that his cash bail of $27 would be returned in three weeks because he had been found not guilty. Not having received the money, Kulyas made inquiries and it developed that, although it was appellant's duty to make a "calendar memo" for the bookkeeper which would initiate the return of the bail, she failed to do so. Although it was found below that the evidence did not substantiate the claim that appellant told Kulyas he would receive his bail money the other facts were found against her by the commission and the finding is supported by substantial evidence as found by the trial judge.

[1] Written findings were made by the hearing officer, adopted by the commission and construed by the superior court to be findings "that all of the particular facts charged in the letter of reduction served on petitioner were true." The hearing officer's findings were lamentably inartful but not fatally so. Before referring to the letter of reduction they say: "That said employee under proper conditions and supervision can adequately fill the duties of Deputy Clerk I, but is not physically or emotionally able to perform the regular duties of a Deputy Clerk IV." No specification of physical or emotional inability to perform the duties of a deputy clerk IV was included in the letter of reduction, either in general or specific terms. The findings proceed as follows: "That said employee by letter of reduction dated December 6, 1956, was charged with failing to exercise diligence, intelligence, or interest in the pursuit of her duties. That certain specific facts were alleged constituting the grounds for the reduction as stated in nine charges or five pages of specific acts all of which were in the nature of clerical errors, some of them with serious consequences to the individual defendant involved in the case, but taken as a whole or as a small group of charges, are sufficient to show said employee was not physically or emotionally capable of performing properly the duties of a Deputy Clerk IV." By way of conclusion: "The Hearing Officer therefore concludes that there was sufficient substantial evidence to support the charges alleged in the letters of reduction, but that no charge standing alone is sufficient to support the reduction, but that when the charges are considered in groups of three or four or more the pattern is clearly shown that said employee is not physically or emotionally able to perform the duties of a Deputy Clerk IV."

Civil Service rule 5.11 provides: "Formal findings of fact are not required. If such hearing is not before the full Commission, written findings shall be submitted to the Commission for its approval. If the Commission accepts such findings, it need not read the record of the hearing; if it declines to accept such findings, it must read the record or hold a hearing de novo. After which it may adopt the findings made by the Hearing Board or make its own findings."

The trial judge concluded that, although the hearing officer's findings upon certain specific allegations were not supported by substantial evidence, "the particular facts charged in the said letter of reduction as to which there was substantial evidence are sufficient to support the findings of the Civil Service Commission that the Petitioner failed to exercise diligence, intelligence or interest in the pursuit of her duties; that the Civil Service Commission did so find that there existed specific grounds for reduction consisting of failure on the part of the Petitioner to exercise diligence, intelligence or interest in the pursuit of her duties; that said findings of particular facts and specific grounds support the conclusion of the Civil Service Commission that the reduction of Petitioner was justified."

[2–5] Based upon the gratuitous conclusion of the hearing officer that appellant was not physically or emotionally able to perform the duties of grade IV appellant's counsel argues a denial of due process in that she has been tried upon an issue not alleged in the reduction letter and demoted upon the basis of a finding of the truth of such charge. The trial judge found that appellant was not tried upon a charge of being physically or emotionally unable to perform the duties of a grade IV clerk and the record sustains this finding. The statement of such inability as made by the hearing officer was but an additional observation superimposed upon his "conclusion" that "there was sufficient substantial evidence to support the charges alleged in the letters of reduction." The commission itself found, after reading the officer's findings and conclusions, that "good cause appearing therefor, and the Commission being fully advised in the matter, accepts the Findings and Conclusions of its duly appointed Hearing Officer, Hayden F. Jones, and determines that the facts and reasons justify the reduction of said employee, Carolyn A. Steele."

Findings of administrative tribunals are liberally construed for the reason, among others, that they are often the product of laymen operating in an unfamiliar field. Swars v. Council of City of Vallejo, 33 Cal.2d 867, 872–873, 206 P.2d 355, 358: "Although administrative findings must conform to the statutes governing the particular agency, they need not be stated with the formality required in judicial proceedings [citations]. In connection with the action of an administrative board, the fact that certain action is taken or recommendation made may raise a presumption that the existence of the necessary facts was ascertained and found [citations] * *. Administrative findings may be general as long as they satisfy the dual requirements of making intelligent review by the courts possible and apprising the parties of the basis for administrative action."

Bailey v. County of Los Angeles, 46 Cal.2d 132, 136, 293 P.2d 449, 452: "'[I]n connection with the action of such commission and board, composed usually of laymen, the fact that a certain action is taken or recommendation made raises the presumption that the existence of the necessary facts had been ascertained and found. [Citations.] We cannot perceive wherein appellant has been prejudiced by the absence of formal findings under the facts here present.'" To the same effect, see also, Temescal Water Co. v. Department of Public Works, 44 Cal.2d 90, 102, 280 P.2d 1; Miller v. Planning Commission, 138 Cal. App.2d 598, 603, 292 P.2d 278; Sobo v. Board of Police Commissioners, 145 Cal. App.2d 783, 788, 303 P.2d 104.

The last sentence quoted from the Bailey case, supra, points to the criterion to be applied to findings of administrative boards,—whether appellant has been prejudiced by informalities or other inadequacies of same. In Southern California Jockey Club v. California Horse Racing Board, 36 Cal.2d 167, 176, 223 P.2d 1, 7, the court, dealing with the claim of errors in receipt of evidence, said: "In its memorandum opinion the trial court said: 'Nevertheless, eliminating from consideration testimony concerning the economic interest of the existing tracks, there is still substantial evidence upon which to sustain the Board's determination. Even if there be some error in the record, the court should follow the general principle enunciated in Article VI, section 4½ of the Constitution, to-wit, sustain the trial body where the error complained of has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice.' Thus its conclusion was that without such evidence there was sufficient evidence to support the board's decision. Moreover, it is presumed on appeal that the court, sitting without a jury, did not base its finding on irrelevant evidence where there is competent evidence to support it. [Citations.] There being competent evidence to support the judgment without such 'improper' evidence, and the court not having based its findings on the latter, it is not important that plaintiff's offer of proof in rebuttal thereof was denied by the board." See, also, to the effect that error occurring in an administrative proceeding does not vitiate the ruling unless shown to have been actually prejudicial to the appellant, Roark v. State Bar, 5 Cal.2d 665, 668, 55 P.2d 839; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 178 Cal. 491, 493, 173 P. 993; Brewer v. Railroad Commission, 190 Cal. 60, 77–78, 210 P. 511; Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corp. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 180 Cal. 389, 393, 182 P. 35; Walsh v. Industrial Accident Comm., 1 Cal.2d 747, 748, 36 P.2d 1072; Frankfort General Ins. Co. v. Pillsbury, 173 Cal. 56, 60, 159 P. 150; 2 Cal.Jur.2d § 223, p. 367; 42 Am.Jur., § 244, p. 686. Moreover, the theory pursued by the agency in reaching its conclusion is not important if the facts warrant the action taken. Southern California Edison Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 78 Cal.App. 584, 591, 248 P. 938; Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 73 Cal.App.2d 555, 563, 166 P.2d 908; 42 Am.Jur., § 244, p. 686.

The trial judge correctly concluded that the commission acted upon the charges made in the reduction letter and inferentially that the language concerning physical and emotional inability is to be rejected as surplusage.

[6] In the same connection appellant argues that she did not have a fair trial because evidence was taken secretly by the hearing officer. This refers to his recital that he had "seen the demeanor of the witnesses while testifying." Such observation is standard practice in administrative hearings as well as in court trials. Pratt v. County Civil Service Comm., 108 Cal.App. 2d 114, 120, 238 P.2d 3; 5501 Hollywood, Inc. v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, 155 Cal.App.2d 748, 754, 318 P.2d 820. It is an aid to determination of the credibility of witnesses; in this instance substantial portions of appellant's testimony were rejected. There is no basis for the contention that the observing of witnesses while testifying was an improper or secret method of taking evidence. Nor is it a taking of evidence outside the hearing.

Appellant criticizes the language of the hearing officer's finding "that there was sufficient substantial evidence to support the charges alleged in the letters of reduction," arguing that this shows an improper placing of the burden of proof upon the one who is challenging the reduction in rank and pay. Rule 5.10 of the commission says that in such hearings "the burden of proof shall be on the appointing power." The principles of construction to which we have adverted indicate that the criticized language is but a layman's way of saying that the charges have been sustained by a preponderance of the evidence. Particularly is this clear when it is recalled that the more serious charges against appellant were admitted or proved by convincing evidence and that they are sufficient, as the trial judge indicated, to warrant appellant's reduction regardless of other relatively inconsequential specifications.

[7, 8] Because the trial court found that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the commission's finding of truth of some of the less serious specifications [3] appellant argues that the matter must be remanded to the commission for further consideration. Counsel invokes the asserted analogy of cases such as Cooper v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 35 Cal.2d 242, 252, 217 P.2d 630, 18 A.L.R.2d 593; Mast v. State Board of Optometry, 139 Cal.App.2d 78, 87, 91, 293 P.2d 148, which hold that a punitive administrative proceeding should be remanded to the agency when it appears that multiple charges have been by it sustained and have resulted in a single penalty but the evidence does not sustain some of the charges and a real doubt arises from the record as to whether the agency would have inflicted the particular penalty had it realized that the evidence was not sufficient to support certain of the charges. The supposed analogy fails to materialize. Counsel have not presented any question of excessive penalty at bar. Nor does the case actually present a series of separate charges. There is one ultimate charge, that of failure to exercise diligence, intelligence or interest in the pursuit of appellant's duties. The specific facts included in the letter of reduction, as required by rule 19.02, are actually evidentiary matter presented in support of the ultimate fact of lack of diligence, etc. It should not be necessary to establish all the constituent facts alleged if the evidence proves enough of them to show the ultimate fact to be true; and it is not necessary. Leeds v. Gray, 109 Cal.App.2d 874, 877, 242 P.2d 48. From the record at bar no doubt arises concerning the propriety of the reduction of appellant to grade I as the result of proof of the facts held by the trial judge to be established by sufficient evidence; we in turn find the trial judge's finding to be sufficiently supported.

3. For example, entering of judgment in minute book before entering it in register of actions (Prunty vs. Storey); that appellant had the duty to enter judgment in Rowell vs. Miller but failed to do so; that she failed to square her minutes with the judge's notes on the jacket of the case of Bielec v. Evans; failure to notify bonding company when bail was exonerated.

[9] Based upon matter first elicited upon cross-examination of Mr. Churchill appellant's counsel argues that this proceeding is a collateral attack upon a legislative determination that appellant is qualified to perform the duties of grade IV. The witness was asked: "Mr. Churchill, did you make the reduction in this case bases on your opinion that the reduction was a just penalty to impose on Mrs. Steele for the errors which she committed?" and he said: "Well, my opinion is that Mrs. Steele couldn't do a Grade I's work, but she had passed originally a Grade I Examination in the Justice Court." Also:

"I thought she should be given the opportunity at least to try to do a Grade I's work, because she actually passed the Grade I Examination.

"Commissioner Jones: You opened your statement that she could not do Grade I work.

"The witness: She could not. I didn't want to go and ask for a discharge if she could be given a chance to do a Grade I's work and maybe work up from there, if it's possible to do so. She passed her Grade I work, although it was in the Justice Court, and it was rather perfunctory at the time in 1949."

Manifestly there is no merit in the argument that the blanketing-in statute implies legislative approval of Mrs. Steele for all time regardless of whether she performed her duties properly, which would attribute to the legislature astounding stupidity. Appellant was blanketed into the position subject to the civil service requirements of efficiency and to its procedures for correction of inadequacy.

But the cross-examination does not stop with eliciting Mr. Churchill's opinion that appellant was not actually qualified to do grade I work. The witness was led into expressing the further opinions that appellant does not have ability to record the minutes of all proceedings, or to prepare civil judgments ordered by the court, or to certify to the correctness of civil judgments, or to correct minutes in the minute book, or to review and certify to default judgments, or to comprehend the necessity for judgment or the type of judgment to be used, or to review and certify the work of other attachés, or to maintain statistics for judicial council reports, or to supervise destruction of over-age records, or to supervise and assist in training other clerks, or to perform docketing and calendaring functions. Pressed further, the witness said: "These things are somewhat of a confidential matter, and I would get together with Mrs. Steele and talk at her desk, trying to be out of the hearing of other Deputies, explaining why the hearings are necessary in Civil and Criminal. It didn't seem to soak in, so I'd go over it again, or I'd write it out and explain why, pointed out code sections why, and reasons for the rules. She still didn't comprehend." This evidence has a direct bearing upon the question of whether any errors in the findings or other procedural steps of this case were prejudicial to appellant and fortifies our conclusion that they were not.

Appellant presents 25 points in support of a reversal. All have been examined and found without merit. Those not previously mentioned require no discussion.

v.

FOUNDERS INSURANCE COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant, Appellant and Respondent, and

Sun Valley Investment Co., a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

No. 23086.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 22, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 18, 1959.

Action for declaratory judgment. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Caryl M. Sheldon, J., appeals were taken. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that notwithstanding recital that policy was thereby amended "as respects Coverage C" and fact that Coverage C only applied to liability for injury to property, comprehensive general liability policy rider was not limited to claims by third persons for damage to their property but obligated insurer to indemnify insured against all claims arising out of his occupation as a buyer and seller of tungsten if they arose because of negligent act, error or omission of insured.

Affirmed in part and in part reversed with directions.

1. Customs Duties ⇐130(1)

The United States cannot assert a claim against an innocent purchaser for value of smuggled goods but may only seize goods and have forfeiture declared. Tariff Act of 1930, § 593, 19 U.S.C.A. § 1593.

2. Insurance ⇐430

Notwithstanding recital that policy was thereby amended "as respects Coverage C" and fact that Coverage C only applied to liability for injury to property, comprehensive general liability policy rider was not limited to claims by third persons for damage to their property but obligated insurer to indemnify insured against all claims arising out of his occupation as a buyer and seller of tungsten if they arose because of negligent act, error or omission of insured.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐171(1)

Action for declaratory judgment as to plaintiff's rights and defendant's duties under policy of insurance having been tried upon basis that policy was not ambiguous in its terms, and no evidence having been admitted as against insurer which would justify a holding that it was intent of parties to cover any risk not falling within language contained in rider or that insurer was estopped from claiming benefit of terms of policy as issued, reviewing court would have to determine insurer's liability as to each class of claims by applying language used in policy, and could not add to language of rider or omit any of language used in rider in determining its meaning.

4. Insurance ⇐430

In construing comprehensive general liability policy obligating insurer to indemnify insured against claims arising out of insured's occupation as a buyer or seller of metal ores if claims were made against insured by reason of any negligent acts, "errors" or omissions of insured, court would have to assume that insurer, in writing policy, had intended quoted word to have its ordinary meaning and that insurer had used it to cover hazard which was not due to negligent act or omission. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1644.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Errors".

5. Insurance ⇐430

Where insured had honestly but mistakenly believed that tungsten which he sold to General Services Administration was domestic, Administration's claim against insured for recovery of payments made for tungsten, which was in fact of foreign origin and had been smuggled into United States, was a claim within comprehensive general liability policy obligating insurer to indemnify the insured against claims arising out of his occupation as a buyer and seller of tungsten if such claims were made against insured by reason of any negligent acts, errors or omissions of insured.

6. Insurance ⇐430

Where government's right to forfeiture did not arise out of any negligent acts, errors or omissions of insured, and payments were not made through error but were voluntarily made by insured to induce government to waive its right to have forfeiture of goods declared, insured was not entitled to indemnity under comprehensive general liability policy obligating insurer to indemnify insured against claims arising out of his occupation as a buyer or seller of metal ores if such claims were made by reason of negligent acts, errors or omissions of insured. Tariff Act of 1930, § 593, 19 U.S.C.A. § 1593.

7. Insurance ⇐146(2)

Clear terms of policy could not be ignored.

8. Declaratory Judgment ⇐165, 385

That claim against insured had not ripened into loss did not in any wise affect his right to have his rights and liability insurer's duties judicially declared; but court should have limited its declaration to fact that claim was covered by policy, where extent of insurer's liability could not be determined upon evidence before court. NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

By the first cause of action of his complaint the plaintiff hereinafter called "Aitchison" sought a declaratory judgment as to his rights and the duties of defendant Founders Insurance Company, a corporation, hereinafter called "Founders," under a policy of insurance issued to him by Founders. By the second cause of action he sought a declaration that certain representations made to him by Sun Valley Investment Co., "hereinafter called Sun Valley," were "negligent, careless, reckless and erroneous and not warranted by the information available to it at the time" and that the defendants were liable for such damages as "Plaintiff may sustain by reason of his purchase of said policy of insurance in reliance on the representations by Defendants herein set forth."

The complaint does not contain any prayer for damages and the pretrial order does not include damages as an issue to be tried.

The trial court entered its judgment declaring that Founders was obligated to indemnify Aitchison against the alleged claims set forth in the first cause of action and rendered judgment in favor of Aitchison against Founders in the sum of $6,535.60 plus interest, that sum being a part of the loss claimed by Aitchison to have been sustained by him and for which he claimed indemnity. It rendered judgment in favor of the defendant Sun Valley.

Founders appeals from the declaratory judgment rendered and from the money judgment rendered against it. Aitchison appeals from the judgment in favor of Sun Valley.

Founders' Appeal.

The facts as disclosed by the evidence so far as the evidence as to them was admitted against Founders are:[1]

Effective as of November 1, 1955, Founders issued to Aitchison a policy of insurance entitled "Comprehensive General Liability Policy." By the terms of this policy, exclusive of the rider hereinafter described and which is the basis of the litigation here, Founders agreed by Coverage A to pay on behalf of Aitchison all sums which he should become legally obligated to pay as damages because of bodily injury sustained by any person and caused by accident; by Coverage B, to pay all sums which Aitchison should become legally obligated to pay as damages because of the injury to or destruction of the property of another through the ownership, maintenance or use of any automobile; by Coverage C to pay on behalf of Aitchison all sums which he should become legally obligated to pay as damages because of injury to or destruction of property caused by accident but excluding damage caused by the use of an automobile. Attached to the policy at the time of its issuance was a rider or endorsement which, so far as is pertinent here, reads as follows: "* * * [T]his policy, as respects Coverage C, * * * is amended to indemnify the insured against any claim or claims arising out of the insured's occupation as a buyer or seller of metal ores, * * * which may be made against the insured by reason of any negligent acts, errors or omissions committed by the insured and/or employees of the insured in the conduct of insured's business as stated above and providing always that such claim or claims are made against the insured during the currency of this policy." (Italics ours.) It further provided that the limits of liability of Founders were "$5,000 each occurrence, $25,000 aggregate," the insured to bear the first $100 of each loss. It is the interpretation of this endorsement which constitutes the basis of the present litigation.

Aitchison was engaged in the business of buying and selling tungsten ore and tungsten salts. Among the persons to whom he sold was an agency of the government of the United States known as the General Services Administration, hereinafter called "the Administration." This agency purchased only tungsten ores or tungsten salts of domestic origin and Aitchison was required on each sale to the agency to certify that the ores delivered by him were of domestic origin. Among the persons from whom Aitchison purchased tungsten were one Roth and one Williams. In purchasing from them Aitchison required from them a certificate that the ores were of domestic origin.

[1] Prior to the issuance of the policy in question Aitchison had purchased from Roth or Williams tungsten for which he had made a net payment of $9,175.94. After the policy became effective he made further purchases from them for which he made payments in the sum of $30,050.63. Some of these ores he mingled with ores he had acquired from other sources and in four different lots delivered them to the Administration, receiving for said lots $20,234.74. After receiving payment for these lots it was discovered that the ores purchased from Roth and Williams were of foreign origin and had been smuggled into the United States. Thereupon the United States Collector of Customs seized the four lots of tungsten sold by Aitchison to the Administration, claiming they were

1. At the trial of the action Aitchison did not assert that the provisions of the policy as to which a declaration of rights was sought were ambiguous and the evidence offered by him as to the circumstances surrounding the application for the insurance and as to oral statements made by Aitchison to Sun Valley and by its officers to him as well as evidence of statements made by the underwriter of Founders to Sun Valley were excluded as against Founders but admitted as against Sun Valley. Aitchison, cannot, therefore, here support the judgment against Founders upon a claim of ambiguity in the policy and the evidence which was received against Sun Valley only.

forfeited to the United States as smuggled property.[2] Aitchison then made application to be relieved from the forfeiture. His petition was granted upon condition that he pay the duties upon the smuggled tungsten plus the costs of seizure. These duties and costs amounted to $6,935.60.[3]

The Administration also asserted that the payments made by it to Aitchison were illegal payments and demanded the return of the monies paid Aitchison, to wit, $20,318.28 and claimed a lien upon all tungsten delivered by Aitchison to secure payment of its claim for refund.

By its decree the court declared: That each of the four payments made to the Customs Service as above noted was a claim made against Aitchison "by reason of negligent acts, errors and omissions committed by plaintiff in the conduct of his business" as a buyer of tungsten ores; that as each claim had been made during the currency of the policy in question, Founders was obligated to indemnify Aitchison against each claim for the amount thereof less, as to each, the sum of $100. It rendered judgment against Founders accordingly. It further decreed that the Administration had made claim against Aitchison on account of the tungsten ores sold by him to it in the following amounts: as to Lot 10, $3,737.39; as to Lot 13, $10,213.28; as to Lot 14, $2,000.91; as to Lot 15, $4,283.16; and that Founders was obligated to indemnify Aitchison against these claims but was entitled to offset against each claim "the fair market value of any of said four lots of tungsten ores which may be returned to plaintiff as a result of any settlement, or suit, in respect of said occurrences," that the amount of Founders' liability was subject, however, to the limitations of liability as expressed in the rider.

The payments made by Aitchison to Customs Service were made after Founders had asserted that its policy did not cover either the claims of the United States Government to the smuggled property or the claim of the Administration.

[2] Appellant Founders asserts that the rider in question constitutes liability insurance covering damages caused by Aitchison to the property of others and does not cover business losses suffered by Aitchison by reason of his "negligent acts, errors or omissions." There is not the semblance of merit in this contention.

Coverage B and Coverage C of the policy clearly covered the insured against liability to third persons for damages to their property and the rider for which Aitchison paid an additional premium of $100 would have added nothing to the coverage of property damage if it should be given the construction for which Founders contends.

It was clearly the intent of the parties, by the rider, to indemnify the insured against claims other than those against which Aitchison was indemnified under Coverage B and Coverage C and the only limitations placed upon the character of these claims by the rider were: (1) that they arise out of Aitchison's occupation as a buyer and seller of tungsten and (2) that they be made by reason of a negligent act, error or omission of Aitchison.

It is further Founders' contention that even if the policy is not limited to claims made because of damage to the property of others that still the claims asserted were not such as to fall within the coverage of the rider.

2. Under the provisions of section 1593, Title 19 U.S.C.A., smuggled goods are forfeited to the United States upon entry into the United States but the title of the United States to the goods is not perfected until the forfeiture has been judicially declared. The United States cannot assert a claim against an innocent purchaser for the value of the goods but may only seize the goods and have the forfeiture declared. National Atlas Elevator Co. v. United States, 8 Cir., 97 F.2d 940, 943–944; Caldwell v. United States, 8 How. 366, 12 L.Ed. 1115. See also 18 U.S.C.A. § 545.

3. There were four seizures and the respective amounts charged by customs for a waiver of the forfeiture were $480.60; $2,585; $1,785; and $2,085.

The claims made by the Administration and those made by Customs must be considered separately.

[3] The case having been tried in the trial court upon the basis that the policy was not ambiguous in its terms and no evidence having been admitted as against Founders which would justify a holding that it was the intent of the parties to cover any risk not falling within the language contained in the rider, or that Founders was estopped from claiming the benefit of terms of the policy as issued,[4] we must determine Founders' liability as to each class of claims by applying the language used in the policy and the trial court could not and we cannot add to the language of the rider or omit any of the language used in the rider in determining its meaning. Long v. West Coast Life Insurance Co., 16 Cal.2d 19, 24, 104 P.2d 646; Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Const. Co., 46 Cal.2d 423, 432, 296 P.2d 801, 57 A.L.R.2d 914; Protex-A-Kar Co. v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co., 102 Cal.App.2d 408, 412, 227 P.2d 509; Carabelli v. Mountain States Life Ins. Co., 8 Cal.App.2d 115, 117, 46 P.2d 1004; Burr v. Western States Life Ins. Co., 211 Cal. 568, 576, 296 P. 273.

Claims of the Administration.

[4, 5] Applying the language of the rider to the claim of the Administration, we are convinced that the trial court correctly declared that this claim was within the coverage of the rider. The Administration's claim arose out of the error of Aitchison in selling to the Administration as tungsten of domestic origin that which in fact was foreign. Founders has not in its brief asserted that the word "error," as used in the rider, is modified by the word "negligent." We must assume that Founders in writing the policy intended the word to have its ordinary meaning and that it used it to cover a hazard which was not due to a negligent act or omission. Civ. Code, § 1644; Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Const. Co., supra, 46 Cal.2d 423, 438, 296 P.2d 801. In Webster's International Dictionary, second edition, the word "error" is defined as follows: "Belief in what is untrue, * * *" and "mistake" is there given as a synonym of "error." It is undisputed here that when Aitchison sold the smuggled tungsten to the Administration he honestly but mistakenly believed it to be domestic tungsten and had he not made this error there could have been no claim on the part of the Administration. As the transaction was in the business of Aitchison and as the claim has as its foundation his error, it clearly falls within the coverage of the policy.

We believe, however, that the trial court was in error in attempting to fix the amount of Founders' liability on account of this claim. The policy being a contract of indemnity against claims, Aitchison was not entitled to payment of the indemnity until the claims had been paid (Civ.Code, § 2778, subd. 2) and would then only be entitled to the loss that he suffered by reason of such payment. The Administration claim has not been paid nor Aitchison's liability for it adjudicated and the trial court should have limited its declaration to the fact that the claim of Administration was a claim covered by the policy and not attempted to fix the amount of Founders' liability, for what its liability may eventually be could not have been determined by the trial court upon the evidence before it.[5]

Claims of the Collector of Customs.

[6] In our opinion, the court erred in decreeing that Founders was obligated to indemnify Aitchison "against the claims heretofore made by the Customs Service" and in awarding judgment against defendant in the amount of those payments. The payments made to the Customs Service were not made in the satisfaction of any

4. In neither cause of action does Aitchison attempt to plead estoppel against Founders.

5. The amount of Aitchison's loss and of Founders' eventual liability was not an issue tendered by the pleadings or within the issues defined in the pretrial order.

claim by the United States for the amount thereof. These payments were not made through error but were voluntarily made to induce the government to waive its right to have the forfeiture of the goods declared. The government's right to forfeiture did not arise out of any negligent acts, errors or omissions committed by the insured or his employees. Its right was founded on and arose solely out of the wrongful acts of Roth and Williams in smuggling the goods into this country. The payment to the United States was, therefore, not a claim which arose by reason of any negligent act, error or omission of the insured.

[7] As we have heretofore pointed out there are three conditions precedent to Founders' obligation to indemnify Aitchison. One, the claim must arise out of insured's occupation; two, it must be made by reason of, i. e. arise out of negligent acts, errors or omissions of Aitchison or his employees; and, three, it must be made during the currency of the policy. The government's claim of ownership of the property did not fall within the second of the conditions named. In order to hold that the payments made to the Customs Service constituted claims within the coverage of the policy it would be necessary to ignore the clear terms of the policy that the claims must be made by reason of a negligent act, an error or an omission committed by the insured. This we cannot do. Burr v. Western States Life Ins. Co., supra, 211 Cal. 568, 576, 296 P. 273.

Appellant Founders also contends that the first cause of action set forth in the complaint does not state sufficient facts to entitle plaintiff to declaratory relief. We see no merit in this contention. At the time the action was commenced claims had been made against Aitchison which he asserted were covered by the contract of indemnity; Founders had then asserted that none of the claims fell within the coverage of that contract and had denied any obligation to indemnify Aitchison against these claims and had refused to defend him against them.

[8] Thus, there was an actual controversy existing between the parties as to the rights of Aitchison and the duties of Founders and the fact that the claim of the Administration had not ripened into a loss and that, therefore, Aitchison could ask no more than a declaration that the policy covered claims such as those made by the Administration did not in any wise affect his right to have his rights and the duties of Founders judicially declared. The dispute was one that fell clearly within the language of section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which declares that any person interested under a contract may, in case an actual controversy exists relative to the legal rights and duties of the parties to that contract, bring an action for the declaration of his rights and the duties of the other party and that he may maintain the action even though he can claim no further relief than the declaration.

Aitchison's Appeal.

Plaintiff Aitchison appeals from the judgment rendered in favor of the defendant Sun Valley. He bases his appeal upon the ground that if the judgment as to Founders is reversed then the trial court's finding that it was untrue that Sun Valley was negligent and careless, reckless or erroneous in any of its representations and that it did not make any representations not warranted by the information which it possessed or had available was contrary to the evidence and the judgment in Sun Valley's favor must likewise be reversed.

Undoubtedly Aitchison's position on his appeal is premised upon this court sustaining the position of Founders on its appeal, that the contract in question only granted indemnity against claims by third persons for damage to their property. We have not, on Founders' appeal, sustained this position, but have only held that the policy was limited to claims against Aitchison which were founded upon his negligent acts, errors or omissions and have further held that such claims need not be founded upon injury or damage to the property of others. This holding does not have the effect of making the representations made by Sun Valley untrue for what Aitchison sought and what Sun Valley represented he had obtained was a policy which would protect him against claims arising out of his negligence, errors or omissions.[6] The policy issued did cover claims of the character as to which Aitchison requested protection.

The fact that the claim of the United States government to the right to forfeit the goods is not covered under the policy because it did not arise out of any act, error or omission of Aitchison or his employees does not make the representations untrue and the findings of the trial court above mentioned are amply sustained by the evidence.

The judgment insofar as it declares that the alleged claims of the Customs Service are within the coverage of the policy and awards a money judgment therefor and insofar as it fixes the amount of the liability of Founders on account of the claims by the General Services Administration, is reversed with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff, declaring that the claims of General Services Administration are within the coverage of the policy and that Founders is obligated to indemnify Aitchison within the limits of the policy for any loss sustained by him by reason of said claims.

The judgment in favor of defendant Sun Valley Investment Co., a corporation, is affirmed.

Appellants Aitchison and Founders shall each bear their own costs and Sun Valley shall have judgment against Aitchison for its costs on appeal.

Civ. 23185.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 17, 1958.

Rehearing Granted Jan. 9, 1959.

Appeal by defendant from order of Superior Court, Los Angeles County, H. Eugene Breitenbach, J., setting aside judgment of dismissal and permitting plaintiff to file a third amended complaint. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that where plaintiff's counsel, relying on stipulation for continuance, was not present in court when motion to dismiss was submitted, no time had been fixed within which to file his points and authorities and opposing affidavits, and without apparent knowledge that defendant's motion to dismiss had been granted, plaintiff's counsel filed points and authorities, an affidavit in opposition to motion and a proposed amended complaint, it was not an abuse of discretion for trial court to find that dismissal was taken against plaintiff as result of mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant from an order made under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, setting aside a judgment of dismissal and permitting plaintiff to file a third amended complaint.[1]

On September 18, 1957, the court sustained defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint and gave ten days in which to file an amended complaint. On that same date a substitution of attorneys was executed by which plaintiff undertook to represent herself. No

1. The order inadvertently allows plaintiff to file her "Answer." This was due to the error of plaintiff's then counsel in referring in his notice of motion to the proposed pleading as an answer rather than as the third amended complaint, which designation it bore. No one was misled.

amended complaint having been filed in the time allowed, counsel for defendant served notice (together with an affidavit and points and authorities) that on November 7, 1957, he would make a motion to dismiss the action. Plaintiff thereupon employed Ven O. Fahrney, Esq., to represent her, and delivered to him the notice of motion and papers in relation thereto. According to Fahrney's affidavit, he immediately called defendant's attorney and arranged for a continuance of one week for the reason that he would be out of the county on November 7, the date set for the hearing on the motion. He further states in his affidavit that it was agreed that he (Fahrney) would prepare a stipulation for the continuance; that it would not be necessary for him to be present; and that defendant's counsel would present the stipulation to the court. Fahrney informed defendant's attorney at that time that he would "attempt to amend the complaint." He prepared the stipulation continuing the matter to November 13 and forwarded it to defendant's attorney. Fahrney relied on this arrangement and was not present on November 7 for the hearing. Upon returning to his office on November 12 Fahrney had a letter from defendant's attorney to the effect that due to the court's refusal to continue the matter unless it was to a date early in December, the matter was submitted and that an opportunity would be afforded him to take action prior to decision. No time was fixed within which he was to take such action. The court, however, on Friday, November 15, granted defendant's motion to dismiss. On Monday, November 18, Fahrney apparently without any knowledge of the court's action, filed plaintiff's third amended complaint, points and authorities, and affidavit in opposition to defendant's motion to dismiss.

Thereafter, on November 27, plaintiff filed notice of motion, pursuant to section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, which was accompanied by an affidavit and points and authorities, to set aside the order of November 15 dismissing the action. She also sought permission to file the pleading theretofore submitted, viz., the third amended complaint. The motion was not only based on the attached affidavit and points and authorities but also on the records and files in the case. On December 3 plaintiff filed an amended notice of motion. Counsel for defendant filed an affidavit in opposition to plaintiff's motion. On December 9 the court granted plaintiff's motion and allowed defendant ten days to plead. It is from the order granting plaintiff's motion that defendant appeals.

[1] Defendant argues that plaintiff's original and amended notice of motion to vacate the order of dismissal was insufficient under the provisions of sections 473 and 1010 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 473 provides, inter alia, that "[a]pplication for such relief must be accompanied by a copy of the answer or other pleading proposed to be filed therein * * *." Although it does not appear whether a copy of the proposed third amended complaint was physically attached to the notice of motion, it was specifically referred to and identified so that the substantive requirements of section 473 were satisfied.

[2] Section 1010 states in part that a "notice of a motion * * * must state * * * the grounds upon which it will be made * * *." Assuming, without deciding, that plaintiff's notice of motion was deficient in this respect, as defendant did not raise this issue below and in fact filed an affidavit in opposition to plaintiff's motion, he is deemed to have waived any objections in this regard which he may have had. Hecq v. Conner, 203 Cal. 504, 505–506, 265 P. 180; Perez v. Perez, 111 Cal.App.2d 827, 828, 245 P.2d 344. In the Hecq case, supra, the court stated at page 506 of 203 Cal., at page 181 of 265 P., that "[s]ection 1010 of the Code of Civil Procedure, requiring a notice of motion to state 'the grounds upon which it will be made,' is for the benefit of the party upon whom the notice is served.

Being for his benefit he can, of course, waive its requirement. By failing to object to the hearing of the motion at the time it was noticed to be heard, the appellants impliedly waived this defect in the notice itself. (Citations.)"

[3, 4] Next defendant argues that the notice of motion was not accompanied by an affidavit of merits and that the plaintiff's complaints, including her proposed third amended complaint, fail to state a cause of action. An affidavit of merits is not required where a verified amended complaint is filed prior to or with the filing of the notice of motion. As stated in Waybright v. Anderson, 200 Cal. 374, 380, 253 P. 148, 150, "It is true that affidavits of merits were not filed herein, but under the doctrine of Sampanes v. Chazes, supra, [54 Cal.App. 612, 202 P. 462], the service and filing of verified amended complaints rendered unnecessary the presentation and filing of affidavits of merits." As to whether the verified amended complaint states a cause of action, this is a question to be decided by the trial court and not by this court in the present proceeding. Waybright v. Anderson, supra; Sheehan v. Pioneer Lucky Strike Gold Min. Co., 11 Cal.App.2d 530, 531–532, 54 P.2d 72.

[5, 6] Defendant further argues that plaintiff has failed to make a sufficient showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. It is well settled that a motion to set aside a default judgment or dismissal rests with the sound discretion of the trial court and an appellate court will not disturb the trial court's determination in the absence of a clear showing that the trial court abused its discretion. Waybright v. Anderson, supra; In re Estate of McCrae, 133 Cal.App.2d 634, 636–638, 284 P.2d 914; Fickeisen v. Peebler, 77 Cal.App.2d 148, 151, 174 P.2d 883. Furthermore, whenever possible, the law favors a hearing on the merits. Bollinger v. National Fire Ins. Co., 25 Cal.2d 399, 407, 154 P.2d 399; Reid v. Koeslag, 106 Cal.App.2d 729, 734, 236 P.2d 192. Therefore, an appellate court listens more readily to an appeal from an order denying relief than to one granting relief. Buck v. Buck, 126 Cal.App.2d 137, 142, 271 P.2d 628; Garcia v. Garcia, 105 Cal. App.2d 289, 291, 233 P.2d 23; Hambrick v. Hambrick, 77 Cal.App.2d 372, 377, 175 P.2d 269. In this regard, the court in the Waybright case, supra, 200 Cal. at page 377, 253 P. at page 149, stated that "appellate courts are 'much more disposed to affirm an order when the result is to compel a trial upon the merits than it is when the judgment by default is allowed to stand, and it appears that a substantial defense could be made.' (Citations.)"

[7] The affidavits in support of plaintiff's motion, noted in the statement of facts, make a sufficient showing within the purview of section 473 so that it can not be said that the trial court abused its discretion. Plaintiff's counsel, relying on the stipulation for a continuance, was not present in court when the matter was submitted and therefore did not then have an opportunity to argue the matter. Furthermore, within a reasonable time under the circumstances, as no time had been fixed within which he was to file his points and authorities and any opposing affidavits, and without apparent knowledge that defendant's motion had been granted, Fahrney filed points and authorities, an affidavit in opposition to the motion and a proposed amended complaint. Under these circumstances, it was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to find that the dismissal was taken against plaintiff as a result of mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect.

[8] Lastly, defendant argues that as plaintiff did not file her amended complaint within the time allowed, she was in default, and should have requested not only to have the dismissal set aside but also to be relieved of default. Defendant overlooks the distinction between a dismissal under section 581 subd. 3, and a default judgment under 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the former no technical default is entered while in the latter the code provides for the entry of both a default and then a judgment. Therefore, in the instant case, there was no default entered from which plaintiff should or could have requested relief and it was sufficient for her to move to have the dismissal set aside.

The order setting aside the judgment of dismissal is affirmed.

Theo Boyce REDWINE, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6314.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 18, 1958.

Prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon upon defendant's stepdaughter, and for the same offense upon his wife. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Mark Brandler, J., entered judgment of conviction for assault upon his wife and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that where defendant waived his right to jury trial subject to his rights to further cross-examine two complaining witnesses, and charges against defendant arose out of an altercation between defendant and his wife, in which the stepdaughter participated, and there were numerous discrepancies and contradictions between testimony of defendant's wife and that of his stepdaughter, and further cross-examination of stepdaughter was directly pertinent to charge of assault by defendant on his wife, fact that court completely disregarded stepdaughter's testimony given at a preliminary hearing and found defendant not guilty of charge that he assaulted stepdaughter. did not remedy denial of his right to further cross-examine her in regard to charge of assault against his wife, trial court abused its discretion to defendant's prejudice in denying his motion to be relieved of his waiver of jury trial when stepdaughter was not available at date of trial for cross-examination.

VALLÉE, Justice.

By information defendant was charged in count I with assault with a deadly weapon upon his stepdaughter, Janice Dizon, and in count II with the same offense upon his wife, Doris Redwine. On count I defendant was found not guilty. On count II he was convicted of assault. He appeals from the judgment.

The question is: Did the court abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to be relieved of his waiver of a trial by jury and thus deny him his constitutional right to a trial by jury?

On September 19, 1957 defendant pleaded not guilty to both counts of the information and trial was set for October 28, 1957. On October 28 the following occurred in department 40 of the superior court:

"The Court: The People against Theo Boyce Redwine.

"Mr. Allen [attorney for defendant]: The defendant is in Court. We're ready, and desire to waive a jury trial.

"The Court: To be submitted or tried, Mr. Allen? Mr. Allen: Tried.

"The Court: How long will it take to try it? Mr. Allen: An hour and a half.

"The Court: Mr. Redwine, do you want a Court trial or a jury trial? The Defendant: Court trial.

"The Court: Do you join in the waiver, Mr. Allen? Mr. Allen: Join in the waiver.

"The Court: Do the People join in the waiver? Mr. Busch [Deputy District Attorney]: The People join in the waiver." The cause was transferred to department 47 for immediate trial.

On October 28, 1957 the following occurred in department 47:

"The Court: People vs Theo Boyce Redwine. Mr. Allen: At the time, if your Honor please, the defendant desires to waive his right to a trial by jury. Mr. McDonald [Deputy District Attorney]: You wish to waive your right to be tried by a jury and to be tried by the Court? The Defendant: Yes, sir. Mr. Allen: Join in the waiver. Mr. McDonald: People join. At this time the People offer to stipulate that the People's case in chief may be submitted to the Court on the transcript of the preliminary hearing with the same force and effect as if the witnesses who were there called, sworn and testified were here called, sworn, and testified as set forth in the preliminary transcript. The People further stipulate that all exhibits offered and received at the time of the preliminary hearing be deemed to have been offered and received in evidence for the purposes of this hearing. Further stipulate that both the People and the defendant may put on additional testimony. Mr. Allen: So stipulated. We would like to further cross examine the complaining witness. The Court: You want those witnesses to return? Mr. Allen: Yes, Your Honor. I think as to the police officers, it will not be necessary that they return. The Court: Which witnesses do you want returned? Mr. Allen: The two who testified for the prosecution." The cause was continued for trial to November 26 in department 47 and the two witnesses were ordered to return at 9:30 a. m. on that date.

On November 26, on motion of defendant, the trial was continued to December 30. On December 30 the cause was called for trial. On motion of the People, an attachment was issued for Janice Dizon, a defaulting witness. The trial was continued to February 11, 1958. On January 14, 1958 Janice Dizon appeared in department 47. She was purged of contempt, the attachment was recalled, and she was instructed to return to department 47 on February 11, 1958 at 9 a. m.

On February 11, 1958, on motion of defendant, the trial was continued to March 17 at 9:30 a. m. and the witnesses were instructed to return at that time. Janice Dizon was not present in court on February 11. On March 14, 1958 the trial was advanced from March 17. The judge stated he had read the transcript of the proceedings before the committing magistrate. The following then occurred:

"Mr. Busch [Deputy District Attorney]: I might state for the record, if the Court please, that the witness Janice Dizon was ordered to appear, that she failed to appear, she was picked up on one attachment, another attachment was ordered; she is not here and there was reservation of the right of further cross-examination of that witness and I feel that based on her failure to appear I would have to concede that Count I of the Information would have to be set aside because of the fact that the defendant is denied the right of cross-examination of the witness her testimony would have to be stricken. I just want to make that record.

"The Court: It wouldn't necessarily mean that Count I would have to be dismissed. In other words, it may be the Court isn't indicating it does, it may be that the Count can be established by the testimony of other witnesses. However, in view of the fact that Janice Dizon is not here in the courtroom, although she was ordered to be here and at one time there was an attachment which was recalled when she appeared in Court, directed January 14th to be in Court on the 11th; and the Court was advised by Mr. Busch she was not in Court on the continued date, February 11th; that she is not here at this time; so the Court is not considering at all and deleting from its consideration of the evidence in this case all of the testimony of Janice Dizon which appears on Pages 2 to 15 of the transcript before the Committing Magistrate, which is both her direct and cross-examination.

"Mr. Allen [attorney for defendant]: Well, if your Honor please, I don't believe that that affords an answer here, in light of the reservation, because if this matter is submitted and your Honor is to pass upon the question of fact of the guilt or innocence of the defendant, the testimony of that witness would be highly material because in many respects it contradicts the testimony then of the other complaining witness; and there are contradictions—I don't know whether they have appeared to your Honor or not, but I could point them out readily here * * *"

Counsel for defendant then moved that the action be dismissed or, in lieu thereof, that defendant be relieved of his waiver of a trial by jury and that the action be set for such a trial.[1] The motion was denied.

1. In arguing the motion, counsel for defendant stated: "If your Honor please, I do not want the testimony stricken and I want the right to cross-examine Janice Dizon, or else I want to be relieved of my waiver of jury trial because it is not the kind of hearing anticipated and not the kind that was stipulated to; this becomes highly material, for the reason I feel we have a couple of versions and we have a conflict between her and the other complaining witness. These two Counts arise out of the same transaction, two witnesses to the same

In denying the motion the court stated: "[T]he Court appreciates the fact that she may be a material witness for you on further cross-examination. All this Court can do is completely ignore and disregard her testimony. Now, the mere fact that you had a witness that would be of help to you and that witness is not available doesn't authorize the Court to just continue indefinetly proceedings, in other words, the trial has to proceed in the absence of this witness." As stated, defendant was found not guilty of the charge in count I, and on count II he was found guilty of simple assault.

The charges arose out of an altercation between defendant and his wife, in which Janice Dizon participated. There were numerous discrepancies and contradictions between the testimony of defendant's wife and that of Janice Dizon. On further cross-examination Janice Dizon might have retracted the testimony she gave at the preliminary hearing which tended to prove the charge that defendant had assaulted Doris Redwine with a deadly weapon; she might have been impeached; or she might have given testimony which would have exonerated defendant. Her failure to appear notwithstanding she was under subpoena and had been arrested for prior failure to appear would lead one to the conclusion that for some reason she feared further cross-examination. Further cross-examination of Janice Dizon was directly pertinent to the charge in count II.

At the time counsel for defendant waived a trial by jury he had a right to assume that Janice would be called as a witness by the People. Immediately following the waiver in department 40 the cause was transferred from department 40 to department 47. In department 47 counsel for defendant again stated he waived a trial by jury and stipulated that the People's case in chief might be submitted on the transcript of the preliminary hearing, stating he desired to further cross-examine the two complaining witnesses and that he wanted them to return. The court ordered them to return. When Janice, one of the complaining witnesses, did not appear on the day of trial, counsel for defendant was denied his reserved right to cross-examine her. The deputy district attorney stated that defendant was denied the right of cross-examination of Janice and conceded that count I would have to be set aside and that her testimony would have to be stricken. And the court stated he appreciated the fact that Janice might be a material witness for defendant on further cross-examination. The fact that the court completely ignored and disregarded her testimony given at the

I think this is not fair today. As I indicated to your Honor I think due process is involved here. I ask you to think about it for a moment. Perhaps I have not presented my point clearly enough. At the time of submission, I submitted the right, in the light of this record having in mind in the making of that stipulation that there were discrepancies between the testimony given in one place by this witness and in another place by this witness and that is the evidence upon which the prosecution relied at the time of the submission, or was to rely, and if I could point contradictions in that testimony—

"Having in mind the sanctity of the right to trial by jury in criminal cases and the evident purpose of the constitutional provision that no defendant should be deprived of that right unless he unequivocally and personally expressed his consent to such waiver in open court, we have concluded that such waiver must be expressed by the defendant in the manner which can involve no question of misinterpretation, doubt or uncertainty at the time or afterwards." People v. Pechar, 130 Cal.App.2d 616, 619, 279 P.2d 570, 572.

[2, 3] Counsel for defendant had an absolute right to further cross-examine Janice Dizon. He was denied that right. The right to cross-examine is basic in our judicial system and has been since earliest times. The privilege of a defendant in a criminal action to confrontation by the witnesses against him in the presence of the court is protected by the due process clause of the federal and state Constitutions, U.S.Const. Amend. 14; Const. art. 1, § 13. Snyder v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97, 106, 54 S.Ct. 330, 78 L.Ed. 674, 678, 90 A.L.R. 575. The improper denial of the right of cross-examination is a denial of due process. Olive Proration Program Committee For Olive Proration Zone No. 1 v. Agricultural etc. Committee, 17 Cal.2d 204, 210, 109 P.2d 918; People v. Valdez, 82 Cal.App.2d 744, 749, 187 P.2d 74; Langendorf United Bakeries v. Ind. Acc. Com., 87 Cal.App.2d 103, 104, 195 P. 2d 887; Columbia-Geneva Steel Division, United States Steel Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 115 Cal.App.2d 862, 865, 253 P.2d 45; In re Shackelford, 116 Cal.App.2d 864, 867, 254 P.2d 610; Argonaut Ins. Exch. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 120 Cal.App.2d 145, 146–154, 260 P.2d 817. Where the subject of cross-examination concerns the matter at issue, the refusal to permit it results in a denial of a fair hearing. Prejudice must be presumed. People v. Manchetti, 29 Cal.2d 452, 459, 175 P.2d 533; People v. McGowan, 80 Cal.App. 293, 296–299, 251 P. 643; Langendorf United Bakeries v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 87 Cal.App.2d 103, 104–105, 195 P.2d 887; Columbia-Geneva Steel Div. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 115 Cal.App.2d 862, 865, 253 P.2d 45; Argonaut Ins. Exch. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 120 Cal.App.2d 145, 152–153, 260 P.2d 817.

[4] We conclude that under the circumstances of this case the court abused its discretion to defendant's prejudice in denying his motion to be relieved of his waiver of a trial by jury.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Wayne Herbert OLSON, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6264.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 23, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of unlawful possession of marijuana. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Mark Brandler, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held, inter alia, that officers had reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed a felony sufficient to justify his arrest without a warrant and that search of his truck without a warrant incident to such arrest was not illegal.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Poisons ⇐9

In prosecution for possession of marijuana, evidence was sufficient to raise question for trial court as to whether defendant knew cigarettes in his possession contained marijuana.

2. Arrest ⇐63(4), 71
Searches and Seizures ⇐7(27)

Where accused admitted to officers that he had had possession of marijuana cigarette, part of which had been found in his sock while he was in hospital for treatment, officers had reasonable cause to believe that accused had committed felony of possessing marijuana sufficient to justify his arrest without a warrant, and search of accused's truck without a warrant incidental to such arrest and seizure of other marijuana cigarettes found in truck were not illegal, particularly where accused consented to inspection of truck and made no objection to introduction of marijuana cigarettes found therein in evidence in prosecution for possession of marijuana.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1031(5)

Where accused did not object to trial in a department of superior court to which case had been transferred after he had agreed to trial in another department upon transcript of the evidence received at preliminary examination and he did not ask to be relieved from stipulation that case be tried upon such transcript, accused could not contend for the first time on appeal from conviction that such procedure constituted an irregularity warranting reversal of conviction.

Wayne Herbert Olson, in pro. per., for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., Arlo E. Smith, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Appellant was convicted of the possession of marijuana, was placed on probation for five years upon condition that he serve 90 days in jail and he appeals from the judgment.

Appellant was represented by counsel at the trial; thereafter other counsel was substituted and later at his request appellant was substituted and he prosecutes the appeal in propria persona. Pursuant to stipulation, the action was tried upon the transcript of the evidence received at the preliminary examination. Appellant did not testify.

[1] Appellant's first contention is that there was insufficient evidence to prove that he had knowledge that the cigarettes which were in his possession contained marijuana. The contention is not sustainable. There was ample evidence from which the court could infer that he had such knowledge.

It was shown by the evidence that the police received information that a part of a marijuana cigarette had been discovered in the sock of Olson while he was in the Tweedy Industrial Hospital for treatment. Police went to the hotel where appellant was staying; at their request appellant opened the door of his room; the officers entered and informed appellant that a physician at the hospital had informed them that a part of a marijuana cigarette had been found in his sock. Appellant then gave to the officers an account of the events that had led him into trouble: His home was in Washington; he had driven south in his Mack truck with a load of shingles; he met a man named George Juerek who sold him 12 marijuana cigarettes for $10; he and Juerek each smoked one and he, appellant, put the remaining 10 in the ash tray of his truck; he went to dinner at Juerek's home; he was bitten by Juerek's dog and went to the hospital for treatment; he had smoked a part of a cigarette to give him a "lift" and had put the remainder in his sock; he had previously smoked marijuana cigarettes. Appellant went with the officers to his truck, gave them the keys, they entered the truck and found 10 marijuana cigarettes in the ash tray. It is obvious that there was no reason to doubt upon this evidence that appellant knew the cigarettes contained marijuana.

[2] The next contention is that appellant's arrest was unlawful and the search which unearthed the 10 cigarettes was illegal. The arrest was made not solely upon the information that had come from the physician but upon the additional information furnished by appellant by which he admitted having had possession of the cigarette, the remains of which had been discovered while he was in the hospital. The officers had reasonable cause to believe that appellant had committed a felony, namely, possession of marijuana. The search was closely related to and incidental to the arrest. People v. Smith, 141 Cal.App.2d 399, 296 P.2d 913; People v. Cicchello, 157 Cal. App.2d 158, 320 P.2d 528. Moreover, appellant consented to the inspection of his truck without any compulsion or insistence on the part of the officers. And no objection was made to the introduction in evidence of the cigarettes that were found in the truck.

[3] Defendant's final contention is that he agreed that the case be tried upon the evidence elicited at the preliminary examination in one department of the court and that the case was thereafter transferred to another department, and later to a third department, where it was tried. He contends that this was an irregularity which warrants a reversal of the conviction for the reason that he may have been unwilling to waive a jury trial and to submit the case on the preliminary transcript if he had known that the case was to be tried in a department other than the one in which he had made the waiver. But he did not ask to be relieved from his stipulation in the department where he was tried nor object to a trial in that department. His objection made now for the first time cannot be considered.

The record discloses that appellant's truck in which he had invested $10,000 or more had been confiscated by the State. One cannot read the record without observing that the ends of justice would have been served better by utilizing the assistance of appellant to obtain evidence against the purveyor, Juerek. Little is accomplished by visiting the penalties of the law upon small offenders while the big ones are allowed to escape.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

CRESCENT HOUSE & GARDEN, INC., The Tobin Companies, Dayton House & Garden, Inc., Formal House & Garden, Inc., Elite House & Garden, Inc., Edward House & Garden, Inc., Herbert House & Garden, Inc., Fred House & Garden, Inc., Atlas House & Garden, Inc., Bill House & Garden, Inc., David House & Garden, Inc., Cornish House & Garden, Inc., White House & Garden, Inc., Bounty House & Garden, Inc., Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 23207.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 16, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 11, 1959.

Arbitrators rendered a decision in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., entered judgment confirming the arbitration award, and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that the arbitrators did not abuse their discretion in refusing to hear certain evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Arbitration and Award ⇐66

On review of arbitration award by Superior Court and District Court of Appeal, every intendment of validity must be given the award, and the burden is on one claiming error to support his contention.

2. Arbitration and Award ⇐29

Where submission to arbitration was an unlimited one to be expressly conducted under rules of American Arbitration Association, and there was no limiting clause requiring that arbitrators act in conformity with rules of law, arbitrators could base their decision on broad principles of justice and equity, and, in doing so, could expressly or impliedly reject a claim that a party might successfully have asserted in a judicial action. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1288(c, d).

3. Arbitration and Award ⇐34

In arbitration proceeding, arbitrators were not guilty of misconduct in refusing to admit cumulative evidence.

4. Arbitration and Award ⇐66

On judicial review of arbitration award, it must be assumed that arbitrators were experienced men, capable of weighing the evidence and giving consideration to opposing inferences.

5. Contracts ⇐280(3)

Strict performance in the case of a building contract is not required.

6. Contracts ⇐323(3)

Question whether defects and omissions in performance of a building contract are substantial or unimportant is generally a question of fact.

7. Arbitration and Award ⇐73

Merits of controversy whether defects and omissions in performance of building contracts were substantial or unimportant were not subject to judicial review in proceeding to review arbitration award.

8. Arbitration and Award ⇐34

Arbitrators properly excluded defendants' proffered testimony respecting alleged defects in certain houses, on which plaintiff performed some work, where there was no showing of time when inspection disclosed alleged defects, since rights of defendants, as rescinding parties, were controlled by conditions existing when rescission was made.

9. Arbitration and Award ⇐34

In arbitration proceeding, arbitrators did not abuse their discretion in refusing to receive testimony of defendants' witness, who was in same business as plaintiff, that plaintiff's profits, had contract been fully performed, would have been certain amount, where opinion of witness was based on profits realized by him on similar, but not identical houses, which were different in design and had different floor plans.

10. Arbitration and Award ⇐34

In arbitration proceeding, wherein it was preliminarily established by defendants on cross-examination of plaintiff's president that cost of certain work in each of two instances amounted to about $1.20, arbitrators did not abuse their discretion in precluding any further cross-examination when defendants' counsel indicated that he proposed to cross-examine plaintiff's president as to each of the 175 work orders.

11. Arbitration and Award ⇐31

Proceedings in arbitration are of a summary character and are not subject to dilatory tactics.

12. Arbitration and Award ⇐34

In arbitration proceeding under American Arbitration Association rules, one of which provides that the arbitrator shall be the judge of the relevancy and materiality of evidence offered, refusal of arbitrators to issue a subpoena duces tecum for plaintiff's income tax statements, invoices, statements for materials and supplies, delivery tickets, time sheets, and other statements bearing on plaintiff's operation of its business, for purpose of impeaching testimony of plaintiff's principal witness and further minimize or mitigate amount of damages was not reversible error, where request for issuance of subpoena was orally made by defendants' counsel near conclusion of hearing, and defendants conceded that certain of the documents may have been privileged.

13. Arbitration and Award ⇐76

Determination of an unsubmitted issue by arbitrators requires a vacation of award of arbitrators as being in excess of their powers.

14. Arbitration and Award ⇐57

Where submission to arbitration of controversy between plaintiff and two of the defendants provided for a determination whether those defendants were justified in rescinding contract, and, if no such justification existed, amount of plaintiff's damages, and, as an alternative to a finding on questions of justification and damages, arbitrators were called on to decide whether plaintiff was entitled to recover from those defendants a stated sum or any other sum on account of materials furnished and work performed, arbitrators did not act in excess of their powers in awarding plaintiff certain sums for materials furnished those defendants, in addition to assessing damages against them.

15. Damages ⇐124(3)

Primary measure of damages available to a party to a contract who, without fault, is willing to perform, but is prevented from doing so by the other party, is the amount of his loss, which may consist of his reasonable outlay or expenditure toward performance, and anticipated profits which he would have derived from performance.

Edward Mosk, Norman G. Rudman, Hollywood, for appellants.

Hill, Farrer & Burrill, Leon S. Angvire, William McD. Miller, Los Angeles, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment confirming an arbitration award of money damages to plaintiff.

The dispute between the parties arose out of separate written agreements entered into on October 19, 1955, between plaintiff and 13 defendant corporations for the installation of asphalt floor tiling in tract houses to be constructed on land owned by defendants. The remaining defendant, the Tobin Companies (hereinafter referred to as Tobin) was a licensed building contractor and held an exclusive agency agreement with all the other defendants for the management of their properties and the construction of improvements thereon. Approximately four months after the execution of the October 19 agreements, defendant Tobin delivered to plaintiff a purported letter of rescission based upon plaintiff's asserted failure to properly attend to work orders. Plaintiff then instituted damage actions for anticipatory breach against the 13 defendants represented by Tobin, and against Crescent House & Garden, Inc., and Dayton House & Garden, Inc., for labor and materials in addition to damages. Plaintiff also sued Tobin for work and labor performed at the latter's request on different tracts owned by other corporations not here involved. A counterclaim was filed by Tobin for the cost of correcting defective materials and workmanship on 11 houses covered by defendants' letter of rescission.

Subsequently the entire dispute was submitted to arbitration on the following issues: (1) justification for defendants' rescission and (2) absent justification, the amount of plaintiff's damages. As to defendants Crescent House & Garden, Inc. and Dayton House & Garden, Inc., a further "alternative" issue whether defendants were obligated to plaintiff for a certain sum "or any other sum" as and for labor and materials furnished at the request of the two defendants was submitted.

The hearing was held on July 19 and August 1, 1957. Thereafter, the arbitrators rendered their decision awarding plaintiff money damages against each of 11 defendants for breach of contract, and in the case of Crescent House & Garden, Inc. and Dayton House & Garden, Inc. an award for labor and materials furnished, in addition to damages. With respect to Tobin, an award to plaintiff was offset by the allowance of Tobin's counterclaim for the cost of correcting defective materials and workmanship. A motion was then made by plaintiff in the lower court to confirm the award. Defendants countered with a motion to vacate and set it aside. The award was confirmed in all respects and the motion to vacate in effect denied. It is from the judgment confirming the arbitration award defendants appeal.

Appellants contend that the award should have been vacated because the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct "in refusing to hear evidence, pertinent and material to the controversy" (subd. (c) of section 1288, Code of Civil Procedure). Thus, it is claimed that the arbitrators refused to hear (1) proffered evidence with respect to respondent's assertedly defective work on other tracts owned by companies not parties to these proceedings, it being claimed that such evidence was material on the question of appellants' justification for terminating their contract; (2) proffered testimony of an appellants' witness regarding asserted defects on 11 houses upon which respondent had performed some work, this likewise bearing on the question of justification; (3) testimony of an expert witness on the issue of damages, specifically with respect to the profit made by said witness on similar though not identical houses; and (4) further cross-examination of a respondent's witness regarding work orders for repair work on tracts owned by companies not parties to this controversy, this also being assertedly material to the issue of damages; and refused to issue a subpoena duces tecum at appellants' oral request for all of respondent's business records in order that damages might thus be minimized, it being further claimed that the arbitrators thereby "exceeded their powers" (subd. (d) of section 1288). On oral argument, it was additionally contended by appellants that the arbitrators exceeded their powers, contrary to subd. (d), supra, as well as the terms of submission, by awarding to plaintiff in the case of Crescent House & Garden, Inc. and Dayton House & Garden, Inc. both damages for breach of contract and reimbursement for labor and materials furnished.

At the outset, we point out that the record of the arbitration proceedings presented to the trial court, and to this court on appeal, is incomplete, no reporter's transcript of the first of the two-day hearing having been filed. Too, the partial transcript relied upon by appellants, although certified to by the reporter, does not reflect any certification of the arbitrators. While respondent has asked that the appeal be dismissed for these deficiencies, we shall dispose of the matter on its merits.

[1, 2] In connection with the review of arbitration awards, "it is well settled that both before the superior and appellate courts every intendment of validity must be given the award and that the burden is upon the one claiming error to support his contention." Crofoot v. Blair Holdings Corp., 119 Cal.App.2d 156, 185, 260 P.2d 156, 171. Where, as here, the submission to arbitration was an unlimited one to be expressly conducted under the rules of the American Arbitration Association and in the absence of some limiting clause requiring that they act in conformity with rules of law, arbitrators may "base their decision upon broad principles of justice and equity, and in doing so may expressly or impliedly reject a claim that a party might successfully have asserted in a judicial action." Sapp v. Barenfeld, 34 Cal. 2d 515, 523, 212 P.2d 233, 239.

[3–7] Appellants' first contention of asserted misconduct relates to the arbitrators' refusal to admit evidence of respondent's failure to repair defective and defectively installed floor tiling in homes constructed by associated companies not parties to these proceedings. Appellants' theory is that Tobin, as agent for such companies, had knowledge of respondent's defective work on those units and that the proffered evidence went directly to appellants' defense of justification for their termination of the contract. This claim is without merit. It appears from the partial record of the proceedings that direct evidence was received from Tobin's principal witness, H. D. Tobin, bearing upon the reasons for appellants' letter of rescission, including the asserted defects on work orders relating to other companies. Any additional proffered testimony would have been cumulative. Had this been a judicial proceeding the rejection of such testimony would have been within the court's inherent discretionary power. (18 Cal.Jur.2d 563). Also, appellants' theory of admissibility, for which no California authority is cited, overlooks the fact that in arbitration proceedings an award may be predicated on "broad principles of justice and equity" (Sapp v. Barenfeld, supra, 34 Cal.2d at page 523, 212 P.2d at page 239), and even they in their brief concede that "arbitrators have fairly wide-sweeping powers of determining the materiality of evidence." Finally, and particularly in view of the partial record at hand, it must be assumed that the arbitrators were experienced men, capable of weighing the evidence and giving consideration to opposing inferences. Pacific Vegetable Oil Corp. v. C. S. T., Ltd., 29 Cal.2d 228, 241, 174 P.2d 441. One such inference opposed to appellants' contention is the settled principle relaxing the rule requiring strict performance in the case of building contracts; thus, whether defects and omissions are substantial or unimportant is generally a question of fact (Martin v. Karsh, 142 Cal.App.2d 468, 470, 298 P.2d 635) and, of course, the merits of this controversy are not subject to judicial review. Crofoot v. Blair Holdings Corp., 119 Cal.App.2d 156, 184, 185, 260 P.2d 156.

[8] Next, appellants complain of the refusal of the arbitrators to hear the testimony of their witness, one Reese, respecting defects in 11 houses upon which respondent performed some work. Here again, evidence of the fact in question was elicited from their witness, H. D. Tobin, and the additional testimony here sought to be received would have been cumulative. Also, from the partial record before us, it appears that Reese was unable to state that his inspection of the 11 houses occurred on any specific occasion prior to appellants' termination of the contract, and therefore the arbitrators properly excluded such proffered testimony because the rights of rescinding parties are controlled by the conditions which existed when the rescission was made, and are fixed and determined by the rescission. Spicer v. Hurley, 161 Cal. 1, 7, 118 P. 249.

[9] Appellants' third point relates to the question of damages and the arbitrators' refusal to receive the testimony of their witness, one Diller, which was assertedly material on the question of mitigation. Specifically, appellants offered to prove through Diller, who was likewise in the floor covering business, that respondent's expected profits, had the contract been fully performed, would have been two-fifths of the amount claimed as reflected by the testimony of respondent's president. The proffered proof was based on the profits realized by Diller on similar, but not identical, houses, said houses being different in design and consequently having different floor plans. No abuse of discretion appears; as the chairman of the panel well observed: "* * * the fact that one company makes one profit is, in my opinion, not a proof of what the other company might have made."

[10, 11] Also, on the question of mitigation of damages, appellants claim misconduct on the arbitrators' part in refusing to permit extended cross-examination of respondent's president Goland. This field of interrogation would have related to respondent's cost of making accommodation pickup work, or repairs, and appellants' counsel sought to refer to 175 work orders for pickup repairs on tracts owned by associated companies not parties to those proceedings. It was preliminarily established upon such cross-examination that the cost of such work in each of two instances amounted to approximately $1.20; however, when appellants' counsel indicated that he proposed to cross-examine him as to each of said 175 work orders, the arbitrators precluded any further cross-examination. Here again, the evidence was merely cumulative and its admissibility came within the discretionary powers of the arbitrators; furthermore, "proceedings in arbitration are of a summary character and are not subject to dilatory tactics" (Glesby v. Balfour, Guthrie & Co., Ltd., 63 Cal.App.2d 414, 417, 147 P.2d 60, 61).

[12] Appellants next complain of the arbitrators' refusal to issue a subpoena duces tecum for respondent's income tax statements, invoices, statements for materials and supplies, delivery tickets, time sheets, and other statements bearing upon respondent's operation of its business. The request of the panel was orally made by appellants' counsel near the conclusion of the hearing and called for the production of documents which assertedly would tend to impeach the testimony of respondent's principal witness and further minimize or mitigate the amount of damages. While appellants in their brief concede that certain of the documents may have been privileged, they claim that others were material to the issues before the arbitrators. The request may not have been an afterthought, but it does not appear why application for the documents was not made by affidavit in the usual course and form; in that event, it would not have been open to respondent's criticism of being too broad in character (Embassy Realty Associates v. Southwest Products Co., 126 Cal.App.2d 725, 732, 272 P.2d 899) and lacking in a sufficiently clear showing as to its materiality. Too, in their submission to arbitration, appellants bound themselves by the rules of the American Arbitration Association, one of which provides that the arbitrator "shall be the judge of the relevancy and materiality of the evidence offered * * *" No reversible error appears in the ruling complained of.

[13–15] Finally, on oral argument it was urged for the first time that the arbitrators acted in excess of their powers by awarding respondent certain sums for materials furnished appellants Crescent House & Garden, Inc. and Dayton House & Garden, Inc., in addition to assessing damages against them. In the case of these two appellants, the submission to arbitration provided for a determination of appellants' justification for rescission and, if no such justification existed, the amount of respondent's damages. "As an alternative" to a finding on the questions of justification and damages, the arbitrators were called upon to decide whether respondent was entitled to recover from both appellants a stated sum "or any other sum" on account of materials furnished and work performed. The first sentence of the arbitration agreement provided for submission of "the following controversies and any and all controversies or questions between the parties which exist," after which there were listed the specific questions involving respondent and each of the 14 appellants. While it is true that the determination of an unsubmitted issue requires a vacation of the award as being in excess of the arbitrators' powers (Bierlein v. Johnson, 73 Cal.App.2d 728, 733–735, 166 P.2d 644), it does not follow that the disregard by the arbitrators of the "alternative" proviso in the specific question in the instant case constituted a decision of an issue not submitted. The "primary measure of damages" available to a party to a contract who, without fault, is willing to perform but is prevented from doing so by the other party, "is the amount of his loss, which may consist of his reasonable outlay or expenditure toward performance, and the anticipated profits which he would have derived from performance." Buxbom v. Smith, 23 Cal.2d 535, 541, 145 P.2d 305, 307. Inherent in the award at bar is a finding of freedom from fault on respondent's part; hence, there being no justification for the rescission, respondent was entitled to both damages and reimbursement (Buxbom v.

Smith, supra). Furthermore, the arbitrators here did not create and decide a new cause of action, as was unsuccessfully argued in Crofoot v. Blair Holdings Corp., 119 Cal.App.2d 156, 187, 260 P.2d 156, since separate and distinct items of damage arose from appellants' unjustified rescission. Lastly, in view of the fact that "any and all other controversies or questions" were submitted to arbitration, it seems to us that the instant contention "is a strained and unnatural one and violates the obvious spirit of the contract." Crofoot v. Blair Holdings Corp., supra, 119 Cal.App.2d at page 186, 260 P.2d at page 172.

The judgment is affirmed.

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Robert Valentino ABATE, Deceased.

Pearl P. MARLOW, Appellant,

v.

Daniel A. KIRSCH, as Guardian ad litem of Robert V. Abate, Jr., a Minor, Petitioner and Respondent.

Civ. 23384.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 17, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 11, 1959.

Proceeding in the matter of an estate wherein upon admission to probate of decedent's will a minor through his guardian ad litem filed a petition and statement of claim of interest purporting to be his legitimate son and entitled to the entire estate, and executrix likewise filed a petition in her individual capacity claiming to be the surviving wife. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Newcomb Condee, J., the executrix appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held, inter alia, that under the record all requirements of statute providing that an element of adoption of illegitimate child by his father is public acknowledgment of paternity had been complied with, sustaining finding that minor was legitimate from time of his birth, and that under record there was no valid marriage between decedent and executrix and that his estate was his separate property.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇦1011(1)

In determining public acknowledgment of paternity, one of elements of adoption of illegitimate child by his father, it was for trial judge to resolve any conflict in the evidence and where trial judge accepted child's mother's version of what had occurred appellate court would assume that trial judge rejected conflicting evidence. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 230.

2. Bastards ⇦13

In determining existence of public acknowledgment of paternity, one of elements of adoption of illegitimate child by his father, each case depends upon its own circumstances. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 230.

3. Bastards ⇦13

Evidence, including showing that father was suffering from incurable cancer, that he lived some 15 days after birth of child, that he had every intention and desire to treat the child as his own, that he assumed responsibility for his maintenance, care, and support, that he rented apartment as a home for himself, the child, and child's mother, and lived in it as his home, returned to it as his home, and died in it, that he had supported the child and its mother, and that he referred to child as his "son" and had talked about "the baby" to his doctor, was sufficient to sustain finding that there was "public acknowledgment" of paternity which is an element of adoption of illegitimate child by his father. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 230.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Public Acknowledgment".

4. Bastards ⇐13

Where father was suffering from incurable cancer, he lived some 15 days after child was born, he expressed desire to treat child as his own, rented an apartment as a home for himself, child and child's mother, and referred to baby as "his son" and talked about "the baby" to his doctor, any lack of mention of child in his conversation with an employee or his sister who had never seen him, at times when he was not called upon to discuss the child, did not support a purposeful concealment or willful misrepresentation of paternity so as to preclude finding of "public acknowledgment" of paternity, one of elements of adoption of illegitimate child by his father. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 230.

5. Bastards ⇐13

Where evidence was insufficient for trial court to have found that executrix was the legal wife of decedent and it was clear from record that the only "family" decedent had consisted of mother of his illegitimate child, for whom he maintained the only home he had, decedent did not fail to receive child into his family with consent of his wife within statute providing that as element of adoption of illegitimate child by his father, he must receive it as his own into his family with consent of the wife, since under circumstances executrix' consent was not necessary. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 230.

6. Bastards ⇐10

The public policy of the state favors legitimation of illegitimate child. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 230.

7. Marriage ⇐50(1)

Alleged marriage between executrix and decedent was rebutted by evidence showing that no marriage license or any record of marriage was produced, that executrix had not lived with decedent as man and wife prior to their purported marriage, that executrix could not locate the "chaplain" who allegedly had performed marriage ceremony and that she could not find marriage license, although she had described it in detail. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 55, 68–70, 72–74.

8. Marriage ⇐26, 27

Unless a solemnization is performed as authorized by statute and performed by one mentioned in statute there can be no valid marriage. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 70.

9. Husband and Wife ⇐264

Evidence, including showing that pursuant to property agreement decedent paid alleged wife a certain sum for her interest in certain property and that agreement recited "whereas they desire to divide between themselves the property which they have accumulated" and provided for mutual release of all claims upon the property of the other was sufficient to sustain finding that estate was the separate property of decedent, and hence no issue arose as to succession of community property under Probate Code or as to rights of a putative spouse in property which would have been community property had there been a valid marriage. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 201–203.

Henry Merton, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles E. Taintor, Scott Weller, Daniel A. Kirsch, Raymond A. Nelson, Los Angeles, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

Upon the admission to probate of decedent's will, Robert V. Abate, Jr., a minor, through his guardian ad litem, filed a petition and statement of claim of interest, purporting to be his legitimate son and entitled to the entire estate. Appellant Pearl P. Marlow, executrix under the will, likewise filed a petition in her individual capacity, claiming to be the surviving wife. After a four-day hearing on both petitions, the trial court rendered judgment declaring Robert V. Abate, Jr., to be the son of decedent, his legitimate son for all purposes from the time of his birth, his pretermitted child and entitled to distribution of one-half of the estate; and Pearl P. Marlow to be the putative wife of decedent, entitled to one-half of the estate under the will, and that all of the estate constituted decedent's separate property. From this judgment Pearl P. Marlow appeals, contending that it lacks support in the evidence.

Robert V. Abate died testate August 25, 1956, in Los Angeles, possessed of estate in Orange and Los Angeles Counties. Appellant claims she was married to decedent on July 21, 1945, at San Diego. They lived together as husband and wife until their separation September 26, 1955. During this time decedent accumulated a sizeable estate including a home in Balboa which was held in joint tenancy. Upon their separation, and pursuant to an agreement, appellant transferred to decedent her interest in the Balboa property, for which he paid her $10,000. On September 26, 1955, he executed the instant will. Appellant thereafter resided apart from decedent, obtained separate employment and resumed her maiden name of Marlow. No divorce action was ever filed.

In August of 1955, decedent, then 43 years of age, met Thelma Stober. In October they engaged in intimacies and thereafter, in December, Thelma became pregnant. Upon learning of this, and in February of 1956, decedent rented an apartment on Bonnie Brae Avenue in Los Angeles, where he and Thelma, although never married, resided together as husband and wife until decedent's death on August 25, 1956. The child was born fifteen days before, on August 10, 1956.

On the issue of adoption by legitimation, respondent relied upon Section 230, Civil Code, which provides: "The father of an illegitimate child, by publicly acknowledging it as his own, receiving it as such, with the consent of his wife, if he is married, into his family, and otherwise treating it as if it were a legitimate child, thereby adopts it as such; and such child is thereupon deemed for all purposes legitimate from the time of its birth."

Uncontradicted is the testimony of Thelma Stober that she had intimate relations with decedent commencing in October, 1955, and had not been intimate with any other man since then. Her testimony further shows that when she told decedent she was pregnant, he told her he "always wanted a child with the woman he loved," and established a home for them both by renting an apartment on Bonnie Brae Avenue where they lived together until his death. He bought her a ring, placed it on her finger telling her that "in the sight of God's eyes we are married," and opened up a joint bank account in their names. They sent out printed "wedding announcements," (Exhibit A), to all their friends and relatives, thereafter purported themselves as husband and wife, and Thelma took the name of Mrs. Abate. They travelled together in the performance of his duties arising out of certain of his health lecture tours and made a visit to her family in Washington.

Appellant testified decedent had told her he was sterile. Thelma, however, testified that she and decedent had discussed the matter of his sterility because he knew how she felt about children, and how much she loved him; and he told her he had become sterile after a plane accident, but that the doctors had assured him it was nothing permanent. Photographs of decedent were received in evidence for the court's comparison of his features with those of the child, as were the child's blood tests which were compared with decedent's hospital records showing the blood types were such as not to preclude paternity. There is nothing improbable about Thelma's story and the trial judge, as he had a right to do, after determining the credibility of the witnesses and weighing the evidence, accepted her testimony and that of her witnesses as true.

Conceding that if the trial court believed Thelma Stober's testimony, it was justified in finding decedent was the father of the minor, appellant claims decedent did not publicly acknowledge the child as his own as he is required to do under Section 230, Civil Code. She argues that his only statements acknowledging the child were made by decedent to Thelma, her sister Marcella and a friend, Pearl Campbell, at times he was ill and under the "influence of sedation," and at most they were only private admissions of paternity, which are insufficient to constitute public acknowledgment. She submits that no such statements were made outside the family circle and decedent at no time acknowledged paternity to his friends, family, relatives or associates; that although decedent introduced the child's mother at the hospital to Mrs. Bressert, manager of an apartment house he owned in Balboa, as "Thelma," he did not disclose who she was or his relations with her; that he did not tell his sister Celeste about Thelma, referring to her on one occasion outside of her presence as his nurse; and that he told appellant when she took him to the Hoxy Clinic in Texas, several days before his death, he was not the father of Thelma's baby.

On the other hand, the record discloses that upon learning of her pregnancy, decedent made his home with Thelma in Los Angeles where he lived with her as her husband, leaving only occasionally to visit his property in Balboa and to continue his lecture tours on which Thelma accompanied him; and that twice he returned from the hospital to his home with Thelma and finally from the clinic in Texas to die there. Of significance is the fact that the child was born August 10, 1956, and decedent lived only fifteen days thereafter. During this time he was incurably ill with cancer, struggling to keep alive. There is no evidence that during that time he was under the "influence of sedation" or under "heavy sedation" as claimed by appellant in her brief, although the record does show that he took sedation upon retiring and after eating. While decedent lived with Thelma from February, 1956, to his death, he was in the hospital on two occasions, from June 23 to July 28, and from August 11 to August 16; and after the child's birth, from August 21 to August 24, he was in the Hoxy Clinic in Texas. During this time he was critically ill, which left him little opportunity to declare to anyone outside his family circle that he was the father of the child. There was little reason to declare the same to Thelma, her sister, and her friend, for in providing and maintaining a home for her, and living with her in a normal "husband and wife" relationship, he set up as against the world a "legitimate household." As to their friends and relatives, he and Thelma had previously declared they were married by sending "wedding announcements" which would leave no reason for decedent to make any declaration to them that the child was his. Obviously anyone having been told of the "marriage" would naturally assume that the child was "legitimate." As any proud father, when he first saw the child in their home upon his arrival from the hospital, he walked over to the crib and said, "so this is my son." He referred on numerous occasions to the boy as "my son" to those around him—Thelma and her friend and sister, apparently the only visitors they had. At one time after watching Thelma turn the baby on his stomach, he said, "I wish I was well enough to enjoy him." In a telephone call to one of his doctors in the hospital, decedent told him immediately after the birth of the child "the baby was grand." Decedent participated in making a list of things the baby needed, gave Marcella money to buy them and the keys to his car and sent her shopping for the items, saying: "I want the best for him." The evidence further shows that when Thelma went to the hospital for the birth of the child, only fifteen days before decedent died, there was no one in the apartment to care for the decedent and she called his sister to take him to the City of Hope where he could be cared for until she could return from the hospital and do so herself. His sister took decedent to the City of Hope and he returned to the apartment on the same day Thelma returned from the hospital after the birth of the child. His treatment and care at the hospital at that time is a reasonable explanation why Thelma alone gave information concerning the child and his name as Robert V. Abate, Jr., for the birth certificate, and why he did not visit her in the hospital or contact the hospital or her doctors. On the very day Thelma brought the baby home, decedent arranged to and did return there from the City of Hope. It is obvious from the trial judge's findings he accepted Thelma's testimony and that of her witnesses and believed, under the unusual circumstances, that decedent's acts and conduct toward the child and his statements to those near him were sufficient to constitute public acknowledgment.

As to decedent's relatives, friends and associates, considering the very serious illness of decedent, his extended hospital visits and the short time he lived after the baby's birth, decedent would have gone out little on business or socially, there would have been few visitors in the household, little opportunity to have made any declaration concerning the child and little interest in much outside of decedent's health. Excluding for the moment appellant's testimony that decedent on his trip to the Hoxy Clinic several days before his death told her he was not the child's father, appellant produced no evidence that decedent ever denied paternity. Even giving credence to the testimony of Mrs. Bressert, the manager of decedent's property in Balboa, that decedent introduced Thelma only by name and made no explanation of their relationship or that they were expecting a child, we see no reason under the circumstances why he should, or would, have made any explanation to an employee, absent any inquiry concerning the matter. The fact, if it be so, that decedent did not tell his sister about Thelma, or mention the child, means little on the issue under the circumstances. The evidence does not show that either Celeste or Mrs. Bressert asked decedent about his relations with Thelma, who she was, or anything concerning the child. Omissions alone, under these circumstances, do not seem to us to support a purposeful concealment, or wilful misrepresentation of paternity. In re Estate of Baird, 193 Cal. 225, 223 P. 974. The court in In re Estate of Gird, 157 Cal. 534, at pages 542, 543, 108 P. 499, at page 503, stated along this line: "The language of Section 230, Civ.Code, is simply 'by publicly acknowledging it as his own.' There is no provision as to what shall constitute 'a public acknowledgment,' and the words of the statute must be taken in their ordinary sense. * * * In the face of circumstances which might well be accepted as calling for explanation as to the true situation if he was not the father of these children, he never expressly denied that he was such * * * Nor is the fact that he did not say anything about the matter to his brother when he visited his home shortly before his death of such importance, under the circumstances, as to forbid the conclusion of public acknowledgment."

Reference is made to appellant's testimony that when she escorted defendant to the Hoxy Clinic in Texas, several days before his death, he told her for the first time about Thelma, of having had an altercation with her, that he was not the father of her child, that she was in the family way when he met her, and wanted to return to Los Angeles immediately to prevent her from drawing the money out of their joint bank accounts; and that when he arrived in Los Angeles, he went to the bank and drew out $1,200. Appellant contends that this conversation and his action in drawing funds from his account prove decedent denied paternity, did not receive the child into "his family" and did not have his wife's consent therefor, and that he intended to make no provision for the child. On this point, Thelma's testimony discloses that on June 20, 1956, before he went to the City of Hope for surgery, decedent made out four pink cards and had her sign them for joint accounts in the bank, stating to her at the time that they represented $50,000 cash, and instructed her that upon his death she was to immediately take the bankbooks to the bank and get the money, that he put the cards into his briefcase where he kept them at all times, that he took his briefcase with him when he left with appellant for Texas, but when he returned the cards were no longer in the case. The controversy concerning the missing bankbooks speaks for itself, and this may have been one of the factors considered by the trial judge in determining credibility of the witnesses and weighing the evidence.

[1–4] In the instant case the issue of legitimation is primarily factual. It was for the trial judge to resolve any conflict in the evidence. In re Estate of Gird, 157 Cal. 534, 544, 108 P. 499. He obviously accepted the respondent's version of what occurred and this court may assume that he rejected appellant's conflicting evidence. Each case depends upon its own circumstances. In re Estate of Baird, 193 Cal. 225, 223 P. 974. Those in the instant case are unusual, but we conclude in consideration of decedent's serious illness, the short time he lived after the birth of the child and from his conduct and treatment of the child, that he had every intention and desire to treat him as his own, that he felt the natural affection of a father for his child and that he desired to, and did, care for and assume responsibility for his maintenance, care and support. He rented the apartment as a home for the three of them and lived in it as his home, returned to it as his home and died in it. After Thelma was no longer able to work, he supported her and the child, providing all the necessities for both, and on occasion did the shopping himself. He referred to the baby as "his son" to members of Thelma's family, Thelma and her friend, and talked about "the baby" to his doctor. Any lack of mention of the child in his conversation with an employee, or his sister who had never seen him, at times when he was not called upon to discuss the child, even if the trial court attached credence to their testimony, we do not believe to be sufficient to overbalance the weight of his deliberate admissions and his acts and conduct toward the boy and his mother.

[5] Appellant contends that decedent did not receive the child into his family with the consent of his wife. The evidence before us is insufficient for the trial court to have found appellant was the legal wife of decedent. Therefore, her consent was not necessary and as such, she could not constitute the "family" referred to in the code section. It is clear from the record that the only "family" decedent had consisted of Thelma, for whom he maintained the only home he had. Under these circumstances, it is clear that the case of Laugenour v. Fogg, 48 Cal.App.2d 848, 120 P.2d 690, relied upon by appellant is inapplicable. In that case, the father of the child was married, left his legal wife and lived with the mother of the illegitimate child without the consent of his wife. In holding that the establishment of the "home" with the mother of the child did not satisfy the requirement of section 230, the court said, at page 852, of 48 Cal.App.2d at page 692 of 120 P.2d: "It is true that it has been held, and it may be conceded to be the present rule, that a single man may establish a home with his paramour and there rear the offspring without the sanctity or formality of a marriage. The reasoning of these cases is that every man can lawfully claim a home; if married the home is where the wife and family reside and if single he may still provide this home for whomsoever he chooses to establish the marital relation, even without the conventions." Referring again to the In re Estate of Baird, 193 Cal. 225, at page 278, 223 P. 974 at page 996, the court stated: "In respect to the issue of receipt into family we will adopt the definition of 'family' given in [In re] Estate of Gird, supra, as stated at page 545, [of 157 Cal., 108 P. at page 504] 'As used in this section, the word "family," in our opinion, means no more at most than that the father must have a "home," a settled place of habitation of which he is the head, into which he must receive the child.'" And at page 279, of 193 Cal., at page 996 of 223 P., the court said: "It has been held that where the father of an illegitimate child lives in a home alone, such home may constitute a 'family' into which he may receive the child, or where the father and mother of an illegitimate child live in a home or habitation of which the former is the head, although they are not married, the father has a 'family' within the meaning of section 230, into which the illegitimate child may be received."

[6] The record before us contains ample evidence that all requirements of section 230, Civil Code, have been complied with and by reason thereof and the public policy of this state, favoring legitimation we deem the minor, for all purposes, to be legitimate from the time of his birth. Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 532, 31 P. 915, 19 L.R.A. 40; In re Estate of Lund, 26 Cal.2d 472, 159 P.2d 643, 162 A.L.R. 606.

[7] On the issue of marriage, the trial court found that appellant was not the legal wife of decedent and at most the relationship established a putative marriage. To reverse this portion of the judgment, appellant relies upon a "ceremony" performed July 21, 1945, in San Diego by a "naval chaplain" wherein wedding bands were exchanged; cohabitation for ten years as husband and wife; the joint acquisition of property and conduct of his business; and their devotion to each other. She submits this evidence establishes a presumption of the existence of a legal marriage. We conclude that any such claimed presumption was rebutted by the evidence. No marriage license or any record of their marriage was produced and appellant testified that they had not lived together as man and wife prior to their purported marriage. She further testified that decedent had told her he had made all arrangements for the marriage and she relied upon him; that she could not locate the "chaplain" who performed the ceremony but that it took place in an aircraft factory; that she could not find the marriage license although she had described it as a white, green-embossed document; that upon their separation, and prior to signing the property agreement on September 26, 1955, the decedent, in order to keep control of the property, told her she could not prove they were married; that they were not really married and only the two of them knew of the marriage ceremony; and that a lawyer prepared the property agreement which she executed, after which she resided apart from decedent, found separate employment and assumed her maiden name of Marlow.

Significant is the fact that appellant did not sue for a divorce although she testified "she wanted a divorce," did not consult with counsel to determine her rights, did not attempt to have the validity of the marriage determined and declared by the court, and the September 26, 1955, agreement between her and decedent was one drawn between Robert V. Abate and Pearl P. Marlow, also known as Mrs. Robert V. Abate, which she signed as "Pearl P. Marlow." The agreement declares, among other things, "Whereas, the parties hereto have lived together as husband and wife." From appellant's own evidence and the fact no marriage license or other record of a legal marriage was produced, the trial court found that a valid marriage did not exist.

It appears to this court that if, in California, any record of the marriage existed as required by law, the fact of a legal marriage would not have been difficult to prove, for appellant knew the exact date and place of the purported "ceremony." On July 21, 1945, the Civil Code in this state required for a valid marriage a solemnization (section 55); that a marriage must be licensed, solemnized, authenticated, and recorded (section 68); and that the parties "must" first obtain a license therefor from the county clerk of the county in which the marriage is to be celebrated (section 69) and "must" obtain from the same clerk, in addition, a certificate of registry (section 69a). Civil Code sections 72, 73 and 74 provide that the person solemnizing a marriage "must" require presentation of the marriage license, "must" make, sign and endorse upon the license a certification showing the solemnization, names of witnesses and his official position, and file the license and certification with the county recorder within thirty days.

[8] The evidence does not disclose if the so-called "naval chaplain" was actually a navy chaplain and a person authorized by statute (section 70, Civil Code) to solemnize marriages in California. Unless a solemnization is performed as authorized under the code and performed by one mentioned in section 70, there can be no valid marriage (Norman v. Thomson, 121 Cal. 620, 54 P. 143, 42 L.R.A. 343). The court in that case also held that noncompliance of the parties to a marriage with the provisions of section 68 invalidates the marriage and the court finding there was no license and no solemnization by any person authorized by law to perform the ceremony, held there was no valid marriage. Solemnization is essential to a valid marriage in California (In re Estate of Shipp, 168 Cal. 640, 144 P. 143; Temescal Rock Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 180 Cal. 637, 182 P. 447, 13 A.L.R. 683).

[9] On appellant's last point concerning the status of the decedent's property, she submits that with the exception of $15,000 his estate was acquired as the result of the earnings of appellant and decedent during the time they lived together and was not his separate property. She recites testimony that they were engaged in business together from July 21, 1945, to September 26, 1956, that she worked hard in their joint interest, lived with decedent under frugal circumstances and that their average income was approximately $2,000 per month.

The record before us does not disclose the actual estate of decedent as of July 21, 1945, the date of the purported marriage, other than the statement of appellant that he said he had $15,000 which was his separate property. Appellant took care of decedent's books, but she offered no substantial evidence from the books or otherwise concerning if, or in what manner, the $15,000 was invested, whether his subsequent income was the result of his efforts, or from investments and accumulation of this sum over the eleven-year period, and none from the books concerning the amount of income of decedent from July, 1945, to September, 1956.

Pursuant to the property agreement of September 26, 1955, decedent paid appellant $10,000 for her interest in the Balboa property. What other estate he owned we do not know. In addition, the agreement of September 26, 1955, executed by the parties recited "Whereas they desire to divide between themselves the property which they have accumulated," and provided for mutual release of all claims upon the property of the other. As to whether the agreement was the result of any fraud or fraudulent conduct on the part of decedent and not binding, the trial court found from the evidence it was valid and that no fraud was practiced on appellant, and her consent was not induced as the result of any fraud or imposition.

Weighing the evidence and resolving any and all conflicts in the evidence, the trial court found that all of the property in the name of decedent at the date of his death was his separate property. There was no evidence that any property existed that would have been community had there been a valid marriage.

We conclude that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the trial judge's finding that the estate is the separate property of decedent. Therefore, no issue arises as to succession of community property under sections 201–203, Probate Code, or as to the rights of a putative spouse in property which would have been community property had there been a valid marriage. Since the will contains no provision for the child, no disinheritance clause and no provision was made for him by settlement, or otherwise, it appears that the minor is a pretermitted heir of the decedent (section 90, Probate Code).

Judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Eugene SMITH, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6313.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 17, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of possession of marijuana. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, J. Howard Ziemann, J., rendered judgment and imposed sentence and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that where police officers arrested defendant after they overheard him indicate that he was in possession of marijuana but officers failed to uncover marijuana in search of defendant's person and his apartment, it was entirely reasonable for officers to infer that defendant probably had access to and might utilize garage on premises of apartment building as hiding place since he owned automobile, and search of garage in which marijuana was found was reasonably incident to arrest and evidence so obtained was admissible.

Appeal from sentence dismissed and judgment affirmed.

1. Arrest ⇐71

Criminal Law ⇐394.4(9)

Where police officers arrested defendant after they overheard him indicate that he was in possession of marijuana but officers failed to uncover marijuana in search of defendant's person and his apartment, it was entirely reasonable for officers to infer that defendant probably had access to and might utilize garage on premises of apartment building as hiding place since he owned automobile, and search of garage in which marijuana was found was reasonably incident to arrest and evidence so obtained was admissible in prosecution for possession of marijuana. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Criminal Law ⇐419(3), 698(1)

In prosecution for possession of marijuana, accusatory information which arresting officer received from an unidentified informant whose reliability was never established was admissible to show what led officers to defendant's residence where they overheard defendant indicate he was in possession of marijuana and thereupon arrested him, especially in view of fact that defendant did not object to officer's testimony or move that it be stricken. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

3. Witnesses ⇐216

In prosecution for possession of marijuana, wherein defendant conceded that officers had probable cause to arrest him on basis of independent investigation subsequent to receipt of unidentified informant's statement that defendant had marijuana in his possession, reliability of informant was irrelevant and request for disclosure of name of informant was properly denied. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

Elinor Chandler Katz, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., Arlo E. Smith, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

HERNDON, Justice.

After conviction of possession of marijuana (Health and Safety Code, § 11500) defendant appeals from the judgment and sentence contending: (1) that the evidence upon which conviction was based was illegally obtained and improperly admitted over objection, and (2) that the lower court erred in admitting the arresting officer's testimony as to statements made to him by an unidentified informant.

On November 20, 1957, an unidentified informant gave Pasadena police officer Peter Ellena, Jr., a physical description and name which corresponded to that of appellant, and the officer was told that "The subject has a quantity of marijuana secreted in his house." That evening at about 6 p.m.

Sergeant Hamilton and officers Cockell and Ellena proceeded to appellant's residence, described as a "two-story multiple dwelling," in which the appellant was a tenant. The two officers seated themselves in an automobile in the back yard of the building, and at about 6:10 p.m. they observed the appellant and another man come into the back yard. Officer Ellena testified that he overheard the other man say to appellant "Where is the pot?" (a slang term for marijuana) to which the appellant responded, "I have it—don't worry—it's not rolled up, but I have plenty of paper." The defendant then went into the house with the other man and came out in about ten minutes carrying something in his hand. The officers stepped from the car and placed the appellant under arrest. Finding no narcotics in appellant's hand, they requested that he take them to his room. Appellant complied and a search of the room was commenced. One of the officers asked appellant if he owned an automobile, to which appellant answered in the affirmative, describing the vehicle. Sergeant Hamilton then left the room and returned with two women and a man who had been waiting for appellant in the car. In the search of appellant's room, the officers discovered two brown cigarette papers, some seeds and certain debris which, according to the testimony of officer Ellena, the defendant later said "could have been marijuana." Then officers Ellena and Cockell went into the back yard and searched the garage where they discovered two bags containing about five ounces of marijuana. The officers testified that there was no car parked in the garage; that they had no conversation and made no investigation as to who used the garage, and that the garage was "cluttered" with furniture and storage.

Appellant denied possession of the marijuana when confronted with it in his room, but at the police station he admitted that he had purchased the contraband and taken it to his home a week previously. At the trial he testified that these self-incriminating statements to the officers were made so that the woman arrested with him would be released and on the officer's assurance that he would benefit from the admissions. The officers denied so inducing the confession. Appellant was convicted, and probation was denied.

In this proceeding appellant concedes that his arrest was legal and that the search of his person and his living quarters was a search reasonably incident to that arrest. However, he contends that the search of the garage, which uncovered the contraband on which his conviction is based, was not reasonably incident to the arrest, and that the evidence obtained thereby was therefore inadmissible. Stated simply, appellant's theory is that the search of the garage on the premises in which appellant, an owner of an automobile, was a tenant, was unreasonable, because there was nothing reasonably to suggest to the officers that the marijuana which was the object of their search, might be there secreted.

Appellant's position is untenable. As recently stated in People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 162, 293 P.2d 40, 46; "While the Cahan case [People v. Cahan, 44 Cal. 2d 434, 282 P.2d 905] held that evidence obtained by police officers in violation of federal and state constitutional prohibitions 'against unreasonable search and seizure is inadmissible,' it did 'not purport to inhibit the right of law enforcement officers to conduct a reasonable search and seizure incident to a valid arrest.' [Citations.] * * * 'It is well settled that a search without a warrant is valid where it is incident to a lawful arrest, if it is reasonable and made in good faith; and that a seizure, during such a search, of evidence related to the crime is permissible. [Citations.] * * * "The right without a search warrant contemporaneously to search persons lawfully arrested while committing crime, and to search the place where the arrest is made in order to find and seize things connected with the crime * * * is not to be doubted."'" See also, People v. Coleman, 134 Cal.App.2d 594, 599, 286 P.2d 582.

In People v. Dixon, 46 Cal.2d 456, 458–459, 296 P.2d 557, 559, police officers entered defendant's apartment and arrested her. During the search of the apartment, the officers discovered and forcibly took from her person the key to the garage which she rented on the premises. In the garage, the officers discovered a quantity of heroin. In reversing the judgment of conviction for the failure to introduce evidence to justify the officers' entry into the apartment, the Supreme Court said: "* * * if on a new trial reasonable cause is shown for the entry of defendant's apartment and her arrest [citations], the contemporaneous search of the garage, would be a lawful search as an incident to that arrest since the garage was on the premises and under defendant's control."

In the instant case, no question is raised as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support appellant's conviction of possession of narcotics. It should be emphasized that the sole question here presented is whether it was reasonable for the officers to search the garage after the search of the appellant's person and living quarters had failed to uncover the narcotics for which they were searching. In the appellant's room the officers had found cigarette papers, debris, and seeds which naturally would have tended to confirm the suspicions raised by the conversation they had overheard. It was entirely reasonable for the officers to infer that appellant probably had access to and might utilize the garage as a hiding place, since he owned an automobile and was a tenant in the building. The officers were not conducting an exploratory search for what might be uncovered (cf. People v. Mills, 148 Cal.App. 2d 392, 306 P.2d 1005; Harris v. United States, 331 U.S. 145, 67 S.Ct. 1098, 91 L.Ed. 1399) but were searching for marijuana which they had good reason to believe was hidden somewhere on the premises, in the appellant's room or in an outbuilding to which he had access. Cf. Sayers v. United States, 9 Cir., 2 F.2d 146.

In People v. Wasco, 153 Cal.App.2d 485, 487, 314 P.2d 558, the officers arrested the defendant in his rented room. Thereafter, the officers searched for and discovered contraband in a washroom at the end of the hallway on which the defendant's room faced, and such a search was held reasonably incident to a lawful arrest. In the instant case, as in Wasco, supra, the reasonableness of the search of an area beyond the immediate living quarters of the defendant rests on the fair inference that his control and activities extended to areas to which, as a tenant, he had the rights of access and use. See: Trowbridge v. Superior Court, 144 Cal.App.2d 13, 18, 300 P.2d 222 [search of a garage located beneath defendant's apartment held reasonably incident to a lawful arrest made in the apartment in which defendant resided]; People v. Lawrence, 149 Cal.App.2d 435, 445, 308 P.2d 821 [where the defendant was arrested in the entry hall to his apartment, a search of the apartment for contraband held reasonable]; People v. Montes, 146 Cal.App.2d 530, 534, 303 P.2d 1064 [where search of an area twenty feet from the house in which defendant was arrested disclosed a vial of narcotics, the evidence was admissible].

[1] We hold that the search of the garage, which uncovered the contraband on which appellant's conviction rests, was reasonably incident to a concededly valid arrest, and the evidence so obtained was admissible.

[2, 3] We must also reject appellant's contention that the trial court erred to his prejudice in permitting officer Ellena to disclose the accusatory information which the officer received in statements from an unidentified informant whose reliability was never established. The information was admissible when offered to show what led the officers to appellant's residence, where they overheard appellant indicate he was in possession of contraband and thereupon arrested him. People v. Fischer, 49 Cal.2d 442, 446, 317 P.2d 967; Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 291, 294, 294 P.2d 36. Moreover, appellant did not object to the officer's testimony or move that it be stricken. Appellant concedes that the officers had probable cause to arrest him on the basis of their independent investigation subsequent to the receipt of the informant's statement. Therefore the reliability of the informant is irrelevant. Cf. People v. Fischer, supra, 49 Cal.2d 442, 447, 317 P.2d 967; Priestly v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39. During the course of the trial counsel for appellant unsuccessfully sought disclosure of the name of officer Ellena's informant. The request was properly denied. The informant was not a material witness on the issue of guilt, nor were his statements necessary to establish the validity of the arrest or the search which followed. Priestly v. Superior Court, supra, People v. McShann, 50 Cal.2d 802, 330 P.2d 33.

The appeal from the sentence is dismissed (People v. Gallardo, 41 Cal.2d 57, 60, 257 P.2d 29) and the judgment is affirmed.

BELLFLOWER CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Carl E. SKAGGS et al., Defendants and Respondents. *

Civ. 23257.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 16, 1958.

Hearing Granted Feb. 11, 1959.

Condemnation case. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William E. Fox., J., entered an order allowing interest upon award from date of entry of interlocutory judgment, and an appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that even when condemnor has not sought or obtained possession of property prior to vesting of title in condemnor, interest commences to accrue on date of entry of judgment and runs until date of payment.

Affirmed.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order allowing interest upon an award from the date of entry of the interlocutory judgment in a condemnation proceeding.

residential lots for the expansion of an existing school site. After a jury trial an interlocutory judgment in condemnation was entered on February 18, 1957. The plaintiff made no motion for a new trial, did not appeal, and took no steps to vacate or modify the judgment. At various times thereafter the plaintiff tendered its warrants for the principal amounts awarded for each parcel, together with costs, but without interest. The time lapse ran all of the way from one month and two days to six months and five days, with varying times in between. There is set forth in a footnote hereto a general itemization showing the respective parcel numbers, the defendant's amount of award or judgment, the day of payment, the time which elapsed from the entry of judgment to the date of payment, the interest which the trial court granted and which respondents contend is the correct amount, the interest which the appellant contended was the right amount due when it argued against the granting of the motion for a supplementary judgment for interest, and the interest which the appellant now contends is the proper amount to be paid.[1]

The tenders were refused because of the failure to include interest upon the principal awards. Apparently an agreement was then reached between the parties whereby the amount of the warrants was accepted conditionally and without waiver of the respondents' rights to the accrued interest, if any, to the date of tender and conditional acceptance.

In the latter part of November, 1957, the respondents made a motion for a supplemental order fixing liability for interest on the judgment in condemnation, and the court granted such motion and decreed that the amounts demanded by the respondents, as set forth in the footnote, were proper. The order, in effect, decreed that interest was due from the date of entry of the judgment in condemnation until the date of payment. A final judgment of condemnation was made and filed on February 14, 1958. The appellant has appealed from the supplemental order.

[1] Each side asserts that the sole question involved is: When does interest commence to accrue upon a judgment in condemnation, when the condemner has not sought nor obtained possession of the property prior to the vesting of title in the condemner? The appellant contends that interest does not accrue on a judgment in condemnation until thirty days after all possibility of direct attack thereon has been exhausted whether by way of appeal, motion for new trial, or motion to vacate; and that in the present case the appellant should not be liable for any interest until the judgment was final. The appellant relies almost entirely upon the case of County of Los Angeles v. Lorbeer, 1958, 158 Cal.App.2d 804, 323 P.2d 542.

The respondents assert that they are entitled to interest on the amount of the condemnation award from the date of entry of judgment to the date of payment to the property owner, and they rely mainly upon the rulings set forth in the case of People v. Superior Court, 145 Cal.App. 2d 683, 303 P.2d 628.

We are of the opinion that the respondents are correct in their contentions.

[2] The right to interest in this state in a controversy such as is before us does not depend exclusively upon statutory enactments. The Constitution provides, in Article I, section 14, in part as follows:

"Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner * * *." (Emphasis added.)

And Article XX, section 22, of the Constitution, in part, is as follows:

"The rate of interest upon the loan or forebearance of any money, goods or things in action, or on accounts after demand or judgment rendered in any court of the State, shall be 7 percent per annum * * *." (Emphasis added.)

The allowance of interest, under proper circumstances, is an essential element in "just compensation." As said in Heimann v. City of Los Angeles, 30 Cal.2d 746, at pages 758–759, 185 P.2d 597, at page 604:

"In most jurisdictions interest is allowable in condemnation cases on the same theory that supports the award of costs in those cases, that is, interest is allowable as part of the just compensation required by the Constitution to be paid to the owner for property taken. 96 A.L.R., cases collected in note pp. 150–206; 111 A.L.R. 1304. In this state there is not only a recognition of the majority rule and of the reasoning which supports it (citing cases), but there is also a provision by statute that if the condemnor is put in possession by court order prior to the conclusion of the litigation, the compensation and damages awarded shall draw lawful interest from the date of the order. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1249. (Citing cases and authority.)

"In the Metropolitan Water District case, Metropolitan Water Dist. v. Adams, supra, 16 Cal.2d 676, at page 681, 107 P.2d 618, it is said, quoting from Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. United States, supra, 261 U.S. 299, at page 306, 43 S.Ct. 354, 67 L.Ed. 664: 'It is obvious that the owner's right to just compensation cannot be made to depend upon state statutory provisions. * * * The requirement that 'just compensation' shall be paid is comprehensive and includes all elements and no specific command to include interest is necessary when interest or its equivalent is a part of such compensation. * * *' See also Shoshone Tribe v. United States, 299 U.S. 476, 496, 57 S.Ct. 244, 81 L.Ed. 360, and cases there cited."

In the Heimann case, supra, where the political subdivision had already damaged the property, the court further said (30 Cal.2d at page 759, 185 P.2d at page 605):

"The authorities are by no means uniform in their holdings with regard to the time from which interest should be computed. See 18 Am.Jur., sec. 272, et seq., pp. 912 et seq.; 29 C.J.S. Eminent Domain § 176, pages 1056–1059; 96 A.L.R., supra, pp. 150–206; 111 A.L.R. 1304; 2 Lewis on Eminent Domain, sec. 742, pp. 1319–1326. But if the property owner is to be compensated in the full amount to which he is justly entitled, it seems apparent that as to a taking of property the same rule should obtain as in condemnation cases, and as to a damaging of property, interest should run from the date the damage is inflicted or at least from the commencement of suit. As said in Taylor v. Bay City St. Ry. Co., 101 Mich. 140, 59 N.W. 447, 449: 'Complaint is made of the instruction to the jury to add interest from the date of the commencement of suit. The authorities are not uniform upon this subject. The old rule undoubtedly was that interest could not be allowed upon unliquidated damages, and, in actions of tort, damages are of course unliquidated. The tendency of courts has been, however, to set this rule aside, and adopt the more reasonable one, in cases of injury to property, that the jury must first determine the actual damage sustained, and allow interest upon that sum from its date. (Citing cases.)'"

[3] It would seem clear that whatever is an essential element of "just compensation" cannot be excluded by legislative enactments, and should not be excluded by the interpretation of legislative enactments which do not, on their face, purport to determine when or what interest shall be allowed.

In the case of People v. Superior Court, supra, 145 Cal.App.2d 683, 303 P.2d 628 (petition for re-hearing denied; petition for hearing before the Supreme Court denied), the Department of Public Works prosecuted a condemnation action in which judgment of condemnation was entered on or about February 7, 1955. As to one of the parcels involved, the condemner took an appeal. People ex rel. Dept. of Public Works v. S. & E. Homebuilders, Inc., 142 Cal.App.2d 105, 298 P.2d 53. The judgment was affirmed, and a petition for a rehearing was denied, and a petition for a hearing by the Supreme Court was denied. When the remittitur was received by the Superior Court the condemner deposited the principal sum of the condemnation judgment, but without any interest. There was no taking of the physical possession of the property by the condemner at the time of the entry of judgment.

There was a notice and demand by the owner for payment of interest on the principal sum of the award from and after thirty days after entry of the original judgment under the provisions of Article XX, section 22 of the Constitution. It may be noted here that the real party in interest in that case did not demand interest from the date of entry of the judgment, but from thirty days after the entry of the judgment. The condemner refused to pay the interest upon the judgment. The trial court refused to sign the final judgment, apparently prepared by the condemner, solely upon the ground that the amount deposited was insufficient inasmuch as it did not include interest upon the amount awarded in the judgment. Proceedings were then instituted in this Court by the Department of Public Works for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to sign the final order of condemnation which did not provide for interest.

The arguments of the condemner in that case were summarized by this Court on page 686 of 145 Cal.App.2d, at page 630, of 303 P.2d of the opinion, wherein it is said:

"While petitioner states its reason for the contention that the judgment does not bear interest in several different ways, the gist of its argument is that the judgmen in condemnation is not a personal judgment for the payment of money but only a judgment fixing a price at which the condemner may acquire the property, and therefore fixes no principal sum to which interest can be an incident. Petitioner grounds its contention on sections 1251, 1255a, and 1264.7 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

This court then discussed the effect of each of the sections mentioned, and as to section 1264.7, said in 145 Cal.App.2d at page 687, 303 P.2d at page 630, "Section 1264.7 defines the words judgment and final judgment. It defines judgment as meaning the judgment determining the right to condemn and fixing the amount of compensation to be paid; and the term final judgment as 'such judgment when all possibility of direct attack thereon by way of appeal, motion for a new trial, or motion to vacate the judgment has been exhausted.'" after referring to Southern Pacific Utility Dist. v. Silva, 47 Cal.2d 163, 301 P.2d 841: "It does not follow, however, that the judgment does not have the characteristics of a money judgment to which the right to interest will attach. A judgment in condemnation is a final judgment within the meaning of section 963, Code of Civil Procedure, from which either party may take an appeal. (Citing cases.) It lacks finality, however, in the sense that when an appeal is taken the action remains pending, Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1049, and its effect as a judgment suspended until the appeal is disposed of by the filing of the remittitur from the Appellate Court. When it is affirmed on appeal it is the judgment as entered in the trial court which fixes and determines the rights of the parties.

"The provisions of section 1251, Code of Civil Procedure, do not affect the finality of the judgment. The effect of its provisions are merely to grant a statutory stay of execution, for upon the expiration of the periods of time fixed by the section the defendant may have execution. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1252; citing cases. The obligation on the part of the condemner to pay the amount of the award is fixed by the judgment and 'is not subject to diminution or modification by the lapse of time,' whether that period of time be the 30-day period or the one-year period mentioned in the section, Southern Public Utility Dist. v. Silva, supra, 47 Cal.2d at page [166], 301 P.2d 841.

"When the judgment entered on February 7, 1955, was affirmed and the remittitur of the Appellate Court filed, that judgment finally determined the rights of the parties to the subject action. It was by the provisions of that judgment that petitioner attained the right to take the property in question, and it was by that judgment that the Bank had the right to receive its compensation for the property taken. It is true that the defendant's right to receive its fruits from the judgment were subject to be defeated by the occurrence of a condition subsequent—that is, the exercise by the plaintiff of its right to abandon the proceeding under the provisions of section 1255a. But when the time within which that privilege might be exercised elapsed, or the right to exercise the privilege was waived by the plaintiff's asserting the rights granted it by the judgment, the defendant's right became absolute and sprang not from the failure of the plaintiff to exercise its privilege but from the judgment. In other words, the judgment from its inception gave the defendant the right to receive the amount awarded to it and the plaintiff in the action the right to take the property, and to this judgment the right to receive interest and the obligation to pay interest attached as it would attach to any other money judgment; and it was the obligation of this judgment—that is, the obligation to pay principal plus interest—that the plaintiff, petitioner here, was given the right to avoid and to assume a new and different obligation, by section 1255a of the Code of Civil Procedure. When petitioner waived the right or privilege granted to it by section 1255a, that section ceased to have any effect and the situation then was no different than if the right or privilege had never existed." (Emphasis added.)

It was appropriately pointed out in Southern Public Utility Dist. v. Silva, supra, 47 Cal.2d at pages 165–166, 301 P.2d at page 842:

"Plaintiff's main argument is that sections 1251 and 1255a are to be read together, with the result, it claims, that extension of the time within which to pay (by filing the affidavit sanctioned by § 1251) extends the time within which to abandon (by filing the affidavit prescribed by § 1255a).

"There is no such interlacing of the provisions of these two sections. They deal with different subjects (payment and abandonment, respectively) and have different purposes and objectives. Section 1251 has been in the code ever since 1872 Originally, it prescribed 30 days after final judgment as the period of time within which the condemnor must pay the sum of money assessed, without any provision for extension of that period. Commencing in 1911 (Stats.1911, ch. 80, p. 92) the section has been amended from time to time to provide, as it now does, that this 30-day period may be extended to enable the raising of money by issuing bonds if the state or a public corporation is the condemnor."

Even though People v. Superior Court, supra, did not actually hold or state that interest was due and owing from the date of entry of judgment (for the reason that the real party in interest did not ask for it from such date) it is clear and unquestioned that the decision does provide that interest shall be payable upon the award during the entire time of the delay in making payment, to and including the time consumed in taking an appeal.

The Department of Public Works argued extensively in their petition for a hearing before the Supreme Court that "this new concept represents a perilous extension of liability of public bodies, since if the filing of judgment is a damaging or taking because of an interference with the property owner's disposal power, then, the same reasoning should logically apply to every step in the condemnation proceeding." The Supreme Court apparently rejected any such argument.

In the present case the plaintiff asserted, " 'the rights granted it by the judgment,' the right to empower itself to take title by the payment of the award, and at that time, section 1255a 'ceased to have any effect and the situation then was no different than if the right or privilege had never existed.' The defendants here had a right to receive the payment of the judgment 'from its inception,' and it is to that 'judgment' that 'the right to receive interest and the obligation to pay interest attached as it would attach to any other money judgment.' "

Further in People v. Superior Court, supra, this Court set forth the background of the basis for interest on judgments, and said in 145 Cal.App.2d at page 690, 303 P.2d at page 632: "Under the Practice Act and prior to the adoption of the codes, interest was allowed upon judgments although not allowed at common law. From 1874 until the adoption, through the initiative, of the Usury Act, Deering's General Laws, Act 3757, section 1290 of the Civil Code provided for the payment of interest on judgments at the rate of 7 per cent per annum. This section was repealed by the Usury Act, and the first section of that act provides that 'The rate of interest upon the loan or forbearance of any money * * * or judgments * * * shall be seven dollars upon the one hundred dollars for one year' but that the parties may contract for a rate not to exceed 12 per cent per annum. In 1934 section 22 of article XX was adopted. The effect of this section was not to repeal the Usury Act except insofar as that act was in conflict with the provisions of section 22. (Citing cases.) The first paragraph of this section deals with the same subject-matter as does section 1 of the Usury Act, and its only effect upon section 1 was to reduce the rate of interest that may be fixed by contract from 12 to 10 per cent. Otherwise the provisions of section 1 of the act and the first paragraph of the constitutional provision are wholly consistent (citing case.) The Bank's right to interest upon the judgment, therefore, is granted not only by the provisions of the Constitution but by those of the Usury Act."

"Petitioner was not entitled to take the defendant's property except upon the payment of just compensation.

"The judgment fixed the just compensation to which the Bank was entitled as of the time of the entry of judgment, and the amount awarded by it did not include compensation for any further damage that might be sustained. While the entry of the judgment did not, in and of itself, operate to vest title in petitioner or give it the right to immediate entry, it effectually took from the Bank many elements which gave value to the land. After the entry of the judgment the Bank could not rent or sell the land except subject to the right of petitioner to take it at will; it could not improve it without in effect dedicating the improvement made to petitioner. The result is that payment being delayed, the bank had neither use of the money to which it was entitled nor full use of the property which petitioner, under the judgment, had the right to take. To hold that petitioner would have the right, by an appeal, to delay the payment of the price fixed for the land and then exercise its right to take without compensating the bank for the damage suffered by it through the delay, would be to deprive the Bank of the right granted to it by article I, section 14 of the state Constitution. To paraphrase the language of Mr. Justice Frankfurter in United States v. Dickinson, 331 U.S. 745, 67 S.Ct. 1382, 91 L.Ed. 1789, 1794, section 14 of article I of our state Constitution, as well as the Fifth Amendment to the federal Constitution, express a principle of fairness and not a technical rule of procedure; yet if we support petitioner's contention here we deprive the Bank of just compensation by slavish adherence to technical rules of procedure."

True it is that in the present case, as in People v. Superior Court, supra, the owner retained the possession of his land following the entry of the judgment, but possession, as heretofore pointed out, is only one of the elements of value in ownership. The owners here suffered a loss for which there was no "just compensation." The right to sell or rent the property was practically cut off. In the present case the owners apparently received no rents, their possession was precarious, to say the least, liable as it was to be terminated at any moment. They could not safely make any improvements or repairs or alterations. Certainly there was no evidence to demonstrate that the value of the legal right to possession was equivalent to interest on the award, and we should not make any such assumption. The loss of some of the rights of full ownership (as above mentioned) are not merely incidental rights, but in our opinion constitute the loss of valuable rights and constitute a distinct damage. If payment therefor is not made then the property owner has not received "just compensation."

The property owner was not placed in the position in which he found himself by any act of his own, that is, he was not a wrongdoer, nor was he under any contract relating to possession with a political subdivision, nor was he responsible for any delay in the payment of the judgment. He was simply in possession at the whim of the representatives of the condemner. In this case the record would seem to disclose that the condemner accepted the award and indicated no desire to cogitate on whether to abandon or to go ahead or to appeal. The appellant simply delayed in making the payments.

Usually interest is allowed on judgments upon the theory, among others, that the successful litigant acquires an immediate right or claim to the award as soon as the judgment is entered. Some states hold that interest commences from the date of filing the report of the award (Minnesota —Warren v. First Div. St. Paul & Pacific R. R. Co., 21 Minn. 424); or from the date of trial (Ohio—Miami Conservancy Dist. v. Bowers, 100 Ohio St. 317, 125 N.E. 876); or from the date of the issuance of the summons (Brown v. United States, 263 U.S. 78, 44 S.Ct. 92, 68 L.Ed. 171; Idaho Code Ann., §§ 13–712), and in some instances, at the time condemnation proceedings are first ordered. Nichols, Eminent Domain, p. 105.

It has been stated, with reference to condemnation awards, that the "ideal method would be to award the damages at the same moment that the taking was made, but the necessity of a judicial ascertainment of the amount of damages makes this impossible." Nichols, Law of Eminent Domain, p. 108, § 863. Or as said in Parks v. Boston, 15 Pick., Mass., 198, at page 208:

"The true rule would be as in the case of other purchases, that the price is due and ought to be paid, at the moment the purchase is made, when credit is not specially agreed on. And if a pie-powder court could be called on the instant and on the spot, the true rule of justice for the public would be, to pay the compensation with one hand, whilst they apply the axe with the other; and this rule is departed from only because some time is necessary, by the forms of law, to conduct the inquiry; and this delay must be compensated by interest."

When the amount of the award was determined, and the judgment entered and not paid, realism dictates that the blight of that judgment caused the owner damage for which he was not otherwise compensated. The amount was determined and fixed in the judgment, and practicality dictates that the money must, in effect, be regarded as due to him as of the date of the entry of that judgment, even though under our system of condemnation the condemner may think over whether it wants to abandon, or whether it wants to appeal or take some other course, and the judgment may not become final (in the sense that it is defined in section 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure) for some time.

Under the circumstances of the instant case, we are of the opinion that it was neither unfair nor improper to award interest to the owner for the period of delay in paying the amounts of the various awards.

Furthermore, although it is not a reason for the determination at which we have arrived in this case, to so hold may have the wholesome effect of stimulating the condemner to prompt action in condemnation actions, and doing away with the anomalous situation of engrafting a suit for interest onto many condemnation actions.

The order of the trial court awarding interest is affirmed.

Application of John SOLARI, for an Order Directing Arbitration.

John SOLARI, Petitioner and Respondent,

v.

Giacomo ONETO, Administrator of the Estate of Andrea Daniele Oneto, Deceased, Respondent and Appellant.

Civ. 9458.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 15, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 8, 1959.

Proceeding in the matter of the application of surviving partner for an order directing arbitration to determine inventory value of assets of partnership in accordance with partnership agreement for purpose of the purchase by surviving partner of interest of deceased partner. The Superior Court, Tuolumne County, Ross A. Carkeet, J., entered judgment affirming award of arbitrator, and administrator of deceased partner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that where books of partnership were not adequate to enable arbitrator to determine inventory value of assets of partnership, it was proper for arbitator to hear and consider other evidence, and that award was sufficiently definite.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Partnership ⇐312

Where partnership agreement provided that surviving partner should have exclusive right to purchase deceased partner's interest for "inventory value," and that in event of any dispute as to "inventory value," matter of dispute should be referred to arbitration as prescribed and set forth in Code of Civil Procedure, and that decision of arbitrator should be conclusive, surviving partner elected to purchase interest of deceased partner, and dispute arose as to "inventory value," arbitrator was required to afford the parties a hearing and opportunity to offer evidence, and arbitrator was then to adjudge inventory value on consideration of such evidence, as well as on consideration of the arbitrator's own opinion. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280–1293.

2. Partnership ⇐312

Where partnership agreement provided that surviving partner should have exclusive right to purchase deceased partner's interest for "inventory value," and that in event of any dispute as to "inventory value," matter of dispute should be referred to arbitration as prescribed and set forth in Code of Civil Procedure, and that decision of arbitrator should be conclusive, and surviving partner elected to purchase deceased partner's interest, and dispute arose as to "inventory value," arbitrator was required to hold such hearings as were necessary in order to reach a decision. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280–1293.

3. Partnership ⇐312

Fact that complete books and records of business of partnership were not kept did not defeat operation of clause in partnership agreement that in event of any dispute as to "inventory value" when surviving partner elects to purchase interest of deceased partner, matter of such dispute shall be referred to arbitration. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280–1293.

4. Partnership ⇐312

Fact that partnership agreement specifically mentioned "arbitration as prescribed in the Code of Civil Procedure" in the event of any dispute as to "inventory value" when surviving partner elects to purchase deceased partner's interest, indicated clearly that parties intended that dispute should be settled by arbitration. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280–1293.

5. Contracts ⇐284(1)

Statutes enacted by the Legislature to set up a comprehensive all-inclusive statutory scheme applicable to all written agreements to arbitrate were designed to encourage resort to arbitration and abolish many of the doctrines applicable to a common-law arbitration. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280–1293.

6. Contracts ⇐284(1)

It should be the policy of the law to encourage settlement of business disputes by arbitration, and agreements, which provide for arbitration, should be given a liberal construction in furtherance of such policy. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280–1293.

7. Partnership ⇐312

Where books of partnership were not adequate to enable arbitrator to determine inventory value when surviving partner elected to purchase interest of deceased partner, it was proper for arbitrator to hear and consider other evidence. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280–1293.

8. Arbitration and Award ⇐71

When award of arbitrator is set aside, entire matter is reopened and issues are undetermined, and there should be a retrial of the issues on rehearing with an opportunity of parties to be heard. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280–1293.

9. Arbitration and Award ⇐73

Where award of arbitrator was vacated because arbitrator made an error in his computation, and all that was required of arbitrator on resubmission to arbitrator by court was a mechanical recomputation, and parties had had opportunity to present all of their evidence at original hearing, any error on part of arbitrator in not providing a rehearing was not prejudicial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280–1293.

10. Partnership ⇐312

Where award of arbitrator, in fixing value of partnership property to determine price surviving partner was to pay for deceased partner's share, determined value of assets of partnership, and judgment related assets as land, improvements, stock in trade, business, fixtures, equipment and furniture, on-sale and off-sale general liquor licenses of the business, the award was sufficiently definite. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1280–1293.

Huberty & Huberty, San Andreas, for appellant.

William C. Coffill, Sonora, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

This is an appeal by Giacomo Oneto, as Administrator of the Estate of Andrea Daniele Oneto, deceased, from a judgment affirming the award of an arbitrator which determined the value of a partnership in which the deceased had a one-half interest.

In 1952, John Solari and the deceased Andrea Oneto formed a partnership which operated a tavern known as "Steve's Place." The articles of copartnership provided, among other things:

1. That proper books of account would be kept.

2. That an account of the stock, equipment, and other personal property of the business and of book debts would be taken and a statement of the affairs would be made yearly; and that the sums drawn by the partners would be charged to their share of the profits. It was also provided that each partner would sign duplicates of the statement of affairs, one copy of which would be written in the partnership books; that the accounts, as reflected in the statement of affairs, would not be reopened unless some manifest error would be found within six months; and that such statement would be conclusive evidence between the partners.

3. That the partnership would be dissolved in case of the death of a partner.

4. That in the event of the death of any partner, the surviving partner would have the exclusive right to purchase and buy out the deceased partner's interest for the "inventory value" at the time of the deceased partner's death, within ninety days of the date of the death. "Inventory value" was defined to mean the book value of the partnership, plus or minus a reasonable amount or value allowing for inflation or deflation. It was further provided that in the event of any dispute as to "inventory value" the matter of such dispute would be referred to arbitration as prescribed and set forth in the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the decision of the arbitrators would be conclusive. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280–1293.

Following the death of Andrea Daniele Oneto, appellant Giacomo Oneto qualified as administrator of Andrea's estate. Solari had the books examined, determined that his deceased partner's interest in the business was worth $14,968.43, and then made an offer to the administrator to purchase the decedent's interest for that sum. The offer was refused, and after some negotiations Solari filed an application with the superior court for an order referring the dispute to arbitration. The application was opposed on the ground that there was no controversy between the parties which was the subject of arbitration; the answer denied that there was a refusal to perform under the terms of the agreement for arbitration, and also denied that any proper partnership books or statement of affairs existed which would provide a basis for establishing the book value as provided in the partnership agreement. The answer further stated that the agreement was vague as to the meaning of the term "inventory value," unless it was interpreted as fair market value, and it was alleged that the fair market value was $25,000. It was further stated that the only controversy was the proper interpretation of the articles of partnership which it was alleged was not the subject of arbitration.

The trial court, after a summary hearing, found that the "inventory value" of the partnership assets was a matter for arbitration. The court was of the opinion that more than a mere appraisal was involved since there would have to be a determination of the completeness of the partnership books of account. The court ordered arbitration and appointed an arbitrator who was instructed to settle by arbitration the "inventory value" of the assets, the book value plus or minus a reasonable amount for inflation, and that hearings be held in the matter.

The arbitrator had an impartial examination of the accounts made by a certified public accountant, held a hearing at which each of the parties and their respective counsel participated, received testimony, and made an award that the value of the assets and property of the partnership as of the date of death of the deceased partner was $18,167.63. Solari then sought an order affirming the award. The administrator sought an order vacating the award because of alleged error and evident miscalculation on the part of the arbitrator. The arbitrator filed an affidavit in which he asserted that through an error on his part the amount found as the value of the partnership assets was one-half of the value found, and actually represented only the deceased partner's interest. The award was vacated and the matter resubmitted to the arbitrator, who was directed to set a time and place of hearing at which he should take such testimony, under oath, as appeared reasonably necessary to carry out the purpose of the order. The concluding paragraph of the order directed the arbitrator, after conducting such hearing as he deemed necessary, to prepare and submit his award to the court.

Thereafter, without conducting any further hearing, the arbitrator filed his Award on Rehearing as follows: "The book value of all of the assets and property of the partnership known as "Steve's Place," the partners of which consisting of John Solari and Andrea Daniele Oneto, as of the date of death of the said Andrea Oneto on January 21, 1957, be, and the same is hereby fixed and settled at the sum of Thirty-six Thousand Three Hundred Thirty-five and 45/100 ($36,335.45) Dollars, which sum includes plus or minus for inflation or deflation."

Petitioner John Solari made a motion to confirm the award on rehearing, and after a hearing the court made its order confirming the award and allowing the costs and expenses of said arbitration. The administrator's motion for a new trial was denied and this appeal followed.

Appellant's first contention is that "There was no valid operative agreement to arbitrate a controversy."

The language of the partnership agreement, as it relates specifically to the matter of arbitration, is as follows: "In the event of any dispute as to such value 'Inventory Value', the matter of such dispute shall be referred to arbitration as prescribed and set forth in the Code of Civil Procedure of California, and the decision of such arbitrators is conclusive."

Appellant contends that this was a mere agreement to fix the value of the partnership property and relies heavily on Bewick v. Mecham, 26 Cal.2d 92, 156 P.2d 757, 157 A.L.R. 1277. In that case a provision in a lease gave the lessee the option to purchase the land upon the expiration of the lease, at a price and terms then to be agreed upon between the parties, and if not agreed upon then to be fixed by arbitration. Each of the parties to select one arbitrator and the two selecting a third, which said arbitrators should fix such purchase price and the terms under which the purchase might be made. Ultimately, the defendant therein refused to appoint an arbitrator, and on such refusal the plaintiff therein brought an action to have the court fix the purchase price and to decree specific performance of the contract. That defendant argued that the statutory remedies provided in the arbitration section of the Code of Civil Procedure had not been followed, and specifically, he pointed out that section 1283 of the Code of Civil Procedure allows the court to appoint an arbitrator if one party has failed to make an appointment upon demand of the other. The trial court held that this was not an agreement for arbitration but instead was an agreement for an appraisal, and, therefore, the statutory procedure did not apply.

In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court said at page 97 of 26 Cal.2d, at page 760 of 156 P.2d:

> "* * * It was not contemplated by the option agreement in the present case that the arbitrators should decide any controversy arising out of the option agreement or the refusal of the parties to perform. Their sole task was to determine the value of the land and to fix the purchase price accordingly and the installments for the payment of the credited part of the price. 'A reference to a third person to fix by his judgment the price, quantity, or quality of material, to make an appraisement of property and the like, especially when such reference is one of the stipulations of a contract founded on other and good considerations, differs in many respects from an ordinary submission to arbitration.' Palmer v. Clark, 106 Mass. 373, 389; see, also, Luedinghaus Lumber Co. v. Luedinghaus, 9 Cir., 299 F. 111, 113. There is nothing in the agreement to indicate that the arbitrators were to take evidence in a formal proceeding as a basis for their decision rather than their own opinion and judgment. * * *"

Appellant contends that the court erred in submitting the controversy to arbitration. Appellant states: "* * * The parties had not, by their agreement, directed that the arbitrator was to come in and test their books for adequacy. Their agreement contemplated that they would keep adequate and complete records. All that the arbitrator was to do was to fix the value revealed by these records as such was affected by the factors of inflation or deflation. The application of these factors of inflation or deflation do not present anything other than problems in valuation that any competent appraiser could take care of. Thus, in order to find some added task which might qualify this agreement for arbitration, the Court had to assume powers and duties for the arbitrator which had not been granted to him by the parties."

[1, 2] We do not regard the Bewick case as requiring a holding that the court erred in submitting the matter to arbitration. For the Bewick case also stated at page 97 of 26 Cal.2d, at page 760 of 156 P.2d:

"* * * 'Submissions to determine values are of two kinds: First, where the valuers are to examine the property and fix the value in accordance with their own opinion or judgment; second, where they are to afford the parties a hearing and an opportunity to offer evidence, and are to adjudge the value upon a consideration of the evidence, as well as their own opinion. In cases of the first class, it is usually held that the agreement is not properly a submission to arbitration, and is not subject to the rules which govern arbitrators * * *.'"

We believe that the court properly construed the agreement in the instant case as falling within the second class. We believe also that when the agreement provided that "In the event of any dispute as to such value 'Inventory Value', the matter of such dispute shall be referred to arbitration," it meant exactly what it said and implied, that the arbitrator or arbitrators should hold such hearings as were necessary in order to reach a decision.

For as stated by this court in Downer Corporation v. Union Paving Co., 146 Cal. App.2d 708, at page 711, 304 P.2d 756, at page 758:

"It should be noted that it is now well established '* * * by the adoption of the 1927 statute, the Legislature intended to adopt a comprehensive all-inclusive statutory scheme applicable to all written agreements to arbitrate, and that in such cases the doctrines applicable to a common law arbitration were abolished.' Crofoot v. Blair Holdings Corp., 119 Cal.App.2d 156, 260 P.2d 156, 169. This same question was discussed in 38 Cal.L. Rev. 799. The author notes that while the common law may be applicable to oral contracts, he suggests that it is not applicable to agreements in writing. The writer further states that no special language is required but that the arbitration clause should provide that parties agree to accept the award as final and binding. 'It is reasonable that parties who voluntarily agree in writing to arbitrate should be bound by the statute and should not as an afterthought be permitted to escape from their contract through the portals of the common law.' (38 Cal.L.Rev., p. 809.) Thus, in Snyder v. Superior Court, 24 Cal.App.2d 263, 74 P.2d 782, it was agreed that in the event of a dispute between the parties, such dispute would be submitted to a named arbitrator 'for determination.' This court there held that to submit a dispute for determination is a tacit agreement to abide by that agreement. For as was there noted, there would be no reason to submit the dispute to an arbitrator other than for determination. Hence it necessarily follows that while the paragraph in question could probably have been drafted with more precision, there can be little question but that as the trial court found, the words 'any matter arising therefrom' relate back to the word 'Agreement,' and that thereby the arbitrators were authorized to decide any question concerning the joint venture agreements or arising therefrom, as well as the interpretation of the agreements; and that by the words, 'the decision of any two arbitrators shall be binding upon both parties,' the parties agreed to accept the award as final and binding on them. In this regard the court specifically found that in using the quoted phrases, it was the intent of the parties that any dispute arising under the agreements should be determined by arbitration, and that all of the matters and disputes which were submitted to and determined by the board of arbitrators arose out of said agreements and the performance thereof. * * *"

Appellant also contends that the arbitration clause could only be invoked if proper books of account and statement of affairs had been kept. It is alleged, and apparently not denied, that this was not done.

The court in its Order of Submission to Arbitrator stated that:

"The said arbitrator shall settle by arbitration the book value of the properties of the partnership the subject matter of said agreement as of the date of death of Andrea Daniele Oneto on January 21, 1957, as determined by the books of said partnership, if any there be, 'plus or minus a reasonable amount or value allowing for inflation or deflation' as set forth in paragraph 12 of said Partnership Agreement.

* * * * * *

"The said arbitrator shall set a time and place of hearing convenient to himself and the parties and shall subpoena such witnesses and take such testimony under oath as appears reasonably necessary to him in order to carry out the purposes of this Order and the intention of the parties under said agreement * * *"

[3, 4] It is evident that complete books and records of the business of the partnership were not kept, but we do not believe that this fact would defeat the operation of the clause in the partnership agreement that "In the event of any dispute as to such value 'Inventory value', the matter of such dispute shall be referred to arbitration." We think that there is ample support for the trial court's finding that the partnership agreement was "a valid written agreement to settle a disputed matter by arbitration, and that the controversy referred to in petitioner's application has arisen and does now exist as to the computation or determination of value referred to and defined as 'inventory value' in said 'Articles of Copartnership.'" We believe that the fact that the agreement specifically mentioned "arbitration as prescribed in the Code of Civil Procedure" indicates clearly that the parties intended that the dispute should be settled by arbitration.

[5, 6] The 1927 statute (Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280–1293) was enacted by the Legislature to set up a comprehensive all-inclusive statutory scheme applicable to all written agreements to arbitrate. It was designed to encourage resort to arbitration and abolished many of the doctrines applicable to a common-law arbitration. It should be the policy of the law to encourage the settlement of business disputes by arbitration, and agreements which provide for arbitration should be given a liberal construction in furtherance of such policy.

Appellant contends also that the arbitrator exceeded his powers because he fixed the value according to such partnership records as he could find, plus oral and documentary evidence. We do not agree. The arbitrator in his award stated that "your Arbitrator having examined and considered all of the evidence submitted, both oral and documentary, the records of said partnership and personal examination of the premises, and having further considered the matter of inflation or deflation, and being fully satisfied, now renders herewith in accordance with said Order of Submission, his award."

[7] Appellant contends that the arbitrator was limited to the value as set forth on the books of the partnership; but where, as in the instant case, the books were not adequate to enable the arbitrator to determine the value, it was proper for him to hear and consider other evidence. For it was the duty of the arbitrator to settle by arbitration the dispute over the "inventory value" of the property of the partnership, and we are satisfied that it was the intention of the parties to the copartnership agreement that any such dispute should be settled by arbitration.

[8, 9] Appellant contends further that the arbitrator erred in determining the value of the partnership after the vacation of the original award and resubmission by the court because he failed to hold a hearing after resubmission. He relies on the rule that when an award is set aside the entire matter is reopened and the issues undetermined (Film Technicians of Motion Picture Industry, Local 683 v. Color Corporation of America, 141 Cal.App.2d 553, 297 P.2d 86), and that a rehearing is a retrial of the issues, and it presumes notice and an opportunity to be heard. Yee v. State Board of Equalization, 16 Cal.App.2d 417, 60 P.2d 322. The rule stated is correct, but in the instant case the award was vacated because the arbitrator made an error in his computations. All that was required was a mechanical recomputation. Any error in not providing a rehearing could hardly have been prejudicial to the appellant since he had an opportunity to present apparently all the evidence he had at the first hearing. Furthermore, appellant does not assert that he was prejudiced by the failure of the arbitrator to hold a second hearing.

[10] Appellant's final contention is that the award is vague because it did not describe the partnership assets. The award determined the value of the assets of the partnership. The judgment related these as land, improvements, stock in trade, business, fixtures, equipment, furniture and furnishings, on-sale and off-sale general liquor licenses of the business and property known as "Steve's Place." It must be borne in mind that the arbitrator was to value the property to determine the price the surviving partner was to pay for the deceased partner's share. While the award might have been more detailed, we believe it was sufficiently definite.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Herman KLEIN, Defendant and Appellant (two cases).

Cr. 2817, 2819.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 24, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of perjury and second degree burglary. The Superior Court, Placer County, Leland J. Propp, J., entered judgment, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that evidence sustained burglary conviction, and that, in burglary prosecution, jury was entitled to give credence to testimony of defendant's employee that he introduced alleged accomplices of defendant to defendant for purpose of planning burglary, which defendant wanted perpetrated in order to put out of business proprietor of shop, which was to be burglarized, because of ill feeling between defendant and proprietor of the shop, incredible as such testimony might appear, and jury was entitled to disregard defendant's conflicting version as to reason for his meeting with alleged accomplices.

Judgment in each case affirmed.

1. Burglary ⇐45

In burglary prosecution, jury was entitled to give credence to testimony of defendant's employee that he introduced alleged accomplices of defendant to defendant for purpose of planning burglary, which defendant wanted perpetrated in order to put out of business proprietor of shop, which was to be burglarized, because of ill feeling between defendant and proprietor of the shop, incredible as such testimony might appear, and jury was entitled to disregard defendant's conflicting versions as to reason for his meeting with alleged accomplices.

2. Burglary ⇐41(1)

Evidence sustained second degree burglary conviction.

James B. Thompson, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

These are appeals from, (1) a judgment of conviction of perjury entered by the trial court sitting without a jury, and (2) from a judgment entered upon a jury's verdict which found appellant guilty of burglary of the second degree. Since the perjury for which appellant was indicted occurred at a former trial on the charge of burglary of which he stands convicted, both appeals will be disposed of by this one opinion.

Upon appellant's request for counsel this court appointed James B. Thompson, Esq., an attorney at law, to represent appellant on both appeals. Mr. Thompson has reported that he finds no merit in either. Nevertheless, we have made an independent review of the records.

It appears that in each case appellant was represented by counsel in the court below and was, at all proper times, advised of his constitutional rights.

At the trial on the charge of burglary appellant took the stand and admitted that at a former trial he not only had testified falsely as to his whereabouts on the night of the burglary, but had induced three of his friends to falsely corroborate his alibi. Subsequent to that trial an indictment charging appellant with perjury was returned by the grand jury. Thereto appellant first entered a plea of not guilty, but, upon the request of appellant and his counsel later, he was permitted to withdrawn that plea and he thereupon pleaded guilty.

There is absolutely no ground presented by the record for an appeal from the judgment of conviction of perjury.

[1, 2] With reference to the burglary charge of which appellant was convicted, it appears that on the night of Saturday, January 5, 1957, a body and fender shop, which adjoined appellant's auto wrecking establishment, was burglarized by a Mr. Howse and a Mr. McDonald who implicated appellant as their accomplice. Mr. Howse and Mr. McDonald had, just before the burglary, been introduced to appellant by the latter's employee, Mr. Mays, who testified that he brought the parties together for the purpose of planning the burglary which appellant wanted perpetrated in order to put the body and fender shop out of business as there was ill feeling between him and the proprietor thereof. Incredible as this may appear, the jury were entitled to give credence to that testimony and disregard appellant's conflicting version as to the reason for his meeting with Mr. Howse and Mr. McDonald. Further, while in jail appellant wrote some notes from which an inference of guilt might be drawn. The notes were introduced in evidence but need not be quoted herein. Also the jury had before it appellant's admission of perjury committed by him on his first trial on the burglary charge and his admitted subornation of perjury. Consequently, the verdict does not lack evidentiary support. A review of the record establishes that there were no errors in the admission or rejection of testimony and that the jury was fully and fairly instructed. Therefore, there is no merit in the appeal from the judgment entered upon the jury's verdict.

The judgment in each case is affirmed.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon a verdict for the defendant and against the plaintiffs in an action for damages resulting from the death of Aubrey Jones, caused by injuries sustained by him arising out of an automobile collision.

Appellant is the widow of Aubrey Jones and filed the action against the defendant in her individual capacity and as guardian ad litem for her minor daughter. The defendant filed an answer and thereafter her motion to consolidate this cause with the trial of Arthur Frank, the driver of the vehicle in which the deceased was riding at the time of the accident, was granted.

A résumé of the facts is as follows: On or about April 6, 1955, a collision occurred between the Frank automobile and that of the defendant at or near the intersection of Sepulveda Boulevard and Roxford Street in Los Angeles, and as a result of the injuries sustained in such accident Aubrey Jones died.

Roxford Street runs generally east and west and intersects and terminates at Sepulveda Boulevard which runs generally north and south. The evidence disclosed that Jones was riding with Frank, who was operating his own vehicle, a 1948 Chrysler convertible in a southerly direction on Sepulveda Boulevard as they were returning to Los Angeles from a trip into the Lancaster area. The defendant had been operating her vehicle, a 1949 Mercury sedan, in a westerly direction on Roxford Street, before turning left onto Sepulveda Boulevard. She then proceeded in substantially the same direction as the Frank car was traveling. After traveling some distance beyond the intersection, the defendant's car was struck from the rear by the Frank car, with the result that both automobiles left the highway.

Sepulveda Boulevard, at the time and place of the accident, consisted of three lanes. There was a stop sign on Roxford Street near the intersection in question. Traffic was light, visibility was good and the area was substantially open country.

There was a sharp conflict in the evidence as to whether the impact occurred in the center lane or the westerly lane of Sepulveda Boulevard.

Frank, the driver of the car in which Jones, the deceased, was riding, testified at the trial that he and Jones had met about 10:30 o'clock in the morning of the day of the accident at the Jones residence in Rivera, and that such meeting was not by prearrangement. The two apparently decided to go hunting in the Lancaster area. Jones had a couple of calls to make to repair some refrigerator equipment some place along the way between the home of Jones and the place where the two intended to hunt. Jones made the call or calls and performed whatever work was to be done. No part of the compensation from such work or jobs, if any, was paid to Frank, nor was there any agreement to pay Frank any compensation from said work. In Frank's deposition the following questions were asked and answers were made:

"Q. And what were you doing up there? A. Oh, business and pleasure trip.

"Q. Does that describe the trip, sir? A. I guess so.

He testified further that the business of repairing the refrigerator equipment was entirely that of Jones and not his. Frank was vague and extremely indefinite as to where any such work was done, or where any stop or stops were made. Likewise he was vague and indefinite as to what route was followed to the Lancaster area on the day in question. He did not recall whether Jones had directed the route that they had taken from the Jones home to the first stop of the day where Jones was to do some work.

In his deposition the question was put: "Q. And had you planned on some particular place that you were going to on that particular day?" and he answered, "Just to make a couple of calls with him, and possibly go up around Lancaster."

Frank also testified that he was not familiar with the area where Jones was going to make the call or calls and that Jones had assisted him as far as directions were concerned, that Jones knew where he was going and that as far as the first call was concerned Jones did the directing as to how to get there.

There was no sharing of any expenses between Jones and Frank, nor was there any reimbursement or payment of any kind to Frank by Jones.

After hunting in the Lancaster area the men started to return to Los Angeles. Frank drove the automobile all of the time and Jones did not give any directions whatsoever as to the route to be followed on the return trip. A stop was made on the return trip and gasoline was purchased and Frank paid the charges therefor.

Frank apparently had nothing to do with the refrigerator equipment repairs and received no money therefor, nor did he have any business or other dealings with any of the people who had refrigerator equipment to be repaired.

The appellant contends that the court committed prejudicial error (1) by giving instructions on contributory negligence; (2) by giving instructions on joint venture and imputed negligence, and (3) by giving BAJI No. 131 (the mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not support an inference that some party, or any party, to this action was negligent).

Appellant insists that in the present case the defendant did not plead, as an affirmative defense, the contributory negligence of the deceased. The judge instructed the jury as to what constitutes contributory negligence, and the law with reference to the burden of establishing such contributory negligence.

The court also instructed that if contributory negligence existed, it would have consisted of negligence on the part of Frank, the driver of the car in which the deceased was riding, and then went on to state, "and if you further find that the said Arthur Frank and the deceased were engaged in a joint venture, the contributory negligence of Arthur Frank would be imputed to the deceased. If you further find that this negligence contributed as a proximate cause to his death, then the heirs of the deceased may not recover from other person for that death."

The court also gave BAJI Instruction No. 210–E, the last paragraph of which reads as follows: "To thus impute the negligence, if any, of the driver to the deceased, who was riding in the vehicle at the time of the accident, you must find from the evidence either that the said deceased and the driver were then in joint or common possession and control of the automobile, with the two having equal rights to be heard in its control and management, or that the driver was then acting as the agent of the deceased and within the scope of his employment." (Emphasis added.) The record does not even disclose a claim by the defendant that Frank was the agent of Jones and that he was driving the car as a part of his employment by Jones, let alone any evidence to that effect.

[1, 2] The matter of whether the court should have instructed the jury upon the matter of joint adventure creates a difficult problem. Normally it is a matter for the jury to decide whether a joint adventure existed. In any event, there must be some evidence which, if true, would establish a joint adventure under the law before the court can give an instruction thereon.

For the purposes of this case, it must be admitted that Frank had the actual control of his automobile—he was the driver of the same and he was in charge of it mechanically. There is no contention that the relationship of master and servant, or principal and agent, or employer and employee existed between the two men, nor was there any family relationship between them. There was no mutual financial interest, and a reading of the record discloses no evidence of any fact which might show, or tend to show, that Frank exercised, or attempted to exercise any control over Jones in what he was doing in the discharge of his work of repairing refrigerator equipment, or otherwise, and there is nothing to show that Frank had the power to exercise any control over Jones in anything Jones did or was to do. In short, Frank had no voice in any matter of Jones'. They were not partners and there was no relationship between them of any kindred identity.

[3] In the case of Bryant v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 737, at pages 739–741, 164 P. 385, at page 386, the court said:

"This court has but recently reiterated the well-settled rule that a guest or passenger in a vehicle driven or operated by another is not ordinarily bound by the negligence of the driver or operator. Parmenter v. McDougall, 172 Cal. 306, 156 P. 460. In that case the negligence of a person operating a motorcycle was held not to be imputed as matter of law to his brother, who was riding as his guest on the rear seat. * * * The family relation, or the business association, therefore, does not of itself identify the plaintiff with the driver so as to impute to him the latter's alleged contributory negligence.

"The rule is otherwise, however, if the occupant of the machine exercised control over the driver thereof, or, in the eyes of the law, may be said to possess such power of control. Illustrations of the application of this doctrine are found in cases where the parties are engaged in a common or joint enterprise. Ruling Case Law, after referring to the different rules as to whether negligence may be imputed to a guest or passenger in an automobile, says: 'There seems to be no difference of opinion as to the rule that, when two persons are engaged in a joint enterprise in the use of an automobile, the contributory negligence of one will bar a recovery by either, if it is in a matter within the scope of the joint undertaking.' Volume 2, p. 1208, § 43. But in order that there be such a joint undertaking it is not sufficient merely that the passenger or occupant of the machine indicate to the driver or chauffeur the route he may wish to travel, or the places to which he wishes to go, even though in this respect there exists between them a common enterprise of riding together. The circumstances must be such as to show that the occupant and the driver together had such control and direction over the automobile as to be practically in the joint or common possession of it. 'Parties cannot be said to be engaged in a joint enterprise, within the meaning of the law of negligence, unless there be a community of interest in the objects or purposes of the undertaking, and an equal right to direct and govern the movements and conduct of each other with respect thereto. Each must have some voice and right to be heard in its control and management.' (Citing cases.)" (Emphasis added.)

"The rule is well established that the contributory negligence of the driver of a vehicle is not ordinarily imputable to his passenger or guest (citing cases). But an exception to this rule is made in those cases where the parties are engaged in a common or joint enterprise, and in such cases it is held that the contributory negligence of one will bar recovery by either. The decisions are not in accord as to what constitutes a joint or common enterprise, but it has been held in this state that the passenger must exercise some control over the driver thereof, or, in law, may be said to possess the right of such control, before it will be held that they are engaged in a joint enterprise. (Citing case.) In St. Louis [& S. F.] Ry. Co. v. Bell, 58 Okl. 84, 159 P. 336, L.R.A.1917A, 543, the court said: '"Parties cannot be said to be engaged in a joint enterprise, within the meaning of the law of negligence, unless there be a community of interests in the objects or purposes of the undertaking, and an equal right to direct and govern the movements and conduct of each other with respect thereto. Each must have some voice and right to be heard in its control and management."' It will be seen from these two decisions that in order that there be such a joint enterprise it is not sufficient merely that the passenger of the machine indicate the route, or that both parties have certain plans in common, such as a 'joy ride,' but the community of interest be such that the passeneger is entitled to be heard in the control and management of the vehicle. In Bryant v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., supra, the court, after referring to the case of Wentworth v. Town of Waterbury, 90 Vt. 60, 96 A. 334, where apparently the only basis for the imputation of negligence of the driver of an automobile to the plaintiff was the circumstance that they were both engaged in the common purpose of taking two ladies for an afternoon's drive to view a lake, said: 'In our opinion, the doctrine of imputable negligence should not be so loosely applied. To do so leaves the law in an uncertain state. The better view is expressed by Nonn v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 232 Ill. 378, [83 N.E. 924]: "There can be no such thing as imputable negligence, except in those cases where such a relation exists as that of master and servant or of principal and agent. In order that the negligence of one person may be properly imputed to another they must stand in such relation of privity that the maxim qui facit per alium facit per se directly applies." Indeed, no other rule is consistent with section 1714 of the Civil Code, wherein it is declared that every one is responsible for an injury occasioned to another by his want of ordinary care "except so far as the latter has, willfully or by want of ordinary care, brought the injury upon himself."' (Italics ours.)"

In the present case, as in the Pope case, the decedent did not have any proprietary interest in the automobile the two men were riding in as would give him a right to be heard in its management, and there is no evidence that he did actually exercise any control at any time.

In Campagna v. Market St. Ry. Co., 1944, 24 Cal.2d 304, at pages 308–309, 149 P.2d 281, at page 283, the court said:

"When two occupants of a vehicle are engaged in a joint venture or enterprise with respect to its operation, the negligence of the driver is imputable to his companion. But to constitute such a relationship, the parties must have a community of interest, in a joint or common undertaking, each exercising or having the right to exercise equal or joint control and direction. (Citing cases.) The relationship of joint venturers is that of a mutual agency, akin to a limited partnership. (Citing cases.) It is founded on contract; and the acts of the parties over a period of time may be sufficient to raise an implied agreement of joint enterprise. (Citing case.) Although a joint venture generally contemplates an equal sharing of the profits and losses in the prosecution of the common purpose (2 Rowley's Modern Law of Partnership, § 975; 33 C.J. 841, § 2), the division may be left to the agreement of the parties (citing case).

"The doctrine of imputed negligence is not to be loosely applied, and 'where there is nothing in common between the passenger and driver of the vehicle except a common destination and a common purpose in going there the negligence of the driver is not to be imputed to the passenger.' (Citing case.) The passenger must do more than to indicate the route to be traveled, and a certain plan in common is not sufficient to establish the relationship. (Citing case.) Neither family relationship between the parties, nor association together in business, is determinative of the question. (Citing cases.) And as the imputation of contributory negligence is an affirmative defense, the defendant has the burden of proof upon that issue. (Citing cases.)"

In Roberts v. Craig, 1954, 124 Cal.App. 2d 202, at pages 208–209, 268 P.2d 500, at page 504, 43 A.L.R.2d 1146, the court said:

"* * * The negligence of one person is not imputed to another non-participant except in the clearest of cases and where the interests of justice demand it. The fundamental rule is that one person, himself free from fault, shall not be required to bear the consequences of the actions of another. Vicarious liability is the exception. It is only where a person actually acts through another to accomplish his own ends that the law will or should impose such vicarious liability. Right of control over the other person is a test of the required relationship, but it is not itself the justification for imposing liability. Aside from such legal relationships as master and servant, principal and agent, etc., before the courts will find that the parties were joint adventurers there must be clear evidence of a community of interest in a common undertaking in which each participant has or exercises the right of equal or joint control and direction. (Citing cases.) A joint venture is a sort of mutual agency, akin to a limited partnership. (Citing cases.) It is not sufficient that the parties have certain plans in common, but the community of interest must be such that the passenger is entitled to be heard in the control of the vehicle. (Citing cases.) Most of the cases indicate that the common interest must be of some business nature. 20 Minn.L.Rev. 401, 404; 16 Cornell L.Q. 320.

* * * * * *

"* * * If the parties are joint adventurers, the right to control becomes of legal significance. If they are not so engaged the mere right to control which is not exercised is not sufficient to create the vicarious liability."

In Flores v. Brown, 1952, 39 Cal.2d 622, at pages 628–629, 248 P.2d 92, at page 925, the court said:

"* * * On the other hand, it is settled that if one person is riding in another's automobile, the right to control may not be inferred merely because the trip is undertaken for the passenger's benefit and the destination is selected by him. (Citing cases.) Similarly, the right to control may not be inferred merely from the fact that one person with his own equipment is transporting another's goods. (Citing cases.)"

In Edwards v. Freeman, 1949, 34 Cal.2d 589, at pages 591–593, 212 P.2d 883, at page 884, the court said:

"To permit a finding of agency upon this evidence would be, in effect, to hold that one who performs a mere favor for another, without being subject to any legal duty of service and without assenting to any right of control, can be an agent. This is not the law. 'Agency is the relationship which results from the manifestation of consent by one person to another that the other shall act on his behalf and subject to his control, and consent by the other so to act.' (Restatement, Agency, § 1.) 'The principal must in some manner indicate that the agent is to act for him, and the agent must act or agree to act on his behalf and subject to his control.' (Id., Comment on Subsection 1.) In the absence of the essential characteristic of the right of control, there is no true agency and, therefore, no 'imputation' of the driver's negligence to the passenger. (Citing cases.) * * * And, as said in the Marchetti case [Marchetti v. Southern Pac. Co.], supra (204 Cal. [679] at page 681, 269 P. [529] at page 530): 'The negligence of the driver of a machine * * * cannot be imputed to a passenger therein, in the absence of any evidence showing that the latter exercised some control over the driver or that he possessed the power to supervise or direct the manner in which the automobile should be operated. * * *'

"A case quite similar to the one at bar is De Soto v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co. (1920), 49 Cal.App. 285, 286, 288, 193 P. 270. From the opinion it appears that (49 Cal.App. at page 286, 193 P. at page 271) 'plaintiff on the night of the accident was riding in an automobile belonging to her brother-in-law whom she had requested to convey her, as a matter of friendly accommodation, to a nearby store. She exercised no control over the driver of the machine other than to indicate the place to which she desired to be transported. Under these conditions the journey was made to the store, and it was upon the return therefrom that the accident happened.' It was held that as a matter of law (49 Cal.App. at page 288, 193 P. at page 272) 'under the relationship shown to exist between the plaintiff and the driver * * * the facts were undisputed and a conclusion irresistibly indicated that no responsibility was fixed upon the appellant [plaintiff] for any act of negligence committed by the driver * * *.' (See, also, Bryant v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co. (1917), 174 Cal. 737, 739–740, 164 P. 385; Irwin v. Golden State Auto Tour Corp. (1918), 178 Cal. 10, 14, 171 P. 1059.)"

In Atwood v. Utah Light & Ry. Co., 44 Utah 366, 140 P. 137, at page 139, the court, quoting with approval from Cotton v. Willmar & Sioux Falls Ry. Co., 99 Minn. 366, 109 N.W. 835, 8 L.R.A.,N.S., 643, said: "'Parties cannot be said to be engaged in a joint enterprise, within the meaning of the law of negligence, unless there be a community of interest in the objects or purposes of the undertaking, and an equal right to direct and govern the movements and conduct of each other with respect thereto. Each must have some voice and right to be heard in its control and management.' (Italics ours.)"

Tested by the rules of law above set forth, it is plain that in the present case there was no control by Jones over Frank in the operation of Frank's vehicle, and there is no evidence that he had any right to so control the operations of the automobile.

[4] It was appropriately stated in Anthony v. Kiefner, 96 Kan. 194, 150 P. 524, at page 525, L.R.A.1915F, 876, "The doctrine of imputable negligence, except when countenanced by statute, is a fiction of the law which finds small favor with the courts * * *."

[5] The question, reduced to its simplest terms, is whether Jones had the legal right and authority, and therefore the correlative duty and responsibility to direct the driving of the automobile by Frank. We think that there are essential facts which are necessary to establish a joint venture which are not present in this case, and therefore the instructions on joint venture should not have been given under the circumstances.

The record is bare of any fact which might show that Jones interfered with or controlled in anywise the automobile in causing the injury or otherwise. Perhaps it is true that Jones did tell Frank where he, Jones, wanted to go, but that, under the circumstances present in this case, is not sufficient to establish a joint venture.

In Mantonya v. Bratlie, 33 Cal.2d 120, at pages 124–125, 199 P.2d 677, at page 679, our Supreme Court stated: "The task of a jury of laymen to comprehend and apply pertinent instructions is onerous enough at best; it should not be unnecessarily aggravated by loading on them a congeries of wholly inapplicable legal propositions. Such wholly inapplicable propositions should not be requested by counsel, in the first place, but if requested, it is the duty of the trial judge to scrupulously delete them from the charge finally given."

It is unnecessary to consider the other contentions of appellant as the case should be retried.

The judgment is reversed.

166 Cal.App.2d 294

Alfred C. ROBERTS, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Alexander SALOT, Alexander Realty Co., et al., Defendants, Alexander Salot, Appellant.

Civ. 23129.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 17, 1958.

Action for a judgment that the defendant held title to property in trust for plaintiff and directing the defendant to deed the same to plaintiff free from encumbrance upon payment of a sum of money. From a judgment for the plaintiff in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kenneth C. Newell, J., the individual defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that plaintiff was entitled under the evidence to declaration of a constructive trust and that a provision of the judgment requiring defendant upon affirmance to convey the property free of any encumbrances placed thereon by the defendant required modification.

Modified and affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐931(1)

An appellate court must accept as established all facts and inferences favorable to respondent finding substantial support in the evidence.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1010(2)

Where appellant urges the insufficiency of evidence to sustain findings, such contention requires appellants to demonstrate that there is no substantial evidence to support the challenged findings.

3. Trusts ⇐110

In action for judgment that defendant held title to property in trust for plaintiff where plaintiff had defaulted under a first trust deed and defendant agreed to cure the default and took assignment of the trust deed and the only consideration therefor was his promise to cure the default and thus forestall a foreclosure sale, defendant's immediate failure to perform which occurred within 24 hours furnished cogent evidence that he never intended to do so.

4. Mortgages ⇐369(3)

In action for judgment declaring that defendant held title to property in trust for plaintiff where defendant agreed to cure plaintiff's default on a first trust deed on the property and received an assignment of the trust deed and then permitted the property to be sold on foreclosure, "chilling" of the bidding at the sale by the defendant constituted a fraud upon plaintiff and rendered the sale subject to rescission by him.

5. Trusts ⇐100

In action for judgment that defendant held title to property in trust for plaintiff where plaintiff had defaulted under a trust deed on the property and defendant in consideration for assignment of trust deed agreed to cure the default thereunder and failed to do so and purchased the property on sale under the trust deed, a constructive trust arose in favor of the plaintiff. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2224.

6. Estoppel ⇐90(1)

In action for judgment that defendant held title to property in trust for plaintiff where plaintiff had defaulted under a trust deed and defendant agreed in consideration for an assignment thereof to cure the default but failed to do so and purchased the property on foreclosure sale, fact that plaintiff negotiated with the defendant for a repurchase of the property and his attorney made a formal offer did not constitute an estoppel or waiver of the alleged fraud of the defendant where nothing came of the offer.

7. Trusts ⇐100

In action for judgment that defendant held title to property in trust for plaintiff where plaintiff had defaulted under a trust deed and defendant agreed in consideration of an assignment thereof to cure the default but instead purchased the property on foreclosure sale, alleged fact that the plaintiff had no direct negotiations with the defendant which were conducted through his daughter who acted as the plaintiff's agent did not preclude recovery for the alleged fraud, since a fraud worked upon the daughter by misrepresentation or silence was worked upon her principal and the plaintiff had a right of action for redress.

8. Appeal and Error ⇐1152

In action for judgment that defendant held property in trust for the plaintiff where plaintiff had defaulted on a trust deed and defendant in consideration of an assignment thereof agreed to cure the default but instead purchased the property for himself at a foreclosure sale, a judgment requiring the defendant upon affirmance to convey the property free of any encumbrances placed thereon by the defendant would be modified by providing that if defendant was unable to comply he should pay to the plaintiff certain sums in lieu of such performance.

Max Tendler, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jack C. Stevenson, Baldwin Park, for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment declaring that any title which he holds to property known as 283 Colwood Avenue, in the city of Puente, is held in trust for plaintiff and directing that he deed same to plaintiff free of encumbrance upon payment to defendant of the sum of $2,126.66. The only contention made on behalf of appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings.

[1, 2] The reviewing court is governed by the following rules: "The appellate court must accept as established all facts and all inferences favorable to respondent which find substantial support in the evidence. 'And where appellant urges the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings * * * the rule is that, "Such contention requires defendants to demonstrate that there is no substantial evidence to support the challenged findings." Nichols v. Mitchell, 32 Cal.2d 598, 600, 197 P.2d 550, 552. (Emphasis added.) It is said in Crawford v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Cal. 2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183, 184, that: "It is an elementary, but often overlooked, principle of law, that when a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deduction for those of the trial court." ' Hartzell v. Myall, 115 Cal.App.2d 670, 673, 252 P.2d 676, 677." New v. New, 148 Cal.App.2d 372, 383, 306 P.2d 987, 994.

Thus viewed, the evidence is sufficient to establish controlling facts favorable to plaintiff. He owned and resided in the premises above mentioned. In January, 1955, in order to assist his daughter, Mrs. Alice Berryman, he borrowed from First Federal Savings and Loan Association $2,000 upon a note secured by trust deed upon the property. He gave the proceeds to the daughter, who agreed to keep up the payments on the loan. This she did for a while but became delinquent sometime in the year 1956, the loan being by the middle of the year some six months in arrears, an aggregate of $120. In October of that year the loan association gave plaintiff written notice of default and intention to sell. He contacted his daughter who told him she would take care of it. Mr. Roberts was 70 years old, apparently in poor health and of limited education, so he left the matter to the daughter to work out through another loan upon the property. She thus became his agent and was in full charge of saving the property from foreclosure; "I was letting my daughter take care of the whole thing." Her efforts to secure a new loan were unsuccessful and finally she was referred to defendant.

About the first of October she telephoned him, asking about his making a loan to bring the payments up to date and he said to come to his office and pick up the papers. This she did forthwith. He had forms at hand and prepared a note for $710 and trust deed running from plaintiff to the daughter, with an assignment on the back of the note transferring note and trust deed to defendant. This she signed on that occasion in defendant's office. He told her that she could pay this second lien note at the rate of $35 a month. Then Mrs. Berryman took the documents to her father, had him sign them and had the trust deed notarized. Later she tried to contact defendant in order to further clarify the transaction in her own mind but was unable to reach him before the evening of October 16th. The sale was set for the 17th. He told her that "it is kind of late, but I will take care of the papers." She further testified: "Q. Did he tell you what this note was for? A. Well, it was for a second trust deed to bring the payments up to date to First Federal, the payment that was past due." Also: "Q. Mrs. Berryman, at any of the conversations that you had with Mr. Salot, isn't it a fact that he told you that he does not lend money? He would only buy property or trust deeds? * * * A. No. What he told me was he was making this loan here. * * * A. Well, he told me that—how much was past due and how much would—he said that there was costs and stuff on that and that then it was all added up and it was the amount that was on the loan." Defendant had previously contacted the loan company and had verified the amount past due. He testified that he gave Mrs. Berryman $100 in cash for the assignment of the trust deed, obtaining no receipt therefor and asking for none. She denied this and said that he paid her nothing. Defendant further testified that he gave nothing to plaintiff Roberts for the trust deed or its assignment. The court specifically found that defendant "paid neither the plaintiff nor the plaintiff's daughter, Alice Berryman, nor anyone else, any sum of money or any other consideration of any nature whatsoever, for said second deed of trust." Mrs. Berryman relied upon defendant's promise to bring the payments up to date and the evidence shows that the holder of the first trust deed would have consented to a curing of default in that manner and at that late date.

[3] Defendant having paid no cash for the trust deed, the only consideration for same was his promise to cure the default and thus forestall the foreclosure sale. His immediate failure to perform (which occurred within 24 hours) furnishes cogent evidence that he never intended to do so. Longway v. Newbery, 13 Cal.2d 603, 611, 91 P.2d 110; Williams v. Hasshagen, 166 Cal. 386, 392, 137 P. 9; Kejr v. Construction Engineers, Inc., 128 Cal.App.2d 396, 400, 275 P.2d 529; Jarkieh v. Badagliacco, 75 Cal. App.2d 505, 507, 170 P.2d 994.

[4] On the 17th defendant drove by the property, made an appraisal sufficient for his own purposes and went thence to the sale. He bid it in for $2,875, but as he later stated to plaintiff's attorney, Mr. Netzley: "[T]hat figure that was bid did not represent his total expenditures in purchasing the property because he had to some sums to the fellows that were bidding on the same property so that he would be able to purchase it." He also told the attorney that he had had an offer of $6,500 for the property and would re-sell it to plaintiff Roberts for $4,500. Defendant himself placed a first lien of $2,650 upon it and a second of $3,250. The court found the value to be not less than $5,000. This chilling of bidding constituted a fraud upon plaintiff and rendered the sale subject to rescission by him. Jenkins v. Frink, 30 Cal. 586, 591–592; Packard v. Bird, 40 Cal. 378, 383; Crawford v. Maddux, 100 Cal. 222, 223 225, 34 P. 651; 6 Cal. Jur.2d § 15, p. 434; 5 Am.Jur., § 27, p. 464; 30A Am.Jur., § 99, p. 958, § 98, p. 958; 7 C.J.S. Auctions and Auctioneers § 7(e) (7) p. 1255; 50 C.J.S. Judicial Sales § 22d p. 608.

[5] On the same day as the sale but after its completion defendant recorded the second trust deed which he had received from Mrs. Berryman and later used it as a basis for demanding from Title Insurance & Trust Company, as trustee under the first trust deed, the surplus of $748.34 arising from the foreclosure sale. Having breached the promise which formed the only consideration for assignment of the second trust deed to him, and having paid no money for it, defendant had only nominal title thereto. However, he represented to Title Insurance & Trust Company that he was the owner of that second lien and entitled to receive the surplus. Having been told that he should get a release from Roberts, defendant went to see him on November 4th, told him that he, defendant, was the owner of the property and wanted a release signed. When plaintiff demurred, defendant said: "You've got no rights left in the place anyway"; "Don't make no difference whether you sign the papers or not"; "You will just save yourself some trouble if you do." Plaintiff knew nothing of the existence of a surplus from the sale or of his own right to claim it if one there was. Though he read the instrument, he, with his limited education and his ignorance of the fact of a surplus, did not understand its full import and signed it believing he had lost the property and that the document referred to his surrendering possession or paying defendant $20 a month as rent. Plaintiff explained: "[T]hese legal documents, I get so confused when I read them that I don't know what they mean or anything about them. * * * [T]his is the first legal procedure I was ever in in my life." Defendant then collected the surplus from the trustee and again encumbered the property as above stated.

Clearly a constructive trust arose in favor of plaintiff pursuant to § 2224, Civil Code, which says: "One who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act, is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained, for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it."

[6] This release was signed about November 5, 1956; plaintiff gave notice of rescission on January 7, 1957, and filed this action on February 5, 1957. There was no undue delay on plaintiff's part. Although he negotiated with defendant in November for a re-purchase and his attorney made a formal offer, nothing came of it, no estoppel or waiver of the fraud grew out of it, and indeed it is not contended that there was any such equitable defense available to defendant.

Defendant testified that his occupation consisted primarily of "buying distressed property"; his hand was undoubtedly faster than the eyes of plaintiff and his daughter, but not fast enough to escape the penetrating gaze of the trial judge.

[7] Most of the arguments made by appellant's counsel are directed toward specific findings and the claim that they are not supported by the evidence. The burden of the argument is that the court found that plaintiff was induced to do certain things and plaintiff was defrauded, that this could not be so because plaintiff did not personally participate in any transactions with defendant. The following are examples: "Finding Paragraph III is not supported by evidence in the further particular wherein the Court finds that the plaintiff-respondent, in consideration of defendant-appellant's promise, executed the second deed of trust to his daughter"; "The evidence clearly shows that there was no understanding or agreement of any kind or nature whatsoever at any time between the plaintiff-respondent and the defendant-appellant"; "The evidence clearly shows that there was no agreement or understanding at any time or on October 16, 1956, the night before the sale which was to be held on October 17, 1956, between the defendant-appellant and the plaintiff-respondent." These contentions ignore the fact that although the daughter had the direct dealings with defendant she was acting as plaintiff's agent throughout. A fraud worked upon her by misrepresentation or by silence was worked upon her principal and he has a right of action for redress. Lewis v. McClure, 127 Cal.App. 439, 447, 16 P.2d 166; Simone v. McKee, 142 Cal.App.2d 307, 313, 298 P.2d 667; Odell v. Frueh, 146 Cal.App.2d 504, 509, 304 P.2d 45; 23 Cal.Jur.2d, § 32, p. 78; 2 Am.Jur. § 385, p. 302; 23 Am.Jur. § 181, p. 1001; Restatement of Agency 2d, § 315, p. 56.

[8] The judgment requires modification in one respect. It declares that any title that appellant holds to the subject property is held in trust for plaintiff and "[t]hat the defendant within 30 days after the signing of this decree execute and deliver to the plaintiff a quitclaim deed or other sufficient deed conveying to the plaintiff the above entitled property free of any encumbrance placed thereon by defendant, upon payment by plaintiff to defendant of $2,126.66." Appellant testified that he bid in the property for $2,875 and in the latter part of October obtained a loan of $2,650 from Valley Savings and Loan upon a first trust deed; that he also placed a second lien of $3,250 on the property, payable at the rate of $30 a month; that there is approximately $2,500 outstanding on the first lien; that the second was given as security for another obligation of his; that he received $2,650 less expenses upon the first trust deed; that the second lien was, as far as he was concerned, an accommodation security which he could "take off any time"; "I can substitute that, yes."

A question thus arises whether appellant will be able upon affirmance of the judgment to convey the property "free of any encumbrance placed thereon by defendant." If he cannot do so or claims inability to comply, additional and complicated litigation may ensue in order to assure to plaintiff the relief to which he is now entitled. Accordingly the judgment is modified by adding to paragraph 2 thereof the following language: "In the event that defendant, upon or after the time that this judgment becomes final, is unable to convey or claims that he is unable to convey title free of said encumbrances, he shall forthwith pay to plaintiff the full amount of principal and interest then due upon either or both of said encumbrances which he cannot remove or claims he cannot remove from the premises, plus any taxes which have become payable since defendant's purchase of the property and remain unpaid; but defendant will be entitled to offset against said last mentioned sums the aforesaid amount of $2,126.66."

As thus modified the judgment is affirmed. Respondent to recover costs on appeal.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

James Redding HAZELIP, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6129.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 16, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 7, 1959.

Defendant was convicted of robbery. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Allen T. Lynch, J., entered judgment, and the defendant appealed from the judgment of conviction and from the sentence. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that evidence sustained finding of Superior Court that confession was freely and voluntarily given by defendant, so as to be admissible.

Judgment of conviction affirmed, and purported appeal from sentence dismissed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐519(8)

A confession made by one in illegal detention is not, for that reason alone, made inadmissible.

2. Criminal Law ⇐519(8)

Fact that when defendant made confession he was detained in alleged violation of sections of the Penal Code providing that defendant must in all cases be taken before magistrate without unnecessary delay, and, in any event, within two days after his arrest, and that when arrest is made without warrant, person arrested must, without unnecessary delay, be taken before nearest or most accessible magistrate in county in which arrest is made, and complaint stating charge against the person must be laid before such magistrate, did not render confession inadmissible in robbery prosecution. West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 211, 825, 849; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

3. Criminal Law ⇐531(1)

In robbery prosecution, burden was on prosecution to show that confession offered by prosecution was freely and voluntarily made by defendant. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 211.

4. Criminal Law ⇐736(2)

Whether confession was freely and voluntarily made by defendant, so as to be admissible, is for trial court to determine in the first instance.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1158(4)

It is not within province of reviewing court to say that trial court committed error in admitting a confession of guilt, as having been freely and voluntarily made by defendant, unless such error appears as a matter of law from record presented.

6. Criminal Law ⇐531(3)

In robbery prosecution, evidence sustained trial court's finding that confession was freely and voluntarily made by defendant, so as to be admissible, though confession was completed by defendant, who was a narcotic addict, after he had been given narcotics by doctor called by officers. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 211; U. S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

An appeal does not lie from a sentence.

Cornell Ridley, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction and from the "sentence made and entered" for first degree robbery.

An information was filed in Los Angeles county charging the defendant with armed robbery in violation of section 211 of the Penal Code on or about June 10, 1957, in that he took $3,300.00 from Irene Krichbaum, and further alleging two prior convictions of the defendant, one for sale and possession of narcotics prosecuted in the federal court in New York in 1943, and that he served a term in prison therefor; and one for conspiracy to violate the narcotics law in the same court in 1947, and that he served a term in prison therefor. The defendant pleaded not guilty and denied the prior convictions, however, he subsequently admitted the two prior convictions. A jury found the defendant guilty of robbery in the first degree and also found that he was armed with two revolvers at the time of the commission of the offense. The court sentenced the defendant to the state prison and this appeal followed.

A résumé of the facts most favorable to the prosecution, and facts which the jury might well have found to be true, is as follows: On or about June 9, 1957, a man by the name of Holland asked the defendant if he, the defendant, knew of a place he and a man by the name of Teresi could rob. The defendant was formerly employed as a waiter at the Miramar Hotel in Santa Monica, and knew of the location of the auditor's office where the hotel money was kept, and the defendant suggested that the hotel be chosen. Plans for the robbery were completed at the defendant's apartment. Pursuant to the plans, Holland and Teresi met at the defendant's apartment about 9:30 o'clock a. m. the next day, June 10, 1957. Susan Matlock and James Shannon, acquaintances of the defendant, had arrived at the defendant's apartment between 9:00 and 9:30 o'clock a. m., at a time when no one else was present in the apartment. The defendant returned to his apartment and shortly thereafter Holland and Teresi arrived. The defendant, Holland and Teresi went into the bathroom in the apartment and talked together. Holland, at that time, had two loaded revolvers in his possession. He gave one to Teresi and retained the other. The defendant, Holland and Teresi left the apartment about 9:30 o'clock a. m., in Holland's automobile with the defendant doing the driving. They returned to the defendant's apartment shortly thereafter and left again in about ten or fifteen minutes.

Holland's automobile was driven to the vicinity of the Miramar Hotel, and Holland and Teresi got out and went into the hotel. The defendant remained in the automobile. In about fifteen minutes Holland and Teresi returned to the automobile and stated that they had been unable to locate the auditor's office. The three of them then drove to a drug store, had some refreshments, and returned to the hotel. Holland and Teresi entered the auditor's office in the hotel at about 11:45 o'clock a. m.

Teresi pointed a gun at Mrs. Krichbaum, an assistant auditor in the office, and asked where the safe was located. She opened the safe and Holland removed some money and a metal box from the safe, and at the same time Teresi took currency from the cash drawer. Whatever was stolen was taken without the permission of Mrs. Krichbaum, and she told where the money was kept only because she was frightened. Upon leaving the hotel the second time, Holland and Teresi entered the automobile of Holland, with the defendant as the driver, and they then proceeded together to the defendant's apartment.

The time lapse from their leaving the apartment the second time to their return after the robbery was about thirty to forty-five minutes. Holland and Teresi entered the apartment first, followed soon after by the defendant. Susan Matlock and Shannon were still there. Holland put two guns into his pockets, and Holland and Teresi got down on the floor and emptied the money from their pockets. The defendant joined them, but did not put any money on the floor. Holland had a metal box which contained money rolls. The money was then evenly divided between Holland and Teresi and the defendant, each getting about $900.

Holland and Teresi then left the apartment. Shannon also left and called for a taxi cab. The defendant asked Susan Matlock if she cared to count his money, and she replied that she did not. Susan Matlock asked the defendant where the money came from and said that the defendant replied, "it was none of my business, and that he didn't discuss his capers with me or any other woman." Shortly thereafter a taxi cab arrived and the defendant, Shannon and Susan Matlock left in it.

On June 26, 1957, at about 12:45 o'clock a. m., while Holland was driving Teresi home in the former's automobile, he and Teresi were arrested. The arresting officers searched the automobile and found two loaded revolvers, one in Holland's pocket and the other in a pocket of a jacket in the car. On July 11, 1957, while in custody, Holland made and signed a statement confessing his guilt in the robbery.

The defendant was arrested on July 10, 1957, at about 9:00 o'clock p. m., by an officer of the Santa Monica police department. The defendant was then released to the custody of the Los Angeles police department, at the latter's request upon another charge, on July 16, 1957. On July 19, 1957, a complaint was filed and a warrant for the defendant's arrest was issued. Pursuant to the warrant one Kocher, then an officer of the Santa Monica police department, arrested the defendant on July 19, 1957. The defendant was arraigned a few days after his arrest. Between the time of his arrest on July 10th, and his re-arrest on July 19th, the defendant was questioned about the robbery between five and fifteen times. During these occasions he made no admissions concerning the robbery.

The defendant appeared to be a narcotic addict, however, he made no request for any narcotics prior to July 19, 1957. He was asked by the arresting officer how he was getting along without narcotics, and the defendant replied, "'Oh, just fine,'" and remarked that he was able to "handle or control the situation." The defendant later admitted that he had, at the time of his arrest, concealed some narcotics in one of his body cavities and had been using such narcotics while in jail.

On July 19th, while the officers were talking with the defendant generally about narcotics, the robbery and other related matters, the defendant stated that he felt ill, and said, "'I will tell you what you want to know if you can help me out.'" The police told the defendant, "'we can't guarantee we can give you any narcotics, but we can call a doctor, and it is up to him.'"

A stenographer for the Santa Monica police department was called into the room to record the defendant's statement. The taking of the statement of the defendant was then interrupted by the arrival of Dr. Robert Vock at about 6:00 o'clock p. m. The doctor did not examine the defendant but did ask the defendant if he would "'like a drug which will make you fell better, but which is not an opiate, which is not a narcotic?'" The defendant refused any such drug and asked the doctor to give him some morphine. The doctor left without giving the defendant anything.

Officer Kocher then told the defendant that they would attempt to obtain another doctor. Pursuant to the request of the officer for a doctor, Dr. H. W. Seiger was called by the Emergency Relief Panel of the Los Angeles County Medical Association and was asked to go to the police station, which he did. When the doctor arrived at the station the defendant's statement was in the course of being taken. The doctor testified that he asked what the defendant complained about and was told the defendant was a narcotic addict, and he further stated that as he recalled, the officer said, "in order to question him, they had to make him feel better; that he hadn't had anything for some time, and if I would give him an injection, they would appreciate it." Officer Kocher recalled that the doctor examined the defendant and said he would give him some morphine, but neither the officer nor his partner, who were both present in addition to the defendant and the doctor, told the doctor to give the defendant morphine so that they could get a statement from him. The doctor testified that in his opinion, the defendant was a narcotic addict and was at the time suffering from withdrawal pains. The defendant requested several grains of narcotics and the doctor finally gave him half a grain of morphine sulphate, and the defendant administered this drug to himself. The doctor left about 8:00 o'clock p. m.

The interview with the defendant continued until after 9:00 o'clock p. m. The defendant was then returned to his cell, and upon his request was given a shower bath and shave, and was permitted to clean up. The two officers who had questioned the defendant went out to eat and returned to the police station at about 11:00 o'clock p. m.

The statement was typed soon thereafter and the defendant was handed a copy which he read. He corrected the statement by inserting in his own handwriting the words, " 'Holland asked me if I knew a place he and Teresi could rob and I said yes,' " following the answer "yes" to the question, "On June 9th, Sunday, of this year, did you talk to anyone about a robbery?" The defendant told officer Kocher of this omission prior to writing it in, and was told, "Well, if that is true, just write it in." No promise of reward or immunity was made to the defendant, nor was any force or violence, or threat thereof, used with respect to the defendant. The defendant signed the written statement about 11:30 o'clock p. m. He had been shown portions of statements made by Holland, Teresi and Susan Matlock.

Susan Matlock testified that after she received a subpoena relative to the trial of the defendant, she received a letter from him, and that although the original letter was lost she recalled that it contained in part a statement that the defendant "wouldn't have broken and given in to the authorities if he hadn't seen my statement. He had seen the other statement that was signed, but when he had seen mine, it broke him down because he thought I was good people, and he didn't think that I would ever sign a statement against him, and that he hoped that I could smile and feel good while I was walking around."

The defendant did not take the witness stand to say that what was in the confession was not true and correct, or otherwise. The defendant did call as a witness Holland, who, by his testimony, repudiated a former statement which he had made to the police to the effect that the defendant was implicated in the robbery, and added that he and Teresi had planned the robbery, that they had not discussed it with the defendant and that he did not know that the defendant had previously worked at the hotel.

The defendant now contends that the court erred in admitting the defendant's full and complete confession into evidence in that it was obtained in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution (due process clause), and further that it was in violation of sections 825 and 849 of the Penal Code.

Section 825 of the Penal Code provides in part, "The defendant must in all cases be taken before the magistrate without unnecessary delay, and, in any event, within two days after his arrest, excluding Sundays and holidays * * *."

Section 849 of the Penal Code, as it read at the time of the acts in question, provided: "When an arrest is made without a warrant by a peace officer or private person, the person arrested must, without unnecessary delay, be taken before the nearest or most accessible magistrate in the county in which the arrest is made, and a complaint stating the charge against the person, must be laid before such magistrate."

[1, 2] The law in California is settled to the effect that a confession made by one in illegal detention is not, for that reason alone, made inadmissible. Rogers v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 3, 10, 291 P.2d 929; People v. Bashor, 48 Cal.2d 763, 765, 312 P.2d 255.

[3] The burden is upon the prosecution to show that the confession offered was freely and voluntarily made, and such a showing was made in this case. A delay in the arraignment is only one of the factors which may be considered by the trial court in ascertaining and determining whether the confession was freely and voluntarily made.

The rule in the federal courts is different, although the United States Supreme Court in Gallegos v. Nebraska, 342 U.S. 55, pages 63–64, 72 S.Ct. 141, 146, 96 L.Ed. 86, said:

> "* * * The rule of the McNabb case [McNabb v. United States, 318 U.S. 332, 63 S.Ct. 608, 87 L.Ed. 819] * * * is not a limitation imposed by the Due Process Clause * * *. Compliance with the McNabb rule is required in federal courts by this Court through its power of supervision over the procedure and practices of federal courts in the trial of criminal cases. That power over state criminal trials is not vested in this Court. A confession can be declared inadmissible in a state criminal trial by this Court only when the circumstances under which it is received violate those 'fundamental principles of liberty and justice' protected by the Fourteenth Amendment against infraction by any state."

See, also, Crooker v. California, 356 U.S. 433, 78 S.Ct. 1287, at page 1291, 2 L.Ed.2d 1448, where the court said:

> "At times petitioner appears to urge 'a rule' barring use of a voluntary confession obtained after state denial of a request to contact counsel regardless of whether any violation of a due process right to counsel occurred. That contention is simply an appeal to the supervisory power of this Court over the administration of justice in the federal courts. See McNabb v. United States, 1943, 318 U.S. 332, 63 S.Ct. 608, 87 L.Ed. 819, which, significantly enough, petitioner cites. The short answer to such a contention here is that this conviction was had in a state, not a federal, court."

The California Supreme Court stated in Rogers v. Superior Court, supra, 46 Cal.2d 3, at page 10, 291 P.2d 929, at page 933, that, "A pre-trial confession is admissible, so far as due process is concerned, if it is voluntarily made." The court also pointed out in the cited case that (46 Cal.2d at page 10, 291 P.2d at page 933):

> "* * * Since the McNabb case, the state courts that have had occasion to re-evaluate their test of admissibility as it applies to a confession made during illegal detention continue to treat delay in arraignment as only one of the factors to be considered in determining whether the statement was voluntarily made. Apparently none of the states following the rule excluding illegally obtained evidence have adopted the rule of the McNabb case; and we are not disposed to adopt it." See also, People v. Bashor, 48 Cal.2d 763, 765, 312 P.2d 255; People v. Tipton, 48 Cal. 2d 389, 393–394, 309 P.2d 813.

The admitting of the confession under the circumstances of this case did not violate the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

[4, 5] The confession in the present case was, in our opinion, freely and voluntarily made, without any previous inducement or by reason of any intimidation or threat. Whether a confession is of the character as just stated is for the trial court to determine in the first instance. People v. Mehaffey, 32 Cal.2d 535, 548, 197 P.2d 12. The rule which this court is to follow in reviewing the matter was well stated in People v. Lapin, 138 Cal.App.2d 251, at page 263, 291 P.2d 575, at page 583, as follows:

> "* * * Discretion is vested in the trial court to determine whether or not a confession is admissible and the jury under proper instructions, are the sole judges of the credibility of witnesses in regard to the matter, People v. Oliveria, 127 Cal. 376, 381, 59 P. 772. It is not within the province of a reviewing court to say that the trial court committed error in admitting a confession of guilt unless such error appears as a matter of law from the record presented, People v. Lehew, 209 Cal. 336, 341, 287 P. 377 * * *."

[6] The rule governing the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a verdict was stated in the often quoted case of People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681–682, 104 P.2d 778, and there is no reason to quote the rule here. The evidence in this case is, in our opinion, overwhelming, rather than merely clearly sufficient.

In short, the defendant in this case was a narcotic addict; he was suffering from withdrawal pains after having consumed all of the narcotics which he had surreptitiously taken into the jail in one of his body cavities at the time of his arrest. He stated, when the officers were questioning him, "* * * I'm sick. I'm down. I will tell you what you want to know if you can help me out." The officer stated, "Well, we can't guarantee we can give you any narcotics, but we can call a doctor, and it is up to him." The defendant then started to make the statement, and completed it after receiving the requested narcotics. About two hours later, after he had cleaned up, showered and shaved, he was presented with a typewritten copy of the statement and protested that it was incorrect in one aspect. He thereupon corrected it in his own handwriting, and signed the statement as corrected. There is no evidence that he was suffering from withdrawal pains at the time of correcting and signing the written statement; on the contrary it was indicated that he was in full possession of his faculties at such times. He later indicated that he never would have confessed but for the statement which was made by Susan Matlock, and which was shown to him during the course of the investigation.

The case of Mallory v. United States, 354 U.S. 449, 77 S.Ct. 1356, 1 L.Ed.2d 1479, cited by the defendant did not involve the question of due process, but rather involved the interpretation and application of the federal rules of criminal procedure. None of the other cases cited by the defendant are, in our opinion in point.

[7] There is no appeal from a sentence. People v. Gallardo, 41 Cal.2d 57, 60, 257 P.2d 29.

The judgment of conviction is affirmed. The purported appeal from the sentence is dismissed.

Cr. 1357.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 19, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 11, 1959.

Defendants were convicted of conspiracy to cheat and defraud by criminal means, and to obtain money and property by false pretenses and by false promises with intent not to perform such promises. The Superior Court of San Diego County, William P. Mahedy, J., entered an order denying the motion of certain of the defendants for a new trial, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shepard, J., held that it was not necessary to prove that defendants entered into a concrete written agreement or gathered together at one time for a mutual and immediate discussion and agreement, and that evidence sustained convictions.

Order affirmed.

1. Conspiracy ⇐23

A criminal "conspiracy" is an agreement to commit a crime or do any other act denounced by statute, and gist of the offense is the unlawful agreement between the conspirators to do an act contrary to law, accompanied by an overt act to at least start to carry conspiracy into effect. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 182.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Conspiracy".

2. Conspiracy ⇐27

A conspiracy comes into existence in form punishable by law only when some overt act is committed tending to carry the common purpose into effect. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 182.

3. Conspiracy ⇐24

In a conspiracy prosecution, it is not necessary to prove that parties entered into a concrete written agreement or that all the parties gathered together at one time for a mutual and immediate discussion and agreement. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

4. Conspiracy ⇐47

It is sufficient to warrant conviction for conspiracy, if, by either direct or circumstantial evidence, or both, trier of fact is convinced beyond reasonable doubt that unlawful agreement did, in fact, come into existence and that, while it was still in existence, an overt act pursuant to the unlawful conspiracy purpose was committed. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

5. Conspiracy ⇐47

Generally, conspiracy can only be established by circumstantial evidence, and therefore it is not necessary to show that parties met and actually agreed to undertake performance of the unlawful acts, or that they had previously arranged a detailed plan for execution of the conspiracy. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

6. Conspiracy ⇐47

In prosecution for conspiracy to cheat and defraud by criminal means and to obtain money and property by false pretenses and by false promises with intent not to perform such promises, evidence sustained implied finding of trial court that one of the defendants, who allegedly came in only after commencement of the alleged conspiracy, acted with other members of the conspiracy in furtherance of its purposes and with knowledge of the existence of the conspiracy, so as to be guilty as a member of the conspiracy. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182, subd. 4.

7. Conspiracy ⇐40

Where conspiracy has already been formed and, at a later date, a stranger to the original conspiracy associates himself with the conspirators, and, with knowledge of the conspiracy, joins with the others in committing overt acts in furtherance of the unlawful purpose, he is guilty as a member of the conspiracy. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

8. Conspiracy ⇐44½

One, who has joined a criminal conspiracy, can only effectively withdraw therefrom by some affirmative act bringing home the fact of his withdrawal to his confederates, and unless there is some affirmative act bringing home the withdrawal to the knowledge of his confederates, conspiracy, once established, will be presumed to continue until ends are accomplished or its abandonment is established. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 182.

9. Conspiracy ⇐47

Evidence sustained convictions for conspiracy to cheat and defraud by criminal means, and to obtain money and property by false pretenses and by false promises with intent not to perform such promises. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182, subd. 4.

Minsky & Garber, Bernard W. Minsky, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHEPARD, Justice.

Defendants were charged with others by indictment with the crime of conspiracy "to cheat and defraud by criminal means, and to obtain money and property by false pretenses and by false promises with intent not to perform such promises, in violation of section 182, subdivision 4 of the Penal Code * * *".

The cause was tried before the court sitting without a jury. Defendants Moran, Berry, Zarcone, Hubbard and Jackson were found guilty as charged. Probation was granted to all of the convicted defendants for a period of three years on condition that they spend the first eight months in the sheriff's custody, that they pay certain fines, and that they perform certain restitution in amounts fixed by the court in the judgment. An appeal was taken by Zarcone, Hubbard and Jackson from the order denying a new trial, but Zarcone has abandoned his appeal so that the appeal of only Hubbard and Jackson is before the court at this time.

The first specification of error is that there was no sufficient evidence from which the court could lawfully find that the appellants intentionally entered into a conspiracy with any persons to cheat and defraud as indicated by the indictment.

The cause was in trial for approximately one and a half months, 57 witnesses were examined, and the transcript covers nearly 3,500 pages.

A review of the evidence shows that defendants Moran and Zarcone started a used-car business in San Diego in the fall of 1956, which was moved to another location with an additional partner (not here charged) in February, 1957, and that this business continued at least until the month of May thereafter. To outward appearance this was a legitimate business.

However, the evidence shows that by a systematic use of false advertising, with full knowledge of its falsity and intent to use it falsely, they induced customers to come to the used-car lot with the idea that they could purchase a car with a $5 down payment. This intent was made clear not only by the pattern of conduct shown through dozens of transactions produced in evidence, but was also directly testified to by a salesman who worked on the lot with these defendants and who heard instructions given at sales meetings. A fair interpretation of the evidence shows that the trial court was fully justified in believing that the advertisement was pure "come-on", with no intent of performance or truth, and that both of these defendants over many weeks of daily work in the business were fully aware of that fact.

The evidence further shows that once in the clutches of the salesman the prospective buyer was systematically and intentionally fed false and misleading information, both of existing facts and of intended future conduct by the firm which the salesman knew was never intended to be performed. This consisted of many different types of representation, including what could or would be done in refinancing, as to what amounts cars would be sold for, and by obtaining customers' signatures on blank contracts and later filling in amounts far different than those orally discussed. Space does not here permit the recounting in even sketch form all of the many transactions, details of which were received in evidence. However, the recounting of two will give a sufficient indication of the general pattern of conduct which marked them all.

George Vogel, a baker, saw the advertisement, responded, located a car on the lot marked $495, had the price confirmed by a salesman, and was transferred to the tender ministrations of Jackson. Jackson put a price of $785 on the purchase order and when Vogel noticed it and objected, Jackson said the salesman was a new man and just didn't know. He allowed Vogel $300 in trade on Vogel's Studebaker. Vogel told Jackson he could only pay $30 per month, and Jackson said his firm would carry the financing. He persuaded Vogel to borrow $400 from another source, which Vogel paid to Jackson. The same afternoon Jackson again phoned Vogel and demanded $184 more. Finally, Vogel examined his purchase order and discovered that the car he originally thought he was buying for $495 had been sold to him at the price of $1,385, and instead of $30 a month his total payments, including the payments on the $400 he had borrowed, were $53.87.

Manuel Anthony Zaragoza, a Navy truck driver, saw the "$5 down" signs, came to the lot, met a salesman, told him he could pay only $70 per month, selected a car at a purchase price of $2,195, and Jackson was introduced as credit manager. Jackson said "I am a loan Company" and would loan Zaragoza sufficient for a down payment. Jackson induced Zaragoza to sign a check for $584.80 although Zaragoza stated he had no money in the bank. He was then induced to sign a blank contract. He paid Jackson $100. Later, he borrowed $585 from a loan company and paid it to Jackson but had trouble getting back the $584.80 check. Jackson assured Zaragoza the payments on the balance of $1,600 would be $50 per month but Zaragoza later discovered the payment had been written in at $70.94 per month. He returned the car for repairs. Returning for it, he found it out for sale and an argument ensued. Zaragoza's total monthly payments ended up at $103 per month, counting the payments to the loan company.

It is understandable that occurrences of this kind might happen once in a great while through misunderstanding, but with dozens of this kind of transactions occurring over a period of a few weeks and with the pattern similar in each of them; with these defendants working together on the same lot with an agreement between them to split their commissions, plus other evidence from within the organization itself in which the whole plan of operation was loosely outlined by glib instructions on how to lie and what steps to take to enmesh a customer; with conferences going on back and forth on purchases of this kind; with this kind of a pattern between these defendants and the owners and other salesmen on the lot, it was not unreasonable for the trier of fact to be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that those within the organization were conspiring together to cheat and defraud in the manner described in the indictment. Defense counsel say "One cannot condone the acts of Appellants", but primarily contend against the sufficiency of the evidence to show conspiracy.

[1] A criminal conspiracy is an agreement to commit any crime or do any other act denounced by the statute. The gist of the offense is the unlawful agreement between the conspirators to do an act contrary to law, accompanied by an overt act to at least start to carry the conspiracy into effect. Penal Code, § 182; People v. Curtis, 106 Cal.App.2d 321, 325, 235 P.2d 51.

[2–5] It comes into existence in the form punishable by law only when some overt act is committed tending to carry the common purpose into effect. It is not necessary to prove that the parties entered into a concrete written agreement or even that all the parties gathered together at one time for a mutual and immediate discussion and agreement. It can happen that the agreement be arrived at in piecemeal fashion. It is sufficient if by either direct or circumstantial evidence, or both, the trier of fact is convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the unlawful agreement did, in fact, come into existence and that while it was still in existence an overt act pursuant to the unlawful conspiracy purpose was committed. People v. Goldberg, 152 Cal.App.2d 562, 568, 314 P.2d 151; People v. Curtis, supra; People v. Jones, 136 Cal.App. 722, 726, 29 P.2d 902; People v. Fratianno, 132 Cal.App.2d 610, 624, 625, 282 P.2d 1002.

"As a general rule, a conspiracy can only be established by circumstantial evidence 'for, as the courts have said, it is not often that the direct fact of an unlawful design which is the essence of a conspiracy can be proved otherwise than by the establishment of independent facts, bearing more or less closely or remotely upon the common design (5 Cal.Jur. 521); and it is not necessary to show that the parties met and actually agreed to undertake the performance of the unlawful acts (citing authority), nor that they had previously arranged a detailed plan * * * for the execution of the conspiracy'." People v. Steccone, 36 Cal.2d 234, 238, 223 P.2d 17, 19.

[6, 7] Jackson contends he only came in after the commencement of the conspiracy and that, therefore, he was only guilty of independent unlawful acts. The evidence sufficiently supports the implied finding of the court that Jackson did act with other members of the conspiracy in furtherance of its purposes and with knowledge of the existence of the conspiracy. Where a conspiracy has already been formed and at a later date a stranger to the original conspiracy associates himself with the conspirators, and with knowledge of the conspiracy joins with the others in committing overt acts in furtherance of the unlawful purpose, he is guilty as a member of the conspiracy.

"It is of course true that mere association with the perpetrator of a crime is not sufficient to prove a criminal conspiracy. Dong Haw v. Superior Court, 81 Cal.App.2d 153, 183 P.2d 724. An entirely different situation may arise, however, when it is shown that a conspiracy is already in existence and that acts are being committed in furtherance thereof." People v. Griffin, 98 Cal.App.2d 1, 39, (17), 219 P.2d 519, 542.

[8] Jackson also contends that he withdrew from the conspiracy and therefore should be exculpated from responsibility therefor. The evidence shows that Jackson was actively identified with at least 14 of the transactions detailed in the testimony, and the evidence is also sufficient to support the finding that he was fully aware of the existence of the conspiracy during most of those transactions. There was no conclusive proof that Jackson ever withdrew from the conspiracy at any time but, even if he had withdrawn, he had already committed acts from which the jury were entitled to conclude that he was actively participating in the conspiracy with knowledge of its purposes.

"* * * [O]ne who has joined a criminal conspiracy can only effectively withdraw therefrom by some affirmative act bringing home the fact of his withdrawal to his confederates. 'Some affirmative act bringing home the withdrawal to the knowledge of his confederates is necessary, otherwise the conspiracy once established will be presumed to continue until the ends are accomplished or its abandonment established.' (Citing cases.)" Loser v. Superior Court, 78 Cal.App.2d 30, 32(1), 177 P.2d 320, 321.

Dec. 23, 1958.

Action for a declaration that plaintiff and a defendant were partners, and for an accounting, or in the alternative for reasonable value of services rendered. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, A. E. Paonessa, J., entered judgment adverse to plaintiff and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence sustained finding that plaintiff had been compensated for all services rendered.

1. Evidence ⇐129(6)

In action for a declaration that plaintiff and defendant were partners, and for an accounting, evidence to the effect that in prior years defendant had entered into an oral agreement of partnership with a named person and later denied the agreement, and to the effect that defendant had promised another person an interest in defendant's laboratories, was properly excluded, in absence of proof or offer of proof of any common plan, scheme, habit, or usage, since it was not relevant on issue of whether defendant had entered into a partnership with plaintiff.

2. Payment ⇐73(1)

In action for a declaration that plaintiff and a defendant were partners and for an accounting, and in the alternative, for reasonable value of services rendered, evidence sustained finding that plaintiff had been compensated for all services rendered.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment for defendants in a suit for a declaration that the parties were partners and for an accounting. As an alternative, plaintiff prayed for the reasonable value of services rendered.

Defendant Elvin M. Bright, referred to as defendant, doing business as Bright Laboratories, was engaged in the development and manufacture of plastics. The court found there was no partnership; any services rendered by plaintiff were performed as an employee of defendant; defendant had terminated plaintiff's employment for cause; and plaintiff had been fully compensated for all services rendered.

Plaintiff first asserts the court erred in excluding evidence of similar transactions between defendant and other persons. He argues that the principal issue at the trial was whether a partnership existed between plaintiff and defendant and that evidence of similar transactions between defendant and other persons was relevant to that issue. The partnership at bar was alleged to be oral and to have been entered into about January 1953. The evidence excluded was to the effect that in 1949 defendant had entered into an oral agreement of partnership with one Crossman and that later he had denied the agreement, and to the effect that defendant had promised one McDonald an interest in defendant's laboratories.

[1] The evidence was properly excluded. The question here was whether defendant had entered into a partnership with plaintiff. The proffered evidence of defendant's conduct with others had no relevancy on that issue. In Lande v. Southern Cal. Freight Lines, 85 Cal.App. 2d 416, at pages 422, 423, 193 P.2d 144, 148, Mr. Justice McComb, speaking for the court, stated:

"Did the trial court commit prejudicial error in excluding evidence of contracts entered into between defendant and other persons during the period the contracts between plaintiff and defendant were negotiated, and which other contracts were similar to the contracts involved in the present litigation?

"This question must be answered in the negative. It is the general rule that in the absence of a common plan, scheme, habit or usage, contracts between different parties have no probative value in the consideration and interpretation of other and different contracts even though one of the parties may be common to both. [Citations.] * * *

"Applying the foregoing rule to the facts here involved it is apparent that the trial court properly excluded the questioned evidence. The other contracts offered were not material in determining the nature of the transaction between plaintiff and defendant. Since there was an absence of any claim that there was a common plan, scheme, habit or usage followed by plaintiff, the general rule above stated is applicable.

In the case at bar there was no proof or offer of proof of any common plan, scheme, habit, or usage; and the rulings were correct.

[2] One count of the complaint alleged that within four years defendant became indebted to plaintiff for personal services of the reasonable value of $33,466. Plaintiff asserts the finding that he had been compensated for all services rendered is without evidentiary support. The only claim in this respect is as to an item of $900.

Defendant Bright testified that from January 1, 1953 to May 14, 1954 and at one period in 1955 plaintiff worked on a project with him known as a diving board project and that the project had been abandoned. Plaintiff testified that at the time defendant dispensed with his services, about January 16, 1956, defendant "said he would dig me up, dig me up nine hundred dollars within a few days"; defendant did not say what it was to cover; within ten days defendant told him "he would have this nine hundred dollars that he could dig up for me"; defendant did not pay him the $900 or any part of it. Defendant testified further:

"Now, Mr. Bright, with reference to the date of January 16, 1956, the time you had this conversation with Mr. Overman about termination of your relationship, did you have any conversation with him then about a nine hundred dollar payment? A. Yes, I think so. No, that was, I think a day or two later.

"Q. A day or two later, did you have a conversation with him about a nine hundred dollar payment? A. Yes. * * *

"Q. And what did he say and what did you say about that subject at that time? A. He asked me about the nine hundred dollars, the nine hundred dollars that he had received a credit for on early work on the diving board project.

"Q. And is that the way he phrased it? A. As near as I can recall, yes.

"Q. And what did you say? A. I told him that as soon as the diving board project had reached a point where stock would be issued to all of the people involved in that program, that he would either receive his stock or he would get his nine hundred dollars but that in the meantime I would contact the other people in Recreation Products to see if anything could be done about paying him the nine hundred dollars at that time.

"Q. Anything else? A. I think that covers it all.

"Q. Had you mentioned Recreational Products Corporation to him before then as a corporation? A. Yes.

"Q. When for the first time did you do that? A. I don't remember.

"Q. Did you later have any further conversation with him about any nine hundred dollars? A. Yes. He called and asked about it after that.

"Q. But the nine hundred dollars was supposedly to cover whatever he had done in connection with the diving board project? A. That's right.

"Q. Was any portion of nine hundred dollars or any other sum ever paid to him? A. No.

"Q. By Recreational Products Corporation or Bright Laboratories or anyone else as far as you know? A. No.

"Q. Did you at that time have any conversation with him as to how you had arrived at the sum of nine hundred dollars on the diving board? A. No.

"Q. Nor he to you. Is that right? A. No."

The foregoing appears to be all the evidence on the point.

The court could infer from the testimony of defendant that the services rendered in connection with the diving board project had been rendered by plaintiff to Recreational Products Corporation; that plaintiff was to be paid for the services only when the project had reached a point when stock could be issued to the people involved in the program; that at that time plaintiff would receive either stock or $900; and, since the project had been abandoned, nothing was owing to plaintiff. The evidence supports the finding that plaintiff had been compensated for all services rendered to defendant.

No other points are urged.

PEEK, Acting Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by defendants from an adverse judgment in an action to recover the value of timber alleged to have been removed from plaintiffs' property under a timber sales agreement.

The complaint alleged that on July 3, 1948, plaintiffs and defendants entered into a written agreement whereby defendants agreed to sell and plaintiffs agreed to buy certain land located in Mendocino County on which was growing merchantable timber; that the contract provided the rights of plaintiffs as purchasers of the land would be subject to a timber sales contract, dated February 7, 1946, between defendants and S. C. Giles & Company, hereinafter referred to as Giles; that the contract between the parties hereto contained the further provision that defendants reserved the right to cut timber on the land for a period of six years following the execution of the agreement for the sum of $2.50 per thousand board feet; that thereafter plaintiffs paid the purchase price in full, and defendants delivered to them a grant deed; that by virtue of said deed plaintiffs are the owners of the land and the timber thereon, subject only to the right of Giles; that defendants have no right, title or interest in the same except the right to cut timber as previously alleged for the sum of $2.50 per thousand; that defendants cut 3,140,452 board feet, for which no payment was made; and that there is now owing to plaintiffs the sum of $7,851.12. The answer admitted the execution of the contract but denied that plaintiffs owned the land and timber subject only to the rights of Giles or that they had no right to cut timber except upon the payment of $2.50 per thousand.

The rights of the parties are predicated primarily upon the written document referred to in the pleadings. There is no dispute concerning the facts, all of which were stipulated to by respective counsel at the outset of the hearing. Such stipulations show additionally that the timber purchased by Giles had been paid for in full at the time of the execution of that contract; that Giles failed to cut 1,500,000 feet per year as specified in said contract; and that at the time defendants began cutting timber, more than five years had elapsed since the execution of their contract with Giles. Hence they had failed to comply with the terms of their contract.

At the conclusion of the trial the court found the allegations of plaintiffs' complaint were true and that the allegations of defendants' answer were untrue and gave judgment in favor of plaintiffs for the amount of the timber cut and removed by defendants.

It is defendants' contention that the timber cut by them was not timber contemplated under their contract with plaintiffs; that since Giles, under its contract with defendants, cut approximately 3,500,000 feet less than provided in their contract with the Thompsons, therefore the 3,000,000 feet cut and removed by defendants was timber which remained after Giles had abandoned its operation, and consequently did not come under the agreement between plaintiffs and defendants.

Defendants further argue that since there was an absolute sale of the timber to Giles on February 7, 1946, title to such timber became severed from the land at that moment, and hence plaintiffs could acquire no rights therein by the deed from defendants in January of 1949. True that deed did transfer title to plaintiffs to all timber in excess of 7,500,000 feet, but as noted by the court in the case of Peterson v. Gibbs, 147 Cal. 1, 81 P. 121, which is cited and relied upon by both parties, "while there is much apparent conflict in the decisions as to the proper construction of a contract for the sale of standing trees to be removed, it is well settled that such a sale may be absolute, and the agreement to remove within a specified or reasonable time merely a covenant, in which case the timber remains the property of the purchaser, although not removed within the specified time." 147 Cal. at page 6, 81 P. at page 123. The court therein further noted that the failure of the purchaser to seasonably remove timber does not of itself operate to forfeit his title thereto. Although the court therein does apparently imply that a failure to remove timber might work a forfeiture where the terms of the timber contract indicate less than an absolute conveyance, nevertheless in all cases it is essentially a question of the construction of the contract of sale.

Here the plaintiffs have clearly shown their title to the land subject only to the contract between Giles and the defendants, and since that contract contained no provision relative to any reversionary interest, nor did the court so find, Giles must be considered the owner of the 7,500,000 or balance thereof.

It necessarily follows that in the absence of any showing whatsoever by defendants that the timber cut by them was that to which Giles holds title, the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed.

The judgment is affirmed.

Defendant was convicted of unlawful possession of marijuana. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Richard C. Fildew, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that since search of defendant's person was predicated on his consent and guilt was predicated on finding of marijuana on defendant's person as a result of such search and informer played no part in criminal act and was not a material witness on issue of guilt, refusal to require disclosure of identity of informer did not deprive defendant of a fair trial.

Horace L. Faulkner, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VALLEE, Justice.

In a nonjury trial defendant was convicted of possession of marijuana. He appeals from the judgment. The specifications of error appear to be that the police unlawfully searched defendant; his consent to the search was involuntary; the court erred in not compelling disclosure of an informer.

About 3:25 p. m. on January 22, 1958, two police officers received information from an informer that a man named Horace was living at 7773 Parmalee Street, Los Angeles, and that he was in possession of and dealing in marijuana. The informer gave the officers a vague description of defendant.

About 15 minutes later the officers went to 7773 Parmalee Street. They knocked on the door of the lower apartment. A feminine voice asked who was there. The officers identified themselves and asked the female to come to the door. In a few seconds the door was opened by a woman named Ann. The officers asked Ann if Horace was at home. She said he was not. They asked if they might enter. She said they might, and they did. About 5 or 10 minutes later defendant entered the apartment. He asked the officers who they were. They identified themselves and stated they had information he was dealing in narcotics. Defendant said he knew nothing about narcotics. One of the officers asked defendant if they could search him and the premises. Defendant said, "Sure, that is all right. We might as well get this cleared up." Defendant testified one of the officers asked him if he minded "if he searched"; that he replied no, he did not mind.

One of the officers searched defendant and found a package containing brown paper-wrapped cigarettes in a trouser pocket. The officer asked defendant where he had received them. Defendant stated he had just bought them, that he had given a fellow $4 for them. The cigarettes contained marijuana. No search was made of the premises. The officers did not have a warrant for defendant's arrest or a search warrant.

[1–3] The evidence was not obtained by an unlawful search. One can freely consent to a search of his person; and having done so, any search or taking of evidence pursuant to his consent is not unlawful and his constitutional rights are not violated. Whether in a given case the consent was voluntary is a question of fact. People v. Michael, 45 Cal.2d 751, 753, 290 P.2d 852. One of the arresting officers testified the consent to the search was freely and voluntarily given. Defendant testified but he did not assert the officers used any force or violence to obtain his consent. The evidence justified the trial court in concluding that defendant voluntarily consented to the search.

Counsel for defendant asked the officer who searched defendant the name of the informer. The People's objection to the question was sustained. Defendant's motion to strike the testimony of the officer concerning the information he had received from the informer was denied; his objection to reception of the cigarettes in evidence was overruled; and his motion to strike the testimony of the officer in its entirety was denied. Apparently relying on Priestly v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39, defendant contends the search and his arrest were based on the information from the informer, and consequently it was prejudicial error not to require disclosure of the identity of the informer and to deny the motion to strike the testimony of the officer.

[4–6] If the only evidence of guilt was illegally obtained, the judgment is without support. Priestly v. Superior Court, supra. However, if there is other competent evidence of guilt, the evidence supports the judgment. Mitchell v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 827, 330 P.2d 48. Here neither the search nor the finding of guilt was predicated on the information claimed to have been received from the informer. The search was predicated on defendant's consent to the search of his person. Guilt was predicated on the finding of marijuana on his person.

People v. McShann, 50 Cal.2d 33, 330 P.2d 33, 36:

> "A mere informer has a limited role. 'When such a person is truly an informant he simply points the finger of suspicion toward a person who has violated the law. He puts the wheels in motion which cause the defendant to be suspected and perhaps arrested, but he plays no part in the criminal act with which the defendant is later charged.' [Citation.] His identity is ordinarily not necessary to the defendant's case, and the privilege against disclosure properly applies. When it appears from the evidence, however, that the informer is also a material witness on the issue of guilt, his identity is relevant and may be helpful to the defendant. Nondisclosure would deprive him of a fair trial. Thus, when it appears from the evidence that the informer is a material witness on the issue of guilt and the accused seeks disclosure on cross-examination, the People must either disclose his identity or incur a dismissal."

In the present case the informer played no part in the criminal act; he was not a material witness on the issue of guilt and his identity was not relevant. Nondisclosure did not deprive defendant of a fair trial.

Judgment affirmed.

County in which contract sued on is made and is to be performed is proper county for trial of action. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

4. Venue ⇐7

Riverside county, being place where contract was entered into as well as place where it was to be performed, was proper county for trial of action brought by plaintiff who had executed crop mortgage and deed of trust on land to secure advances from defendant for financing of growing and harvesting of produce, to recover balance allegedly due for farm produce sold by defendant as commission merchants for account of plaintiffs and to compel satisfaction of the crop mortgage and reconveyance of the deed of trust.

Charles Chorna, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank E. Carleton, Indio, for respondents.

SHEPARD, Justice.

Plaintiffs filed this action in Riverside County and alleged the delivery to defendants of farm produce from plaintiffs' ranch in Riverside County for resale by defendants as commission merchants for the account of plaintiffs, and that there is a balance of unpaid indebtedness therefor due to plaintiffs.

The complaint also alleges the execution of a crop mortgage and a deed of trust on said lands to secure advances from defendants to plaintiffs for financing the growing and harvesting of said produce; that such advances have all been repaid by accumulation of credit to plaintiffs from such sales; that defendants refuse to clear plaintiffs' title from the cloud of the crop mortgage and deed of trust, and pray for compulsory satisfaction of the crop mortgage; reconveyance of the deed of trust; injunction pendente lite; damages; and judgment for unpaid money due from defendants to plaintiffs.

Defendants appeared, filed a demurrer, an affidavit of merits and of residence in Los Angeles County, and a notice of motion for change of venue to Los Angeles County. Plaintiffs filed a counter-affidavit to the effect that the agreement, the deed of trust, and the promissory note evidencing the indebtedness secured by it and the chattel mortgage, were all made, executed, entered into and delivered in Riverside County, and payment for all produce was to be made in Riverside County. The defendants' allegations of residence in Los Angeles County and the plaintiffs' allegations that the contract was made, executed and delivered, and to be performed in Riverside County are uncontradicted.

Upon presentation, the motion for change of venue was denied and defendants appeal from that order.

Code of Civil Procedure, § 395, provides in part as follows:

> "When a defendant has contracted to perform an obligation in a particular county, either the county where such obligation is to be performed, or in which the contract in fact was entered into, or the county in which the defendant, or any such defendant, resides at the commencement of the action, shall be a proper county for the trial of an action founded on such obligation, and the county in which such obligation is incurred shall be deemed to be the county in which it is to be performed unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary."

[1] On a motion for change of venue, if there be any conflict as to facts, the doubt must be resolved in favor of the prevailing party since decisions on questions of fact are for the trial court. Hale v. Bohannon, 38 Cal.2d 458, 466(7), 241 P.2d 4; Mitchell v. Griffin, 142 Cal.App.2d 811, 814(4), 299 P.2d 303.

[2] It will be noted that the county where the contract is made is deemed to be the county where it is to be performed unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary. Code of Civ.Proc. § 395; Mitchell v. Griffin, supra, 142 Cal. App.2d at page 814(3), 299 P.2d 303; Dawson v. Goff, 43 Cal.2d 310, 315(3), 273 P.2d 1.

[3] The county in which the contract sued on is made and is to be performed is a proper county for trial of the action (Hale v. Bohannon, supra, 38 Cal.2d at page 470(17), 241 P.2d 4; Dawson v. Goff, supra, (1b); Campbell v. Clifford, 52 Cal. App.2d 615, 618, 126 P.2d 887; Wilson v. Scannavino, 159 Cal.App.2d 369, 324 P.2d 350.

[4] Riverside County being the place where the contract was entered into, as well as the place where it was to be performed, is a proper county for trial and the trial court's order was correct.

Counsel for respondents also makes the point that defendants are an association within the meaning of article XII, section 16 of the California Constitution, which authorizes action against a corporation or an association in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or obligation or liability arises, or breach occurs. In view of what has been said about the effect of Code of Civil Procedure, § 395 on venue in this case, we deem it unnecessary to pass on that point.

The order denying defendants' motion for change of venue is affirmed.

Civ. 22895.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 16, 1958.

Action for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Burnett Wolfson, J., the materialman appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that under statute providing that no mechanic's lien shall bind any property for longer period than ninety days after the same has been filed, unless within that time proceedings to enforce lien have been commenced in a proper court and a "notice of pendency of such proceedings" has been filed, purpose of notice of lis pendens is to give constructive notice and nothing more, and omission to record lis pendens was not jurisdictional and was not fatal as to action to foreclose mechanic's lien as against owner of property.

Judgment reversed.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien. It was instituted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County by plaintiff against John S. Francis, a general contractor and Self-Realization Fellowship Church, Inc. Subsequent to the commencement of the action, defendant John S. Francis received a discharge in bankruptcy, and as to him, the action was dismissed.

[1] The material and relevant facts are that in June, 1955, defendant Self-Realization Fellowship Church, Inc., entered into a contract with defendant John S. Francis, a licensed contractor, under the terms of which the latter would erect a classroom and printshop building on property belonging to defendant church. Defendant contractor agreed to furnish all necessary labor and materials to be used in the construction of said building. The church paid the contractor the full cost of materials and labor in advance of the construction of the aforesaid building. Instead of using this money on the church job, defendant contractor applied the money received by him to liquidate other obligations.

On December 30, 1955, a claim of lien against defendant church was recorded by plaintiff lumber company pursuant to the provisions of Section 1193.1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The claim covered certain building materials used in the construction of the foregoing building, and for which materials there remained an unpaid balance of $4,050.82. The instant action to foreclose on the mechanic's lien was filed on March 27, 1956, within 90 days after filing of the claim of lien as required by Section 1198.1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. However, no notice of pendency of the present action was filed until May 9, 1956. This was more than 90 days after recordation of the claim of lien as provided for in Section 1198.1(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In the court below, plaintiff lumber company and defendant church agreed that no issues of fact were involved in the case at bar, and that the sole issue was one of law. Thereupon, they entered into a written stipulation which in part, provided that all of the allegations in the complaint were true and that the matter might stand submitted on the pleadings and papers on file therein. The stipulation further provided that the sole issue between the parties was the contention of defendant church that the recording of a notice of pendency of action more than 90 days after the recordation of the claim of lien herein barred the further prosecution of this action. By an oral stipulation in open court on April 22, 1957, plaintiff acknowledged that Self-Realization Fellowship Church, Inc., had paid the full price of materials and labor for the construction of the buildings in question and that said moneys had been paid to John S. Francis, the general contractor.

The trial court held that the action to foreclose the claim of lien was barred by Section 1198.1(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure in that a notice of pendency of action was not filed within 90 days after recordation of the claim of lien. Judgment was accordingly entered for defendant church, from which plaintiff lumber company prosecutes this appeal.

It is conceded that the sole issue presented on this appeal involves the proper construction to be given to Section 1198.1 (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1953. As so amended, that section now reads:

> "(a) No lien provided for in this chapter binds any property for a longer period than 90 days after the same has been filed except as hereinafter provided, unless within that time, proceedings to enforce the same be commenced in a proper court and a notice of pendency of such proceedings be filed as provided in Section 409." (Emphasis added.)

The change which the 1953 amendment made in the aforesaid section and which is important on this appeal, was the addition of the above italicized phrase "and a notice of pendency of such proceedings be filed as provided in Section 409". It is appellant's contention that an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien is not barred as against a party to that action by failure to file a notice of the pendency of the action, while respondent earnestly insists that the section in question is jurisdictional.

It is true, as urged by respondent, that "In the construction of a statute or an instrument, the office of the Judge is simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to insert what has been omitted, or to omit what has been inserted * * *" (Code Civ.Proc. Sec. 1858). However, this is followed by Section 1859 of the same code which provides that "In the construction of a statute the intention of the Legislature * * * is to be pursued, if possible".

It is noteworthy that in the 1953 amendment to the code section here in question, the legislature added the language, "and a notice of pendency of such proceeding be filed as provided in Section 409". Obviously, reference must be had to Section 409 to determine the scope of the requirement imposed upon the lien claimant. Section 409 clearly and unequivocally provides that "from the time of filing such notice for record only, shall a purchaser or encumbrancer of the property affected thereby be deemed to have constructive notice of the pendency of the action * * *".

In the case of Lee v. Silva, 197 Cal. 364, 373, 240 P. 1015, 1018, our Supreme Court stated that, "The purpose of a lis pendens is merely to furnish a means of notifying all persons of the pendency of an action, and thereby to bind any person who may acquire an interest in property, subsequent to the institution of the action, by any judgment which may be secured in the action affecting the property."

In Blackburn v. Bucksport, etc., R. R. Co., 7 Cal.App. 649, 653, 654, 95 P. 668, 670, in holding that failure to record a lis pendens was immaterial as against a party to the action who had actual notice of its pendency, and participated in it, as did respondent herein, the court had this to say: "* * * it is unimportant whether a lis pendens was or was not recorded, so far as this appellant is concerned. He voluntarily submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court in the case, and we do not think, as we have already indicated, that the mere omission to file for record the notice of the pendency of the action affects the question of the court's jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the litigation. In other words, we do not think, as counsel's argument upon this point necessarily assumes, that the filing of the notice of the pendency of the action with the county recorder is an essential prerequisite to investing the court with jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a suit in which the recordation of such a notice is required. A lis pendens, or the filing for record with the recorder of a notice of the pendency of a suit involving the title to or right of possession of real property, is the mode substituted by the Legislature for the constructive notice to all the world of the pendency of such an action which formerly arose ipso facto, upon the institution of the suit. Thus 'a purchaser or encumbrancer of property, instead of being required to examine all the suits pending in the courts to ascertain whether any of them relate to or affect the real estate he is negotiating about, has now only to examine the notices of lis pendens filed in the recorder's office of the county where the real estate is situated.' Sampson v. Ohleyer, 22 Cal. [200], 211. The purpose of the legislature was thus to furnish the most certain means of notifying all persons of the pendency of the action and thereby warning them against attempting to acquire a legal or equitable interest in the property concerning which the suit was brought, and to bind such persons as might acquire any interest in the property in controversy after the recording of the notice by any judgment which might be secured affecting said property. This is all that the Legislature intended by the present mode of giving constructive notice of the pendency of such actions, and the legislation does not, as we before observed, nor was it intended that it should, affect in the slightest degree the question of the court's jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit or of the persons of the parties thereto." (Emphasis added.) See also Housing Authority of City of Oakland v. Forbes, 51 Cal.App.2d 1, 9, 10, 124 P.2d 194.

In actions to quiet title in favor of an adverse possessor (Code Civ.Proc. Sec. 749), wherein the section makes it compulsory within ten days after the filing of a complaint to file a notice of pendency of the action, it has been held that failure to file such notice is immaterial as to a party to the action (Blackburn v. Bucksport, etc., R. R. Co., supra, 7 Cal.App. at page 652, 95 P. at page 669).

Section 755 of the Code of Civil Procedure dealing with actions for partition provides that, "Immediately after filing the complaint in the Superior Court, the plaintiff must record * * * a notice of the pendency of the action * * *" (Emphasis added). In Rutledge v. Rutledge, 119 Cal.App.2d 114, 120, 259 P.2d 79, it was held that a party to the action could not assert as a defense the failure to file the aforesaid notice.

Section 1243 of the Code of Civil Procedure which concerns the right of eminent domain declares that, "A lis pendens shall be filed at the time of the commencement of the action * * *". (Emphasis added.) Again, a party to the action was denied the right to assert as a defense, the failure to file such notice (Housing Authority of City of Oakland v. Forbes, supra, 51 Cal.App. 2d at pages 9, 10, 124 P.2d at pages 198, 199).

[2] Manifestly, the legislative history of a statute or amendments thereto is helpful in determining the intent of the legislature. With regard to the 1953 amendment of Section 1198.1 of the Code of Civil Procedure by adding thereto the phrase here in question, "and a notice of pendency of such proceedings be filed as provided in Section 409", we have examined Senate Interim Judiciary Committee Report on the proposed amendment above set forth (Senate Interim Judiciary Committee Report, pp. 116, 118. Appendix to Journal of the Senate, Regular Session, 1953, Vol. 2). In this report, the legislative interim committee discusses the historical background of the law governing foreclosure of mechanic's liens, and throughout the report enumerates the difficulties encountered by the "purchaser of property or lender on property" under the then existing provisions of Section 1198.1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. As indicative of the legislative intention manifested by the aforesaid report, we find therein the following:

> "The provision in Section 1198.1 that no such lien shall be binding for more than 90 days 'unless proceedings be commenced in a proper court within that time to enforce the same' is the same as appeared in Section 1190 of the same code, when enacted in 1872. And certainly in 1872 there was little extra burden imposed upon those who had to determine whether the lien, because an action was commenced, continued in existence beyond 90 days. In those days the county clerk's office was probably across the hall, or downstairs, from the recorder's office, providing a quick and easy way to determine whether an action had been filed.

"It was not until 1929 that the Legislature, by an amendment to Section 29 of the Municipal Court Act, provided that such courts should have jurisdiction over mechanics' liens foreclosures. (Stats.1929, page 838; now C.C.P. Sec. 89.) This move, together with the great growth of our State and the increased number of municipal courts, puts the statute in question in a different light than it appeared when enacted originally, in 1872.

"The purchaser of property or lender on property in Los Angeles County, to protect himself against a pending action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, must search the records in 16 different municipal courts. These 16 separate municipal courts are located within a radius of some 30 miles from the Hall of Records in downtown Los Angeles. He would have to cover a total distance of well over 200 miles, and it would undoubtedly take him at least two days to make the necessary search.

"Nor is the problem one unique to Los Angeles County. Other counties have municipal courts located away from the county offices. In Alameda County, for example, there is a municipal court in the City of Alameda, one in Berkeley, one in Oakland and one in San Leandro." (Emphasis added.)

Then, after noting the constitutional mandate that the legislature shall provide speedy and efficient enforcement of mechanic's liens, the Legislative Committee Report concludes: "Admittedly, it is somewhat easier not to file a lis pendens than to file one. On the other hand, the heavy burden now imposed upon prospective purchasers or lenders would seem to weigh heavier in the scales. And it should be kept in mind that no special obligations are being created; the proposal would simply extend to this group the policy of the law, as expressed in Code of Civil Procedure Section 409, that filing an action 'affecting the title to or the right of possession of real property' does not operate as constructive notice unless a notice of pendency thereof is recorded." (Emphasis added.) To us it seems clear that the legislature was not concerned with giving additional notice to a party to the action, who already has notice by service of the complaint upon him, but was concerned solely with extending to purchasers or encumbrancers the protection afforded by the provisions of Section 409 of the Code of Civil Procedure by requiring the filing of the notice before constructive notice is deemed given to such purchaser or encumbrancer, and not for the protection of the parties to the action, who already have notice of the pendency of the lien, the claim made by it, and the action seeking to foreclose the same. We are satisfied that the purpose of a notice of lis pendens under the mechanic's lien law is to perform its usual office, to give constructive notice, nothing more. It must be presumed that the legislature had knowledge of the cases cited herein and others so holding, and had the lawmakers intended that the phrase here in question and added to Code of Civil Procedure Section 409 should affect, even in the slightest degree the courts' jurisdiction of the subject matter of the suit or of the persons of the parties thereto, they would have so indicated. Our holding herein is of course, not to be understood as waiving the requirement of notice in cases to which the statute properly applies, viz. persons who may, subsequent to the recordation of the lien or filing of an action to foreclose the same, seek to acquire rights in the property, but that it is not intended to be jurisdictional insofar as the owner of the property is concerned, because he has had notice of the action.

It is also noteworthy that the Supreme Courts of other states have also held, under like or similar provisions as the 1953 amendment here under consideration, that the omission to record the lis pendens is not jurisdictional and not fatal to a cause of action to foreclose a mechanic's lien as against the owner of the property. See Laverentz v. Craig, 74 Colo. 297, 225 P. 250; Whitehead & Kales Co. v. Tann, 233 Mich. 597, 208 N.W. 148; Julius v. Callahan, 63 Minn. 154, 65 N.W. 267.

Respondent relies heavily upon the case of R. M. Hacker Co. v. Hollymount Bowl, 146 Cal.App.2d Supp. 875, 303 P.2d 387, decided by the Appellate Department of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. We have carefully considered the cited case, but cannot reconcile ourselves with the conclusion reached therein.

In the light of the decisions we have herein cited together with the legislative history of the amendment as above narrated, none of which are cited or discussed in the Superior Court Appellate Department decision, we are persuaded that the aforesaid decisions and legislative history in this state together with the decisions in other jurisdictions, which we have set forth, point unerringly to the conclusion we have herein arrived at.

[3] Respondent urges that strict construction of the statute here in question is justified if not required by equitable considerations. That if appellant prevails in this action respondent church will be compelled to pay twice for the materials furnished. Conceding that the general rule is and has been that mechanic's lien law is remedial in character and should be liberally construed in its entirety with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice (Hendrickson v. Bertelson, 1 Cal.2d 430, 432, 35 P.2d 318), respondent nevertheless, earnestly argues that the legislature is equally bound to consider and protect the rights of owners of property which may be affected by such liens (Diamond Match Co. v. Sanitary Fruit Co., 70 Cal. App. 695, 701, 234 P. 322). We are impressed that the legislature has met that obligation. Several methods are provided whereby the property owner may protect himself against the filing of mechanic's liens. The latter may, (1) require the contractor to furnish him with a bond (Code Civ.Proc. Sec. 1185.1); (2) require affirmative evidence that the material man's bills and laborers' wages have been paid, as the owner makes each installment payment to the contractor; and, (3) withhold a portion of the funds until a notice of completion has been recorded and thirty days have expired after such recordation. Respondent availed itself of none of these available remedies but instead, paid the contractor the entire cost of materials and labor in advance of the construction of the classroom and printshop building.

The judgment is reversed.

T. L. MUELLER, as Executor of the Last Will and Testament of Ellery D. Marshall, deceased, Robert Davies, William E. Davies and Alva Davies Jensen, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Josephine MARSHALL and Howard Hanney Marshall, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 23322.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 18, 1958.

Action by executor of will and beneficiaries for annulment of quitclaim deed executed by decedent in favor of his brother and his brother's wife. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, George Francis, J., rendered judgment for executor and beneficiaries, and brother and his wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that where decedent and brother executed deeds to their properties to each other under agreement whereby survivor would get both pieces of property but that either one could dispose of property at any time he wanted, brother sold his property, destroyed deed in favor of decedent and put bonds bought with proceeds in safe deposit box in envelope marked that in case of accident property belong to decedent, and decedent allegedly accidently tore deed to his property and handed pieces to brother, deeds were testamentary to character, there was no intention on part of either grantor to convey vested interest in his property and there was no effective delivery of decedent's deed to brother.

Affirmed.

1. Deeds ⇐178, 208(1), 210

In action by executor of will and beneficiaries named therein for annulment of quitclaim deed executed by decedent in favor of his brother and his brother's wife, evidence sustained finding that decedent and brother executed quitclaim deeds on their properties in favor of the other for purpose of avoiding proceedings in probate, that agreement was canceled by mutual consent, that brother returned decedent's deed and decedent tore it into pieces and that there was no consideration for decedent's deed, that neither decedent nor brother intended by his deed to divest himself of title or to convey any present interest to the other and that each intended that his deed would not become operative unless he should predecease the other.

2. Deeds ⇐56(2)

Where decedent and brother executed deeds to their properties to each other under agreement whereby survivor would get both pieces of property but that either one could dispose of property at any time he wanted, brother sold his property, destroyed deed in favor of decedent and put bonds bought with proceeds in safe deposit box in envelope, marked that in case of accident property belonged to decedent, and decedent allegedly accidentally tore deed to his property and handed pieces to brother, deeds were testamentary in character, there was no intention on part of either grantor to convey vested interest in his property and there was no effective delivery of decedent's deed to brother.

3. Evidence ⇐589

In action by executor of will and beneficiaries for annulment of quitclaim deed executed by decedent in favor of his brother and his brother's wife, even though there was no direct evidence contradicting testimony of brother that deed executed by decedent to brother had been torn accidentally, and that decedent gave pieces to brother, court was not required to give his testimony full credit where brother stated that pieces of deed were pasted together almost a year before deceased died and instrument was not recorded until after decedent's death.

4. Evidence ⇐269(2)

In action by executor of will and beneficiaries for annulment of quitclaim deed executed by decedent in favor of his brother and his brother's wife, wherein brother testified that decedent had told him that he had accidentally torn deed which he allegedly handed to brother, testimony of executor that decedent had stated to him five days thereafter that decedent had intentionally torn the deed was properly admitted over objection of hearsay.

5. Evidence ⇐269(1)

The hearsay rule does not exclude evidence of declarations where they are offered to prove intention of the actor.

6. Deeds ⇐181

Whether deed was torn accidentally or purposely, if grantor gave pieces to grantee intending that they should be put together and serve as a deed, document as restored would have been no more and no less effective than it was before the mutilation.

W. E. Starke, San Diego, for appellants.

Clifton A. Hix, Elizabeth Hix, San Pedro, Raymond Choate, Wilmington, for respondents.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

This action is by Mueller as executor of the will of Ellery D. Marshall, deceased, and by nephews and a niece of the decedent who are beneficiaries under his will, the purpose of the action being to procure the annulment of a quitclaim deed executed by decedent in favor of his brother, Howard Marshall, and Howard's wife. Judgment was in favor of plaintiffs and defendants appeal. We find no merit whatever in the appeal.

[1] The court found that on November 9, 1950, Ellery owned a lot in Wilmington, California; Howard owned real property in San Diego; on or about the said date, Ellery and Howard agreed that each would execute a quitclaim deed of his property in favor of the other for the sole purpose of avoiding proceedings in probate. The deeds were executed and were placed by Howard in a safety deposit box to which only he and his wife had access; in June 1954, the agreement was cancelled by mutual consent and Howard sold his San Diego property; later, at the request of Ellery, Howard returned Ellery's deed and Ellery tore it into pieces, twice lengthwise and twice crosswise; Ellery died August 19, 1956, leaving a will by which $10 was bequeathed to Howard and the remainder of his estate to the said nephews and niece. Two days after Ellery's death, Howard obtained possession of the pieces of the deed, took them to the office of his attorney who taped them together and caused the document to be placed of record August 21, 1956, two days after Ellery's death. Howard and his wife then took possession of the Wilmington property and have lived there ever since. The court found the facts as we have related them, that there was no consideration for Ellery's deed, neither he nor Howard intended by his deed to divest himself of title or to convey any present interest to the other and that each intended that his deed would not become operative unless he should predecease the other. The findings have ample support in the evidence. Howard, called under section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, testified that the purpose and agreement was "whoever went first, why the last would have it. * * * Either one, yes, could dispose of the property at any time they wanted"; he was keeping the deed for Ellery; the survivor would get both pieces of property; when he sold his property he destroyed the deed in favor of Ellery; he bought bonds with the proceeds, put them in the safe deposit box in an envelope marked "in case of accident this property belongs to E. D. Marshall." Howard also testified that October 19, 1955, Ellery handed him the torn pieces of the deed "It was tore just like that—he just said he tore it accidentally"; his attorney pasted the pieces together and later had the instrument recorded.

[2] From the facts testified to by Howard with respect to the original transaction it resulted as a matter of law that the deeds were testamentary in character, there was no intention on the part of either grantor to convey a present interest in his property and therefore there was no effective delivery of Ellery's deed to Howard. 15 Cal.Jur.2d 486–487.

Howard E. Crandall testified that he was the attorney for Ellery, that at Ellery's directions he demanded of Howard a return of the deed, and it was returned in May 1954, that he prepared Ellery's will on October 24, 1955 and that the will was admitted to probate.

Plaintiff Mueller testified that he was named as executor of Ellery's will; on the day the will was executed Ellery brought it to him and told him that he had taken his deed in favor of Howard to a bank and asked what he should do with it; an officer of the bank told him the best thing to do would be to destroy it and that he "tore" it up. "I tore it this way and I tore it around this way" (indicating a motion of tearing it). Defendants' objection to this evidence was overruled.

The probate file in the matter of Ellery's estate was received in evidence. It contains a creditor's claim for $1,194.75 presented by the County of Los Angeles, Department of Charities, duly approved by the executor and the court. It is alleged in the claim that the indebtedness is secured by a mortgage executed by Ellery on the property in question October 17, 1955, to secure a promissory note in favor of the county in the amount of all the institutional care that Ellery had received or might receive from the county.

The principal contention on appeal is that the court was required to believe the testimony of Howard that Ellery had stated to him that the deed was torn up accidentally and that he gave the pieces to Howard just two days after he had executed the note and mortgage in favor of the county. This, it is claimed, constituted a valid delivery of the deed as of that date.

[3] It is true that there was no direct evidence contradicting the testimony of Howard but we do not believe the court was required to give his testimony full credit, even though he apparently testified fully and frankly as to the circumstances under which the deeds were executed and the purpose of their execution. There was circumstantial evidence which supports the court's disbelief in Howard's testimony that Ellery gave him the pieces of the deed. Howard testified that as soon as he got the pieces of the deed from Ellery he took them to his attorney who pasted them together; that was almost a year before Ellery died and it must have seemed strange to the court that neither Ellery, Howard nor Howard's attorney realized the irregularity of pasting together the torn fragments of the deed rather than to have a new deed executed. The recorded deed shows that it was placed of record at the request of Mr. Starke, Howard's attorney, who has offices in San Diego. Although Howard testified that he took the pieces of the deed to his attorney within two days after he received them from Ellery there was no evidence that after they were pasted together they were returned and retained by him until Ellery's death, nor as to how the document got back into the hands of Mr. Starke in order for him to forward it to the recorder's office. Even if the mutilated instrument had been handed to Howard the fact that it was not recorded until after Ellery's death, considered in connection with the evidence of the original transaction, would have warranted the court in finding that Ellery did not intend to effect a present conveyance of the property and that Howard did not understand that the document would be effective during Ellery's lifetime.

[4, 5] It is contended that it was error to receive the testimony of Mueller that Ellery told him he intentionally tore up the deed. There was no error. It was in question whether the act was intentional or accidental. Ellery's statement that it was accidental was made, if at all, October 19, 1955. His statement to Mueller was made about five days later. Evidence of the intention of Ellery was provable by his statement to Mueller as well as by his statement to Howard. It would be a strange rule that would allow evidence of the statement of Ellery that the act was accidental and bar his statement made shortly thereafter that it was intentional. The latter statement was just as good evidence as the former one of Ellery's intention. The hearsay rule does not exclude evidence of declarations under such circumstances where they are offered to prove the intention of the actor. Whitlow v. Durst, 20 Cal.2d 523, 127 P.2d 530.

[6] It was immaterial whether the deed was torn accidentally or purposely. If there had been, originally, a valid delivery of the deed to Howard, Ellery's intentionally tearing it up would not have destroyed its efficacy. However it happened to be torn, if Ellery gave the pieces to Howard intending that they should be put together and serve as a deed, the document as restored would have been no more and no less effective than it was before the mutilation.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Gerald Dennis O'HERRIGAN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6369.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 23, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of three offenses in violation of West's Ann.Penal Code, section 337a, subdivisions 1, 2, 4, 6, relating to bookmaking, occupancy of residence for purpose of bookmaking, recording a bet or bets, and accepting a bet or bets. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, J. Howard Ziemann, J., entered judgment and an order denying a new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that the evidence sustained conviction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1144(13)

On appeal from conviction, reviewing court must accept that view of the evidence which tends to support jury's verdict, even though it is contradicted by evidence favorable to defendant.

2. Gaming ⇐98(3)

Evidence sustained conviction for three offenses in violation of subdivisions of Penal Code relating to bookmaking, occupancy of residence for purpose of bookmaking, recording a bet or bets, and accepting a bet or bets. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 337a, subds. 1, 2, 4, 6.

Oliver E. Linck, Jr., El Monte, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Jack E. Goertzen, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

In a jury trial O'Herrigan was convicted of three offenses of violation of Section 337a Penal Code, namely, subdivision I (bookmaking), subdivision II (occupancy of residence for the purpose of bookmaking), subdivision IV (recording a bet or bets) and subdivision VI (accepting a bet or bets). He made a motion for a new trial which was denied and he appeals from the judgment and the order. The sole contention on the appeal is that the evidence was legally insufficient to justify the verdicts.

[1] Since we must accept that view of the evidence which tends to support the verdicts, even though it be contradicted by evidence favorable to the defendant, the jury was required to draw reasonable inferences from the following facts: At premises numbered 11432 Elliott Avenue in El Monte there is a cottage; nearby are the Mainger Bar and a grocery; outside the grocery is a telephone in a booth; Officer Ray parked on Elliott in sight of the booth; on the first occasion he saw defendant come from the bar and go to the telephone, take the receiver off the hook, take a piece of paper from a hip pocket and then leave. Defendant repeated this operation two or three times at intervals of about twenty minutes. Defendant was not seen to dial the phone at any time. A few days later Ray observed defendant in similar activities. In this interval several persons drove up, parked, and entered premises 11432, remaining only a few minutes. On two occasions a few days later Ray observed defendant going through the same procedure; altogether he saw defendant using the telephone in the same manner eight or nine times and another officer, Barker, watched the phone booth on several days after the surveillance by Ray. Numerous people came to the residence, staying only a few minutes; on three occasions defendant went to the phone booth, apparently for a call, and never called out. On each occasion, he would take a paper from a hip pocket. On one occasion a woman approached defendant, handed him what appeared to be currency and received from defendant a white paper. The two officers saw another man enter the cottage and in a few minutes defendant went again to the phone, picked up the receiver without dialing and removed a piece of paper from his pocket. After defendant had returned to the cottage, the officers approached it and looked through a window. Defendant was seated at a small table in the kitchen, in front of him was another man who had a scratch sheet (National Daily Reporter) in front of him; the man said "Give me 2 and 2 parley on Frozen Assets in the second and Marianne in the fourth," at the same time handing defendant some currency. The officers saw defendant writing something on a little "spiral" notebook. Soon thereafter defendant left the cottage and was arrested by the officers. In the cottage the officers found the scratch sheet and the racing section of a local newspaper of that day with pen notations in the upper left hand corner. Notations were also observed on the scratch sheet and another copy was taken from defendant's pocket. On the notebook was the date and in the waste basket in a paper sack were torn fragments of paper. Pasted together they bore notations "1–2–10," "1–4–3" and "2–2." The first two were identified by the officers as indicating a race track, the number of the race and the number of the horse; the "2–2" was identified as indicating a "2 and 2 parley." These same figures appeared as an impression on the paper in the spiral notebook from which the torn fragments had been taken. There was evidence that "Frozen Assets" was a horse running in the second race at Golden Gate and "Marianne" was a horse running in the fourth race on that day. The officers found another writing which in their opinion indicated that there was due to "Bill" $14.15. The officers took from defendant's person $241.59. Defendant testified that he was by occupation a bartender, at times helped out at the Mainger Bar and he denied specifically having engaged in any bookmaking activities; the numerous persons who visited the house were friends who dropped by for brief visits. He was out of work at the time of his arrest but had no explanation of his possession of the money that was found on his person.

[2] The brief on the appeal is merely an attempt to reconcile the facts established by the evidence with the innocence of the defendant. It fails to dissipate the reasonable inferences which pointed to defendant's guilt. There is no need for us to elaborate upon them. The actions of defendant were characteristic of the activities of small-time bookmakers. Instead of using a telephone in the premises, defendant received calls at intervals of about 20 minutes, and although these activities might have been innocent, they did not stand alone. The testimony of the officers that defendant accepted a bet with money to cover it and made a notation thereof on the leaf of a notebook established to the exclusion of any other reasonable explanation that defendant was engaged in actions which constituted violations of law as charged in the information. We need only say that in view of the evidence we have related a reversal of the judgment would be without precedent.

The judgment and the order denying motion for new trial are affirmed.

J. Needham MARTIN et al., Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 5763.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 15, 1958.

Action by patient against physician who performed surgery for removal of gall bladder. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, San Bernardino County, A. D. Mitchell, J., the physician appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shepard, J., held that award of $25,000 general damages to woman who underwent surgery for removal of gall bladder on August 6, 1954 and who after operation continued to suffer pain, developed fever, inability to retain food, abdominal distention, and absence of natural bowel movement during two week stay in hospital and who after discharge from hospital continued to suffer and was readmitted for bile peritonitis and after a month long body building process, she again underwent major surgery on October 13, at which time a drainage tube was inserted which remained sticking out of her abdomen until May of 1955, during all of which time she suffered some pain, discomfort and inconvenience, was not excessive.

Judgment affirmed.

Award of $25,000 general damages to woman who underwent surgery for removal of gall bladder on August 6, 1954 and who after operation continued to suffer pain, developed fever, inability to retain food, abdominal distention, and absence of natural bowel movement during two-week stay in hospital, and who after discharge from hospital continued to suffer and was readmitted for bile peritonitis and after a month long body-building process again underwent major surgery on October 13, at which time a drainage tube was inserted which remained sticking out of her abdomen until May of 1955, during all of which time she suffered some pain, discomfort and inconvenience, was not excessive.

2. New Trial ⇐162(1)

Trial court, on proper motion, has duty of weighing evidence and making such adjustments as appear proper if it believes verdict to be excessive.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1004(1)

On appeal, insofar as claim of excessive verdict is concerned, reviewing court can only pass on question of whether verdict was, as a matter of law, excessive.

4. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18(8)

In action by patient against surgeon and others for alleged negligence in removal of gall bladder wherein there was testimony relating to patient's postoperative experience of fever, continued pain, accumulation of bile, drainage and flushing procedures found necessary, general physical deterioration, and finding by another doctor of severed parts of common bile duct with a loose catgut tie involved in scar tissue, evidence was sufficient to support implied finding of jury that surgeon severed common biliary duct and that there were strong symptoms of this fact during surgeon's postoperative attendance on patient from which surgeon should, in exercise of ordinary precaution, have known that some sort of repair or at least a laparotomy was necessary.

5. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18(6)

In action by patient against physician who performed surgery for removal of gall bladder during course of which common biliary duct was severed, doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable.

Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18(9)

In action by patient against physician arising out of surgery for removal of gall bladder, question of credibility was in the first instance one for the jury, and on motion for new trial, one for the trial judge.

7. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18(10)

In action by patient against physician who performed surgery for removal of gall bladder, instruction, that if common hepatic bile duct or common bile duct of patient was cut and tied off during operation and if such cutting and tying off was not recognized by physician who was in attendance and as a proximate result thereof, patient suffered injury, inference arose that proximate cause of occurrence was negligent conduct on part of physician, was proper.

Swing & Swing, San Bernardino, for appellant.

SHEPARD, Justice.

[1] Plaintiff-respondent Aurora Guillen (hereinafter called plaintiff) on July 2, 1954, consulted defendant-appellant Dr. J. Needham Martin (hereinafter called defendant) with an abdominal complaint that ultimately led to a diagnosis of cholelithiasis and a cholecystectomy, or surgery for removal of the gall bladder, on August 6, 1954. Defendant performed the surgery with the assistance of other doctors and nurses.

This was the plaintiff's first abdominal surgery in the area of the biliary ducts. The biliary duct system is composed of the right and left hepatic ducts which attach to and come directly out of the liver, to join together in the common hepatic duct which proceeds for about four centimeters to where it is joined by the cystic duct which connects with the gall bladder. The cystic duct itself is about four centimeters in length. From the point where the cystic duct joins the common hepatic duct the name "common bile duct" is applied until it reaches its ultimate destination about eight centimeters away at the duodenum, which is that portion of the digestive tract attached directly to the stomach. The function of the bile thus carried into the duodenum from the liver and the gall bladder is primarily to aid in the digestive functions. When the gall bladder becomes diseased it is sometimes found necessary to remove it. This is done by severing the cystic duct, removing the gall bladder, and suturing the end of the cut duct which is closest to its juncture with the common hepatic duct, so that the cystic duct becomes permanently sealed off and entirely inoperative. If the common duct or common hepatic duct should be severed and both of the severed ends ligated, the end closest to the duodenum will gradually atrophy and contract through disuse. The ligation of the end closest to the liver will cause the liver-produced bile to back up into the liver itself, causing the liver to swell and gradually disseminate its bile into the bloodstream with resulting severe jaundice and ultimate death unless the back pressure is relieved. If the ligation in this portion of the common bile duct slips off, the liver continuing to function will discharge its bile directly into the peritoneal cavity causing severe inflammation of those organs that it reaches, with resulting peritonitis and ultimate death unless prompt action is taken to correct the situation. In a cholecystectomy the operating surgeon is aware of all these things and knows that one of his primary needs is to expose and identify the cystic duct, the gall bladder, and the common hepatic and common duct, and to closely guard against severance of the common hepatic duct or the common bile duct. All of these things were also well known to defendant, and he testified that he did take such precautions.

After the operation plaintiff continued to suffer pain, developed fever, inability to retain food, abdominal distention, and absence of natural bowel movement during the entire stay in the hospital until she was discharged. On August 15, she was discharged from the hospital but continued to suffer, complained to defendant, was readmitted to the hospital, and was treated for bile peritonitis due to leakage of bile into the peritoneum. Defendant called in a consulting physician and performed another surgery of an exploratory character (laparotomy), but due to plaintiff's poor physical condition did not expose the biliary tract (area around the liver and bile ducts), but did institute drainage; large amounts of bile-like fluid were drawn from the abdominal tract. Her condition worsened to the critical stage and on September 10, at her own request, she was removed to another hospital and employed another doctor (Wetrich).

Doctor Wetrich also removed substantial amounts of bile-like fluid from the abdominal tract, instituted further drainage, and after a month-long body building process to sufficiently strengthen her that she could again endure a major operation, opened the biliary tract to view and ultimately discovered that the common bile duct had been severed and at least partly ligated; that bile was leaking from it into the peritoneal cavity; that one catgut tie was lying loose and unattached near the severed end of the common bile duct closest to the liver, which catgut tie was involved or imbedded in scar tissue. It was found that the common hepatic duct had been severed about two centimeters away from the juncture of the right and left hepatic ducts; that portion of the common hepatic duct where the cystic duct joins was missing; the severed end of the common hepatic duct was then joined to the severed end of the common bile duct (an anastomosis). This operation was performed about October 13, 1954. A drainage tube was inserted and remained sticking out of her abdomen until May of 1955, during all of which time she suffered some pain, discomfort and inconvenience, but gradually recovered.

Thereafter, an action for damages was brought by plaintiff against defendant and others. Upon trial, a verdict and judgment went for plaintiff against this defendant alone in the sum of $29,423.64. Since plaintiff proved special damages of $4,423.64 it would appear that the jury awarded $25,000 general damages.

[2, 3] The defendant complains that the award of damages was excessive. The trial court, on proper motion, has the duty of weighing the evidence and making such adjustment as appears proper if it believes the verdict to be excessive. Gardner v. Marshall, 56 Cal.App.2d 62, 66(3), 132 P.2d 833. It did not do so. On appeal, this court can only pass on the question of whether or not the verdict was, as a matter of law, excessive. After examining all the evidence we cannot say as a matter of law the $25,000 was so excessive as to require intervention by this court.

[4] Defendant next contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the implied finding of the jury that the defendant severed the common biliary duct, and that there were strong symptoms of this fact during defendant's post-operative attendance on plaintiff, from which defendant should in the exercise of ordinary precaution have known that some sort of repair or at least a laparotomy was necessary. A reading of the entire medical evidence, including testimony relating to plaintiff's post-operative experience of fever, continued pain, accumulation of bile, drainage and flushing procedures found necesary, general physical deterioration, the finding by Dr. Wetrich of the severed parts of the common bile duct, with a loose catgut tie involved in the scar tissue, the end closest to the liver with that end not ligated but leaking bile directly into the peritoneal cavity, the other end or one closest to the duodenum being ligated; the fact that all evidence can well be interpreted to mean that the defendant was the only person performing any surgery on any of the bile ducts prior to the discovery by Dr. Wetrich of the severed bile duct, furnishes sufficient evidence in our opinion for the jury to conclude that defendant did, in fact, sever the common bile duct; that there were sufficient post-operative symptoms to cause an alert physician to believe that more than normal leakage of bile was occurring into the abdominal cavity; and that an exploration of the area of the bile ducts was immediately necessary to determine the cause of these symptoms.

"A defendant's conduct must always be gauged in relation to all the other material circumstances surrounding it, and if such other circumstances admit of a reasonable doubt as to whether such questioned conduct falls within or without the bounds of ordinary care then such doubt must be resolved as a matter of fact rather than of law. [Citing cases.]" Seneris v. Haas, 45 Cal.2d 811, 823(4), 291 P.2d 915, 922, 53 A.L.R.2d 124.

"When an appellate court is confronted with the question of the sufficiency of the evidence, its only duty is to determine whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, to support the finding and judgment." The question of the credibility of witnesses is one for the trier of fact. Anglin v. Conway, 41 Cal.2d 683, 688(3) (2), 263 P.2d 1, 4.

[5] The defendant also contends that there was no basis for the application of the rule of res ipsa loquitur.

"The conditions required for the application of the doctrine are: (a) There is a basis of experience, either common to the community or brought out in evidence, from which it may reasonably be concluded that the accident is of a kind which does not normally occur unless someone has been negligent. (b) It must be caused by an agency or instrumentality within the exclusive control of the defendant. (c) It must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff. [Citing cases.]" Bauer v. Otis, 133 Cal.App.2d 439, 443, 284 P.2d 133, 136.

[6] It is our opinion that it would not be an unreasonable interpretation of all the evidence and circumstances of this case for the jury to believe that this accident is one that does not normally occur unless someone has been negligent. The defendant was in exclusive control of the surgery, the plaintiff was unconscious, there is no evidence whatever that she contributed in any way, voluntarily, to the injury. The question of the credibility of witnesses was in the first instance one for the jury, and on motion for a new trial one for the trial judge.

[7, 8] The defendant complains that the trial court should not have instructed the jury that

"If, and only in the event, you should find that there was an accidental occurrence as claimed by plaintiffs, namely, that the common hepatic bile duct or the common bile duct of plaintiff Aurora Guillen was cut and tied off during the cholecystectomy or gall bladder operation of August 6, 1954, and that the fact of such cutting and tying off was not recognized by those defendant physicians who were in attendance at that time; and if you should find that from that accidental event, as a proximate result thereof, plaintiff Aurora Guillen has suffered injury, you are instructed as follows: an inference arises that the proximate cause of the occurrence in question was some negligent conduct on the part of those defendants. * * *"

In this cause the record shows that extensive instructions were given by the court covering every phase of the application of the rule of res ipsa loquitur to this case. Most of these instructions were given at the request of the defendant, and a review of the instructions shows that, taken as a whole, the jury was fully and fairly instructed on the subject and any advantage that can be found in the instructions is on the side of the defendant rather than that of the plaintiff. Any instruction standing alone may be insufficient. The question of whether or not the defendant did, in fact, cut the bile duct was left to the decision of the jury, and the effect of the mere inference of negligence was carefully explained to the jury. "* * * [I]nstructions must be read together and harmonized." Bates v. Newman, 121 Cal.App.2d 800, 807(12b), 264 P.2d 197, 202.

It appears to us that the case was fully and fairly tried, that the complained-of rulings and instructions were proper and not unfair. While it is perfectly true that a different court or a different jury might have arrived at a different result, we cannot say that the result that was arrived at was beyond the realm of ordinary reason nor outside the law.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Jack STANPHILL, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 3328.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 23, 1958.

Prosecution for robbery and conspiracy to rob. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, C. Harold Caulfield, J., rendered judgment convicting defendant as an habitual criminal, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that where defendant's conviction as an habitual criminal depended upon proof of the nature of Oklahoma convictions, sentence as an habitual criminal was improper where documents concerning such constructions were not properly authenticated and were merely presented to trial judge at time of sentencing, without giving defendant an opportunity to question the correctness or legal competence of the authentication of the documents.

Judgment reversed in part and cause remanded with direction.

Opinion, 330 P.2d 95, vacated.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1202(1)

Where, although defendant admitted prior conviction for burglary in Oklahoma, such conviction might have been had in Oklahoma on facts not constituting burglary in California, proof of nature of Oklahoma offense and, possibly, the date of its commission, would be necessary to a determination that defendant was an habitual criminal under California statute. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 644; 21 Okl.St. Ann. § 1435; 21 Okl.St.Ann. (1937) §§ 1433, 1434, repealed Laws 1941, p. 87, § 2; Okl.St.Ann. Const. art. 5, § 54.

2. Criminal Law ⇐1202(3)

Where defendant's conviction as an habitual criminal depended upon proof of nature of Oklahoma convictions, sentence as habitual criminal was improper where documents concerning such convictions were not properly authenticated and were merely presented to trial judge at time of sentencing, without giving defendant an opportunity to question the correctness or legal competence of the authentication of the documents. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1905; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 644.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1186(1)

Where judgment and sentence were incorrect in so far as defendant was adjudged an habitual criminal, judgment would be reversed in part and remanded for retrial of issues limited to those pertaining to question whether defendant was an habitual criminal. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 644.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1216(2)

If a retrial should result in determination that defendant was an habitual criminal and a life sentence was imposed, all other terms should run concurrently with life term, and not consecutively. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 644, 669.

Edward Nelson, San Francisco, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., Victor Griffith, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Convicted of first degree robbery, committed while armed with a deadly weapon, and of conspiracy to commit robbery, with three prior convictions (one in Oklahoma in 1947 and two in California in 1951)[1], defendant was found by the trial court to be "a habitual criminal." Defendant questions this finding.

In respect to the Oklahoma conviction, the indictment charged that this defendant was convicted of the "crime of burglary, second degree * * *, a felony," that judgment thereon was rendered "on or about the 4th day of September, 1947," and that he "served a term of imprisonment therefor in the State Prison." Defendant admitted "as true the prior conviction of Felony of the date of September 4, 1947, as charged * * *."

However, it does not appear from the charge itself, nor from defendant's admission thereof, whether he was convicted of a crime which is specified by section 644 of the Penal Code as one which is used as a basis for determining that a person is "a habitual criminal." The Oklahoma statute includes in its definition of second degree burglary the doing of certain acts which would not constitute such an offense in California under our statutes.

For example, Oklahoma defines second degree burglary as breaking and entering "any * * * automobile, truck, trailer * * *" (21 Okl.St.Ann. § 1435). These are broader terms than those appearing in section 459 of our Penal Code, which uses the expression "vehicle as defined by" our Vehicle Code if "the doors of such vehicle are locked."

There is the possibility, also, that defendant may have been convicted under an earlier Oklahoma statute for an offense which would not qualify as burglary under our statute. Until their repeal in 1941, sections 1433 and 1434 of title 21 of the Oklahoma statutes defined certain entries as second degree burglary if made "with intent to commit any crime," not limited to "intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony" as in our section 459. See 21 Okl. St.Ann. (1937) §§ 1433–1434, repealed by Laws 1941, p. 87, § 2.

The repeal of sections 1433–1434 did not preclude subsequent prosecution for a violation thereof. The Oklahoma constitution provided and still provides that the repeal of a statute does not affect "any accrued right, or penalty incurred, or proceedings begun by virtue of such repealed statute." Okl.St.Ann.Const. art. 5, § 54. The applicable statute of limitations would be tolled during defendant's absence, if any, from the State of Oklahoma. 22 Okl.St.Ann. § 153.

[1] Consequently, it is possible that defendant may have been convicted in 1947 of an entry made prior to 1941 under circumstances that would not constitute burglary under our law.

Accordingly, proof of the nature of the Oklahoma offense and, possibly, the date of its commission, would be necessary to a determination that defendant is "a habitual criminal" under our statute.

[2] The record herein indicates that such proof was tendered in this case by means of certain documents which the district attorney presented to the trial judge. They consisted of certified photostatic copies of informations and commitment papers, guilty pleas of the defendant to those charges, and his commitment to the Oklahoma state penitentiary; also, a letter from the county attorney of Tulsa county, Oklahoma, to the district attorney of San Francisco outlining the details of the Oklahoma crimes. From these documents it would appear that each of the Oklahoma burglaries would have been a burglary under section 459 if committed in California.

1. The two California priors were tried together. Only one qualifies as a prior conviction "upon charges separately brought and tried," under Penal Code, section 644.

Those convictions were for attempted robbery and for violation of section 245 of the Penal Code, for each of which defendant was sentenced to and served a term of imprisonment in the state prison.

The entry in each case was for the purpose of stealing "certain personal property of value." That, at least, was a charge of an entry for the purpose of committing petit larceny.

However, these documents were not authenticated in the manner prescribed by section 1905, Code of Civil Procedure, nor by production of the originals as sanctioned by People v. Wilson, 100 Cal.App. 397, 400, 280 P. 137, nor by authenticated copies of the judgments and testimony identifying the defendant (People v. Wilson, 103 Cal. App. 420, 423–424, 284 P. 988), nor in the manner provided by section 969b, Penal Code. The plaintiff argues that section 969b has been satisfied, because the documents include a copy of the warden's receipt. The receipt is not a certification.

Moreover, the documents were merely presented to the trial judge by the district attorney at the time of sentencing. There is no indication in the record that defendant was at any time given an opportunity to question the correctness or legal competence of the authentication of the documents mentioned. Such an opportunity should have been afforded him.

Plaintiff says that because defendant admitted the Oklahoma priors as charged, there was no place during the trial where the admission of these documents in evidence would have been pertinent; indeed, their admission would have been prejudicially erroneous, citing Penal Code sections 1025 and 1093.[2] Accordingly, says plaintiff "what else could the trial judge do but accept the documents as he did in this case, inspect them to make sure the defendant was convicted of a crime which if committed in California would have been burglary under the laws of * * * California." That is not the production of evidence nor is it confrontation of the defendant with the purported "evidence" tendered, upon an issue of pivotal importance in the case. The habitual criminal, under the circumstances of this case, would be sentenced to imprisonment for life. Pen.Code, § 644. People v. Morton, 41 Cal.2d 536, 541–545, 261 P.2d 523, demonstrates that here we are not dealing with some trivial, inconsequential detail of procedure; instead, it is a matter of such great import, a formal adjudication is required.

[3] In such a case the established procedure is to reverse the judgment in part and remand for retrial of issues limited to those which pertain to the question whether or not defendant is a habitual criminal. People v. Taylor, 155 Cal.App.2d 26, 317 P.2d 167, hearing by Supreme Court denied.

[4] We note in passing that if the retrial results in a determination that defendant is a habitual criminal and a life sentence is imposed, all other terms should run concurrently with the life term, not consecutively as heretofore adjudged herein. Pen. Code, § 669; People v. Tucker, 127 Cal. App.2d 436, 437, 273 P.2d 934.

The part of the judgment adjudging defendant a habitual criminal and imposing sentence is reversed and the cause is remanded with directions to resentence defendant after the conclusion of the limited new trial on the issue of the challenged prior conviction.

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Montague BROOME, also known as Montague W. Broome and Montague Watson Broome, Deceased.

Elvira Broome DOOLAN and Ynez Broome Jones, Appellants,

v.

Marian BROOME, Respondent.

Civ. 23170.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 23, 1958.

Proceeding on objections filed by remaindermen of testamentary trust to inclusion of certain moneys from oil leases as income payable to life tenant. From an order of the Superior Court, Santa Barbara County, Atwell Westwick, J., approving and settling report and fourth account of trustees including sums of money as income, the remaindermen appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that where deed executed by decedent as grantor required grantee to pay decedent one-half of all royalties or other compensation payable to or received by grantee from any oil, gas, minerals, or carbonaceous substances which might be developed from land but grantee was not obligated to permit premises to be drilled for any minerals or to give any leases for such purposes, obligation to pay was in nature of a perpetual contractual obligation imposed upon owner of land by reason of ownership thereof and contingent right to receive payment was in nature of a perpetual contract right and such contract right was regarded as principal, although its value, if any, was measured by extent of oil supply, and sums of money received by testamentary trustee from oil leases covering land was properly allocated to income and paid to life tenant and was not distributable to remaindermen.

Order affirmed.

Cavalletto, Webster, Mullen & McCaughey, Santa Barbara, for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order approving and settling the Report and Fourth Account of the Trustees, which included certain sums of money in said Fourth Account as "income."

Appellants Elvira Broome Doolan and Ynez Broome Jones are the daughters of decedent and the remaindermen of a testamentary trust, and respondent Marian Broome is the widow of decedent and the beneficiary of the trust income for her lifetime.

The sums of money with which we are concerned in this case consist of the two following items: June 21, 1957 "Recd Fr Herbert W. Naumann ⅓ of ½ Oil Lease Rental Fr Lloyd Corporation Ltd under Lease Dtd 6/15/55 and Terminated 2/13/57 $1,466.66" and "June 21, 1957, Recd Fr Security First Natl Bank Oxnard as Escrow Agent ⅓ of ½ of Rental Recd Fr Union Oil Co under Lease Dtd 6/15/55 & Terminated 2/13/57 $848.00."

These monies were delivered into the possession of the Trustees by reason of a deed dated September 19, 1924, executed by decedent and two others as grantors (parties of the first part) and American Beet Sugar Company, a corporation, as grantee (party of the second part) in which was included the following provision: "That the said party of the second part, by acceptance of this deed agrees, and it is mutually agreed between the parties hereto, that the party of the second part, its successors and assigns, shall, respectively, account for and pay to said parties of the first part an amount equivalent to one-half (½) of all the royalties or other compensation which may become payable to or be received by or for the account of said party of the second part, its successors or assigns, respectively, for any oil, gas, minerals or carbonaceous substances, or similar product, which may be developed on said land hereinbefore described as Parcel One, or from leases on said premises for the developed of any of said products above mentioned; it is, however, expressly understood and agreed that neither said party of the second part nor its successors or assigns shall be under any obligation to permit said premises to be drilled for any oil, gas, minerals, carbonaceous substances or similar products, or to give any leases thereon for any of said purposes; but it is understood and agreed that if the party of the second part, or its successors or assigns, do permit said premises to be drilled for any of said substances or do give any lease or leases for that purpose, the terms upon which said premises shall be drilled or any leases shall be made for any of said purposes, shall be wholly within the discretion of the party of the second part, its successors or assigns."

The appellants herein filed objections to the inclusion of the monies as "income," contending in the alternative:

(1) that, as an interest in real property in Ventura County, said monies should be distributed to them outright under the provisions of Paragraph Third of decedent's will, which provided as follows: "Third: I give, devise and bequeath to my daughters Ynez Broome Jones and Elvira Doolan, one-half of my interest in real property located in Ventura County, said one-half interest to be divided between them equally, share and share alike, and in addition thereto, I give and bequeath to my said daughters the sum of $1,000.00 each."; or

(2) that said monies were a portion of the corpus of the trust estate.

It has been agreed that the issues involved in this appeal are the following:

"(1) Whether or not a real property right was excepted or reserved in favor of the grantors in the original deed from which the present monies stem;

"(2) Whether or not a personal right was reserved in favor of the grantors in said deed;

"(3) What disposition should be made of the funds coming into the hands of the trustees in view of the determination made by this Court as to the nature of the right involved."

The Supreme Court very recently in Brown v. Terra Bella Irrigation District, 51 Cal.2d 33, 330 P.2d 775, at page 777, clarified the distinctions between exceptions and reservations, stating, "As a general rule an exception concerns property which is excepted from the grant and does not pass to the grantee, whereas a reservation is a right newly created in favor of the grantor out of property which does pass to the grantee. 'The word "reserved" in a strict technical sense is not synonymous with "exception." The former term is applied to a clause in a deed which creates some right or privilege for the benefit of the grantor in the land described as granted, and withholds it from the operation of the grant, so that the title to the thing passes to the grantee, and the right of privilege concerning it is the only thing retained by the grantor. The latter term applies to something which constitutes a part of the thing described as granted and which would pass but for the excepting clause, the office of which is to exclude it from the thing described, and the title to the thing excepted remains in the grantor.' Van Slyke v.

There is nothing in the record before us to indicate who prepared the document in question, and we cannot speculate as to the reasons for the choice of form or terminology. The conveyance does pre-date the leading case of Callahan v. Martin, 3 Cal. 2d 110, 43 P.2d 788, 101 A.L.R. 871, in which the Supreme Court extensively reviewed the law concerning oil interests in California and elsewhere, and in which the nature of the interest of an assignee to whom an owner of land has transferred a percentage interest in oil rights was defined. In Callahan v. Martin, 3 Cal.2d at page 115, 43 P.2d at page 791, supra, the court stated, "The difficulty experienced in defining with exactitude the nature of the assignee's rights is due in part to the fact that the oil industry is of very recent development, while in this country, by statute and judicial precedent, our classification of property as realty or personalty is based on common-law definitions which crystallized in a time when oil interests were not the subject of judicial cognizance." Later in the same opinion 3 Cal.2d at page 118, 43 P.2d at page 792, the court stated, "Giving full weight to this statement of the nature of the landowner's rights in oil and gas, we are of the view that an operating lessee under a lease for a term of years, or for a term of years and so long as oil shall be produced in paying quantities, has an interest or estate in real property in the nature of a profit a prendre, which is an incorporeal hereditament, and that the assignee of a royalty interest in oil rights under an assignment by the landowner also has an interest or estate in real property in the nature of an incorporeal hereditament."

It is extremely difficult to ascertain now what the intention of the parties was at the time the document in question was executed. Their intention could have been to create an exception, a reservation, a landowner's non-participating royalty interest, or any of a number of other interests in real property, or by contract to create rights in the grantor in consideration for the assumption of certain contingent obligations on the part of the grantee, which obligations would constitute a lien upon the land.

We have attempted to analyze the transaction in the light of the few circumstances known to exist when the bargain was made. It was apparently contemplated by the parties that the premises would be used for growing sugar beets, and for this use a certain value was placed upon the land which the parties agreed was fair and reasonable. The parties apparently also recognized the possibility that someone might at some indefinite future time strike oil on the land, and they realized that this would increase the value of the property far beyond any use for agricultural purposes.

The conveyance in question appears to us to break across the usual categories, and to partake of certain characteristics pertaining to a variety of classifications of interests. In Dabney-Johnston Oil Corp. v. Walden, 4 Cal.2d 637, 52 P.2d 237, the Supreme Court recognized the complexities confronting the draftsmen of documents describing interests affecting subsurface fugacious substances by the application of common law rules, and stated 4 Cal.2d at page 651, 52 P.2d at page 244, "It is not surprising, in view of the lack of a definite terminology descriptive of these interests, that those who are dealing in oil interests have difficulty in describing the interest transferred, and that ambiguous and uncertain instruments are presented to the courts for analysis. Such instruments must be construed as a whole in the light of the circumstances under which they were executed and the expressed intent of the parties at that time."

As a practical matter, the foreseeable possibility of striking oil on the premises in question must have been regarded by the parties as remote rather than probable, because the grantors did not retain for themselves or receive by way of grant any right to participate in making the decision whether the premises should be drilled; nor did they retain for themselves or receive by way of grant any right of control as to the terms upon which the premises might be developed.

The parties must have recognized that they were competent to fix a fair purchase price in the event the land were of value only for use for agricultural purposes. They must have regarded this element as the important one making up the purchase price. It would appear that only under such circumstances would the grantors have been willing to agree to allow the grantee to have complete control of any future developmental possibilities concerning the land, subject only to the condition that any benefit derived therefrom be shared equally with grantors by requiring the grantee to agree to pay to grantors, their successors and assigns an amount equivalent to one-half of whatever might be received for any oil, gas, minerals or carbonaceous substances or similar products. So viewed, the obligation to pay is in the nature of a perpetual contractual obligation imposed upon the owner of the land by reason of the ownership thereof. Conversely, the contingent right to receive payment is in the nature of a perpetual contract right.

In our opinion, such contract right itself should be regarded as principal, although its value, if any, is measured by the extent of the oil supply. Such right, therefore, must be regarded as a specie of "property subject to depletion" within the meaning of that terminology as used in Civil Code, § 730.12, which provides as follows:

"Where any part of the principal consists of property subject to depletion, such as leaseholds, patents, copyrights and royalty rights, and the trustee or tenant in possession is not under a duty to change the form of the investment of the principal, the full amount of rents, royalties or income from the property shall be income to the tenant; but where the trustee or tenant is under a duty to change the form of the investment, either at once or as soon as a reasonable price, not representing an undue sacrifice of value, may be obtained, then the rents, royalties or income from such property not in excess of 5 per centum per annum of its inventory value as fixed by the appraiser or appraisers regularly appointed by the court, or in default thereof its market value at the time the principal was established, or at its cost where purchased later, shall be deemed income and the remainder principal."

Under the circumstances, in our opinion it was proper for the testamentary trustee to have allocated such sums of money as the ones in question to "income," and it was proper for the trial court to have ordered distribution thereof to the life tenant.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

The Supreme Court, McComb, J., held that where Public Utilities Commission ordered an investigation into practices of an overlying carrier relating to rate arrangements with certain subhaulers, but overlying carrier was not directed to file any pleadings and a stipulation was entered into by which all of carrier's legal defenses were reserved to him, carrier did not waive his right to rely upon defense of statute of limitations after commission rendered its decision adverse to carrier.

Order annulled.

McCOMB, Justice.

Petitioner seeks to obtain annulment of an order of the Public Utilities Commission pursuant to the provisions of section 1756 of the Public Utilities Code.[1]

1. Section 1756 of the Public Utilities Code reads: "Within 30 days after the application for a rehearing is denied, or, if the application is granted, then within 30 days after the decision on rehearing, the applicant may apply to the Supreme Court of this State for a writ of certiorari or review for the purpose of having the lawfulness of the original order or decision or of the order or decision on rehearing inquired into and determined. The writ shall be made returnable not later than 30 days after the date of issuance, and shall direct the commission to certify its record in the case to the court. On the return day, the cause shall be heard by the Supreme Court, unless for a good reason shown it is continued."

The Public Utilities Commission on its own motion, on November 29, 1955, ordered an investigation into the practices of petitioner, an overlying carrier, relating to rate arrangements with certain subhaulers.

The commission found that petitioner was underpaying the subhaulers and ordered reparation. After respondent commission rendered its decision, a petition for rehearing was filed by petitioner in which he urged, among other points, that the order of the commission was barred by the statute of limitations, and particularly by the provisions of section 339, subdivision 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. This petition was granted, and an answer was filed by petitioner pleading the statute of limitations and section 339, subdivision 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Thereafter, respondent commission rendered its decision ordering petitioner to make reparation. A petition for rehearing of this order was denied.

It is conceded that the oral agreements upon which petitioner's alleged liability rests were entered into more than two years before the present proceeding was instituted.

These are the questions necessary for us to determine:

First. In the instant case, which statute of limitations was applicable, the one prescribed by section 338, subdivision 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure or the one prescribed by section 339, subdivision 1, of that code? [2]

[1] Minimum hauling rates to be charged for transportation services by licensed highway carriers on either an hourly or a ton-mileage basis are fixed by law. The law, however, does not create the liability. It only determines the amount of the liability created by the agreement of the parties. (Gardner v. Basich Bros. Construction Co., 44 Cal.2d 191, 194 [4], 281 P.2d 521.)

[2] Under this rule, since the liability was created by the agreement of the parties, which agreement was an oral one, the two-year statute of limitations, as provided by section 339, subdivision 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, was applicable to the present case and not the three-year statute provided by section 338, subdivision 1.

[3] Second. Did petitioner waive the defense of the statute of limitations by failing to assert it at the hearing?

No, for these reasons:

(1) Under the rules of procedure of the Public Utilities Commission, petitioner was not required to plead unless directed by the commission to do so. Rule 14 reads as follows: "The commission may at any time institute investigations on its own motion. Orders instituting investigation shall indicate the nature of the matters to be investigated, and will be served upon the person or entity being investigated. A respondent need not file a pleading in response to the investigatory order unless so directed therein." In the present case petitioner was not directed to file any pleading in accordance with the foregoing rule.

[4] (2) A stipulation was entered into by the parties prior to the commission's

2. Section 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads: "The periods prescribed for the commencement of actions other than for the recovery of real property are as follows:"

Section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads in part: "Within three years: 1. An action upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture. * * *"

Section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads in part: "Within two years: 1. An action upon a contract, obligation or liability not founded upon an instrument of writing, other than that mentioned in subdivision two of section three hundred thirty-seven of this code; or an action founded upon a contract, obligation or liability, evidenced by a certificate, or abstract or guaranty of title of real property, or by a policy of title insurance; provided, that the cause of action upon a contract, obligation or liability evidenced by a certificate, or abstract or guaranty of title of real property or policy of title insurance shall not be deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the loss or damage suffered by the aggrieved party thereunder. * *" making its interim order, by which all of petitioner's legal defenses were reserved to him. Therefore, under the rule that a waiver of a right cannot be established without a clear showing of an intent to relinquish such right and doubtful cases will be decided against a waiver (Greninger v. Fischer, 81 Cal.App.2d 549, 554 [8], 184 P. 2d 694), petitioner did not waive his right to rely upon the defense of the statute of limitations.

In view of our conclusions, it is unnecessary to discuss other contentions made by counsel.

The order of the commission is annulled.

Defendants appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover 1953 taxes paid under protest to the Tax Collector of Los Angeles County upon the assessment of five airplanes.

[1] Facts: Plaintiff is a Delaware corporation, with its principal place of business in the county of Los Angeles. It is engaged in business as a common carrier of freight by air, operating in interstate and foreign commerce under a certificate issued by the Civil Aeronautics Board.

On the assessment date in 1953, the first Monday in March, plaintiff owned and operated 37 aircraft of two different types. It had 27 C–46 planes, which were used only in its domestic commercial service. These planes did not have a sufficient range for overseas flying. They were assessed at a portion of their book value determined by computing the percentage of the total time, during a test period selected by the county assessor, that the planes were physically present in the county of Los Angeles. The tax on these planes is not disputed.

Plaintiff also operated 10 DC–4 planes in flying the Pacific airlift under control of the military authorities and in support of the war in Korea. The route of this lift was from the United States to Tokyo, Japan. Five of these planes were leased by plaintiff and five were owned by it. Plaintiff's interest in the leased planes was assessed on the same formula applied to the C–46 planes. This tax is undisputed.

The other five DC–4 planes that were operated on the Pacific airlift were removed from the remainder of plaintiff's fleet of 37 planes by the county assessor and were assessed at 100% of their value without regard to the time they were physically present in the county. The difference between the amount of the tax paid on the full assessment of these five planes and the amount which would have been taxed if the assessor had assessed them on the same basis as all the other planes is the amount sought to be recovered.

Plaintiff filed a petition for redetermination of the assessment before the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors, sitting as a board of equalization, for the year 1953–54. After two hearings before the board, the application for relief was denied. The tax was subsequently paid under protest. Thereafter plaintiff filed this suit for recovery against the county of Los Angeles and the city of Burbank. The city was made a defendant as required by section 5138 of the Revenue and Taxation Code.[1]

Questions: First. Does defendant county have the power to assess an ad valorem property tax upon the full value of aircraft which are regularly flown in interstate and foreign commerce and physically present in the county only a part of the time during the period for which the tax is collected?

No. The five planes involved were used chiefly in the performance of the Pacific airlift instituted in 1950 as a result of the Korean war, and operations during the period in question were scheduled by the military authorities and not by the Civil Aeronautics Board.

1. Section 5138 of the Revenue and Taxation Code reads: "Within six months after the payment, an action may be brought against a county or a city in the superior court to recover the taxes paid under protest.

"If all or any portion of the taxes paid under protest and sought to be recovered were collected by officers of the county for a city, an action must be brought against the city for the recovery of such taxes and judgment must be sought against the city. Where actions are brought against both a county and a city such actions may be joined in one complaint.

"Any city for which county officers collect taxes may provide for the defense by counsel for the county of actions brought against the city under this article, in which event it shall be the duty of such counsel to defend such actions, or the city may provide that such actions shall be defended by its own counsel."

A proper decision of this case rests upon the application of four United States Supreme Court decisions. In 1944 the Supreme Court of the United States decided, in Northwest Airlines v. Minnesota, 322 U. S. 292, 64 S.Ct. 950, 88 L.Ed. 1283, that Minnesota, the home port state of the airline, could levy a property tax on the entire value of a fleet of planes in spite of the fact that the same planes were admittedly taxed on a portion of their value by six of the seven other states through which they operated.

In 1949 the Supreme Court, in Ott v. Mississippi Barge Line, 336 U.S. 169, 69 S.Ct. 432, 93 L.Ed. 585, modified the rule previously laid down in Northwest Airlines v. Minnesota, supra. The Ott case involved barges and tugs operated up and down the Mississippi River and owned by a corporation domiciled in Ohio. These tugs and barges were taxed on an apportioned basis by the State of Louisiana, where they made certain irregular stops. The court held that Louisiana could tax the vessels on a portion of their value. With reference to the question of the due process aspect of a tax of this type, the court stated, 336 U.S. at page 174, 69 S.Ct. at page 434: "So far as due process is concerned the only question is whether the tax in practical operation has relation to opportunities, benefits, or protection conferred or afforded by the taxing State. (Citation.) Those requirements are satisfied if the tax is fairly apportioned to the commerce carried on within the State."

In 1952 the Supreme Court, in Standard Oil Co. v. Peck, 342 U.S. 382, 72 S.Ct. 309, 96 L.Ed. 427, involving vessels travelling on the Mississippi River, adopted the rule that a domiciliary state could not tax the full value of property located only part of the time within a state without constituting an unreasonable burden upon interstate commerce and thus violating the due process clause of the United States Constitution. The court said in 342 U.S. at page 384, 72 S.Ct. at page 310: "No one vessel may have been continuously in another state during the taxable year. But we do know that most, if not all, of them were operating in other waters and therefore under Ott v. Mississippi Barge Line Co., supra, could be taxed by the several states on an apportionment basis. The rule which permits taxation by two or more states on an apportionment basis precludes taxation of all of the property by the state of the domicile. (Citation.) Otherwise there would be multiple taxation of interstate operations and the tax would have no relation to the opportunities, benefits, or protection which the taxing state gives those operations."

In 1954 the Supreme Court, in Braniff Airways v. Nebraska Board, 347 U.S. 590, 74 S.Ct. 757, 98 L.Ed. 967, applied the rule previously laid down in Standard Oil Co. v. Peck, supra, to aircraft flying in interstate commerce. This case involved a fleet of planes which had its home port in the State of Minnesota, but which was used in and out of the taxing state, Nebraska. Nebraska imposed an apportioned ad valorem tax on the equipment, based upon the percentage of time in and out of the state. The court said, 347 U.S. at page 600, 74 S.Ct. at page 763: "We perceive no logical basis for distinguishing the constitutional power to impose a tax on such aircraft from the power to impose taxes on river boats."

[2] It thus appears that the United States Supreme Court has now held that the rule which permits taxation by two or more states on an apportioned basis precludes taxation on all the property by the state of domicile.

In Standard Oil Co. v. Peck, supra, 342 U.S. at page 384, 72 S.Ct. at page 310, the court said: "Those cases, though exceptional on their facts, illustrate the reach of the taxing power of the state of the domicile as contrasted to that of the other states. But they have no application here since most, if not all, of the barges and boats which Ohio has taxed were almost continuously outside Ohio during the taxable year. * * * The rule which permits taxation by two or more states on an apportionment basis precludes taxation of all of the property by the state of the domicile. (Citation.) Otherwise there would be multiple taxation of interstate operations and the tax would have no relation to the opportunities, benefits, or protection which the taxing state gives those operations."

[3, 4] A taxpayer resisting an ad valorem tax on personal property based on an unapportioned assessment does not have the burden of showing that other states have actually imposed a tax on such property. He is entitled to an assessment on an apportionment basis if the record shows that he was, during a tax year, receiving substantial benefits and protection in more than one state.

In the present case, there was no apportionment with respect to the assessment of the five planes. Therefore, as a matter of law, the tax was not levied upon a proper basis.

The holding in Slick Airways v. County of Los Angeles, 140 Cal.App.2d 311, 295 P. 2d 46, is in accord with the foregoing views. In that case, a fairly apportioned assessment on planes of this type was determined by the Los Angeles County Assessor. The company had its principal place of business in California in 1952 and 1953. The court, 140 Cal.App. at page 312, 295 P.2d at page 46, had this to say with reference to the normal assessment procedure in Los Angeles County: "Plaintiff is engaged in flying a fleet of airplanes in interstate and foreign commerce. Such airplanes, under the practice of the county assessor of Los Angeles County, are assessed on the basis of a fair allocation of time, to wit, the ratio of the time spent in Los Angeles County as compared to total time."

Thereafter, the court properly recognized that under the circumstances present, which were similar to those in the instant case, the county of Los Angeles had authority to tax only a portion of the value of the planes. In referring to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Braniff Airways v. Nebraska Board, supra, the court, 140 Cal.App.2d at page 314, 295 P. 2d at page 46, said: "The Supreme Court, in upholding the validity of the tax, said, 347 U.S. at page 600, 74 S.Ct. 757: 'The limitation imposed by the Due Process Clause upon state power to impose taxes upon such instrumentalities was succinctly stated in the Ott Case: "So far as due process is concerned the only question is whether the tax in practical operation has relation to opportunities, benefits, or protection conferred or afforded by the taxing State."'"

[5] Second. When relief from an improper assessment is sought from the board of supervisors sitting as a board of equalization, and denied in the belief that the only issue is one of law for the courts, is the applicant bound by this decision on an appeal to the superior court?

No. Defendants argue that plaintiff is entitled to a trial "of factual matter which should have been but was not presented to said Board for determination." This question is not presented to this court, because the trial court rendered its decision without consideration of any evidence offered before the trial court, basing it upon a question of law.

Security-First National Bank v. County of Los Angeles, 35 Cal.2d 319, 217 P.2d 946, relied on by defendants, is not applicable to the facts of the present case, for in that case no application for relief was filed with the board of supervisors.

The duties of a board of supervisors sitting as a board of tax equalization are prescribed in article XIII, section 9, of the California Constitution, which reads, in part: "The boards of supervisors of the several counties of the State shall constitute boards of equalization for their respective counties, whose duty it shall be to equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the county for the purpose of taxation * * *."

The duties of the board are fully set forth by this court in Universal Consolidated Oil Co. v. Byram, 25 Cal.2d 353, 356–357,

153 P.2d 746, 748: "It must be conceded, of course, that it is well settled in this state that to the authorized county board of equalization has been confided the duty of determining 'the value of the property under consideration for assessment purposes upon such basis as is used in regard to other property, so as to make all the assessments as equal and fair as is practicable'; that in discharging this duty, 'the board is exercising judicial functions, and its decision as to the value of the property and the fairness of the assessment, so far as amount is concerned, constitutes an independent and conclusive judgment of the tribunal created by law for the determination of that question,' adjudicating necessarily that 'the property is assessed at the same value proportionately as all the other property in the county'; that such adjudication 'cannot be avoided, unless the board has proceeded "arbitrarily and in willful disregard of the law intended for their guidance and control, with the evident purpose of imposing unequal burdens upon certain of the taxpayers" * * * or unless there be something equivalent to fraud in the action of the board'; and that 'Mere errors in honest judgment as to the value of the property will not obviate the binding effect of the conclusion of the board.' (Citations.) While not classifiable with any aspect of fraud or bad faith, the lack of due process distinguishing the procedural phase of these equalization matters as submitted to the board furnishes an equally appropriate basis for the court's intervention in protection of the plaintiffs' constitutional rights." (Emphasis added.)

The court said, 25 Cal.2d at page 360 [3] et seq., 153 P.2d at page 751:

> "The fundamental premise of the plaintiffs' recourse to the court for relief rests upon the proposition that, as with any ad valorem tax, their constitutional right to an equalization hearing comprehends a decision in the light of the evidence there introduced before any determination becomes final as to them. (Citations.) As any tax proceeding is in invitum in nature, each step must be taken in compliance with law or the proceeding is void. The equalization stage is no exception to this rule. Compliance with the constitutional requirement for an equalization hearing is not met unless the substance as well as the form of the hearing is granted to the complaining taxpayer. (Citation.) Typical illustrations of the denial of procedural due process which have been held to invalidate purported equalization determinations are: One man hearings (citation); the taking of evidence without the presence of the taxpayer or his representative (citations); the refusal to allow reasonable opportunity for cross-examination (citation); the refusal to permit reasonable argument (citation); reliance in the concluding steps upon the advice of the assessor or the assessor's attorney, particularly if done secretly (citation); and the attempted determination of a case by members of the board who did not hear the evidence, if their vote be necessary to the determination (citation).
> "In line with these instances of the denial of procedural due process are the present cases. The concluding steps of the equalization proceeding are many times the most essential to the preservation of the taxpayer's rights."

Again the court said, 25 Cal.2d at page 362 [6], 153 P.2d at page 751: "As appears from the numerous authorities cited in the forepart of this opinion, the respective county board of equalization is the fact-finding body designated by law to remedy excessive assessments (Cal.Const., art. XIII, § 9), and when that tribunal, after due hearing and within the limits of reasonable discretion, makes its findings on the facts, such decision is final and conclusive."

It is evident from the foregoing authority that when a board of equalization purports to decide a question of law, or refuses to hear a case on the ground that it involves only a question of law to be decided by the courts, a taxpayer has the right to resort to the courts for determination of such question.

In the present case, there was no dispute as to the facts, a question of law alone being presented to the board of equalization, as appears from the following excerpt from the transcript:

"Mr. Jessup [Member of the Board]: Mr. West, there is no chance of you and this gentleman sitting down and working this thing out?

"Mr. Anson [Deputy County Counsel]: There is a very definite legal issue other than the facts; I don't think there is too much of a quarrel as regards the facts.

"Mr. Hahn [Member of the Board]: There's no quarrel with the facts, but a legal question?

"Mr. Anson: Primarily a legal question; that is, as far as the five aircraft covered under this second item are concerned."

(See also Mahoney v. City of San Diego, 198 Cal. 388, 403 [9], 245 P. 189, where an arbitrary method of property valuation adopted by the assessor and approved by the board of supervisors was held a proper subject for court review.)

Applying the foregoing rule to the present case, it appears that plaintiff sought relief before the board of equalization. This relief was denied solely because the board, on the advice of its counsel, applied an improper principle of constitutional law. Therefore, plaintiff properly applied to the superior court for relief.

In light of the foregoing, the trial court was correct in holding that defendant county had exceeded its power to tax the airplanes here involved and in entering judgment in favor of plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHENK and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the judgment of affirmance.

The issue presented by this case is: To what extent can the domicile state of an interstate and foreign air carrier impose an ad valorem tax on its property when one or more non-domiciliary states have acquired the power to impose an ad valorem tax on an apportioned basis. While the decided cases seem to hold that under the circumstances the domicile state cannot tax on the basis of the full assessed valuation of all the property, the precise extent of its power to tax has not yet been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The principles bearing on this issue are contained in several recent cases. In Northwest Airlines, Inc. v. Minnesota, 322 U.S. 292, 64 S.Ct. 950, 88 L.Ed. 1283, the court held that Minnesota, the domicile of the airline, had constitutional power to tax the airline's entire fleet of aircraft at its full value even though all the planes were continuously engaged in interstate flights. In this case Chief Justice Stone wrote a vigorous dissent in which he held that Minnesota could only impose an apportioned tax. In 1949 the Supreme Court held in Ott v. Mississippi Barge Line, 336 U.S. 169, 69 S.Ct. 432, 93 L.Ed. 585, that Louisiana, a non-domiciliary state, could tax barges and tugs, moving in and out of the state, on an apportioned basis according to the commerce carried on within the state. In Standard Oil Co. v. Peck, 1952, 342 U.S. 382, 72 S.Ct. 309, 96 L.Ed. 427, involving vessels traveling on the Mississippi River, the Supreme Court adopted the rule that a domiciliary state could not tax the full value of property located only part of the time within its borders, and which must have acquired a tax situs elsewhere, without constituting an unreasonable burden on interstate commerce. The court said, 342 U. S. at page 384, 72 S.Ct. at page 310: "The rule which permits taxation by two or more states on an apportioned basis precludes taxation of all of the property by the state of the domicile." Northwest Airlines was distinguished on the ground that in that case it had not been shown that [322 U.S. 292, 64 S.Ct. 952] "a defined part of the domiciliary corpus" had acquired a taxable situs elsewhere. The court did not spell out, however, the extent of the domicile's taxing power under the circumstances. Finally, in 1954, in Braniff Airways, Inc., v. Nebraska Board of Equalization and Assessment, 347 U.S. 590, 74 S.Ct. 757, 98 L.Ed. 967, the court, applying the reasoning of the Ott case, upheld the power of a non-domiciliary state to impose an apportioned tax on planes and flight equipment used by the taxpayer in operating a purely interstate line.

In the present case Los Angeles County, the domicile for tax purposes, seeks to impose an ad valorem property tax on the full value of five aircraft belonging to Flying Tiger Line, used chiefly in the Korean Airlift, but also used in other foreign and interstate commerce. The tax was paid under protest, and in the suit for refund the trial court gave judgment for plaintiff in an amount equal to the difference between the tax paid on the full value and the tax that should have been paid on a value apportioned according to the time the planes were physically present in the county during a certain test period.

I agree with the views expressed in the opinion prepared by Mr. Justice McComb which holds, in effect, that where a non-domiciliary state has acquired the power to impose an apportioned tax, the domicile must also impose an apportioned tax. There is no express authority to support this proposition, but it appears to be in harmony with sound principles of constitutional law.

The commerce clause is violated when a tax subjects interstate commerce to an undue burden or creates a risk of such a burden. However, it has been recognized that interstate commerce should "pay its way" in the states where it receives substantial benefits and protection, with the result that reasonable state taxation is permitted. To avoid a violation of the due process clause, the tax must bear a reasonable relation to the benefits and protection conferred by the taxing state. These rules were recognized in the Standard Oil case where the court said: "The rule which permits taxation by two or more states on an apportionment basis precludes taxation of all of the property by the state of the domicile. Otherwise there would be multiple taxation of interstate operations and the tax would have no relation to the opportunities, benefits, or protection which the taxing state gives those operations."

The rule stated in the opinion prepared by Mr. Justice McComb presents no real risk of multiple taxation. A cumulative burden could result from the use in different states of different apportionment formulae, but this is not very likely. Apart from this slight possibility, apportionment of the tax base is generally acknowledged to be the best way to avoid multiple taxation. It was stipulated at the trial that the aircraft in question were physically present in Los Angeles County only 36.37% of the time during a test period. This percentage was used to apportion the value of the planes by the trial court and is reasonably related to the benefits and protection conferred by the county. Therefore, there does not appear to be a violation of due process.

I can see no basis for holding that the case be remanded to the Board of Equalization for a hearing to determine whether any other state has acquired the power to impose an apportioned tax under the rule of the Braniff case. The trial court was apparently satisfied that such a showing had been made. If no state has such power, then Los Angeles County may tax on the full value of the aircraft under the holding of the Northwest Airlines case. On the other hand, if one or more states have such power, then the Standard Oil case applies, and the full value cannot be taxed.

I have found no authority holding that the Board of Equalization should determine to what extent the property has acquired a taxable situs elsewhere, and then should order a reassessment of the tax accordingly. Under this basis of taxation an undue burden on interstate commerce is likely to result in two different ways. The Board of Equalization is required to determine whether any portion of the Flying Tiger Line's property has acquired a taxable situs elsewhere and what that portion is. Although tests framed by the Supreme Court are available to aid the board in this determination, there are no iron-clad rules describing what contacts are sufficient to give a state jurisdiction to tax. Thus it may be that while the board will find that certain property has not acquired a taxable situs in another state and so is taxable in full by Los Angeles County, the taxing authorities in that state may reach a contrary determination and impose a tax under that state's apportionment formula. The cumulative burden that would result is apparent.

An undue burden may also arise because of the various formulae for apportionment used among the states. These formulae are computed on the basis of the presence of the aircraft in and out of the state, mileage in and out of the state, arrivals and departures in and out of the state, revenue earned in and out of the state, as well as many combinations of these factors. With a 100% tax base being applied in the domicile state, different formulae applied by other states are very apt to lead to excessive taxation.

That personal property has its situs at the owner's domicile, has long been recognized as a fiction employed to prevent migratory property from avoiding taxation completely. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Com. of Pennsylvania, 141 U.S. 18, 29, 11 S.Ct. 876, 35 L.Ed. 613. This fiction was primarily used in cases involving ocean-going vessels which acquired no actual situs elsewhere. It was thought that if they were not taxable at the domicile they might not be taxable at all. Ott v. Mississippi Barge Line, supra, 336 U.S. at page 173, 69 S.Ct. at page 433. As Chief Justice Stone said in his dissenting opinion in the Northwest Airlines case [322 U.S. 292, 64 S.Ct. 960]: "And our decisions establish that, except in the case of tangibles which have nowhere acquired a tax situs based on physical presence, and for that reason remain taxable at the domicile even if never present there, the state's power to tax chattels depends on their physical presence and is neither added to nor subtracted from because the taxing state may or may not happen to be the state of the owner's domicile." But where it appears that the carrier will not avoid taxation on a considerable portion of its property, there should be no reason to employ the fiction in whole or in part. It is obvious that to permit Los Angeles County to tax the full value of the property here involved, would impose a tax beyond that justified by its physical contacts with the county, a tax that the county has no power to impose, and thus violate due process. Moreover the tax is not reasonably related to the benefits and protection conferred by the county. "So far as due process is concerned, the only question is whether the tax in practical operation has relation to opportunities, benefits, or protection conferred or afforded by the taxing State." Ott v. Mississippi Barge Line, supra, 336 U.S. at page 174, 69 S.Ct. at page 434.

It is of some significance to note that recommendations made by the Civil Aeronautics Board in 1945, as a result of the confusion engendered by the Northwest Airlines case indicate disapproval of the domicile basis for taxation and support for some system of apportionment of the tax base. See Multiple Taxation of Air Commerce, H.R. Doc. No. 141, 79th Cong., 1st Sess.

It has been suggested that Flying Tiger Line will probably avoid taxation of a large portion of its property because the greater part of Flying Tiger's flights are overseas. This suggestion is probably well-founded. Another quotation from the dissenting opinion of Chief Justice Stone in the Northwest Airlines case, however, adequately disposes of this point: "It is no answer to suggest that the states other than Minnesota have not asserted their constitutional power to tax or that we do not know how or to what extent they have exercised it. The extent to which one state may constitutionally tax the instruments of interstate transportation does not depend on what other states may happen to do, but on what the taxing state has constitutional power to do."

The logic of the foregoing is inescapable.

TRAYNOR, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent.

Migratory property not subject to taxation elsewhere remains taxable at the owner's domicile, for otherwise it would escape taxation altogether. People of State of New York ex rel. New York Central Railroad v. Miller, 202 U.S. 584, 597, 26 S.Ct. 714, 50 L.Ed. 1155; Southern Pacific Co. v. Kentucky, 222 U.S. 63, 69, 73, 32 S.Ct. 13, 56 L.Ed. 96; Northwest Airlines, Inc., v. Minnesota, 322 U.S. 292, 294, 64 S.Ct. 950, 88 L.Ed 1283; Braniff Airways v. Nebraska Board, 347 U.S. 590, 602, 74 S.Ct. 757, 98 L.Ed. 967; Olson v. San Francisco, 148 Cal. 80, 83, 84, 82 P. 850, 2 L.R.A.,N.S., 197; California Shipping Co. v. San Francisco, 150 Cal. 145, 146, 88 P. 704. To the extent that the property is taxable elsewhere it cannot be taxed by the domiciliary state, for otherwise it would be subject to multiple burdens in violation of the commerce clause. Standard Oil Co. v. Peck, 342 U.S. 382, 385, 72 S.Ct. 309, 96 L.Ed. 427; Western Live Stock v. Bureau, 303 U.S. 250, 255–256, 58 S.Ct. 546, 82 L.Ed. 823. Random excursions of migratory property into a state do not render the property taxable there, but if there is habitual use of such property in a state, the average amount thus habitually used is taxable there, even though the specific items are not continuously the same. American Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Hall, 174 U.S. 70, 82, 19 S.Ct. 599, 43 L.Ed. 899; Johnson Oil Refining Co. v. Oklahoma, 290 U.S. 158, 162, 54 S.Ct. 152, 78 L.Ed. 238.

Under the foregoing rules defendants are not precluded from taxing the aircraft in question except to the extent that they are taxable elsewhere. The majority opinion, however, is at odds with these rules in holding that the county must limit the tax on the aircraft according to the time they are physically present in the county, even if they are not taxable elsewhere.

The County Board of Equalization was likewise at odds with these rules in deciding that the aircraft were taxable on their full value at the commercial domicile [1] on the ground that apportionment of the tax was not required as a matter of law since the aircraft were not flown on a schedule. The board's failure to determine whether or not any part of the property had acquired a taxable situs elsewhere was error, for defendants' power to tax is diminished accordingly if the property has acquired a taxable situs elsewhere (Standard Oil Co. v. Peck, supra, 342 U.S. 382, 384, 72 S.Ct. 309, 96 L.Ed. 427), whether or not other jurisdictions elect to assert their taxing power. Johnson Oil Co. v. Oklahoma, 290 U.S. 158, 162, 54 S.Ct. 152. Even migratory property that does not travel on a schedule may become subject to taxation in other jurisdictions.

It cannot be assumed, however, that the aircraft had acquired a taxable situs elsewhere merely because they were absent from Los Angeles County a large part of the time. No such assumption is supported by Standard Oil Co. v. Peck, supra, 342 U.S. 382, 72 S.Ct. 309, 310, invoked by the majority opinion. The court there struck down an unapportioned tax imposed by the domiciliary state on oil barges that traveled the inland waters of the Mississippi and

1. Although the state of incorporation is regarded as the legal domicile of a corporation, its domicile for tax purposes is its principal place of business or headquarters. Thus, the "commercial domicile" rather than the state of incorporation, is given the power to tax intangible property of the corporation on the ground that "it is there that the owner in every practical sense * * * realizes the economic advantages of his ownership." First Bank Stock Corp. v. Minnesota, 301 U.S. 234, 241, 57 S.Ct. 677, 680, 81 L.Ed. 1061; see Wheeling Steel Corp. v. Fox, 298 U.S. 193, 56 S. Ct. 773, 80 L.Ed. 1143; Southern Pacific Co. v. Ohio Rivers. It reasoned that river craft almost continuously within other states were subject to the taxing jurisdiction of those states, and a tax by the domiciliary state on their full value would result in "multiple taxation of interstate operations and the tax would have no relation to the opportunities, benefits, or protection which the taxing state gives those operations." Barges that navigate interstate waterways ordinarily acquire more than one taxable situs along their course. In contrast, aircraft navigating the sky ordinarily do not acquire any other taxable situs along their course. See concurring opinion of Jackson, J., in Northwest Airlines v. Minnesota, supra, 322 U.S. 292, 304, 64 S.Ct. 950. The domicile is therefore free to tax all such aircraft so long as there is no showing that they have maintained sufficiently regular, recurrent physical and business contacts with other jurisdictions that would accordingly subject them to taxation there. Braniff Airways v. Nebraska Board, 347 U.S. 590, 600–602, 74 S.Ct. 757; People of State of New York ex rel. New York Central Railroad v. Miller, supra, 202 U.S. 584, 597, 26 S.Ct. 714.

Since the board erroneously failed to determine whether any part of the property had acquired a taxable situs elsewhere, the case should be remanded to it for a redetermination of the tax on the basis of the evidence submitted at hearings before it.[2] Universal Consolidated Oil Co. v. Byram, 25 Cal.2d 353, 362, 153 P.2d 746.

If the evidence then showed that the aircraft were not subject to taxation elsewhere, the county would be free to tax them on the basis of their full value. Southern Pacific Co. v. Kentucky, supra, 222 U.S. 63, 32 S.Ct. 13; People of State of New York ex rel. N. Y. Central Railroad v. Miller, supra, 202 U.S. 584, 26 S.Ct. 714; Northwest Airlines, Inc., v. Minnesota, supra, 322 U.S. 292, 298, 64 S.Ct. 950; Braniff Airways v. Nebraska Board, supra, 347 U. S. at page 602, 74 S.Ct. 757. If, however, the evidence showed that the property had acquired a taxable situs elsewhere, the county would have to forego taxation to the extent that other jurisdictions had acquired the power to impose an apportioned tax. "The rule which permits taxation by two or more states on an apportionment basis precludes taxation of all of the property by the state of domicile." Standard Oil Co. v. Peck, supra, 342 U.S. at page 384, 72 S.Ct. at page 310. The board would then be compelled to apportion the tax on a basis realistic enough to preclude due process and commerce clause objections. The formula upheld in the Braniff case, supra, exemplifies what can be done in this regard. It encompassed such realistic factors as arrivals and departures, revenue tons handled by the carrier, and originating revenue.[3] While not exhaustive, these solid

2. "[T]he proper procedure upon the failure of an administrative board to give a hearing under appropriate circumstances, is to remand the case to the board for proper proceedings. (Citations.) The policy underlying such a rule is that the determination of the issues should first be made by the administrative agency. It is given jurisdiction for that purpose, and interference with that jurisdiction should not be permitted until it has been pursued to the point of exhaustion." Steen v. City of Los Angeles, 31 Cal.2d 542, 546, 190 P.2d 937, 939. Although the term of a board of equalization is limited by statute (Rev. & Tax.Code, § 1603), "that provision is directory only and does not deflect from the statutory scheme that the authorized tribunal pass upon matters properly within its jurisdiction though in the completion of its work it must act at a time beyond the prescribed period." Universal Consolidated Oil Co. v. Byram, 25 Cal.2d 353, 362–363, 153 P.2d 746, 752.

3. " 'The proportion of flight equipment allocated to this state for purposes of taxation shall be the arithmetical average of the following three ratios: (1) The ratio which the aircraft arrivals and departures within this state scheduled by such air carrier during the preceding calendar year bears to the total aircraft arrivals and departures within and without this state scheduled by such carrier during the same period; Provided, that in the case of nonscheduled operations all arrivals and departures shall be substituted for scheduled arrivals and departures; (2) the ratio which the rev-contacts with the state reflect the "opportunities, benefits, or protection conferred or afforded by the taxing State" (Ott v. Mississippi Barge Line, 336 U.S. 169, 174, 69 S.Ct. 432, 434) and the factors that contribute to the value of the property. Moreover, such a combination is apt to insure a fairness to both taxpayer and taxing authority that a single factor not counterbalanced by others does not afford. Indeed a single factor formula, such as that of physical presence compelled by the majority opinion, may be highly arbitrary. Suppose that Airline "A" flies non-stop between New York and Los Angeles, that the aircraft are physically present in New York ten per cent of the time and in Los Angeles thirty per cent of the time, and in the air the rest of the time. Under the majority view, the aircraft would be subject to tax on ten per cent of their value in New York and on thirty per cent in California; sixty per cent of their value would escape taxation altogether. Yet an Airline "B", flying exclusively between Los Angeles and San Francisco would be subject to full taxation in California. Such a single factor formula leads to still more capricious results in a case like the present one of aircraft that travel over the high seas where they have no taxable contacts with any other jurisdiction. The arbitrariness of such a formula arises from the inclusion therein of "bridge time," i. e. the time the aircraft are in the air and afford no state jurisdiction to tax, and the time they are in jurisdictions on random excursions that do not render them taxable there. If physical presence is used as the formula of apportionment or as one of the factors in the formula, certainly "bridge time" and the time spent in such random excursions should be excluded entirely from the formula, and the total time used should be only the time spent in jurisdictions where the property is taxable.

The perennial contention arises that there is always danger of multiple taxation latent in the possibility that different states would evolve different formulas of apportionment. It bears noting therefore that no court has found such a danger serious enough to invalidate an apportionment that reasonably reflects the opportunities, benefits and protection afforded by the taxing state.

SHENK, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff in an action for the refund of $3,206.83, an amount paid under protest as use tax, penalties, and interest.

The plaintiff is a resident of San Francisco. In January 1953, after personal negotiations in Europe and by mail from San Francisco, the plaintiff entered into a contract with an Amsterdam ship builder for the construction of a motor yacht. The yacht was to be built in Amsterdam for an agreed price of $65,000. Machinery of a value of $16,340.23 was purchased by the plaintiff from a Michigan manufacturer through its agent in Berkeley, California. The machinery was shipped directly from Michigan to Amsterdam. Fittings were purchased by the plaintiff in San Francisco and shipped to Amsterdam for installation. No state or local taxes were paid on the machinery or fittings.

On October 25, 1953, the plaintiff took delivery of the yacht at Amsterdam. The yacht was tested by him and on November 5, 1953, he delivered it to a freighter at Rotterdam for shipment to San Francisco. The yacht was enclosed in protective coverings and crating. The plaintiff's own skipper accompanied the yacht on the voyage to San Francisco.

On December 7, 1953, the plaintiff paid $9,413.40 to the United States Collector of Customs at San Francisco. The trial court found that "The yacht with its machinery, equipment, and engines which had been installed therein by the shipbuilder in Holland, was on its arrival in San Francisco, California on December 9, 1953, in the identical condition so far as protective coverings, cratings, and devices are concerned as it was when prepared for shipment at the commencement of its journey at Rotterdam, Holland and it arrived in San Francisco, California in the original package in which it was shipped from Rotterdam, Holland, and remained in such original package for a period of twenty-four hours until its unloading at San Francisco could be arranged and accomplished. On December 10, 1953, the yacht was removed from its protective coverings, cratings, devices, and original package and lifted from the seagoing freighter into the San Francisco Bay. Sugarman immediately piloted the yacht under its own power to a berth in Sausalito, Marin County, California. The yacht, with its machinery, equipment, and engines, has remained since that day in California and has been berthed and used in California from that day to the date of trial."

In October, 1954, the Board of Equalization made a determination of use tax, interest, and penalties for the use of the yacht during the period December 1, 1953, to December 31, 1953. A determination of taxes owing for the use of the machinery during the period October 1, 1953, to December 31, 1953, interest, and penalties was made on June 2, 1955. Upon exhausting his administrative remedies the plaintiff brought this action in the superior court to recover the amount paid under protest to the defendant State Board of Equalization.

The California use tax law is contained in section 6201 et seq. of the Revenue and Taxation Code. Section 6201 provides: "An excise tax is hereby imposed on the storage, use, or other consumption in this State of tangible personal property purchased from any retailer on or after July 1, 1935, for storage, use, or other consumption in this State at the rate of 3 percent of the sales price of the property, and at the rate of 2½ percent on and after July 1, 1943, and to and including June 30, 1949, and at the rate of 3 percent thereafter."

Section 6202 provides: "Every person storing, using, or otherwise consuming in this State tangible personal property purchased from a retailer is liable for the tax. His liability is not extinguished until the tax has been paid to this State except that a receipt from a retailer maintaining a place of business in this State or from a retailer who is authorized by the board, under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, to collect the tax and who is, for the purposes of this part relating to the use tax, regarded as a retailer maintaining a place of business in this State, given to the purchaser pursuant to Section 6203, is sufficient to relieve the purchaser from further liability for the tax to which the receipt refers."

By the express provisions of section 6201, that tax could not apply until "storage, use, or other consumption" of the vessel occurred within the borders of this state. A further limitation upon the imposition of the tax provided in section 6201 appears in section 6352 of the Revenue and Taxation Code where it is provided: "There are exempted from the taxes imposed by this part the gross receipts from the sale of and the storage, use, or other consumption in this State of tangible personal property the gross receipts from the sale of which, or the storage, use, or other consumption of which, this State is prohibited from taxing under the Constitution or laws of the United States or under the Constitution of this State."

Thus, by the express provisions of the act, two inquiries are pertinent to determine whether the tax was here lawfully and validly imposed: first, it must be determined that the property was so utilized as to subject it to the provisions of the act; second, it must appear that the tax is not prohibited by the "Constitution or laws of the United States or under the Constitution of this State."

[1] The contention that the yacht was used within this state is conclusively supported by the evidence. The plaintiff testified that the yacht was not used for pleasure cruises until about six months after it was brought into California because of Mrs. Sugarman's illness and the making of certain changes in the masts and lights as required by an amendment of federal law regulating navigation lights. At the trial, the plaintiff was asked:

"Q. You stated it took two months to get it in shape? You stated it was six months before you used it for pleasure cruises. What happened in the intervening four months? A. It just laid there.

"Q. It laid at berth in Sausalito? A. Yes. The skipper lived on board and that is all there was to it.

"Q. And that yacht is still in your possession and ownership? A. Yes.

"Q. And has been used as you pleased since bringing it to California? A. Yes."

[2] The period for which the use tax was assessed included the time during which the yacht and its equipment were beyond the borders of this state; a time when it was on board the freighter in the San Francisco Bay in its original covering and crating, and a time when it was, as found by the trial court, used by the plaintiff within the State of California. The defendant seeks to tax only the use of the vessel and its machinery within this state after its movement in foreign commerce had ceased, and its crating and protective covering had been removed. Such use comes within the express provisions of section 6201 of the Revenue and Taxation Code.

The plaintiff contends that the tax was unconstitutional as applied because the yacht and its machinery were immune from state taxation under article I, section 10, clause 2 of the federal Constitution, the import-export clause. That clause provides: "No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Control of the Congress."

[3,4] The single exception stated in the import clause is exclusive; no further exceptions can be implied. Richfield Oil Corp. v. State Board of Equalization, 329 U.S. 69, 76, 67 S.Ct. 156, 91 L.Ed. 80. The board does not contend that the tax comes within that exception; its position is that the yacht lost its exempt status as an import when it was uncovered, uncrated, and put to the use for which it was imported. The immunity of foreign commerce from the imposition of imposts and duties is not the same as the exemption of goods moving in interstate commerce. Tests of constitutional validity under the commerce clause do not control the result of cases arising under the import clause. Richfield Oil Corp. v. State Board of Equalization, supra, 329 U.S. at page 75, 67 S.Ct. at page 159.

[5-8] Goods imported into the United States from a foreign country are not permanently exempted from state and local taxes. "There must be a point of time when the prohibition ceases, and the power of the state to tax commences." Brown v. State of Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L.Ed. 678. Property which has not been mingled with the general property within a state or devoted to the use for which it is imported from abroad is exempt from state taxes. The line separating imports from property subject to state taxation was drawn in Brown v. State of Maryland, supra, 12 Wheat. 419 at pages 441, 442, 6 L.Ed. 678, at pages 686, 687: "It is sufficient for the present to say, generally, that when the importer has so acted upon the thing imported, that it has become incorporated and mixed up with the mass of property in the country, it has, perhaps, lost its distinctive character as an import, and has become subject to the taxing power of the state; but while remaining the property of the importer, in his warehouse, in the original form or package in which it was imported, a tax upon it is too plainly a duty on imports, to escape the prohibition in the constitution." See also Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, 324 U.S. 652, 65 S.Ct. 870, 89 L. Ed. 1252 (ad valorem property taxes). In traffic between the several states, the taxable event may occur when the goods are stored for use within a state. Southern Pacific Co. v. Gallagher, 306 U.S. 167, 59 S.Ct. 389, 83 L.Ed. 586 (California use taxes). The plaintiff contends that the Richfield Oil case, supra, and Matson Navigation Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 136 Cal.App.2d 577, 289 P.2d 73, support his claim for a refund. Both cases hold the California sales tax inapplicable to goods which have begun to move in foreign commerce as exports at the time of the sale. The crucial distinction between those cases and the present case is not that they involve exports and the present case an import; it is that at the time of the sale, the goods in those cases were committed to the channels of export. All goods destined for export are not, however, exempt from state taxation. Joy Oil Co. v. State Tax Commission of Michigan, 337 U.S. 286, 69 S.Ct. 1075, 93 L.Ed. 1366 (ad valorem property tax); Empresa Siderurgica S. A. v. County of Merced, 337 U.S. 154, 69 S.Ct. 995, 93 L.Ed. 1276 (personal property tax). We cannot, as is asserted by the plaintiff, decide this case by assuming that if the Richfield and Matson cases had involved imports and the imposition of use taxes instead of sales taxes, the tax would have been declared unconstitutional. The decisions of the United States Supreme Court in the Joy Oil and Empresa cases above cited, Brown v. State of Maryland, supra, and its reasoning in Hooven & Allison, supra, enjoin upon us the duty to determine whether the property sought to be taxed remained an import at all times after its entry into this state and if it did not, to decide whether the tax was applied after the termination of the yacht's exempt status as an import.

The most recent review by the United States Supreme Court of the power of state or local governments to tax goods originating from abroad, appears in Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, supra. There, the State of Ohio sought to impose an ad valorem tax upon bales of fibers imported from foreign countries and the Philippine Islands, then a possession of the United States. The bales were stored in the taxpayer's warehouse awaiting use in his manufacturing business. After deciding that the plaintiff was an importer within the meaning of the import clause, the court considered the duration of the immunity of such imported goods from local taxation. It was held that the bales were "original packages" as defined by Brown v. State of Maryland, supra, and the exaction was declared unconstitutional. The language of that opinion is pertinent here in distinguishing between imports in the constitutional sense and goods which have lost their exemption from taxation by use (Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, supra, 324 U.S. 652 at pages 664, 665, 65 S.Ct. 870, at page 877):

"The reason for the original package doctrine, as fully expounded in Brown v. [State of] Maryland, supra, is that unless the immunity survives to some extent the arrival of the merchandise in the United States, the immunity itself would be destroyed. For there is no purpose of taxing importation, itself, even its ultimate suppression which could not be equally accomplished by laying a like tax on things imported after their arrival and while they are in the hands of the importer.

"On the other hand the immunity is adequately protected and the state power to tax is adequately safeguarded if, as has been the case ever since Brown v. [State of] Maryland, supra, an import is deemed to retain its character as such 'while remaining the property of the importer, in his warehouse, in the original form or package in which it was imported,' see Brown v. [State of] Maryland, supra, 12 Wheat. 442, 6 L.Ed. 678, or until put to the use for which it was imported. Chief Justice Marshall, in Brown v. [State of] Maryland, supra, 12 Wheat. at pages 442, 443, 6 L.Ed. 678, rejected the suggestion that 'an importer may bring in goods, as plate, for his own use, and thus retain much valuable property exempt from taxation.' Plainly if and when removed from the package in which they are imported or when used for the purpose for which they are imported, they cease to be imports and their tax exemption is at an end. It is quite another matter to say, and Chief Justice Marshall did not say, that because they may be taxed when used, the importer may not hold them tax free until the original packages are broken or until they are put to the use for which they are imported. He said, 12 Wheat. at page 443, 6 L.Ed. 678: 'The same observations [i. e., the importer has mixed the goods with the common mass of property, rendering them taxable] apply to plate, or other furniture used by the importer.' (Italics added.)"

[9] It is clear that had a sales tax been imposed on the transaction, it would have been unconstitutional under the import clause. The tax would have intercepted the plaintiff's yacht upon entering the country in its original package and before it was put to the use for which it was purchased. It is also clear that under the tests announced in the Hooven & Allison decision, the yacht was subject to any applicable state and local ad valorem property taxes after the removal of the crating and protective covering and use by the plaintiff.

In Southern Pacific Co. v. Gallagher, supra, 306 U.S. 167, at page 177, 59 S.Ct. 389 at page 393, the court stated: "We think there was a taxable moment when the former [goods] had reached the end of their interstate transportation and had not begun to be consumed in interstate operation. At that moment, the tax on storage and use—retention and exercise of a right of ownership, respectively—was effective." It is contended that the Supreme Court, by declaring the goods shipped in from a sister state and stored for use in California were subject to the California use tax, has fixed a moment at which the use tax attaches and to which we must refer to determine the validity of the tax here involved. It is urged that because the tax attached to stored goods in the Southern Pacific case, the "taxable moment" at which it applied to the plaintiff's yacht was when it entered this state in its covering and crates, and that it ended when it was uncovered, uncrated and lowered into the water. The Southern Pacific case exemplifies the statement in Richfield Oil Corp. v. State Board of Equalization, supra, that the commerce clause and the import clause are not coextensive. Had the goods in the Southern Pacific case been purchased in a foreign country, they would, under the Hooven decision, have been exempt from taxation while stored. The Southern Pacific decision does not require us to select as a taxable event a point in time when the goods are constitutionally exempt and to declare that because the goods were immune at that time they could not be taxed at a later time. The tax imposed by sections 6201 and 6202 is upon the use of goods in California. It is sufficient that subsequent to the arrival of the yacht in this state its original package was removed and it was put to use in this state.

[10] Although no authorities have been cited or found which determine the application of the use tax to imported goods, it appears that the immunity of imported goods is ended by their removal from the original package in which they are imported or their use by the importer. The tests laid down in Brown v. State of Maryland, supra, and Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, supra, for determining the duration of the immunity are met by the finding of the trial court that the yacht was used by the plaintiff from the date it was piloted to Sausalito. The Richfield Oil Company and Matson Navigation Company cases do not, as is seen by the holdings of the United States Supreme Court in the Joy Oil Company and Empresa Siderurgica cases, require that all goods destined for export are exempt from state taxes. It cannot, therefore, as is attempted by the plaintiff, be argued from the Richfield Oil Company and Matson Navigation Company cases, that all goods imported into the United States thereafter remain immune from state or local taxation. The tax was imposed upon the use of the yacht in California which occurred after its exemption as an import had terminated.

The conclusion and judgment that the tax be refunded is contrary to the findings of the trial court, based on undisputed evidence that the yacht was in use by the plaintiff in this state at the time the tax was imposed, and was therefore subject to the use tax under state law; also that at that time, under the facts and applicable federal law, the yacht was no longer immune from taxation in this state.

The judgment is reversed.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 21, 1959.

Habeas corpus proceeding. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that the first, rather than the second, subdivision of Penal Code section providing punishments for attempts applied to punishment for attempted abortion, and that petitioner, who had pleaded guilty to charge of such offense, could not complain because he had been sentenced to state prison rather than to county jail.

Order accordingly.

Penal Code section providing punishment for attempts is unambiguous and evinces legislative intent that if substantive offense carries a maximum penalty of five years or more attempt shall be punishable for a term not exceeding one half of longest term of imprisonment prescribed upon conviction of offense so attempted, and that if substantive offense carries a maximum penalty of less than five years person guilty of such attempt shall be punishable by imprisonment in county jail for not more than one year. CARTER, Justice.

This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus by Charles Bandmann, Jr., an inmate of San Quentin, who, after a plea of guilty, of attempted abortion, was sentenced to state prison "for the term prescribed by law." In response to such application we issued an order to show cause why a writ of habeas corpus should not be granted.

Petitioner was committed to prison on February 18, 1957, and has now served 18 months. Petitioner contends that his maximum sentence should have been one year in the county jail.

The substantive offense of abortion "is punishable by imprisonment in the State prison not less than two nor more than five years". Pen.Code, § 274; emphasis added.

Section 664 of the Penal Code provides "[Punishments For Attempts.] Every person who attempts to commit any crime, but fails, or is prevented or intercepted in the perpetration thereof, is punishable, where no provision is made by law for the punishment of such attempts, as follows:

"1. [Offense punishable by more than five years in state prison.[1]] If the offense so attempted is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for five years, or more,[2] or by imprisonment in a county jail, the person guilty of such attempt is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, or in a county jail, as the case may be, for a term not exceeding one-half the longest term of imprisonment prescribed upon a conviction of the offense so attempted * * *.

"2. [Offense punishable by less than five years in state prison.] If the offense so attempted is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for any term less than five years,[2] the person guilty of such attempt is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year."

The only question involved here is whether subdivision 1 or subdivision 2 of section 664 applies when there has been an attempt to commit the crime of abortion. If subdivision 2 applies, petitioner has served in state prison more than the maximum term which, under that subdivision, would be one year in the county jail; if subdivision 1 is applicable then he has served 18 months of a possible 30 months and is properly in the state prison. The solution to the problem lies in the construction of the phrase found in section 274 of the Penal Code where the substantive offense of abortion is stated to be punishable by not [nor] "more than five years." It will be noted that subdivision 1 of section 664 of the Penal Code (Deering) is entitled "Offense punishable by more than five years in state prison." If the body of the subdivision used the same language it would be obvious that petitioner is correct in his contention. This, however, is not the case, since the language used there differs in that the words used there are "for five years, or more." This court held in In re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 693, 171 P. 958, 959, that "It has uniformly been held that the indeterminate sentence is in legal effect a sentence for the maximum term. It is on this basis that such sentences have been held to be certain and definite, and therefore not void for uncertainty." It follows from this that the maximum sentence for the crime of abortion is five years, and the punishment for an attempt to commit abortion would be two and a half years in the state prison. In People v. Superior Court, 116 Cal.App. 412, 414, 415, 2 P.2d 843, it was held that subdivision 1 of section 664 provided for punishment for an attempt to commit a substantive crime at one-half of the maximum punishment prescribed for the crime itself. See, also, Ex parte Hope, 59 Cal. 423. On the other hand the language used in the title and body of subdivision 2 of section 664 is identical in that if the offense is punishable by "less than five years" or the punishment is "for any

1. Although the effect of this title will be discussed herein, it is interesting to note that as quoted here it is found in Deering's Penal Code. In West's Annotated Penal Code the title is "Offense punishable by five years or more." In Stats. 1953, when the section was amended, chapter 713, section 1, page 1983, no title is set forth for any of the subdivisions of section 664 of the Penal Code.

2. This emphasis added.

term less than five years" the person guilty of an attempt is to be imprisoned in the county jail "for not more than one year."

[1, 2] This court held in Los Angeles City School Dist. of Los Angeles County v. Odell, 200 Cal. 637, 641, 254 P. 570, 572, that "The authorities are numerous to the effect that the title of an act may be relied on in ascertaining the intention of the Legislature, where the act itself is ambiguous; but the title 'cannot be used for the purpose of restraining or controlling any positive provision of the act.' People ex rel. Flynn v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 358, 359, 366; Barnes v. Jones, 51 Cal. 303, 306; In Matter of Boston Min. & Mill. Co., 51 Cal. 624, 626. There is no ambiguity in the amendatory act of 1919, and the title thereto may not, therefore, be employed to control the plain provisions thereof." See, also, Heron v. Riley, 209 Cal. 507, 510, 511, 289 P. 160. It is apparent from the body of subdivision 1 of section 664 of the Penal Code that its provisions are unambiguous if the title thereof is disregarded as it must be since it is merely an editorial one. It is plainly stated that if the offense so attempted is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for five years or more that the person guilty of such an attempt is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, or in a county jail, as the case may be, for a term not exceeding one-half the longest term of imprisonment prescribed upon a conviction of the offense so attempted. Subdivision 2 of section 664 of the Penal Code makes provision for punishment of those guilty of attempts to commit crimes where the substantive offense is punishable in the state prison "for any term less than five years." From a careful reading of the two sections it is obvious that the Legislature intended that a crime carrying a five year maximum sentence should constitute the dividing line. In other words, if the substantive offense carries a maximum penalty of five years or more, subdivision 1 is applicable; if the substantive offense carries a maximum penalty of less than five years, subdivision 2 is applicable.

In disregarding the title of subdivision 1 of section 664 of the Penal Code, and looking only to the plain provisions found in the body thereof, subdivisions 1 and 2 are consistent and harmonious. We said in People v. Moroney, 24 Cal.2d 638, 642, 643, 150 P.2d 888, 890, that "the cardinal rule of statutory construction" was that "'a statute must be read and considered as a whole, in order that the true legislative intention may be determined. All the parts of a statute must be construed together, and harmonized, so far as it is possible to do so without doing violence to the language or to the spirit and purpose of the act, so that the statute may stand in its entirety. For the purpose of harmonizing apparently conflicting clauses, each should be read with direct reference to every other which relates to the same subject, and so read, if possible, as to avoid repugnancy.'" We also said that "In cases of conflict between the provisions of the same statute, those susceptible of only one meaning will control those susceptible of two if the statute can thereby be made harmonious." If we were to construe the two subdivisions of section 664 as contended by petitioner, we would have a hiatus at the five year mark since subdivision 1 would then provide for punishment for attempts where the maximum penalty for the substantive offense was more than five years with subdivision 2 providing for punishment for attempts where the maximum penalty for the substantive offense was less than five years. "The act must be considered and applied in all of its parts, and each section must be reconciled with the others and be made effective if possible." Wulff-Hansen & Co. v. Silvers, 21 Cal.2d 253, 260, 131 P.2d 373, 377, and, see, People v. Trieber, 28 Cal.2d 657, 661, 171 P.2d 1; In re Petraeus, 12 Cal.2d 579, 583, 86 P.2d 343.

[3] Petitioner argues that subdivision 2 of section 664 was held applicable to attempted abortion in People v. Bowlby, 135 Cal.App.2d 519, 287 P.2d 547, 53 A.L.R. 2d 1147. In the Bowlby case the defendant was convicted of abortion and of attempted abortion. He was sentenced to one year in the county jail on the attempted abortion count. Although the court affirmed the judgment of conviction there was no discussion of the point raised here, and the case cannot be considered authority for the proposition urged by petitioner that subdivision 2 of section 664 is applicable to attempted abortion convictions.

[4, 5] In view of the clear wording found in the body of subdivisions 1 and 2 of section 664 of the Penal Code there is no merit to petitioner's contention that said statute is clearly ambiguous requiring a construction that subdivision 2 is applicable to this case and defendant should have received a county jail sentence. While it is true as contended by petitioner that the Index to the 1957 Standard Penal Code of California, published by Hanna Legal Publications, lists felonies punishable by five years or less as governed by subdivision 2 and those punishable by more than five years as governed by subdivision 1, such "Index" is not a part of the statute as it was inserted by the author of the publication and not by the Legislature.

[6, 7] Petitioner relies on Ex parte Hope, 59 Cal. 423, 424, 425, in support of his argument that "nor more than five years" is, in reality, a provision that the penalty is less than five years. In the Hope case the petitioner had been convicted of attempted first degree burglary and was sentenced to serve seven and one-half years which the court noted was "one half of the longest term of imprisonment prescribed for a conviction of the offense so attempted." Petitioner there contended that subdivision 2 of section 664 of the Penal Code was applicable. This court denied his application for a writ of habeas corpus and, after quoting both subdivisions of section 664, stated: "In making this enactment the Legislature was obviously classifying the punishment to be imposed on those convicted of attempts to commit certain crimes. The first class (provided for in Subdivision 1) embraces those cases where the offense attempted is punishable in the State prison for five years, or more, or by imprisonment in a county jail, and the second class (provided for in Subdivision 2) embraces those cases where the offense attempted is punishable by imprisonment in the State Prison for any term less than five years. In effect, as we construe the statute, the Legislature has said that (in the absence of another express provision) every person who is convicted of an attempt to commit an offense, which offense when completed is punishable by imprisonment in the State Prison for a term less than five years, but which can not exceed or extend to that period, is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year; and that every person who is convicted of an attempt to commit an offense, which offense when completed is punishable by imprisonment in the State Prison for five years, or more, is punishable by imprisonment in the State Prison for a term not exceeding one half the longest term of imprisonment prescribed upon a conviction of the offense so attempted." (Emphasis added.) Petitioner, of course, relies on the underscored words as authority for his proposition that the term prescribed for the substantive offense of abortion which is "nor more than five years" really means that the term cannot extend to five years. The court continued, in the Hope case, as follows: "It results that the case of petitioner comes within the provisions of Subdivision 1 of Section 664; for he was convicted of an attempt to commit burglary of the first degree, and burglary of the first degree is punishable by imprisonment in the State Prison for a term which may extend to fifteen years. Burglary of the second degree is punishable by imprisonment in the State Prison for not more than five years. The Legislature evidently deemed the one a more heinous crime than the other, for the reason, doubtless, that one is committed in the nighttime and the other in the daytime. And since, in fixing the maximum punishment of the completed offense, the Legislature has prescribed three times as much in the one case as in the other, it is unreasonable to suppose that it intended to prescribe the same punishment for an attempt to commit the one as for an attempt to commit the other, which would be the result of the construction contended for by the petitioner. At all events, the language employed does not, in our opinion, admit of that construction." Inasmuch as the petitioner in the Hope case had been convicted of attempted burglary in the first degree any statement there made concerning the punishment for attempted second degree burglary is dictum and is hereby disapproved.

[8] Petitioner also relies on In re Bellis, 75 Cal.App. 146, 147, 241 P. 910. The petitioner there was found guilty of attempted second degree burglary. The court, after noting that burglary in the first degree was punishable by not less than five years and that second degree burglary was punishable by not less than one nor more than fifteen years, held: "An indeterminate sentence is in legal effect a sentence for the maximum term. In re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 171 P. 958. The crime of which petitioner pleaded guilty being punishable for not less than one nor more than fifteen years, one-half of the longest term is greater than five years and the crime is, therefore, punishable by imprisonment in the state prison." Petitioner's argument that the Bellis case means that the measuring stick is one-half of the maximum sentence for the substantive crime for the purpose of applying the provisions of section 664 is, obviously, without merit. The provisions of section 664 are very clearly to the effect that it is the maximum term of the substantive offense which is the guide in determining the punishment for an attempt to commit the substantive offense. Any intimation to the contrary in the Bellis case is hereby disapproved. People v. Snow, 123 Cal.App. 33, 35, 10 P.2d 767, which quotes the underscored language in the Bellis case, is disapproved also in that it conveys the inference that one-half of the maximum sentence for the substantive offense is the guide in determining the applicability of section 664 of the Penal Code. It should be here noted that these cases correctly applied the law to the facts there involved and the statements which we here disapprove were clearly dictum and had no bearing on the result reached in those cases.

[9, 10] Petitioner also contends that he has been denied due process of law and the equal protection of the laws because of the "vagueness" of the provisions of section 664 of the Penal Code. When the two subdivisions are considered and construed together, as we have done here, it is obvious that the language used is neither vague nor ambiguous. Furthermore, even if the section has been misconstrued and misapplied in the past due to the misleading editorial title (see footnote on page 341 of 333 P.2d), petitioner cannot complain of an error which did not affect him and where the section was properly applied as to him.

[11] Petitioner contends that he was improperly sentenced to prison under section 274 of the Penal Code (abortion) whereas attempted abortion is punishable only under section 664 of the same code. The "Abstract of Judgment," petitioner's Exhibit "A," recites that he was convicted, on his plea of guilty, of "the crime of Felony, Attempted Abortion, (a lesser and included offense) * * * in violation of Section 274 Penal Code. * * *" In People v. Berger, 131 Cal.App.2d 127, 129, 280 P.2d 136, it was held that an attempt to commit abortion falls within the provisions of section 664 of the Penal Code. While it does not appear that the judgment is fatally defective, even if it were, it does not mean that petitioner would be entitled to discharge. It was held in In re Fritz, 179 Cal. 415, 416, 177 P. 157, that such offenders "should be returned to the superior court in which they had been convicted, for the imposition of a proper sentence."

[12] It has been brought to our attention that petitioner was released on parole to Charles R. Bradley, a Sonoma County parole officer on or about August 18, 1958, and that he is no longer in actual physical custody in San Quentin. As a prisoner upon parole, petitioner is constructively a prisoner under sentence in the legal custody and under the control of the Department of Corrections. In re Marzec, 25 Cal.2d 794, 797, 154 P.2d 873. Such release does not render this proceeding moot.

For the reasons hereinabove set forth, the order to show cause heretofore issued is discharged, the writ of habeas corpus is denied and the petitioner remanded.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

It is the established rule that "When language which is reasonably susceptible of two constructions is used in a penal law ordinarily that construction which is more favorable to the offender will be adopted." (People v. Stuart (1956), 47 Cal.2d 167, 175 [7], 302 P.2d 5, 55 A.L.R.2d 705; People v. Smith (1955), 44 Cal.2d 77, 79 [2], 279 P.2d 33; In re Bramble (1947), 31 Cal.2d 43, 51 [6, 7], 187 P.2d 411; In re McVickers (1946), 29 Cal.2d 264, 278, 176 P.2d 40; People v. Valentine (1946), 28 Cal.2d 121, 143 [20], 169 P.2d 1; People v. Ralph (1944), 24 Cal.2d 575, 581 [2], 150 P.2d 401.) As further declared in People v. Ralph (1944), supra, "criminal statutes will not be built up 'by judicial grafting upon legislation. * * * [I]t is also true that the defendant is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt, whether it arise out of a question of fact, or as to the true interpretation of words or the construction of language used in a statute.' [Citations.]"

Applying these principles in this case, any ambiguity in the statute here involved should be resolved in petitioner's favor, and the holding should be that he has already served the full maximum term for his offense of attempted abortion.

So far as here material the pertinent statute, section 664 of the Penal Code, provides (subdivision 1) one punishment where the offense attempted "is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for five years, or more," and (subdivision 2) a substantially lesser punishment for the attempt where the offense attempted "is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for any term less than five years." [1] (Italics added.) It seems to me that the legislative intent, as defined by the language used, thus places the turning point on the maximum and the minimum terms which may be imposed as punishment for the offense attempted. In other words, the distinction intended is based on the potentials of punishment as between two classes of crimes; i. e., one class having a minimum of five years' imprisonment and the other class having a maximum of five years. (Cf. Ex parte Hope (1881), 59 Cal. 423.)

This view, I think, gives rational effect to the differentiation expressed in the statute, and also follows the rule of construction in favor of the accused. The offense here attempted [1] obviously "is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for any [some] term less than five years," but it is not punishable "for five years, or more." (Italics added.) That is, it is not punishable for some or any term which is of more than five years' duration. Thus the attempt to commit the offense plainly does not fall within the class of attempts which carry the more severe penalty that results where the offense attempted is punishable by imprisonment for more than five years.

It follows that the crime to which petitioner pleaded guilty (attempted abortion) does fall within the class which bears the lesser punishment of "imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year" (subd. 2 of Pen. Code, § 664), and that because petitioner has already served more than one year's imprisonment petitioner, and not the writ, should be discharged.[2]

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Hollie CROMEENES, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 2906.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 30, 1958.

Defendant, after trial to the court without a jury, was convicted of statutory rape. The Superior Court, San Joaquin County, George F. Buck, J., entered judgment, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that action of trial judge in warning defendant's counsel not to call prosecuting witness, who had made conflicting statements concerning the guilt of the defendant, a liar was not prejudicial.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1170½(1)

In statutory rape prosecution, examination of deputy district attorney, who was called by defendant to testify concerning conversations that preceded confession, was not prejudicially curtailed by trial court, where defendant's counsel was permitted to ask deputy district attorney if, before defendant made his confession, any mention had been made of any arrest or prosecution of defendant's wife, and deputy district attorney denied that there was any mention of arrest or prosecution of defendant's wife, and defendant's counsel then stated that he had no further questions.

2. Criminal Law ⇐260(11)

In statutory rape prosecution, evidence that after prosecuting witness and her grandmother went to district attorney and made complaint against defendant, prosecuting witness stated to a neighbor and to defendant's counsel that charge she had made against defendant was wholly false did not render testimony of prosecuting witness so clearly false and unbelievable as to entitle it to no credence, and it was a matter for trial court, as trier of the facts, on conflicting testimony and conflicting inferences reasonably to be drawn, to decide where the truth lay.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1166½(12)

In statutory rape prosecution, which was tried without a jury, action of trial judge in warning defendant's counsel not to call prosecuting witness, who had made conflicting statements concerning guilt of defendant, a liar was not prejudicial.

Lawrence M. Goldstein, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Lloyd Hinkelman, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant was convicted of statutory rape. The cause was tried to the court, a jury having been waived.

On April 18, 1958, appellant was living with Marie Sutton, the mother of the complaining witness. He described Marie as his common-law wife. The relationship had existed for some time. He had a child by Marie. The complaining witness, 13 years of age, lived with the couple. The girl testified that on April 1, 1958, at about 9 p. m., and after she had gone to bed, appellant came to her bed and had intercourse with her. A few days thereafter she went to her grandmother and told her about the incident. On April 8th, she and her grandmother went to the district attorney's office. Appellant was arrested April 9th in Sacramento where he was in jail for some minor offense. He made a statement to a police officer and a deputy district attorney of San Joaquin County, which amounted to a complete confession. At the trial, after the girl had testified, the prosecution over defense objections introduced the confession of appellant in evidence and rested. Appellant testified that he did not have intercourse with the girl and that the statement he made to the officers had been obtained as a result of a threat by the district attorney's office to arrest his common-law wife. He said that her physical condition was such that if she were placed in jail she would not, in his opinion, have lived thirty days and that he would have confessed to anything to prevent her arrest. He did not deny that he had made the statements introduced in evidence, but did assert that the statements were false.

[1] The errors complained of revolve around the proceedings to determine whether or not appellant's confession had been voluntary. A stenographic reporter had been taken to Sacramento with the officers and at the trial he was made a witness and asked to read the conversation between the officers and appellant. He testified that appellant's statements had been made voluntarily. This was challenged and he was taken on cross-examination. It then appeared that the officers had talked with appellant before the witness had been asked to come in and take the statement and that the witness did not know what occurred prior to his being called in. Thereupon the deputy district attorney, a Mr. Corren, was called by appellant to testify concerning the conversations that preceded the formal statement. Appellant contends that his counsel's examination of the deputy was prejudicially curtailed by the trial court. The following occurred: The witness testified that before the statement was taken he had a conversation with appellant. He was asked if during that conversation he had informed appellant at any time that he had sufficient evidence to prosecute Marie and that it was probable that some action would be taken. This the witness denied. He was then asked if there was anything said concerning Marie, and the witness replied:

"A. Yes, there certainly was a conversation concerning his wife.

"Q. Yes, sir. A. Would you like to hear what it was? A. Just a moment until I ask the question.

"The Court: I hope you are not going to call Mr. Corren a liar?

"Mr. Chargin [Attorney for defendant]: No, Your Honor, no, Your Honor.

"Mr. Chargin:

"Q. Sir, in reference to this conversation, was there any mention of her being prosecuted? A. There was no mention of her being prosecuted.

"Q. Was there any mention of her being arrested? A. There was no mention of her being arrested.

"Q. Do you recall her [sic] saying that 'We could have taken the girl's mother to jail yesterday but we did not want to do that?' A. I did not say that.

"Q. Was there anything said of a similar nature? A. There was nothing said of any similar nature at all as to that.

"Mr. Chargin: I have no further questions."

Appellant contends that the statement by the court had the effect of curtailing his counsel's examination of the deputy district attorney. The record does not bear this out. Apparently, his counsel completed his examination and ended the same when it developed that the deputy district attorney denied there had been any talk of arresting or prosecuting appellant's common-law wife.

[2] Appellant next contends that the testimony of the prosecuting witness is so clearly false and unbelievable as to be entitled to no credence whatsoever. The contention cannot be sustained. After the girl had testified to appellant's commission of the act charged, it developed on cross-examination that, after she and her grandmother had gone to the district attorney and complained of appellant, she had stated to a neighbor, a Mrs. Padgett, that the charge she had made against appellant had been wholly false. It developed further that she had made a like statement in a conversation with appellant's counsel. Mrs. Padgett, sworn as a witness, testified that the girl had admitted to her that her charges against appellant were false; that she then advised her to go to the district attorney and the girl refused, stating that she was afraid of what would happen to her in view of the complaint she had made. It is unnecessary to pursue the matter further. Her credibility was a question for the trial court and from comments made by the trial judge upon the submission of the case for decision it appears that he considered the girl had been pressured and confused, after informing against the appellant, by members of her household, with the result that she had made the statements concerning falsity of her complaint. The trial court indicated further that, although appellant had denied he had told the truth to the officers, the statement he had admittedly made to them was couched in such language and was of such tenor as to indicate strongly he had told the truth to the officers and had falsified at the trial. The record presents a situation where it was clearly a matter for the trial court upon conflicting testimony and conflicting inferences reasonably to be drawn to decide where the truth lay.

[3] Appellant charges misconduct of the trial judge prejudicial to his cause. During the cross-examination of the complaining witness when she was being questioned concerning the conflicting statements she had made, she began to cry. The following occurred:

"Q. You were lying then, also? A. Yes.

"The Court [Intervening]: Now, it is the duty of the Court to protect the witness from harsh and abusive treatment of counsel, and counsel is admonished and warned."

The cross-examination continued until the following occurred:

"Q. You also remember telling Mrs. Padgett that you were afraid to go to the District Attorney and tell them that you had told a lie about Hollie [appellant] because of the fact that you were afraid of what they would do, you remember that? A. Yes.

"Q. You do?

"The Court [Intervening]: Counsel, I wish you would not use the word 'lie' and 'liar' in the courtroom.

"Mr. Chargin: Yes, Your Honor.

"The Court: My only suggestion would be that there are ways of using that phrase in other forms. Of course, you are dealing with a child. I have seen that expression used on grown men and the lawyer taken right out on the courthouse lawn and had the hide taken off of him. It has happened to members of the Bar. And I would suggest that when you start with children you might work up to grown people and have some bad bruises some day."

If this case had been tried to a jury the foregoing comment of the trial judge might well have worked much mischief. On the other hand, had the case been tried to a jury it is not likely the comment would have been made. Apparently the trial court strongly objected to the use of the terms "lie" and "liar" during the cross-examination of the 13-year-old girl, but his suggestions as to proper retribution for a lawyer so conducting himself were unnecessary and not to be commended. In our view, however, the record will not support an inference that the court was prejudiced against the appellant because of what to it was needlessly offensive conduct toward the witness. Although the girl had made squarely conflicting statements concerning the guilt of appellant, the appellant had made a statement frankly confessing that the complaint she had made to the district attorney and upon which he had been charged was true, with a strong implication, by the way in which he made it and the description he gave of the event, that the incident complained of was one in a series. Upon the whole record we cannot sustain the contention of defendant that he did not receive a fair trial.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Prosecution for unlawful possession of marijuana. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, J. PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant Guzman and one Zubia were accused of unlawfully possessing marijuana. In a nonjury trial, they were convicted. Guzman appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends that the court erred in receiving the marijuana in evidence. His argument is that the marijuana was obtained by unlawful search and seizure.

Officer Boyle testified that on December 26, 1957, about 12:45 p. m., while he was driving an automobile south on Arroyo Boulevard, he observed a Chrysler automobile that was also traveling south on that boulevard. He followed the Chrysler about six blocks in an area on the boulevard where there are many sharp curves. When the Chrysler slowed down on some of the curves, he did not see the stop light on the Chrysler "light up." He thought the Chrysler was being driven in violation of section 637(a) of the Vehicle Code (without an adequate stop light). When he turned the automobile siren and red light on, the Chrysler stopped, and he (witness) stopped the police automobile beside the Chrysler. Defendant Guzman got out of the Chrysler on the "driver's side" and approached the police automobile. (Guzman will be referred to as the defendant.) When he (officer) asked defendant for his driver's license, defendant produced the license and asked why he had been stopped. The officer replied that he had been stopped for violation of section 637(a) of the Vehicle Code. Defendant said that he had been stopped before by the police, and he planned to have the stop light fixed. The officer asked defendant if he had any weapons in the automobile. Defendant said that he did not have any weapons in the automobile and, "If you wish, you may look in the car—I do not have any weapons." As the officer approached the Chrysler from the left side, defendant jumped into that automobile and crawled across the front seat on his knees. The seat was covered with a blanket, and there were two paper sacks on the blanket about the center of the seat. While defendant was crawling across the seat he moved the blanket with his knees and the blanket covered the sacks. The officer unrolled the blanket, removed the sacks, and asked defendant what the sacks were. He replied that "they" were his lunch. The officer opened the sacks. One sack contained a salt shaker and the other sack contained a portion of a sandwich and a rolled-up paper sack. The rolled-up sack contained a small portion of wax paper in which there was a green leafy substance. The officer thought that the substance might be marijuana. He showed the leafy substance to the two defendants and "they" said that "they knew nothing of it." The officer found a package of cigarette papers in the glove compartment of the Chrysler, and found another package of cigarette papers in a pocket of defendant Guzman's pants.

On cross-examination, Officer Boyle testified that he did not have a warrant for the arrest of either defendant. The question he asked Guzman regarding weapons was a routine question. There had been many "burglaries of guns and so forth in broad daylight" in the neighborhood where the arrest was made, and Guzman, "according to his driver's license," did not live in that neighborhood.

The leafy substance which was in the wax paper was marijuana. The package of cigarette papers which was in the Chrysler and the package of cigarette papers which was in defendant's pocket contained fragments of marijuana within the leaves of the papers.

Defendant testified that he did not tell Officer Boyle to "go ahead and look" in the automobile; and he did not tell the officer that he had permission to search the automobile.

Defendant Zubia testified that he was riding with Guzman at the time the automobile was stopped by the officers (Officer School accompanied Officer Boyle in the police automobile); the officers did not ask him for permission to search the automobile.

When the leafy substance and the cigarette papers were offered in evidence, the defendant objected to the offer on the ground that those things were obtained as the result of an illegal search and seizure. The objection was overruled. At the close of the prosecution's case, the defendant made a motion to exclude the leafy substance and cigarette papers as evidence. The motion was denied.

Appellant contends that the marijuana and cigarette papers should not have been received in evidence, for the reason they were obtained by illegal search and seizure. He argues that the fact that defendant committed a minor traffic violation (not having an adequate stop signal light on his automobile) did not justify the officer in searching the automobile or defendant, since the search was unrelated to such an offense and was not incidental to such an arrest. By reason of the defective stop signal light, the officer had reasonable cause to stop the defendant. When the defendant stopped, he got out of his automobile and approached the police automobile before the officer approached the defendant's automobile. When the officer asked the defendant a routine question as to whether he had any weapons in the automobile, the defendant replied in the negative and said further that the officer might look in the car if he wished to do so. The conduct of defendant, immediately thereafter, in jumping into his automobile, crawling across the seat, and covering the sacks with the blanket might reasonably cause the officer to suspect that defendant was attempting to conceal something that was in the automobile. The question as to whether defendant consented that the officer might search the automobile was a question of fact for the determination of the trial court. Under the evidence here the court could reasonably find that defendant gave such consent. Since the search of the automobile revealed a leafy substance which the officer thought was marijuana, the officer had reasonable cause to search the defendant, who was the owner and driver of the automobile. The court did not err in receiving the marijuana in evidence.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

As grounds for a rehearing appellant urges (1) that the record on appeal was incomplete; (2) that errors in the giving and refusing of instructions and misconduct of counsel, not heretofore specified, should now be considered; and (3) that this court incorrectly stated the "testimony".

The "testimony" referred to is a narrative of the facts supported by evidence in the record, and related in consonance with the rule on appeal as stated in our opinion.

Objections respecting the incompleteness of the record, newly specified errors in the giving and refusing of instructions and the alleged misconduct of counsel now are being raised for the first time.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Jack Eugene BISHOP, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6351.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 2, 1959.

Prosecution for first degree robbery of a gasoline station, wherein defendant claimed that he was intoxicated and was at some other place at time of robbery. From adverse judgment and sentence of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Mark Brandler, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that fact that victim was not examined concerning physical characteristics of person who robbed him was of no import when he was able to positively identify defendant and defense counsel had an opportunity to cross-examine victim.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Robbery ⇐24(1)

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction of first degree robbery of a gasoline station.

2. Criminal Law ⇐260(11)

Trial court's determination will not be disturbed where the evidence is in conflict.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

Where there is positive direct testimony that defendant committed offense, defendant has burden of showing that such testimony is inherently unbelievable in order to justify a reversal on that ground.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

Although reviewing court will not uphold a judgment or verdict based upon evidence inherently improbable, testimony which merely discloses unusual circumstances does not come within that category.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1159(4)

To warrant rejection of statements given by a witness who has been believed by a trial court, there must exist either a physical impossibility that they are true, or their falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions.

LILLIE, Justice.

[1] Defendant was convicted by the court of first degree robbery of a gasoline station. At the time of sentence, the trial judge found the weapon used to be a dangerous one and sentenced defendant to the state prison.

The sole issue on this appeal is whether the testimony of the victim is so inherently unbelievable or improbable as to render it insufficient to sustain the judgment of conviction.

According to the testimony of Harold Ray, an employee of the gasoline station and the complaining witness, the following events occurred during about five minutes, at approximately 8:45 p. m. on July 19, 1957. Ray was in the process of closing the station, which was still lighted, but was under his car fixing the stop lights when he heard some one say: "May I have the key to unlock the restroom?" Ray asked him if his lights were working and the person replied: "Yes, they are sir." He emerged from under the car and as he reached the restroom, the one with whom he had been speaking placed a gun in his back and said: "All right, let's go inside." The washroom, about four feet square, was also lighted. Ray went in, turned around and faced a person wearing a brown suede jacket, dark pants and no hat or glasses, holding a blue steel automatic pistol six or seven inches long. He said: "We are going to go out front and we'll get the money out of the cash drawer. I don't want you to make any unusual disturbance or anything like that." In all, they remained in the washroom 30 to 45 seconds, then walked out and over to the island where the cash box was kept. More conversation took place between them and they returned to the restroom, where Ray gave him the money. There was further discussion concerning the cash, after which he took Ray's wallet saying: "Don't worry, I am not going to hit you." As he left the washroom he closed the door and dropped the keys outside. Ray testified he was in fear during the time he turned over the money and that $109.07 was taken.

After the robbery, Harold Ray was shown a "mug" book by police but made no identification; later he was shown a set of pictures from which he identified defendant as the robber; seven days after the robbery he picked defendant out of a police lineup as the one who took the money; again pointed out defendant in court at the preliminary hearing and during the trial definitely identified defendant as the person who robbed him, saying: "There is no doubt in my mind."

Ray further testified he noticed nothing unusual about the voice, speech, walk or condition of the eyes of the man who took the money. Defendant was arrested approximately five days after the robbery and although his car was searched, no revolver or brown suede jacket were found. Police did not search his home.

Defendant denied commission of the robbery both to police and at the trial. Officer Reeves testified for the prosecution that when he first talked to defendant, he told him that on the day of the robbery he drank beer in the Passtime Bar from 3:30 p. m. to 7 p. m., at which time he went across the street to a cafe for several cups of coffee, where a waitress told him to leave because of his drunken condition; that at approximately 8 p. m. he returned to the bar and did not leave until 1 a. m. The distance between the bar and the gasoline station is approximately 2½ miles. The officer further testified that he checked his story and later told defendant he was unable to substantiate the time element; that defendant then told him that when he left the cafe it was possible he had driven his car around for awhile, but in any event people should remember him at the bar and cafe because of his drunken condition.

At the trial, defendant testified to substantially the same story he told Officer Reeves, but added that he left the bar to go to the cafe between 7:30 and 8 p. m.; that after leaving there he went to sleep in his car and that he wore a "T" shirt, work boots and denims. He further testified that he did not in his prior conversation tell police he fell asleep in his car, but instead told them he was at the bar because he "thought" that was where he had been; that he did not actually sleep in the car but only "dozed"; that he went across the street and talked to his boss, returned to the cafe and went home; and that he did not own a brown suede jacket or revolver.

The bartender at the Passtime Bar testified defendant was in the bar when he went on duty at 6 p. m. and that he left around 8 p. m. to go across the street to a cafe, from which he returned at 10:30 in a drunken condition. The waitress at the cafe testified he entered at about 8 p. m., was drunk, and she refused to serve him beer; that after a slight commotion, he sat in a booth and drank three cups of coffee and was drunk when he left around 3:30.

Appellant argues that to sustain the judgment all testimony other than that of Harold Ray must be disregarded because it is inherently improbable. He further points out that as to Harold Ray there was "no examination with reference to the physical characteristics of the person who robbed him."

[2, 3] The evidence shows, on the one hand, the actual commission of a crime of robbery—use of a dangerous weapon (People v. Rainey, 125 Cal.App.2d 739, 271 P.2d 144) and the felonious taking of personal property from the person of another by means of force or fear (People v. Cleary, 1 Cal.App. 50, 81 P. 753; section 211, Penal Code); and the positive identification of the defendant as the one who committed it; and on the other hand, testimony which, if believed, would constitute an alibi. On the record before us, unless the testimony of Harold Ray is inherently improbable, there exists merely a factual conflict which was resolved by the trier of fact; and on appeal the trial court's determination therefor will not be disturbed. It is well settled that where, as in the case at bar, there is positive direct testimony that defendant committed the offense, defendant has the burden of showing that such testimony is inherently unbelievable in order to justify a reversal on that ground. People v. Braun, 14 Cal.2d 1, 92 P.2d 402; People v. Castro, 58 Cal.App.2d 491, 157 P.2d 25.

[4, 5] As to the inherent improbability of testimony generally, the court in People v. Lyons, 47 Cal.2d 311, at pages 319–320, 303 P.2d 329, at page 334, stated: "The rule is thus stated in People v. Huston, [1943], 21 Cal.2d 690, 693, [134 P.2d 758]: 'Although an appellate court will not uphold a judgment or verdict based upon evidence inherently improbable, testimony which merely discloses unusual circumstances does not come within that category. (Kidroski v. Anderson, [1940], 39 Cal.App. 2d 602, 605, [103 P.2d 1000].) To warrant the rejection of the statements given by a witness who has been believed by a trial court, there must exist either a physical impossibility that they are true, or their falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions. (Citing cases.)' "

In the instant case we find not only no unusual circumstances concerning Ray's testimony of the robbery and identity of the person who took his money, but nothing which would even subject it to justifiable suspicion. Actual events of the robbery lasted approximately five minutes. The witness had ample opportunity to observe him. The service station was lighted; he was within close proximity to the person who robbed him while walking and talking with him, particularly in the small lighted washroom where Ray was confronted with him face to face for about 45 seconds, and where later he turned the money over to him. He saw that the man wore no hat or glasses and that he had on a brown suede jacket with knit sleeves and collar and dark pants. The witness walked with him three times the distance between the station and the washroom, and saw him walk and stand and heard him speak on five or six occasions. He later identified defendant as the man who robbed him, from a set of photos, out of a police line-up, at the preliminary hearing and at the trial. We find nothing apparently false or physically impossible about Ray's testimony or his identification of the defendant.

[6] The fact that Harold Ray was not examined concerning the physical characteristics of the person who robbed him is of no import under the circumstances at bar. Since he was able to positively identify defendant, there was no reason why the prosecutor should or would have further questioned him concerning his physical appearance. However, defendant's counsel had every opportunity to do so on cross-examination but chose not to, taking a chance that the trial judge would not accept Ray's testimony as it then existed. Having gambled and lost, he is not now in a position to raise the matter on appeal. No restriction was placed on defendant's cross-examination of the complaining witness and no objection of any kind was interposed in the trial court.

[7] Having found Harold Ray's testimony to be reasonable and believable, we conclude it sufficient to sustain the judgment. A conviction for robbery may be sustained on appeal where the identity of the accused is based on the testimony of a single witness. Concerning this, the court in People v. Thompson, 147 Cal. App.2d 543, at pages 546–547, 305 P.2d 274, at page 276, stated: "An identification of an accused by the victim of a robbery is sufficient to sustain an implied finding that he committed the crime. (Citations.) The identification need not be corroborated by other evidence. People v. McNeal, 123 Cal.App.2d 222, 266 P.2d 529."

[8] In opposition to the testimony of the complaining witness that he noticed nothing unusual about the speech, carriage or physical condition of the man who robbed him, defendant offered evidence to the effect he was drunk at the time of the robbery, approximately 2½ miles away, which if believed would have established an alibi. At most, it presented a conflict in the evidence. The determination of the credibility of the witnesses, the truth or falsity of the facts upon which a decision depends, and the weight of the evidence is within the exclusive province of the trial judge and it is he who has the duty to resolve the factual conflict. People v. Thompson, 147 Cal.App.2d 543, 305 P.2d 274; People v. Spillard, 15 Cal.App.2d 649, 59 P.2d 887. The trial court accepted the testimony of Harold Ray as worthy of belief and found accordingly. It obviously rejected the alibi testimony of defendant and his witnesses. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, the evidence is more than ample to sustain the conviction.

[9] Affirmance of the judgment carries with it affirmance of the sentence. People v. Perkins, 147 Cal.App.2d 793, 305 P.2d 932; People v. Cochran, 162 Cal.App.2d 733, 328 P.2d 532.

For the foregoing reasons, the attempted appeal from the sentence is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Arthur P. POLLARD et al., Defendants,

Altha Thompson Pollard, alias Noel Pollard, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 17827.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 5, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 4, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Action for declaration of existence of trust and for enforcement thereof. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Richard H. Chamberlain, J., granted the relief sought, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J., held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that trustor had intended and had effected delivery of trust properties.

Affirmed.

1. Trusts ⇐345

Beneficiaries were proper parties to bring action for declaration of existence of trust and for enforcement thereof where it was futile, under peculiar circumstances of case, to expect trustees to sue trustor. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 863.

2. Trusts ⇐33, 373

Delivery is largely a matter of intent of donor or trustor, and is a question of fact.

3. Trusts ⇐44(1)

In beneficiaries' action for declaration of existence of trust and for enforcement thereof, evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that trustor had intended and effected delivery of trust properties.

4. Trusts ⇐95

One to whom property is transferred in violation of trust holds it as involuntary trustee unless he purchased it in good faith and for value, and such a transferee, even though he enters into no conspiracy with trustee, is liable under Civil Code section. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2243.

5. New Trial ⇐150(3, 4)

In action for declaration of existence of trust and for enforcement thereof, it was not an abuse of discretion to deny defendant's motion for new trial on ground of newly-discovered evidence of release given to attorney who was allegedly joint tortfeasor with defendant, where affidavit in support of motion did not show with particularity that attorney was a joint tortfeasor but, at most, afforded basis for inference to that effect and affidavit did not specify date of discovery of asserted release.

6. Continuance ⇐26(11)

Where record indicated that witness had been ill for some 18 months before trial and there was no indication that he would ever be able to appear and it appeared that even though case had been pending for two years before trial his deposition had not been taken, it was not error to deny motion for continuance to permit such witness to testify.

7. Appeal and Error ⇐931(6)

Where competent evidence supports judgment, it will be presumed on appeal that evidence erroneously admitted was disregarded by court.

8. Appeal and Error ⇐1051(1)

Where action, for declaration of existence of trust and for enforcement thereof, was tried to court without jury and there was other competent evidence that trustor intended to and knowingly did transfer his entire interest in property described in agreement, error, if any, in permitting attorney who drew trust agreement to testify, over objection, that trustor had told him, in coversation preceding drafting of agreement, that he desired to place in trust his entire interest in described property rather than a half interest, would not require reversal of judgment for plaintiffs. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 2.

9. Appeal and Error ⇐1057(1)

In action for declaration of existence of trust and for enforcement thereof, it may have been error for court, to which case was tried without jury, to refuse to admit evidence of statements made by trustor, after execution and delivery of trust agreement, negativing his intent to transfer all of his interest in described property, but error could not have been prejudicial where testimony of such declarations was admitted and rejected evidence would thus have been only cumulative.

10. Depositions ⇐93

In action for declaration of existence of trust and for enforcement thereof, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse to admit deceased trustor's partially completed deposition, where there had been no cross-examination of trustor and there was some question as to whether even direct examination had been completed.

Haley, McInerney & Logan, William H. McInerney, Oakland, Hennigan, Ryneal & Nixen, J. David Hennigan, Riverside, for appellant.

DRAPER, Justice.

This action arises out of a trust agreement executed by Arthur P. Pollard May 6, 1954, a few days before his second marriage. It provided that income of the trust estate, plus payments from principal which the trustees were permitted to make, should go to Pollard for his life. Upon his death the trust was to terminate, and its assets to be distributed to the four adult children of Pollard by his predeceased wife. The agreement included a detailed list of real and personal property conveyed to the trustees. Trustor executed deed and assignment to the trustees. He and one trustee delivered to a stockbroker stock certificates and executed stock transfer powers, under circumstances warranting the conclusion that they were so delivered for transfer to the trustees. However, the certificates were in the name of trustor and his deceased wife as joint tenants, and the broker advised that it was necessary to transfer them first to trustor's name alone. At about the time the certificates were reissued in trustor's name and returned to the broker, the trustor expressed dissatisfaction with the trust, asserting in part that he had intended to transfer only a half interest in the property described in the trust agreement. He retook the certificates from the broker, made no further transfers to the trustees, and treated assets in his hands as his own. He and his second wife attempted to start negotiations with his children for modification of the trust agreement.

The trustees remained inactive from mid-June until September 23, when the trustor accepted the resignation he had previously requested of them and appointed a successor trustee. Four days later, the four children filed this action against trustor, his wife, and the two original trustees. By amendment, the successor trustee was joined as a defendant.

The amended complaint seeks a declaration that a valid trust exists, enforcement of the trust agreement, to impress a trust upon real property held by trustor and his wife to the extent that funds subject to the trust agreement can be traced to such property, and for money judgment against trustor and his wife to the extent that trust property was expended by them for their own purposes. Trustor died November 24, 1955, and the executor of his will was substituted as a defendant. After trial without jury, judgment was entered directing that trustor's estate and his surviving widow restore to the trust the sum of $37,158.36, ordering that the executor pay to the trustee the proceeds of four life insurance policies, and finding that the trustee, as such, is the owner of certain promissory notes described in the trust agreement. Save to the extent that the trust is declared valid and is ordered enforced, no relief is awarded against any of the trustees. Defendant widow appeals.

[1] Appellant first contends that an action to redress wrongs against the trust estate can be brought only by the trustee, that the beneficiaries are not proper parties, and that hence her motion for nonsuit should have been granted. No California case deals directly with the precise issue here raised. Appellant cites a number of California decisions holding that a beneficiary cannot maintain an action to quiet title to property of the trust estate. But these cases turn upon the rule that generally the owner of an equitable interest cannot maintain an action to quiet title against the holder of the legal title. 41 Cal.Jur.2d 479, Quieting Title, § 13. Since this is not an action to quiet title, that rule has no application. In other jurisdictions the general rule is that "[a]s long as the trustee is ready and willing to take the proper proceedings against the third person, the beneficiaries cannot maintain a suit against him." 3 Scott on Trusts 2144. However, when the trustee fails or refuses to sue, the beneficiaries can sue the trustee in equity to compel him to bring the proper action and, to avoid multiplicity of suits, the beneficiaries are permitted to join the third person as a defendant with the trustee. 3 Scott on Trusts, § 282.1. It is clear that beneficiaries may enforce the performance of a trust (Civ.Code, § 863), as distinguished from assertion of trust rights against third persons.

In the case at bar the trustor, within a few weeks after his execution of the trust agreement, questioned its validity and expressed his view that at most it applied only to a half interest in the property decribed in the agreement. His wife joined in these expressions. The original trustees, trustor's brother and the attorney who had drawn the trust agreement, could not well be expected to litigate this issue against the trustor. At trial, one of these trustees testified neither he nor his co-trustee would "be a party" to suing the trustor. The successor trustee testified that he made no demand upon the trustor because "I was trustee of what there was in the estate, not what there had been and what had been taken out."

It is apparent that the beneficiaries' action sought a declaration that a trust existed, and enforcement of the trust as declared; that it was futile under the peculiar circumstances of this case to expect the trustees to sue the trustor; and that the action of the beneficiaries was in no way an undue or improper interference with the orderly administration of the trust. In fact, there was little or no administration of the trust at the time this action was filed. In this situation, it would be unrealistic to expect the trustees to sue, and useless to require formal demand upon them by the beneficiaries.

[2, 3] Appellant next contends that title to the trust properties never vested in the trustees. The basis for this contention is the claimed insufficiency of the evidence to show delivery by the trustor. But the trust agreement recites that the specific properties here in issue have been "transferred and delivered" to the trustees. Deed and assignment were executed and delivered to the trustees upon execution of the agreement. The life insurance policies were in the possession of the trustees and there is evidence that assignments thereof were delivered. It would serve no useful purpose to detail further facts bearing upon delivery. Delivery is largely a matter of the intent of donor or trustor, and is a question of fact. Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1; In re Estate of Hall, 154 Cal. 527, 98 P. 269; Azevedo v. Azevedo, 1 Cal. App.2d 504, 36 P.2d 1078. Under the well-established rule, the evidence is to be viewed in the light most favorable to respondent, and all reasonable inferences are to be drawn in favor of the determination of the trier of the fact. In this view of the record, the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding that trustor intended and effected delivery.

Appellant also asserts error in computation of the amount of the money judgment. But the evidence shows clearly that trustor took more than $72,000 of trust property. The court credited against this amount the sums to which it found trustor was reasonably entitled, during his lifetime, under the provisions of the trust agreement. On hearing of the motion for new trial, the court clearly summarized these items. We have reviewed them in detail and do not find in the figures any error prejudicial to appellant.

[4] It is next contended that the money judgment against appellant was improper. But it is clear that one to whom property is transferred in violation of a trust holds it as an involuntary trustee unless he purchased it in good faith and for value. Civ.Code, § 2243. Such a transferee, even though he enters into no conspiracy with the trustee, is liable under this section. Scott v. Symons, 191 Cal. 441, 455, 216 P. 604. A transferee of property he knows to be misappropriated from a trust is liable for its value. 3 Scott on Trusts, § 291.2. Appellant's reliance upon Jud Whitehead Heater Co. v. Obler, 111 Cal.App.2d 861, 245 P.2d 608, is misplaced. There the wife had no knowledge of the misappropriations by her husband. Here there is evidence, direct or inferential, showing that appellant knew of the trust, knew that funds received by her husband, the trustor, were the proceeds of trust property, and that she participated actively in his use of these funds. She signed most of the checks drawn by her husband and herself, and their only bank accounts were in their names jointly or in her name. There is evidence to the contrary, but we cannot interfere where, as here, there is substantial evidence to support the finding of the trial court that appellant knowingly received and spent these funds.

[5] Appellant asserts that the trial court erred in denying her motion for new trial insofar as that motion was based upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence. She asserts that respondents, immediately before trial, executed a release to one who had acted as attorney for the trustor, that this attorney was a joint tortfeasor, and that it was a claim against him as such joint tortfeasor which was released. Thus she asserts that she, too, was released by the release of her joint tortfeasor. But the claim of newly-discovered evidence is looked upon with disfavor. 36 Cal. Jur.2d 241–2. Here the affidavit in support of the motion does not show with particularity that the attorney was a joint tortfeasor, but, at most, affords basis for an inference to that effect. Also, the affidavit does not specify the date of discovery of the asserted release. Under the affidavit, the date may well have been before filing of findings and conclusions, and thus have been at a time which would permit a motion to vacate the submission and reopen the case. Rockwell v. Italian-Swiss Colony, 10 Cal.App. 633, 103 P. 162. In this state of the record, we cannot say that the trial court abused its discretion, which is particularly broad in dealing with this ground for new trial. 36 Cal.Jur.2d 243.

[6] Error is claimed in the denial of appellant's motion for a continuance to permit W. H. Pollard, one of the original trustees and a brother of trustor, to testify. But the record indicates that he had been ill for some 18 months before trial, that there was no indication that he would ever be able to appear, and that, although the case had been pending for two years before trial, his deposition had not been taken. Thus there was no error in denying the motion for continuance. Callegari v. Maurer, 4 Cal.App.2d 178, 40 P.2d 883.

[7, 8] The attorney who drew the trust agreement was permitted, over objection, to testify that the trustor told him, in conversation preceding the drafting of the agreement, that he desired to place in the trust his entire interest in the described property rather than a half interest. Appellant urges that the communication was within the attorney-client privilege (Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 2), and thus inadmissible. Respondents assert that the attorney was a mere scrivener, and that the privilege therefore cannot be invoked. Collette v. Sarrasin, 184 Cal. 283, 193 P. 571. It also appears that much of this conversation was elicited from the witness by appellant's counsel before the examination by respondents to which she now objects. However, it is unnecessary to pass upon the question of competency of the testimony objected to. Other proof, including the trust agreement itself, affords competent evidence that the trustor intended to and knowingly did transfer his entire interest in the property described in the agreement. This case was tried to the court without a jury. Where competent evidence supports the judgment, it will be presumed on appeal that evidence erroneously admitted was disregarded by the court. Keating v. Basich Bros. etc. Co., 66 Cal.App.2d 258, 263, 151 P.2d 892.

[9] Appellant assigns as error the court's refusal to admit evidence of statements made by the trustor, after execution and delivery of the trust agreement, negativing his intent to transfer all his interest in the described property. While this ruling may have been erroneous (Dinneen v. Younger, 57 Cal.App.2d 200, 134 P.2d 323), it was not prejudicial. Other testimony of such declarations was admitted, and the rejected evidence would have been only cumulative.

[10] Appellant and trustor commenced the taking of trustor's deposition in a proceeding to perpetuate testimony. Their attorney substantially completed direct examination, and then asked for a continuance to permit his attendance at a trial. He was to notify counsel for the other parties of a convenient date to resume the deposition. Trustor died before such notice was given. Thus there was no cross-examination, and there is some question whether even the direct examination was completed. Nevertheless, the deposition was offered in evidence in this trial. Objection was sustained, and appellant claims error in this ruling. The authority relied upon by appellant (Scott v. McCann, 76 Md. 47, 24 A. 536, 538) specifically limits admission of a partially completed deposition to cases where the cross-examination "has not in any way been prevented" by the party producing the witness. We find no abuse of discretion in refusing admission of the partial deposition here.

We find no merit in the other points raised by appellant.

A former employer seeking injunctive relief against a former employee must show (1) that information was confidential and not readily accessible to competitors, (2) that former employee solicited customers of his former employer with intent to injure him, (3) that former employee sought out certain preferred customers whose trade was particularly profitable and whose identities were not generally known to trade, (4) that business was such that a customer would ordinarily patronize but one concern, and (5) that established business relationship between customer and former employer would normally have continued unless interfered with.

2. Trade-Marks and Trade-Names and Unfair Competition ⇐93(3)

In action to restrain unfair competition by former employee of plaintiff engaged in business of collecting used lubricating oils from service stations and garages, evidence justified denial of relief sought.

Rowell, Lamberson & Thomas, Breckinridge Thomas, Fresno, for appellant.

Rowland & Paras, Darrel E. Pierce, Sacramento, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Action to restrain unfair competition. From a judgment denying relief plaintiff appeals.

Appellant is a corporation engaged in the business of collecting used lubricating oils, hereinafter referred to as drain oil, from service stations and garages throughout the State of California. For collection purposes appellant divides the state into several areas, one of which is from Lodi to Yreka and from the Coast Range Mountains to Reno, Nevada. Respondent was an employee of appellant, whose duties as such for several years were those of a tank truck driver picking up drain oil in the described area. After collection the oil was stored for later processing.

The record presents considerable factual conflict. The contention on appeal is that essential findings are not supported by the evidence. Resolving conflicts in support of the findings the evidence may be summarized as follows: Drain oil is a waste product. It presents disposal difficulties. It cannot be gotten rid of by dumping into sewers or drain ditches and disposal otherwise is expensive. As a result businesses that produce it accumulate it in sumps and surface containers and generally allow any person desiring drain oil to take it from their premises without cost. Ordinarily, these businesses do not save drain oil for any particular person desiring it, but give it away to those who will come and collect it on a first come, first served basis. In the geographical area assigned to respondent by appellant there were a number of competitors for drain oil. There were at least two other companies collecting it and there were numerous individuals and governmental agencies who, from time to time, wanted to and did secure drain oil for their uses. Those desiring drain oil call upon the service stations and garages, and secure permission to take the oil accumulated in the sumps or other receptacles. Service stations and garages and the like at which drain oil is accumulated are generally located on well-traveled and well-known streets or highways. Their names and locations are listed in numerous directories, such as telephone and city directories and in lists compiled by oil companies of stations and garages using their products, all of which are available to anyone seeking that information. Appellant does not maintain any record of the names and addresses of the service stations and garages where drain oil is accumulated and keeps no record of the oil storage capacity of individual stations and garages. Its drivers do, however, gain knowledge of such matters as they go about their areas. There was no record of the time or frequency of picking up oil at any particular station or garage. Respondent, too, never compiled any such records from his experience in collecting drain oil in his territory while employed by appellant. During the several years he was employed he was not introduced personally to the producers of drain oil except that on one occasion in Reno, Nevada, he was so introduced by another of appellant's employees. However, during the period of his employment, appellant did become personally acquainted with many of the producers of drain oil, but his ability to secure permission to pick up drain oil did not depend substantially on such personal acquaintanceship. Appellant's ability to secure drain oil in competition with other collectors did not depend upon any confidential information with regard to the most economically feasible time to pick up the oil at different service stations and garages nor upon any other secret or confidential information. After about three years' employment by appellant, respondent left his employment. He had already purchased a tank truck suitable for collecting drain oil. He at once began to work the same territory he had worked while employed by appellant and went from place to place soliciting permission to pick up drain oil from the stations and garages where he had procured it while working for appellant and wherever else it could be had. In the week following his quitting respondent advised appellant's employee who succeeded him where he had last picked up oil and where oil would be available. That employee went to the localities indicated by respondent and was able to secure drain oil without difficulty. Respondent did not conceive his plan to collect and sell drain oil with any intent to injure appellant. There was nothing in the nature of a regular route of call developed or used by respondent during or after his employment by appellant. On cross-examination respondent testified as follows: In respondent's experience he found that once the garages and service stations started giving him drain oil they continued giving it to him. In developing the area he visited all of the service stations where he hoped to pick up oil and made contact with the proprietors. He requested permission to pick up the oil. He told them he was working for Paraco. In certain areas he gave the proprietors soap and floor sweeping material in return for permission to pick up the oil. He maintained contact with them as much as he could with the purpose of keeping out competition. To some extent he depended upon their good will for the continued privilege of picking up oil. As much as he could he learned the size of their sumps and other storage receptacles. It was important for him to know how often the station had to be visited. If a station had very little oil, then, as a general rule, he favored the larger stations. Some stations give oil to farmers for road oil. The proprietors gave oil to whomever they wished, but when the season was over they let respondent have it again. He found, as he continued, the proprietors would save their oil for him and it is a fact that many of them do save their oil for a particular person. The reason is that they get good service and have a friendly contact with that person. Respondent developed contacts and friendly relations while in appellant's employ so as to retain the privilege of picking up oil from the proprietors of those places. In the Sacramento area itself appellant's sources of drain oil comprised only 15 per cent of the total number of producers and its competitors picked up the other 85 per cent, but in the area north of Sacramento the appellant's sources of drain oil during its employment of respondent took in about 50 per cent of the total number of producers. When respondent quit his employment with Paraco it was his intention to pick up from the contacts he had made whatever oil he could get. He intended to do that before he quit and he purchased a truck and had it equipped to pump out the various sumps. He did not tell Paraco he was going into competition with them. He quit June 29th and he started picking up oil on his own account a few days later. During the first week he kept the knowledge from Paraco that he was picking up oil in competition; he considered that was his business. When he went into the business he picked up oil from whatever sources were available, including the sources from which he had obtained oil for Paraco.

When respondent had been operating on his own for about one month, Paraco began this action. The trial court granted a preliminary injunction enjoining respondent from collecting from places where he had obtained drain oil for appellant. This injunction was continued in force until the judgment herein which discharged it. During the period of seven weeks between his leaving appellant and the issuance of the restraining order, respondent picked up from appellant's former sources 41,737 gallons of drain oil which he sold to Brighton Oil Company at 3½ cents a gallon, making a total return to him of $1,460.79. This gallonage amounted to about half appellant's normal supply from that area.

The Supreme Court said in Continental Car-Na-Var Corp. v. Moseley, 24 Cal.2d 104, 110, 148 P.2d 9, 12:

> "Equity will to the fullest extent protect the property rights of employers in their trade secrets and otherwise, but public policy and the natural justice require that equity should also be solicitous for the right inherent in all people, not fettered by negative covenants upon their part to the contrary to follow any of the common occupations of life. Every individual possesses as a form of property, the right to pursue any calling, business or profession he may choose. A former employee has the right to engage in a competitive business for himself and to enter into competition with his former employer, even for the business of those who had formerly been the customers of his former employer, provided such competition is fairly and legally conducted. * * *

"* * * [E]quity will intervene to restrain an employee from divulging confidential information gained in the course of his employment or using such information to his employer's prejudice. * * * The courts regard as unfair competition, and will enjoin, the use by an employee to the prejudice of his former employer of the confidential information gained by the employee during his prior employment as to the business secrets of such employer."

[1] Where the facts of the case do not justify the application of the principle governing the rights of the parties in connection with delivery routes, a former employer seeking injunctive relief against a former employee must show: "(1) The information was confidential and not readily accessible to competitors; (2) The former employee solicited the customers of his former employer with intent to injure him; (3) The former employee sought out certain preferred customers whose trade is particularly profitable and whose identities are not generally known to the trade; (4) The business is such that a customer will ordinarily patronize only one concern; (5) The established business relationship between the customer and the former employer would normally continue unless interfered with." Aetna Building Maintenance Co. v. West, 39 Cal.2d 198, 204–205, 246 P.2d 11, 15. See, also, California Intelligence Bureau v. Cunningham, 83 Cal. App.2d 197, 202, 188 P.2d 303, and cases there cited.

[2] From the facts narrated it is clear that the evidence before the trial court justified its finding as a matter of fact that none of the tests of unfair competition stated in Aetna Building Maintenance Co. v. West, supra, were met by the proof in this case. We think the court justifiably found that the information was not confidential and was readily accessible to competitors; that respondent did not solicit permission to take drain oil from those whose permission he had received while working for appellant with intent to injure appellant (the intent to divert business through the exercise of legitimate trade practices is not an intent to injure the business of plaintiff. Continental Car-Na-Var Corp. v. Moseley, supra, 24 Cal.2d at page 112, 148 P.2d at page 13); that there was no such thing involved as a preferred list of customers whose trade was particularly profitable and whose identities were not generally known to the trade; that the business was not such that a customer would ordinarily patronize only one concern; and, finally, that the business relationships with the producers of drain oil were not such that they would normally continue to patronize only one person.

The testimony was ample to sustain a finding that this case is not a so-called "route" case in which patrons usually want and expect to patronize a single route driver as is the situation presented by such cases as laundry route cases.

Victor CHATTEN, substituted in the place and stead of O. D. Thomas, Deceased, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

John MARTELL, Thelma K. Martell, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5759.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 23, 1958.

Action by partner for cancellation of partnership agreement, dissolution of partnership and an accounting. Plaintiff died and, without notice, his alleged assignee was substituted as a plaintiff. The Superior Court of Orange County, Raymond Thompson, J., sustained demurrer without leave to amend, and assignee appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, P. J., held that there was no requirement that notice of application for substitution be given defendant and that court erred in sustaining demurrer without leave to amend.

1. Partnership ⇐313

An assignee of an interest in a partnership is entitled to those remedies for settlement of partnership affairs that existed in favor of his assignor unless otherwise provided by law. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 15022, 15027, subds. 1, 2.

2. Partnership ⇐264

A sale, conveyance, transfer, or assignment by partner of his interest in partnership or in partnership property to copartner or to third person does not of itself dissolve partnership, although entire circumstance connected with transfer may be sufficient to bring about the dissolution. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 15022, 15027, subds. 1, 2.

3. Partnership ⇐264

The dissolution of a partnership may be brought about, unless otherwise provided by agreement, by sale or assignment of a partner's interest to a third person. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 15022, 15027, subds. 1, 2.

4. Partnership ⇐273

The conduct of a partner, to extent that it is injurious to partnership, constitutes ground for judicial dissolution of partnership. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 15022, 15027, subds. 1, 2.

5. Partnership ⇐298

Ordinarily, purchaser or assignee of partner's interest is entitled to a partnership accounting subject to certain qualifications. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 15022, 15031, 15032, 15043.

6. Partnership ⇐227

In determining what rights or interests pass under an assignment of a partnership interest, intention of parties as manifested in instrument is controlling.

7. Assignment ⇐80

An unqualified assignment of contract or chose in action with no indication of intent of parties vests in assignee the assigned contract or chose and all rights and remedies incidental thereto and those incidental rights include certain ancillary causes of action arising out of subject of assignment and accruing before assignment is made.

8. Partnership ⇐322

A partner who has parted with his partnership interest cannot join in an action for dissolution of partnership. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 367, 369.

9. Pleading ⇐236(7)

Statutory provision giving courts power to permit amendments in furtherance of justice permits amendment in discretion of court unless an attempt is made to present an entirely different set of facts by way of the amendment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

10. Pleading ⇐225(1)

Where original complaint filed by partner alleged that defendant partner wrongfully applied partnership money and profits to his own use and committed certain alleged fraudulent acts in connection therewith and sought decree of distribution, accounting and other relief, substitution of assignee of plaintiff partner did not change cause of action pleaded and sustaining of demurrer without leave to amend was improper even though no notice of application for substitution was given defendant. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 15022, 15027, 15031, 15032, 15043; West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. §§ 369, 385, 473.

11. Parties ⇐61

It is better practice in substituting parties plaintiff to give notice to defendant. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

GRIFFIN, Presiding Justice.

To a second amended complaint to cancel documents, to impose a constructive trust, and for an accounting, the trial court sustained a general demurrer without leave to amend. This appeal is from the judgment for defendant which followed.

The original complaint was filed on August 1, 1956, by plaintiff, O. D. Thomas to cancel a partnership agreement between Thomas and defendant John Martell for the development and sale of land in San Bernardino County, to cancel a deed from Thomas to Martell of a partnership interest in section 33, township 1, north range 5 East, S. B. M. in that county, for imposition of a constructive trust covering sections 27, 29, 31 and 33 in said township and range, for dissolution of the partnership between them, and for an accounting.

It alleged generally that on April 4, 1952, he and defendant Martell entered into an oral partnership agreement, and pursuant thereto plaintiff Thomas conveyed certain real property to the partnership; that he received no consideration therefor; that defendant at the time was acting as plaintiff's attorney; that defendant Martell orally represented and assured plaintiff that if he, the said plaintiff, would deed said land to the partnership, defendant Martell "would procure sufficient monies to assist and aid plaintiff in not only selling and subdividing said land but also sufficient monies to assist and aid plaintiff in paying his encumbrances and debts so that plaintiff could maintain his interest in all of plaintiffs' properties"; that defendant "took advantage of the close and intimate relations with plaintiff and made said promises and assurances with no intention of performing the same"; that he failed, refused and neglected to perform any of said promises; that by reason of said defendant's "failure to perform his assurances and promises" plaintiff's creditors sold plaintiff's properties, including the real property conveyed to the partnership; and that "after said sale, defendant John Martell procured from the creditors of the plaintiff a conveyance directly to the defendants John Martell and Thelma K. Martell, for their own interest, the property theretofore owned by plaintiff." Plaintiff further alleged in the same cause of action that he and defendant Martell were the owners of an option to acquire certain real property for the sum of $10,000; "that shortly before the option was to expire defendant John Martell assured and orally stated to plaintiff, not to worry, and that he, the said defendant, would obtain monies for the purchase of said properties before the expiration of said option"; that defendant Martell made arrangements with "Defendants Does I Through IV" to purchase the properties described in the option in their own names and for their own interests and "conspired with said defendant John Martell to deprive plaintiff of the benefits of said option"; that said defendants Does I through IV, converted and appropriated the option to their own use and benefit and "took unjust advantage of the confidential relationship of defendant John Martell and plaintiff"; that said defendants, Does I through IV, paid to defendant Martell "sums of money" and that the said defendant retains and refuses to account therefor to plaintiff.

Plaintiff, in his second cause of action, seeks a partnership accounting. He failed to allege the continued existence of said partnership and failed to allege that he was a partner at the time suit was filed. He prayed "that the conveyance to the partnership be set aside" and that the partnership agreement be annulled, and for a "partnership accounting". The complaint was verified by O. D. Thomas on July 30, 1956. Thomas died on November 3, 1956. Without notice, Victor Chatten was substituted as plaintiff upon the facts alleged in paragraph XV of plaintiff Chatten's first amended complaint, and realleged in paragraph XIII of plaintiff Chatten's second amended complaint, namely,

> "That on or about July 3, 1956, the said O. D. Thomas duly assigned to the plaintiff, by an instrument in writing, signed and delivered by him to plaintiff, all rights of action accrued against the defendant John Martell, including all interest in and to the properties herein listed, for his right to damages therefor and the value thereof by reason of the acts of the defendants, and that plaintiff is now the owner and holder of said claims and properties." (Italics ours.)

These first and second amended complaints were unverified and contained two causes of action substantially the same as the original complaint of O. D. Thomas. Defendant Martell moved to strike the first amended complaint upon the following grounds: (a) that the amended complaint set up a cause of action foreign to the original cause of action; (b) the order of substitution should have been made upon notice to defendant; (c) the substituted plaintiff had no standing in court. He also moved to dismiss the action on the grounds (a) that the court did not have jurisdiction over the subject matter of said action; (b) that O. D. Thomas, plaintiff, with full knowledge of the facts, on October 4, 1954, conveyed his interest in and to the partnership and the real property referred to in plaintiff's complaint, to Victor Chatten and Louise Chatten; (c) that Thomas, with full knowledge of the circumstances which would warrant rescission upon the alleged ground of fraud, accepted and retained the benefits accruing to him under the partnership agreement by disposing of his interest therein, and by reason thereof had lost his right to rescind said partnership agreement; (d) that at the time of filing his complaint, plaintiff O. D. Thomas had conveyed his interest in and to the real property described in his complaint, and had assigned his interest in the partnership, and had no interest in said partnership or real property; and that he was not the real party in interest.

In support of the motion to dismiss, defendant Martell filed his affidavit, in which he alleged that on October 4, 1954, plaintiff Thomas and Mary H. Barnett Thomas, his wife, had assigned all their right, title, and interest in and to the partnership existing between Thomas and Martell, and had conveyed by deed all the real property involved in this action, including partnership real property, to Victor Chatten and Louise Chatten (giving the book and page number and date of recordation). A photostatic copy of said deed and assignment was attached to said affidavit, and is included in the Clerk's Transcript. Cancelled internal revenue stamps affixed to said deed indicate the consideration therefor was $5,000.

Motions to strike and dismiss the first amended complaint on the grounds stated were denied and a demurrer thereto on the same grounds was sustained with leave to amend. A demurrer to the second amended complaint contained about the same allegations as the first, but in more particularity. It was sustained without leave to amend.

In support of the court's ruling defendant makes the same contentions advanced in the demurrer and motion to strike and argues that a suit for dissolution of a partnership can only be brought by a partner, citing Behlow v. Fischer, 102 Cal. 208, 36 P. 509; and Corporations Code, § 15022; that if one partner sells his interest in the firm to a stranger, the right to the control and disposition of the firm assets vests in the remaining partner; that the sale does not dissolve the partnership; and that the buyer is not entitled to interfere in the management or administration of the partnership business or affairs or to require any information or account of partnership transactions or to inspect partnership books, but is merely entitled to receive, in accordance with his contract, the profits to which the selling partner would otherwise be entitled, citing Corporations Code, § 15027; and Mervyn Inv. Co. v. Biber, 184 Cal. 637, 644, 194 P. 1037; that the court cannot permit a person to be substituted as plaintiff in place of the then plaintiff on the ground that the person substituted was the real party in interest at the commencement of the action, citing Dubbers v. Goux, 51 Cal. 153; Altpeter v. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., 26 Cal.App. 705, 708, 148 P. 241; and 149 A.L.R. 848, 849; that after an absolute assignment, the assignor has no cause of action upon the claim assigned, citing Burkett v. Doty, 176 Cal. 89, 167 P. 518; National Reserve Co. v. Metropolitan Trust Co., 17 Cal.2d 827, 832, 112 P.2d 598; that in order to rescind a partnership contract on the ground of fraud, it is essential to tender to the other party anything of value received under the contract, citing 37 Cal.Jur.2d 684, sec. 80; that where the gravamen of an action for rescission or cancellation involves fraud or mistake the three-year statute relating to those grounds is applicable, citing 9 Cal.Jur.2d 587, sec. 34; Code Civ.Proc. § 338, subdivision 4; that one partner cannot maintain an action against his copartner for the delivery of personal property belonging to the partnership, citing Dukes v. Kellogg, 127 Cal. 563, 60 P. 44; and that a grantor cannot claim a trust results in himself when he has executed a deed without consideration, citing Tillaux v. Tillaux, 115 Cal. 663, 47 P. 691.

Which reason or reasons the court adopted for sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend is not indicated. Plaintiff now says the question involved on appeal is whether the court erred in holding that the fraud complained of in plaintiff's second amended complaint could only properly be determined by a suit for an accounting and dissolution of the partnership between the defendant John Martell and the estate of O. D. Thomas, the original partner, rather than his assignee and purchaser, Victor Chatten, even though the assignment was executed prior to the death of the original defrauded partner. He cites the general rule of law that one partner may not sue another partner at law on account of partnership transactions and that all such matters between them must be determined in connection with an accounting and dissolution, and that there is a well-recognized exception permitting a suit for fraud exercised by one party upon the other, independent of any accounting or dissolution, citing Johnstone v. Morris, 210 Cal. 580, 292 P. 970, and Laughlin v. Haberfelde, 72 Cal.App.2d 780, 165 P.2d 544. He claims that even though the court did recognize this rule, it erred in holding that the action could only be brought by the estate of the orginal partner, Thomas, since an assignee may be substituted as a party plaintiff in place of the assignor, citing Macmillan Petroleum Corp. v. Griffin, 99 Cal. App.2d 523, 222 P.2d 69; Highsmith v. Crista, 66 Cal.App.2d 808, 153 P.2d 180; Potts v. Paxton, 171 Cal. 493, 499, 153 P. 957; Jackson v. Deauville Holding Co., 219 Cal. 498, 27 P.2d 643; and secs. 15027 and 15032 of the Corporations Code. It is then argued that since the original plaintiff has assigned his rights to plaintiff, Victor Chatten, the cause of action for accounting, dissolution and fraud is now the property of the assignee and he should be permitted to have his day in court.

[1] An assignee of a partnership is entitled to those remedies for settlement of partnership affairs that existed in favor of his assignor unless otherwise provided by law. Hooper v. Barranti, 81 Cal.App.2d 570, 184 P.2d 688; 37 Cal.Jur.2d 681, sec. 79. Section 15027, subdivisions 1 and 2 of the Corporations Code provides: "(1) A conveyance by a partner of his interest in the partnership does not of itself dissolve the partnership, nor, as against the other partners in the absence of agreement, entitle the assignee, during the continuance of the partnership, to interfere in the management or administration of the partnership business or affairs, or to require any information or account of partnership transactions, or to inspect the partnership books; but it merely entitles the assignee to receive in accordance with his contract the profits to which the assigning partner would otherwise be entitled. (2) In case of a dissolution of the partnership, the assignee is entitled to receive his assignor's interest and may require an account from the date only of the last account agreed to by all the partners."

[2, 3] The general rule stated in 68 C.J.S. Partnership § 346, p. 852, is that a sale, conveyance, transfer or assignment by a partner of his interest in the partnership or in the partnership property to a copartner or to a third person does not of itself dissolve the partnership, although the entire circumstances connected with such a transfer may be sufficient to bring about the dissolution. A dissolution of a partnership may be brought about, unless otherwise provided by agreement, by the sale or assignment of a partner's interest to a third person, citing authorities, including Firpo v. Piper, 111 Cal.App. 403, 295 P. 886.

Under section 2450 of the Civil Code as it existed in 1925, a general partnership was dissolved as to all the partners by the transfer to a person, not a partner, of the interest of any partner in the partnership property. As a general rule, in jurisdictions where the Uniform Partnership Act has been adopted and where the partnership is one at will, any partner may, in good faith, dissolve it at any time, without the consent of his copartner, upon notice. 68 C.J.S. Partnership § 330 et seq, p. 841.

[4–7] Misconduct of a partner to the extent that it is injurious to the partnership constitutes grounds for judicial dissolution of a partnership. 68 C.J.S. Partnership § 349, p. 856. Ordinarily, the purchaser or assignee of a partner's interest is entitled to a partnership accounting subject to certain qualifications. 68 C.J.S. Partnership § 382, p. 894. It is likewise true that in determining what rights or interests pass under an assignment, the intention of the parties as manifested in the instrument is controlling. An unqualified assignment of a contract or chose in action, however, with no indication of the intent of the parties, vests in the assignee the assigned contract or chose and all rights and remedies incidental thereto. These incidental rights include certain ancillary causes of action arising out of the subject of the assignment and accruing before the assignment is made. Thus, the assignment of a contract passes from an assignor to the assignee an accrued cause of action for rescission. National Reserve Co. v. Metropolitan Trust Co., 17 Cal.2d 827, 832, 112 P.2d 598.

Under the original complaint filed herein, the partner, O. D. Thomas, alleged that his partner wrongfully applied partnership money and profits to his own use, and committed certain alleged fraudulent acts in connection therewith. He sought a decree of distribution, accounting, and other relief indicated. As a partner, he may well have been entitled to dissolution of the partnership, an accounting, and the other relief sought. Secs. 15022, 15031, 15032 and 15043, Corporations Code; Crosby v. McDermitt, 7 Cal. 146; Cottle v. Leitch, 35 Cal. 434.

[8–11] Assuming these rights were assignable and enforceable by the assignee (Jackson v. Deauville Holding Company, 219 Cal. 498, 27 P.2d 643), the next question is whether plaintiff Chatten, assignee, could be and was properly substituted as party plaintiff in said action. As far as the original plaintiff's complaint was concerned it did not, at the time of its filing affirmatively appear therefrom that he had assigned all of his right, title and interest in or to the partnership and its assets as well as to the claimed causes of action pleaded. Apparently this claimed fact was called to the attention of the trial court when defendant's demurrer to the original complaint was interposed. The record before us, in this respect, is not clear. The minutes of January 14, 1957, show an order for the substitution of Victor Chatten as party plaintiff, and the court ordered an amended complaint to be filed accordingly. Such amended complaint was filed by Chatten as party plaintiff, setting forth about the same claimed causes of action but with more particularity, and defendant was served with a copy of said amended complaint. There is authority to the effect that under Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 385 and 473 [1875], the court could not permit a person to be substituted as plaintiff in place of the then plaintiff, on the ground that the person substituted was the real party in interest at the commencement of the action where another and different cause of action was set up in the amendment. Dubbers v. Goux, 51 Cal. 153. A partner who has parted with his interest cannot join in an action for dissolution of a partnership of which he has ceased to be a member. Behlow v. Fischer, 102 Cal. 208, 36 P. 509; Loftus v. Fischer, 114 Cal. 131, 45 P. 1058. Section 367 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "Every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except as provided" in section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Apparently the effect of the former decisions above mentioned, and the application of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure in reference to the substitution of parties plaintiff has been set at rest by the decision in Klopstock v. Superior Court, 17 Cal.2d 13, 19, 108 P.2d 906, 910, 135 A.L.R. 318. It is there said, in effect, that it was within the discretionary power of the trial court to permit the amendment of the complaint, which, in effect, substituted the proper plaintiff in the action; that this statutory provision giving the courts the power to permit amendments in furtherance of justice has received a very liberal interpretation by the courts of this state; and that this position is clearly in accord with the modern theories of code pleading, which would permit amendment in the discretion of the court unless an attempt is made to present an entirely different set of facts by way of the amendment. It then stated that the court's power to permit amendments of pleadings is not unlimited; that it has generally been said that an amendment may not be permitted where the effect of such amendment is to state "another and distinct cause of action", citing Dubbers v. Goux, 51 Cal. 153, 155. To the same effect is 39 Am.Jur. p. 966, sec. 98, citing the Klopstock case. The facts in the instant case appear to come within the rule announced in the Klopstock case, since there was no material change in the cause of action pleaded. In substituting parties plaintiff, while it is better practice to give notice, there is no requirement that notice of application for substitution under section 473, supra, be given. Macmillan Petroleum Corp. v. Griffin, 99 Cal.App.2d 523, 222 P.2d 69; Highsmith v. Crista, 66 Cal.App.2d 808, 153 P.2d 180.

The claimed defense of estoppel, laches, the application of the statute of limitations which would bar a recovery, together with the other claimed defenses, do not affirmatively appear upon the face of the second amended complaint.

We conclude that the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

Civ. 9430.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 29, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Action for damages for alleged taking by defendants of logs situated on plaintiffs' property. The Superior Court, Humboldt County, William G. Watson, Jr., J., entered judgment for plaintiffs and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, Acting P. J., held that testimony by county timber cruiser from books in his custody relative to amount of timber assessed on property for the year previous to and the year in which defendants allegedly removed the cut timber, was admissible since the report was prepared by a county official as part of his official duties and was introduced as evidence of footage of timber on the land and was relevant to the issues then before the court.

Judgment affirmed.

In action for damages for alleged taking by defendants of logs situated on plaintiffs' property, testimony by county timber cruiser from books in his custody relative to amount of timber assessed on property for the year previous to and the year in which defendants allegedly removed the cut timber was admissible over objection that it was immaterial, had no proper foundation, and was self-serving and hearsay, since the report was prepared by a county official as part of his official duties and was introduced as evidence of footage of timber on the land and was relevant to the issues then before the court. Entries by a county timber cruiser in a cruise book, being a public writing, were properly received in evidence in a civil action. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1920.

3. Witnesses ⇐275(6)

In action for damages for alleged taking by defendants of logs situated on plaintiffs' property, cross-examination in regard to price paid by plaintiffs for acreage in question was improper in view of fact answer to such questions would have involved the price of timber on land and hence have raised collateral issue of apportionment of price between the land and the timber.

4. Trover and Conversion ⇐67

In action for damages for alleged taking by defendants of logs situated on plaintiffs' property, question of treble damages was properly submitted to jury even though complaint charged conversion of logs, and even though the charge to the jury did not use the word "logs", since under the circumstances it did not appear that the jury could have been confused by reference to timber and trees in the charge rather than logs, which were the only trees involved in the action. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 733; West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 3346.

5. Trover and Conversion ⇐40(4)

In action for damages for taking by defendants of logs situated on plaintiffs' property, evidence, including testimony that a defendant knew boundaries of his property, and knew that he did not acquire either the land or the timber on plaintiffs' land in a purchase of adjoining property, sustained finding that defendants willfully and maliciously took logs from plaintiffs' land. PEEK, Acting Presiding Justice.

Defendants appeal from an adverse judgment entered pursuant to a verdict of the jury in favor of plaintiffs in the sum of $10,000 as damages for the alleged taking by defendants of logs situated on plaintiffs' property.

During the summer of 1953 defendants' predecessor, Bear River Lumber Company, sent a faller onto the property involved and cut and bucked out, but did not log out the trees thereon. At this time Bear River was conducting logging operations on land adjacent to plaintiffs' property, but it had no interest therein or to the timber which it had cut. In April of 1954 plaintiffs acquired title to the 40 acres involved. In September of 1954 Bear River sold to defendants certain land and timber rights described as including "* * * all felled and/or bucked timber and logs as same presently lie within the logging operations of the seller * * *." In the Spring of 1955 defendants removed the cut timber from what was then plaintiffs' property.

[1, 2] It is defendants' contention that the court erred in overruling their objections to testimony by the county timber cruiser from books in his custody relative to the amount of timber assessed on the property for the years 1954 and 1955; that the court erred in sustaining objections to questions asked of plaintiff McKenzie concerning a price paid by plaintiffs for 40 acres, and that the court also erred in submitting the issue of treble damages to the jury.

The specific testimony attacked by defendants in their first contention was given by the witness McCutcheon, the official timber cruiser for Humboldt County, who stated that it was his duty to verify the accuracy of timberland assessments or make cruises upon which such assessments were made; that he was familiar with the particular tract involved, as it was recorded in the timber cruise book; that it had been recorded in the ordinary and regular course of operation of the Humboldt County Assessor's office by one Stamm who had preceded him in office. These records reveal that the volume of timber assessed upon the 40 acres for the years 1954 and 1955 was 600,000 feet. Defendants' objection to his testimony was that it was incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial; that no proper foundation had been made; that the particular record was a self-serving document and hearsay; and that the same had not been prepared by the witness. The report was prepared by a county official as a part of his official duties and was introduced as evidence of the footage of timber on the land and obviously relevant to the issue then before the court. There can be no question that the entries in the cruise book, being public writing, were properly received in evidence. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1920. We find no merit in defendants' further argument that the issues were confused since the timber, having been severed as of the date of the report, was hence personalty and the report itself spoke in terms of realty.

[3] Defendants' next contention is that the court erred in sustaining their objections to questions asked plaintiff McKenzie on cross-examination seeking to elicit the price paid by plaintiffs for the acreage in 1954. In the recent case of County of Los Angeles v. Faus, 48 Cal.2d 672, 312 P.2d 680, the court reversed certain prior holdings and held that evidence of purchase price is admissible to prove fair market value at a particular time and place. However, the court qualified its holding by stating that such sales should be sufficiently close in time to the evaluation date and sufficiently similar in all characteristics to be relevant, and that "manifestly, the trial judge in applying so vague a standard must be granted a wide discretion." 48 Cal.2d at page 678, 312 P.2d at page 684. While the court under a proper foundation, as noted in the Faus case, might well have allowed such testimony into evidence, nevertheless it would appear that in view of the highly fluctuating value of timber, and the fact that the answer to the excluded question would have involved the price of timber on land and hence have raised the collateral issue of the apportionment of price between the land and the timber, we cannot say that there was an abuse of discretion in denying the evidence sought by defendants.

[4] Defendants' final contention, although somewhat confusing, appears to be that the court erred in submitting the question of treble damages to the jury, since the complaint charged conversion of personal property, namely logs, but that nowhere in the charge to the jury was the word "logs" used, nor does the word appear in Code of Civil Procedure, section 733, or Civil Code, section 3346, which authorize treble damages for injuries to trees. Under the facts of the case it would not appear that the jury could have been confused by reference to "timber and trees" rather than "logs," as the only trees involved in the action were those which had been cut and bucked and were on the plaintiffs' property. The code provisions specifically provide:

> "Any person who cuts down or carries off any wood or underwood, tree, or timber * * * is liable to the owner of such land, * * * for treble the amount of damages which may be assessed therefor, * * *." Sec. 733, Code Civ.Proc.

[5] Although defendants further contend that the complaint did not allege nor prove that the defendants moved the logs from plaintiffs' land knowing them to be plaintiffs' property, it does appear that at the conclusion of the case plaintiffs were allowed to amend their complaint by inserting the words "wilfully and maliciously" in accordance with instructions previously requested by defendants.

[6] In this connection the testimony given by the defendant Erickson that lines had been run denoting the boundaries of the property; that he knew he did not acquire either the land or the timber unless the same were described in his contract; that the contract involving adjoining lands did not include the land in question; that he maintained no production records and could produce no maps for the area, although he could produce maps for the adjoining areas, was of sufficient substantiality to support the finding that defendants wilfully and knowingly took the logs. Moreover, the defendants are in no position to question the finding of the jury in this regard, since this particular issue was presented as a question of fact by defendants' own instruction. See Shumate v. Johnson Publishing Co., 139 Cal.App.2d 121, 130, 293 P.2d 531.

The judgment is affirmed.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal filed subsequent to a minute order sustaining an amended demurrer without leave to amend.

No amendments had been filed to the initial complaint, which was for damages on a faithful performance bond and for reformation of said bond. Plaintiff and appellant Morro Palisades Company instituted the action as assignee of the County of San Luis Obispo, against The Hartford Accident and Indemnity Company as surety on a faithful performance bond and against Ralph R. Westfall as principal. The bond was to assure that Westfall would improve all of the streets and roads situate within a certain tract as shown on a certain map which was accepted by ordinance adopted by the Board of Supervisors of the County of San Luis Obispo.

In the amended demurrer it was contended that the compaint did not state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action; that the complaint is defective in that it appears on the face thereof that the said complaint has been prematurely filed; and that the complaint was uncertain in various particulars.

The order of dismissal specified that "the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and it appears therefrom as a matter of law that a cause of action could not be pled."

The original complaint unquestionably is uncertain in various of the particulars specified, and in our opinion the trial court properly sustained the amended demurrer. Whether the trial court abused its discretion in sustaining the amended demurrer without leave to amend is a more difficult problem.

[1] "The general rule is that it is an abuse of discretion to sustain without leave to amend a demurrer to an original complaint unless the complaint shows on its face that it is incapable of amendment. Temescal Water Co. v. Department of Public Works, 44 Cal.2d 90, 107, 280 P.2d 1; King v. Mortimer, 83 Cal.App.2d 153, 158, 188 P.2d 502; C. Dudley De Velbiss Co. v. Kraintz, 101 Cal.App.2d 612, 617, 225 P.2d 969. This rule applies irrespective of whether leave to amend is requested or not. MacIsaac v. Pozzo, 26 Cal.2d 809, 816, 161 P.2d 449; King v. Mortimer, 83 Cal.App.2d 153, 158, 188 P.2d 502, supra; Code of Civil Procedure, Sec. 472c." Phillips v. Phillips, 137 Cal.App.2d 651, 653, 290 P.2d 611, 612.

It is succinctly stated in 2 Witkin, California Procedure, at pages 1496 and 1497, "An order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend is followed by a final judgment of dismissal of the action, reviewable on appeal. Such a drastic step is unwarranted, and ordinarily constitutes an abuse of discretion, if there is a reasonable possibility that the defect can be cured by amendment. This rule is chiefly applied in the following situations:

"(a) Where the defect is one of form, raised by special demurrer, and the elements of a cause of action are stated. * * *

"(b) Where the defect, whether of form or substance, relates only to a part of the complaint and at least one count is good. * * *

"(c) Where the defect, though one of substance, may possibly be cured by supplying omitted allegations, and the plaintiff has not had a fair opportunity to do so, as where the demurrer was sustained to his first complaint. * * *

"(d) Where the action is 'favored', this, alone or in connection with any of the other reasons stated above, may influence the appellate court to reverse the judgment of dismissal and allow the plaintiff to try again. * * *"

[2] We cannot agree with the trial court that the complaint is fatally defective because it appears on the face thereof to have been prematurely filed in view of the statement of the law appearing in Pierce v. Wright, 117 Cal.App.2d 718,

728, 256 P.2d 1049, 1054, as follows: "In Ceremony v. Drummond, 37 Cal.App. 446 (174 P. 696) [* * *] it was held that the contractor's bond is a contract of indemnity against liability rather than one of indemnity against loss sustained and paid, * * *." (Emphasis added.)

From the record before us, we cannot say that appellant cannot correct the defects in its complaint by amendment so as to state a proper cause of action upon some theory. It may be that appellant can allege facts to bring it within the scope of those intended to be protected by the bond in question; and it may be that appellant can develop some theory upon which it is presently entitled to be indemnified against some type of existing liability.

[3] We are of the opinion that the interests of substantial justice will be served by affording appellant an opportunity to clarify the uncertainties and to supply the deficiencies appearing in its original complaint by amendment thereof.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to permit the appellant to amend its complaint if it be so advised.

Hearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Prosecution for possession of heroin which received by inspector who had received information from a confidential informant and police officers when they forcibly entered defendant's room without a warrant for arrest and search, wherein inspector testified as to reliability of informant by checking prior information given to him. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Sacramento County, Raymond T. Coughlin, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that it was error not to permit cross-examination of inspector as to identity of a person concerning whom informant had given information a month prior to defendant's arrest and as to inspector said he found the information reliable, when prosecution had put credibility of inspector in issue by relying upon it to justify the entry, search and seizure.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

1. Arrest ⇐63(3), 71

Where police officers on information received from an informer forced their way into defendant's room without a warrant for arrest and search and at time of entry they saw defendant and three other individuals "capping up" narcotics, arrest of defendant was legal and seizure of the equipment being used was proper. West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 836, 837, subd. 1.

2. Arrest ⇐63(4), 68, 71

A peace officer may make an arrest without a warrant when he has reasonable cause for believing person arrested has committed a felony, and in doing so he may make a forcible entry for purposes of arrest and incidental to the arrest he may search the person arrested and the premises where he is found. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 836, 837, subd. 1.

3. Arrest ⇐63(4)

Reasonable cause to justify an arrest may consist of information obtained from others and is not limited to evidence that would be admissible at trial on issue of guilt. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 836, 837, subd. 1.

4. Arrest ⇐63(4)

Reasonable grounds for believing that a person has committed a felony justifying his arrest is often a question of fact for trial court, and in cases where reliability of confidential informer is in question, issue turns mainly on credibility of officer, soundness of his reasons for relying upon informant, and nature of informant's disclosure. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 836, 837, subd. 1.

5. Arrest ⇐63(4), 68

Where police inspector had been told by confidential informant a few minutes before he and other police officers forced their way into defendant's room, that defendant was in his room at that time with others and that they were "capping up" heroin and such informant had on prior occasions given inspector information about narcotic infringements and such information had been checked and found to be reliable, reasonable cause existed to believe that defendant was committing a felony justifying forcible entry to make the arrest.

6. Witnesses ⇐216

Howard A. Potts, Sacramento, for appellant.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

[1] This is an appeal from a judgment declaring appellant guilty of violating Section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code. On February 3, 1958, appellant was the tenant of a room in a Sacramento hotel. About 10 P.M. four Sacramento police officers and one inspector of the Bureau of Narcotic Enforcement forced their way into the room. They had no warrant for arrest or search. In the room they saw appellant and three others who were then engaged in "capping" a white powder containing heroin. On a bedside table was a package containing 44 grains of the powder and various items being used in the "capping" operation. There was also a hypodermic needle, an eye dropper and 14 paper bindles containing powder. The officers arrested appellant and he was later charged with possession of heroin. They seized the articles listed above and they were introduced in evidence at the trial. There was also introduced an extra judicial statement made by appellant to the officers in which he said that one of the four persons arrested had asked him for permission to use his room to cap some heroin; that this person asked appellant to help him with that work; that appellant agreed and was to receive therefor a small amount of the narcotic. At the trial appellant neither took the stand himself nor offered evidence in his own behalf. The trial court found appellant guilty.

The first witness for the prosecution was a chemist who testified that he had analyzed the white powder found in defendant's room and that the same contained heroin. He was followed by the inspector who testified that when the officers forced their way into the room they found appellant and the others there with the articles above described The articles were then offered in evidence and objection was made to their admissibility as having been unlawfully seized. Counsel for the prosecution then further examined the inspector to determine the circumstances that lay back of the forcible entry into the appellant's room and the seizure of the articles found there. He testified that a few minutes before he entered the room he met an informer near the Sacramento police station who told him that appellant was in his room at that time with others and that they were then "capping up", that is, placing the narcotic in caps or bindles; that he gathered the police to aid him and went to the room and broke in; that the informant had told him an hour before that one Nolen, who was in the room when the officers arrived there, had just returned from southern California with a large quantity of heroin; that he had known the informer for about a month; that prior to this occasion the informer had several times given him information about narcotic law infringements; that he had checked the information and found it to be reliable. At this point the witness was cross-examined by defense counsel. He was asked to identify the informant, but before the question could be answered counsel for the prosecution asked permission to examine further on voir dire. That was granted and the inspector further testified as follows: When he talked to the informer, the informer knew that he was a state narcotic inspector and he had told the informant he intended to use the information in his work. The informant, from the first, had asked if anyone would be told that he was giving information and had been assured that they would not and that the officer would not reveal the informer's identity. It was the policy of the bureau to receive information on those terms. Having gone that far, counsel for the prosecution informed the court that he believed the search and seizure had been justified; that the articles ought to be admitted in evidence, but that if the court ruled otherwise then the People were prepared to drop the prosecution of appellant rather than reveal the identity of the informer. Counsel for appellant then again took the witness under cross-examination. He asked the witness as to whom the informer had given information. Objection was interposed that to permit the answer would tend to identify the informer. The objection was sustained. Counsel for appellant then asked the witness if, on the first occasion he had received information, it had been about appellant, and the answer was negative. The inspector repeated, however, that he had checked the reliability of that first information although he had made no arrest, believing that he had not enough information to justify it. He said his investigation as to reliability had been accomplishd by talking to other people and their answers had satisfied his mind that the person informed against was dealing in narcotics. The inspector testified further that he had paid the informer an award of $40 for the last information he had supplied; that on one other occasion he had made an arrest based upon the information of the informer. At this point counsel for appellant offered a general objection to any testimony concerning what the officers had seen in appellant's room and to the introduction in evidence of the articles seized there. The objections were overruled, the testimony of the inspector was admitted and the articles seized were received in evidence.

Appellant challenges the legality of his arrest and the resulting search and seizure. He says the evidence showed that the only and sole basis for the arrest of appellant was information given to Inspector Best by an informant to the effect that appellant and three other individuals were in the aforementioned hotel "capping up" narcotics. In this appellant is mistaken. Regardless of the conduct of the officers in entering the room, when they were there they saw the offense of possession of narcotics being committed in their presence. At that moment, regardless of all else, it was their duty to make the arrest. Under such circumstances, any person may make an arrest, be he officer or private person. Penal Code, § 836, as to peace officers; Penal Code, § 837, subd. 1, as to private persons. As to the officers, therefore, the duty to make the arrest and, as an incident thereto, to seize and preserve the evidence of the offense was immediate and paramount. If an officer, however he comes upon the scene, sees A shoot and kill B, it is duty to arrest A and to seize the murder weapon. He is no less a policeman because he came upon the scene unlawfully. The contention that the evidence seized and the testimony as to what the officer saw is inadmissible by reason of the conduct of the officers in entering appellant's room presents a different question. The lack of warrant and the forcible entry may exclude the evidence unless the entry, search and seizure rested upon a reasonable cause to believe appellant had committed a felony.

[2–5] Appellant contends that the information on which the inspector acted in going to appellant's room with the other officers for the purpose of arresting appellant was insufficient. A peace officer may make an arrest without a warrant when he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed a felony (Penal Code, § 836; People v. Smith, 50 Cal.2d 149, 323 P.2d 435), and in doing so may make a forcible entry for purposes of arrest. Incidental to the arrest he may search the person arrested and the premises where he is found. 4 Am.Jur., Arrest, sec. 84. Reasonable cause to justify an arrest may consist of information obtained from others and is not limited to evidence that would be admissible at the trial on the issue of guilt. What are reasonable grounds for believing that a person has committed a felony is often a question of fact for the trial court and in cases where the reliability of a confidential informer is in question the issue turns mainly on the credibility of the officer, the soundness of his reasons for relying upon the informant, and the nature of the informant's disclosure. People v. Boyd, 162 Cal.App.2d 332, 327 P.2d 913; People v. White, 159 Cal.App.2d 586, 324 P.2d 296. We have heretofore related the facts testified to by the inspector concerning the information he had received and the effort he had made to check the reliability of his informant and we hold that the ruling of the trial court that the evidence showed reasonable cause for an arrest of the appellant based thereon is sufficiently supported.

[6] Appellant next contends that his right of cross-examination of the inspector concerning the information he had received was prejudicially restricted. Defense counsel for appellant asked the inspector to identify a person concerning whom the informant had given information a month prior to appellant's arrest, and as to whom the inspector had said he had found the information reliable. The objection of the prosecution that the public interest would suffer by the disclosure, since it would lead to the identity of the informer, was sustained. This was error. The prosecution put the credibility of the inspector in issue when they relied upon it to justify the entry, search and seizure. The identity of the person whom the inspector said the informer had told him about might have led to evidence severely impeaching the inspector's testimony. For instance, the answer might have disclosed either that the inspector had no such person in mind or if a name was given that no such person existed.

It appears from the foregoing that appellant's counsel had made it clear to the court that he wished to learn the identity of the informer as a part of his challenge to the proof offered by the prosecution in discharge of the burden to show that the officers had reasonable ground to believe appellant had committed a felony. The court refused to permit disclosure of the identity of the informer, but, over objection, permitted use in evidence of what the search and seizure revealed.

> "* * * If testimony of communications from a confidential informer is necessary to establish the legality of a search, the defendant must be given a fair opportunity to rebut that testimony. He must therefore be permitted to ascertain the identity of the informer, since the legality of the officer's action depends upon the credibility of the information, not upon facts that he directly witnessed and upon which he could be cross-examined. If an officer were allowed to establish unimpeachably the lawfulness of a search merely by testifying that he received justifying information from a reliable person whose identity cannot be revealed, he would become the sole judge of what is probable cause to make the search. Such a holding would destroy the exclusionary rule. * * *

"In sum, when the prosecution seeks to show reasonable cause for a search by testimony as to communications from an informer, either the identity of the informer must be disclosed when the defendant seeks disclosure or such testimony must be struck on proper motion of the defendant." (Priestly v. Superior Court, 50 Cal.2d 812, 330 P.2d 39, 43.)

In view of the fact that the court had sustained objections as above noted and that the State had taken the position that if disclosure were compelled it would dismiss the action in preference to such disclosure being made, we think this record sufficiently demonstrates that the court thoroughly understood the situation and that the court erred in admitting the testimony of the inspector as to what he saw in the appellant's room and in admitting into evidence the articles there seized. It is quite apparent from this record that had a motion been made to strike such testimony it would have been denied.

The judgment appealed from is reversed and the cause is remanded.

Owner of realty, which board of supervisors of county had annexed to consolidated county fire protection district, filed a petition for writ of certiorari and writ of mandate against board of supervisors, district, and chief engineer of district. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arthur Crum, J., entered judgment adverse to board of supervisors, district, and chief engineer, and they appealed. The owner of the realty also brought original prohibition proceeding in the District Court of Appeal against the board of supervisors, district, and chief engineer to prohibit them from proceeding with subsequent annexation proceedings. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that annexation of territory to district did not deprive owners of realty within annexed territory of any property or impose on them liability for any public improvement, but only rendered their realty subject to general ad valorem tax, and that therefore the Legislature, without denying due process, could have omitted from statute any provision for notice to owners of proposed annexation or hearing and could have empowered board of supervisors of county to initiate and complete annexation without notice, and that hence Validating Act cured any defects as to notice of proposed annexation.

Judgment reversed with directions, and peremptory writ of prohibition issued.

Appeal by board of supervisors of county, consolidated county fire protection district, and chief engineer of district from judgment annulling resolution of board of supervisors annexing certain territory to district would not be dismissed by District Court of Appeal, on ground that they accepted benefits of the judgment and waived their right to appeal therefrom by commencing a subsequent proceeding to annex the same territory.

2. Counties ⇐18

Appeal by board of supervisors of county, consolidated county fire protection district, and chief engineer of district from judgment annulling resolution of board of supervisors annexing certain territory to district would not be dismissed by District Court of Appeal, on ground that, by instituting subsequent proceeding for annexation of the same territory, they violated lower court's order staying proceedings and therefore were in contempt of the lower court and were not entitled to seek aid by appeal, where lower court's order only stayed action in that court on the proceedings to be reviewed by that court and did not purport to enjoin board of supervisors or district from instituting new and separate annexation proceedings.

3. Counties ⇐18

Power of board of supervisors of county to act on proposed annexation of territory to consolidated county fire protection district was dependent on substantial compliance with provisions of statute as to notice and hearing, and the statute was the measure of the power of the board of supervisors. NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

The first matter named in the caption involves an appeal by Consolidated Fire Protection District, hereinafter called "District," the Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles and one Keith Klinger who is the chief engineer of the District, from a judgment annulling a resolution of the Board of Supervisors annexing certain territory to the District in a proceeding known as Annexation 47–57.

The second matter named in the caption involves a petition by Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, a corporation, hereinafter called Firestone, for a writ of prohibition directed to the Board to enjoin it from taking further action under a proceeding known as Annexation Number 34–58, by which proceeding it is sought to annex to the District the same territory which was included in Annexation Number 47–57, which proceeding was annulled by the judgment appealed from.

We have permitted these two matters to be submitted for decision upon a combined record and briefs and we will dispose of both by this opinion treating them separately.

The District's Appeal

[1] We have before us, in addition to the appeal, the motion of Firestone to dismiss the appeal. The motion is made upon two grounds. The first ground is that by the commencement of proceeding 34–58 the appellants have accepted the benefits of the judgment appealed from and thereby affirmed the validity of that judgment and waived their right to appeal therefrom. This contention is devoid of merit. Undoubtedly if appellants are correct in their contention that the judgment appealed from is erroneous and as a matter of law the original proceedings were valid, the Board did not have the power to act under the later proceedings for it could not order annexed territory which was already a part of the District. If, however, the Board's contentions on the appeal are not well founded and the judgment of the trial court is correct, then the original proceedings were no bar to the second. City of San Pablo v. City of Richmond, 148 Cal.App. 2d 358, at pages 361–362, 306 P.2d 949, at pages 951–952.

The appellants by initiating the second proceedings did not concede the invalidity of the first proceeding and were entitled as a precautionary measure to commence a second proceeding which would be effective only in the event that the judgment of the lower court was affirmed. If appellants had proceeded to complete their annexation under the second proceeding then it might be doubtful that they would be in a position to attack the first judgment for it would only be upon the basis of the invalidity of the order annulled by the judgment that they could again act to annex the same territory.

[2] The second ground of the motion is that by instituting the second proceeding, the appellants have violated an order made by the lower court staying proceedings and therefore are in contempt of that court and not entitled to seek aid from this court by their appeal. This contention is also without merit. The stay order made by the superior court in connection with a writ of review issued by it only stayed action by the respondents in that court (appellants here) upon the proceedings to be reviewed by that court. It did not purport to enjoin the Board of Supervisors or the District from instituting new and separate annexation proceedings. The motion to dismiss is denied.

Firestone has also moved for an affirmance of the judgment upon the grounds that a mere inspection of the record indicates the correctness of the trial court's judgment. This motion goes to the merits of the appeal and is disposed of by our decision.

The Facts

The facts relevant to the disposition of the appeal are: The District is a duly organized fire protection district. The Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County is the governing board of that district. On July 9, 1957, at a regular meeting of the Board, it determined that certain territory should be annexed to the District and ordered a hearing had in the matter of the proposed annexation on Thursday, August 8, 1957. It directed the clerk of the Board to publish a notice once a week for two successive weeks in the Florence Messenger, which the Board found to be a newspaper circulated in the territory proposed to be annexed and the newspaper which the Board determined most likely to give notice to the inhabitants of said territory. A notice was published as directed in the designated newspaper. This notice did not name any person, and the boundaries of the territory to be annexed were described as follows: "Beginning at the most westerly northwesterly corner of Tract No. 3233, as shown on map recorded in Book 36, Page 70 of Maps, in the office of the Recorder of the County of Los Angeles; thence northerly along the boundary of Consolidated County Fire Protection District, as same existed on May 29, 1957, and following the same in all its various courses and curves to the boundary of the City of South Gate, as same existed on said date; thence northerly in a direct line to the point of beginning. Containing: 0.079 square miles."

Firestone is the owner and occupant of all but a small portion of the real property within the territory sought to be an-nexed and maintains a large manufacturing plant thereon. The fact of its ownership and occupancy were known to the Board and to the officers of the District. On August 8, this annexation proceeding together with 12 other proposed annexations were taken up by the Board for action. No one appeared at the meeting to protest any of the annexations. The Board thereupon took the evidence of one Hughes, a fire rating inspector for the county, his evidence being as follows: "Q. Are you familiar with the territory sought to be annexed to the various Fire Protection Districts? A. I am. Q. In each instance, in your opinion, would the territory [proposed to be annexed] be benefited by the annexation if consummated? A. It would." The Board thereupon adopted the resolution for the annexation of the territory in question and the Board thereafter, pursuant to section 14480, Health & Safety Code, levied an ad valorem tax upon the property of Firestone.

Firestone had no knowledge of the proposed annexation and did not acquire any knowledge of the proceeding until after the resolution of annexation had been passed and the tax assessed. It then filed a petition with the Board requesting the withdrawal of the territory included within the annexation from the District upon two grounds: First, that the annexation proceedings were invalid, and, second, that Firestone would receive no benefit from the annexation. Proceedings upon this petition were had before the Board at a number of meetings thereof and at the fourth meeting at which the matter was considered, held on April 17, 1958, the hearing upon the request of counsel for Firestone was continued for a period of 90 days in order that Firestone might commence an action to test the validity of the initial annexation.

On April 7, 1958, the Legislature passed an act validating all annexation proceedings theretofore completed other than those as to which any legal proceeding was at the effective date of the act pending and undetermined or which might be pending or undetermined during a period of 30 days from and after the date of the act. This act was effective as of April 7, 1958. See Statutes 1958, First Extraordinary Session, Chapter 10.

On May 14, 1958, Firestone filed its petition for writ of certiorari and writ of mandate in the present action.

At the trial of the action the evidence received showed without substantial conflict that the Florence Messenger in which the notice of annexation was published, was a publication which had no subscribers but was distributed by being delivered gratis to habitations and places of business within a defined area outside of the territory sought to be annexed and that it was not circulated or distributed within that territory. The evidence further showed that the boundaries of the Consolidated County Fire Protection District referred to in the published notice of the territory to be annexed, were not a matter of public record and that the only means that a property owner would have of determining whether the boundaries of the territory to be annexed as given in the published notice encompassed his property would be to, with the aid of the county engineer, search the minutes of the Board of Supervisors so as to ascertain the boundaries of the District as those were contained in numerous proceedings for annexations to the original District or for the consolidation of that district with other districts.

The trial court found that the Florence Messenger was not, at the time of the publication of the notice of annexation, circulated or distributed in the territory proposed to be annexed; that it was not the newspaper most likely to give notice to the inhabitants of the territory proposed to be annexed (the evidence showed that five newspapers of general circulation were distributed in the area); that Firestone had no notice whatsoever of the proposed hearing on the annexation or of the proposed annexation and that the notice as published failed to designate the property proposed to be annexed. It concluded that the Board acted without and in excess of its jurisdiction and that the resolution authorizing the annexation of the territory in question was void. It rendered judgment accordingly.

The findings of fact made are, as we have indicated, fully supported by the evidence.

[3, 4] The power of the Board to act upon the annexation proceedings was dependent upon substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute as to notice and hearing. The statute was the measure of its power. Williams v. Bergin, 108 Cal. 166, at page 170, 41 P. 287, at page 288; Keller v. City of Oakland, 54 Cal.App. 169, 172, 201 P. 618. The notice here was vitally defective as a statutory notice. It was defective as a notice complying with the statute because not published in a newspaper distributed within the territory to be annexed. It was defective as a statutory notice because the description was not one which would put a person reading it upon notice that his property was within the boundaries as described. It is evident from the mere reading of the description that no one reading the notice would have any cause to believe that his property fell within the exterior boundaries described nor could he by reference to monuments or records, reference to which is ordinarily made in the description of real property, have applied the description so as to determine whether his property was affected but could only ascertain this by an independent search of records that were only available through the assistance of a public officer. Such description, in our opinion, does not meet the requirement of section 14513 of the Health & Safety Code that the notice "shall designate the territory proposed to be annexed."

The judgment of the trial court must therefore be affirmed unless the Validating Act of 1958 (Stats. 1958, First Extraordinary Session, Chapter 10) validated the annexation.

[5] The Validating Act could not and does not purport to validate any ordinance or resolution which is void because of lack of due process, but only ordinances or resolutions which are invalid because of defects or omissions in carrying out statutory provisions which the Legislature could have omitted from the law under which such ordinance or resolution was adopted or the proceeding had. See Section 6(a) and (b) Validating Act of 1958, First Extraordinary Session, Chapter 10; Miller v. McKenna, 23 Cal.2d 774, at page 782, 147 P.2d 531, at page 536.

[6] If the owner of property within the proposed annexation had a constitutional right to notice and an opportunity to be heard, the notice herein given did not satisfy the constitutional requirements of due process. Here notice published did not contain the names of the owners of the property within the District or the names of the persons to whom that property was assessed. The names of these persons were known and the places at which notice would reach them by mail was known. The property to be affected by the annexation was not described and the exterior boundaries of the proposed annexation were not such as to put an owner of property within the territory upon inquiry as to whether his property was within the territory to be annexed. The newspaper chosen was not one of general circulation but one which had no regular subscribers and was not a publication designed to bring notice of the proceedings to those affected thereby. The notice given here was not one of a character designed to bring home to the persons affected knowledge of the proceedings or to put them upon inquiry but was apparently designed as a mere token compliance with the statute without regard as to whether it was in fact reasonably certain to inform those affected. Such notice does not comport with due process within the rationale of the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. See Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 70 S.Ct. 652, at pages 657–660, 94 L.Ed. 865, at pages 874–876; Walker v. City of Hutchinson, 352 U.S. 112, 77 S.Ct. 200, at pages 201–202, 1 L.Ed.2d 178, at pages 181–182; Wisconsin Electric Power

Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 352 U.S. 948, 77 S.Ct. 324, 1 L.Ed.2d 241.[4] The rationale of these decisions, as we understand it, is that in order to comport with due process a notice must be reasonably calculated to inform parties of proceedings which may directly and adversely affect their legally protected interests and that a newspaper publication alone is not adequate where the person affected is known and it is feasible to give him notice by personal service or by mail or if his address be unknown, by posting his property. It is common knowledge[2] that a land owner is rarely informed of proceedings against his property by mere newspaper publication and to assert that the notice as published here was reasonably calculated to inform Firestone of the proceedings is the purest sophistry.

Appellant urges upon us the impracticability in many proceedings of giving notice in any other manner than by publication. It may be that in certain proceedings notice by mail to or by personal service on all affected persons might be impractical or even impossible. We are not concerned with such a situation here and if one should arise then the character of the notice given and the likelihood of its being reasonably certain to inform those affected under the conditions which then exist may be examined to determine whether in that case they constituted due process. See Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 70 S.Ct. 652, at page 657, 94 L.Ed. 865, at page 874. That the Legislature does not consider it impractical to give written notice by mail to the owners of property within territory to be annexed whose names appear upon the assessment roll in addition to giving notice by publication is well illustrated by the provisions of section 35311 of the Government Code which require service by mail of such written notice in case of annexation to a city of uninhabited territory.

The question of due process only presents itself, however, if the proceeding is one through which a person affected may thereby be deprived of property or a property right. Whether the annexation in question here is one through which Firestone is deprived of its property depends upon the nature of Fire Protection Districts. If they are but public corporations formed as an agency of the State with limited powers to perform a function of the State, i. e., are public corporations in the nature of municipalities, then the annexation of territory does not deprive the owners of the property annexed of that property or of any interest therein or charge them with the payment of any assessment for the benefit of other persons within the territory annexed, and they are not, as a matter of constitutional right, entitled to notice or hearing. If, on the other hand, the District is in the nature of a special assessment district created for the primary purpose of assessing upon private lands the benefits to be derived from a public improvement for the construction of which the district is formed, persons whose lands are within the proposed district are deprived of their property without due process of law unless they have proper notice and an opportunity to be heard upon the question of whether their property will benefit and if so the extent of those benefits. In re Orosi Public Utility Dist., 196 Cal. 43, 235 P. 1004; People v. Town of Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 84 P. 205; Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, 164 U.S. 112, 17 S.Ct. 56, 41 L.Ed. 369.

1. Appellant has directed our attention to certain earlier decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that notice by publication is sufficient to constitute due process, to-wit: Wight v. Davidson, 181 U.S. 371, 21 S.Ct. 616, 45 L.Ed. 900; Paulsen v. City of Portland, 149 U.S. 30, 13 S.Ct. 750, 37 L.Ed. 637; Lent v. Tillson, 140 U.S. 316, 11 S.Ct. 825, 35 L.Ed. 419; Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, 164 U.S. 112, 17 S.Ct. 56, 41 L.Ed. 369, and contends that as those cases are not referred to in the cases we have cited, it was not the intent of the Supreme Court to over-rule them. We are of the opinion, however, that the Supreme Court has by its later decisions, further defined those matters which do not constitute due process. We think this is emphasized by the fact that the cases of Wight v. Davidson, supra, and Walker v. City of Hutchinson, supra, both involved condemnation proceedings in which the notice was given by publication and that while in the Wight case the Court upheld publication as due process, in the Hutchinson case it emphatically announced the contrary. It may be further noted that in his dissent in the Hutchinson case, Justice Burton directed attention to earlier decisions of the Court in which it had been held that notice by publication comported with due process.

[7] No citation of authority is needed for the proposition that the furnishing of fire protection is a function of the government of the State to be performed by it in unincorporated territory and that it may by general law provide for the formation of municipal corporations with limited powers to perform that function. Appellant District is such a municipal corporation. Its powers are limited to the furnishing of fire protection to and the elimination of fire hazards in the territory within its boundaries. Sec. 14440, Health & Safety Code. It may acquire the property necessary for the exercise of its limited power but title to that property vests in the county. § 14500. It may, with the consent of the electors residing within its boundaries, issue bonds payable solely out of revenues derived from taxation of the property within the district and must each year levy an ad valorem tax upon all taxable property, real and personal, within the district sufficient to defray the cost of operation and maintenance and to pay the principal and interest upon any bonds that may be issued. It has no power, however, to erect any public improvement and to make an assessment therefor, based upon the benefits conferred thereby, against any property in the district. The annexation of property to a Fire Protection District does not therefore deprive the owners of the property within the annexed territory of any property or impose upon them liability for any public improvement but only renders their property subject to a general ad valorem tax which is levied on all property in accordance with its value and irrespective of the benefits conferred. This tax is of no different effect from that of any tax levied by a city for general municipal purposes. In re Orosi Public Utility Dist., 196 Cal. 43, 235 P. 1004.

[8] The Legislature, therefore, without violating any constitutional provisions, might have omitted from the act any provision for notice or hearing and empowered the Board to initiate and complete the annexation without notice. In re Orosi Public Utility Dist., 196 Cal. 43, 235 P. 1004; People v. Town of Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 84 P. 205.

Our attention has been directed to Norman v. Cogswell, 82 Cal.App. 159, 255 P. 251, 252, in which the court stated that a fire protection district compares "logically with an assessment district for a certain definite and particular improvement." We believe that the language used by the court there was not necessary to its decision and the Supreme Court, without mention of Norman v. Cogswell, in Johnson v. Fontana County Fire Protection Dist., 15 Cal.2d 380, 101 P.2d 1092, 1096, arrived at the opposite conclusion stating; "There is not much similarity between such a district [a fire protection district] and an assessment district which carries on no continuous function and exists solely for the purpose of paying for a public improvement. In a very real sense the district is not only performing functions but performing a well recognized governmental function in furnishing protection against fire."

It follows that as the Legislature could have originally provided for an annexation without notice or hearing the Validating Act of 1958 established the annexed territory as a part of the fire protection and cured any defects as to notice or hearing in the proceedings.

[9] Firestone asserts that the petition filed by it with the Board after the completion of the annexation proceedings and after the assessor had levied an assessment for district taxes upon the subject property constituted legal proceedings contesting the legality of the annexation proceedings and that therefore by section 6(c) of the 1958 Validating Act the annexation proceedings in question were not included within the validating provisions of the act. With this contention we cannot agree. While the Board acted in a quasi-judicial capacity in conducting the hearing had on August 8th when it concluded that hearing and adopted its resolution for the annexation of the property, it exhausted its judicial powers. Williams v. Bergin, 108 Cal. 166, at page 170, 41 P. 287, at page 288; see also Olive Proration Program Committee, etc. v. Agricultural Prorate Comm., 17 Cal.2d 204, at page 209, 109 P.2d 918, at page 921; Heap v. City of Los Angeles, 6 Cal.2d 405, at page 407, 57 P.2d 1323, at page 1324; Vernon v. Board of Supervisors, 142 Cal. 513, at page 516, 76 P. 253, at page 255. The only judicial power conferred upon the Board which it might exercise after the completion of the annexation was the power to act upon a petition to withdraw property from the district and if it found as a fact that the territory sought to be withdrawn would not benefit by remaining in the district to grant the petition and exclude the subject territory from the district but if it failed to so find to deny the petition. Health & Safety Code, §§ 14560–14567. Such a proceeding is clearly not one contesting or inquiring into the legality of the original proceedings but is one dependent upon the legality of those proceedings, for otherwise the Board would have no power to act to grant a withdrawal. Firestone by its petition to the Board sought withdrawal of its property upon the grounds that its property would not benefit by remaining as a part of the district. It thus invoked a power of the Board which the Board could only have if its original proceedings were valid, and the fact that Firestone also sought to have the Board declare its original proceedings void does not turn the matter into a legal proceeding attacking and contesting the validity of the annexation for the Board had no power to make such an adjudication but was limited to a determination of the question as to whether Firestone's property would benefit by remaining a part of the district. It undoubtedly was the intent of the Legislature under paragraph (c) of section 6 of the Validating Act of 1958 to only exclude annexation proceedings which were being contested or inquired into in a proceeding before a court having the power to render a final judgment decreeing the invalidity of the proceedings. Cf. Griem v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 99 Wis. 530, 75 N.W. 67.

The trial court was therefore in error in decreeing that the annexation proceedings in question were invalid. The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment decreeing that the annexation proceedings known as Annexation 47–57 are valid, and that the lands of Firestone as those lands are described in its complaint on file in this matter are within the boundaries of the Consolidated Fire Protection District.

The Writ of Prohibition, Civil No. 23365.

[10] Inasmuch as we have held that Annexation proceedings 47–57 are valid and as by that proceeding Firestone's lands became part of the Consolidated Fire Protection District the respondent Board of Supervisors has no power to act upon any further proceedings for the annexation of the same lands and if it should attempt to do so it would be acting in excess of its jurisdiction. The writ prayed for must therefore issue.

Let a peremptory writ of prohibition issue.

Hearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Action for injuries sustained in a rear end automobile collision. From an adverse judgment in the Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, Robert E. Cassin, J., the plaintiff appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J., held that an instruction which unduly increased the burden of plaintiff of showing that her conduct in stopping her automobile was justifiable or excusable was error.

Judgment reversed.

Automobiles ⇐246(60)

In action for injuries sustained in a rear end automobile collision, where it was alleged that plaintiff as preceding motorist violated the statute respecting signals, instruction that jury could assume that a person of ordinary prudence would reasonably endeavor to obey the law, and that to prove that a violation of statute was excusable, evidence must support a finding that violation resulted from causes beyond the control of the plaintiff, was improper as unduly increasing burden of plaintiff to show that her conduct was justifiable or excusable. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 544(c), 546.

Lewis, Scher & Fernandez, Sunnyvale, for appellant.

DRAPER, Justice.

In this personal injury action, plaintiff appeals from judgment upon jury verdict in favor of defendant. Automobiles driven by plaintiff and defendant were south-bound on a two-lane highway, with plaintiff's car in the lead. Traffic was heavy. When the vehicles ahead of her stopped, plaintiff stopped her car, which was then struck from the rear by defendant's car.

Th court's instruction quoted to the jury the language of Vehicle Code, § 544(c), providing that no person shall "stop or suddenly decrease the speed of a vehicle" without giving a signal, and of Vehicle Code Section 546, specifying the method of giving such a signal by hand and arm. The court then gave BAJI 149, which states that violation of a statute requires a presumption of negligence, but that the presumption may be overcome by evidence showing that such conduct was "excusable, justifiable and such as might reasonably have been expected from a person of ordinary prudence." However, the court also gave the two optional paragraphs of this instruction, which read:

> "In this connection, you may assume that a person of ordinary prudence will reasonably endeavor to obey the law and will do so unless causes, not of his own intended making, induce him, without moral fault, to do otherwise.
> "To prove that a violation of a statute, such as that charged in this case, was excusable and justifiable so as to overcome the presumption of negligence, the evidence must support a finding that the violation resulted from causes or things beyond the control of the person charged with the violation."

Although these two paragraphs of the instruction were supported by authority when they were given, they have since been specifically disapproved by the Supreme Court. Alarid v. Vanier, 50 Cal.2d 617, 327 P.2d 897. Thus we must hold the giving of these instructions to have been error. Emerton v. Acres, 160 Cal.App.2d 742, 325 P.2d 685. In Alarid the instructions were not prejudicial since the party whose burden it was to justify his violation of a statute prevailed. Here it was plaintiff who assertedly violated a statute. The final paragraph of the instruction unduly increased her burden of showing that her conduct was justifiable or excusable. Since verdict and judgment were against her, we must hold the error prejudicial.

Judgment reversed.

Patricia Jean HENLEY and Robert Maynard Henley, Jr., by his Guardian ad litem, Patricia Jean Henley, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

The ATCHISON, TOPEKA AND SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY, a corporation, G. M. Daniels and Wallace Smith, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 5792.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Dec. 23, 1958.

Action for wrongful death of decedent who was killed by defendants' train while he was lawfully attempting to assist a driver in getting stalled cement mixer truck across railway track. The Superior Court of Orange County, Claude M. Owens, J. pro tem., entered judgment for plaintiff, and the defendants appealed therefrom and from an order denying motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that evidence raised question for jury as to whether decedent exercised reasonable and ordinary care and watchfulness.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Railroads ⇐350(13)

In action for wrongful death of decedent who was killed by defendants' train while he was lawfully attempting to assist driver in getting stalled cement mixer truck across railway tracks, evidence raised question for jury as to whether decedent exercised reasonable and ordinary care and watchfulness.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1064(1)

In action for wrongful death of decedent who was killed by defendants' train while he was lawfully attempting to assist driver in getting stalled cement mixer truck across railway tracks, there was no reversible error in giving instruction that law presumed that decedent took due care for his own concern, where plaintiffs produced no direct evidence as to conduct of decedent immediately prior to or at precise time of accident and testimony of driver indicated that he did not see the train approaching and that he was not watching decedent for an appreciable time before accident.

3. Trial ⇐28(2)

In action for wrongful death of decedent who was killed by train while he was lawfully attempting to assist driver in getting stalled cement mixer truck across railway tracks, permitting jurors to view the scene was not abuse of discretion, where jury was instructed to disregard changes made by railroad since the accident.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an action for damages for wrongful death brought pursuant to section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure by Patricia Jean Henley in her own behalf and as guardian ad litem for her minor son, Robert Maynard Henley, Jr., as the result of the death of her husband, Robert Maynard Henley.

The case arose from a collision between a disabled cement mixer truck, upon the exterior of which the decedent was situated, and a railway freight train of appellant, The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company (hereinafter called "Santa Fe"), at the intersection of the Santa Fe main line tracks and Jefferson Road in the township of Atwood, county of Orange, on June 21, 1955. A jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs for the sum of $29,000 and the defendants appeal from the judgment which followed and from an order denying their motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The accident occurred at the intersection of Jefferson Road with the main line of the Santa Fe at approximately 4:00 p. m. The general area of the crossing was open, undeveloped country, and there were no climatic obstructions to vision. The Santa Fe train was approaching Jefferson Road from the east on the northerly main line tracks, which extend generally east and west and intersect Jefferson Road, which runs generally north and south. Jefferson Road is approximately 2,000 feet west of the Atwood depot. Paralleling the railroad track at a distance of approximately 25 feet to the north thereof is Placentia Road, into which Jefferson Road deadends. Between Atwood depot and Jefferson Road the railroad tracks curve to the left for westbound trains and the westerly end of the curve is approximately 750 feet from Jefferson Road. The easterly end of the curve was approximately 1,700 feet east of the Jefferson Road crossing. For northbound traffic on Jefferson Road a crossarm signal and a highway stop sign were located just south of the railroad tracks.

Vincent Yorba, the operator of the cement mixer truck involved, was traveling north on Jefferson Road. When he attempted to cross the Santa Fe railroad tracks, his motor stalled, and the truck came to a stopped position with its rear set of dual wheels between the rails of the Santa Fe main line and the truck cab was completely north of the tracks. Yorba testified that he remained in the cab and attempted to rock the truck out of the depression between the rails by the use of the starter. While he was so engaged, the decedent, driving a similar cement mixer truck, stopped behind Yorba's truck, got out and walked over to it on the east side and asked what was wrong. When Yorba stated he could not get his truck started, Henley opened up the hood, took off the air cleaner, and stood with one foot on the fender and his other foot on top of the carburetor, helping Yorba to get the truck started. Yorba testified that he did not know whether Henley was in this position at the time of the accident and presumed that he was. Within five minutes after Henley came up to Yorba's truck a Santa Fe freight train, approaching the crossing from the east at a speed of approximately 55 to 60 miles per hour, struck Yorba's truck. Yorba testified that while Henley was working on the truck he asked him (Yorba) to keep a lookout for him and that he (Yorba) did keep a lookout for train traffic; that he heard no warning of the approaching train, did not hear any bells ringing or any whistles, did not hear any sound at all; and did not know at the time of the accident that he had been hit by a train.

The railway train approaching the crossing from the east came to a stop approximately 1,100 feet west of the intersection and certain wheels of the locomotive were derailed by the impact. The testimony of the engineer, fireman, and the brakeman, who were riding in the engine cab prior to the accident, indicated that the train was proceeding from San Bernardino to Los Angeles at a speed of approximately 55 miles per hour; that both headlights were on, the automatic bell was ringing, and the engineer had sounded a regular crossing whistle series while approaching Van Buren crossing (approximately 1,700 feet east of Jefferson Road) and that immediately thereafter a similar series was started and blown until the locomotive was approximately 150 feet from the point of impact. The engineer and fireman testified that they could not pinpoint or distinguish the Jefferson Road crossing until the locomotive had proceeded practically through the left hand curve just east of the crossing; that when the mixer was noted stalled on the main line, the emergency brakes were applied some 600 to 800 feet east of the crossing; that thereafter the engineer remained at his post, sounding the whistle, until the impact was imminent, at which time he fled toward the rear of the cab.

A Santa Fe road foreman of engines testified that under the conditions prevalent at the time of the accident 2,500 to 2,600 feet would be necessary to bring the train to a stop, absent the derailment.

Witness Charles Peltzer, who was called as a rebuttal witness by the plaintiffs and was also under subpoena by the defendant, testified that he was working as a ranch hand approximately one-quarter of a mile south of the scene of the accident, in an open field, and had watched the train as it crossed the intersection of Van Buren; that he heard no bell or whistle blown at all from Van Buren to the Jefferson Road crossing until the train was approximately 500 feet from the Jefferson Road crossing and that "There was absolutely only two short blasts, and extremely short"; that he estimated the speed of the train at 60 miles per hour or better and that he observed no noticeable reduction of speed of the train from the time he first observed it at Van Buren crossing to the point of impact.

The witness Yorba testified that he could see a half a mile up the track from his position in the cab; that there was nothing to obstruct his view at all and that there was nothing to obstruct the vision of Henley when he was on the cab. A portion of Yorba's deposition was read into the record wherein he recalled a conversation near the intersection with the fireman and engineer as follows: "I laid back down and I can remember the engineer coming up and I said 'Why in the heck didn't you blow the whistle?' He said, 'We didn't have time.' He (the fireman) said, 'The engineer would never have seen you if I hadn't have said something.' "

[1] Appellants first contend that the court should have granted their motions for nonsuit, directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the ground that the sole cause of the death of Robert Maynard Henley was as a matter of law his own negligence. We do not agree with this contention.

In Anthony v. Hobbie, 25 Cal.2d 814, 818, 155 P.2d 826, 829, it was held that > "The burden of proving contributory negligence is upon the defendant. 19 Cal.Jur. 697–699. True contributory negligence may be found by the trier of fact from the plaintiffs' own evidence. But cases in which it can be said that the negligence of plaintiff contributes proximately to the accident as a matter of law are rare. The rule has been stated in various ways in a legion of cases, that contributory negligence is not established as a matter of law unless the only reasonable hypothesis is that such negligence exists; that reasonable or sensible men could have drawn that conclusion and none other; that where there are different inferences that may be drawn, one for and one against, the one against will be followed; and that before it can be held as a matter of law that contributory negligence exists, the evidence must point unerringly to that conclusion. (Citing many cases.)"

In Merlino v. Southern Pac. Co., 132 Cal.App.2d 58, 67, 281 P.2d 583, the court reiterated the rule stated in Anthony v. Hobbie, supra.

In Balthrop v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 142 Cal.App.2d 823, 825, 299 P.2d 341, 343, the rule is stated that " 'where it is shown that a (driver) has exercised some care, the question whether or not the care actually exercised was due and sufficient will always be a matter for determination by the jury.' " Citing Startup v. Pacific Electric R. Co., 29 Cal.2d 866, 871, 180 P.2d 896. See also Murphy v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 139 Cal.App.2d 792, 797, 294 P.2d 458.

In Austin v. Riverside Portland Cement Co., 44 Cal.2d 225, 237, 238, 239, 282 P.2d 69, 77, it is said that it has long been recognized that "'* * * where a person must work in a position of possible danger the amount of care which he is bound to exercise for his own safety may well be less by reason of the necessity of his giving attention to his work than would otherwise be the case. (Citing cases.)"; that to arbitrarily adopt as a standard of negligence per se the rule that if one may be charged with a knowledge, past or present, of a danger, he is precluded from recovery for injuries sustained therefrom and let the rule rest there for all cases would be to establish a doctrine dangerous in its application and unsound in principle and one not warranted by the present weight of authority; that whether forgetfulness of a known danger constitutes contributory negligence is a question for the trier of fact, giving consideration to the circumstances even though there is no sudden disturbance or peril confronting the plaintiff and causing the lapse of memory; to forget is not negligence unless it shows a want of ordinary care; and that generally the question is one for the jury.

In Jones v. Southern Pacific Co., 74 Cal. App. 10, 239 P. 429, 434, which was an action to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's husband, who was an employee of the Southern Pacific Company and was struck by defendant's train while he was on the tracks making repairs, the court held that "* * * it may be said that negative testimony of witnesses who are in a position to hear and to observe, who declare they heard no signals and saw none, even as opposed to positive testimony that signals were given, presents a question to be submitted to the jury, and it has been held such negative evidence may be sufficient to sustain a verdict."

In the instant case the decedent was lawfully attempting to assist Yorba in getting his truck across the railway tracks. The cab of the truck was north of the tracks when the accident happened. Yorba heard no warning of the approaching train and was attempting to rock the rear wheels of the truck out from between the rails when the accident occurred and he did not know that a train had hit the truck until after the accident happened. There was no direct testimony as to what the decedent was doing at the precise time of the accident, as to whether he heard or saw the approaching train and attempted to leap from the truck or as to what part of the train or truck struck him. He could not keep a constant lookout for approaching trains and at the same time continue with his efforts to start the motor of the truck. Obviously Yorba did not see the train and was not able to testify as to how the decedent met his death.

The question of whether or not the decedent exercised reasonable and ordinary care and watchfulness was, under the circumstances, a question of fact for the jury and we cannot hold as a matter of law that the sole cause of his death was his own negligence or that appellants were entitled to the direction of a verdict against respondents.

[2] The trial court instructed the jury as follows: "You are instructed that the law presumes that the decedent, Robert Henley, took due care for his own concern and you are to follow this presumption unless it is overcome by the evidence which is convincing to your minds by a preponderance of the evidence." Appellants claim that the giving of this instruction constituted prejudicial error, asserting that substantial evidence was placed before the jury by respondents, that the decedent failed to exercise ordinary care in watching and listening for an approaching train. In Brandelius v. City and County of San Francisco, 47 Cal.2d 729, 736, 306 P.2d 432, 437, the court, in ruling that it was not improper to give an instruction on the presumption of due care in that case, said:

> "While under some circumstances there is no room for the presumption where the party whose claimed negligence is at issue either himself testifies or introduces evidence in his own behalf as to his acts and conduct immediately preceding and at the time of the accident (Speck v. Sarver, 20 Cal. 2d 585, 587–588, 128 P.2d 16; Zollars v. Barber, 140 Cal.App.2d 502, 506, 295 P.2d 561), the benefit of the presumption is available if such person be deceased and the testimony of plaintiffs' witnesses respecting the deceased's acts and conduct at the time involved is not 'wholly irreconcilable' with such presumption. Gigliotti v. Nunes, 45 Cal.2d 85, 93, 286 P.2d 809."

In Gigliotti v. Nunes, 45 Cal.2d 85, 93, 286 P.2d 809, 814, the court said:

"Although there is no room for the presumption where the driver or other person whose claimed negligence is at issue himself testifies to his actions at the time involved (see Speck v. Sarver (1942), 20 Cal.2d 585, 587–588, 128 P.2d 16), the rule is established that if such person be deceased or unable to testify by reason of loss of memory, the fact that other witnesses for the parties testify fully as to the acts and conduct of the allegedly negligent person does not deprive the party relying on the presumption of the benefit thereof unless the testimony which he himself produces 'under circumstances which afford no indication that the testimony is the product of mistake or inadvertence * * * is wholly irreconcilable with the presumption sought to be invoked.' (Westberg v. Willde (1939), 14 Cal.2d 360, 365–368, 94 P.2d 590; Mar Shee v. Maryland Assurance Corp. (1922), 190 Cal. 1, 9, 210 P. 269; Chakmakjian v. Lowe (1949), 33 Cal. 2d 308, 313, 201 P.2d 801.)"

In Swanson v. Bogatin, 149 Cal.App.2d 755, 757, 308 P.2d 918, 920, it is said that "It has often been decided that the question as to whether or not the giving of such an instruction as this on the presumption of due care is prejudicial must be determined upon the facts of the particular case."

In the instant case the plaintiffs produced no direct evidence as to the conduct of the decedent immediately prior to or at the precise time of the accident. The testimony of witness Yorba indicates that he did not see the train approaching and that he was not watching the decedent for an appreciable time before the accident. Under the circumstances, plaintiffs were entitled to the benefit of the presumption. The testimony of plaintiffs' witnesses was not wholly irreconcilable with it and there was no reversible error in the giving of the instruction. Duehren v. Stewart, 39 Cal.App.2d 201, 208, 102 P.2d 784.

[3] Appellants further argue that they were prejudicially detrimented by the jurors' view of the scene and that the jury was improperly allowed to observe subsequent precautions taken by the railway company at the crossing. However, in Nunneley v. Edgar Hotel, 36 Cal.2d 493, 501–502, 225 P.2d 497, 502 it was held that:

"The question as to whether the jury should be allowed to view the premises where an accident occurred is governed by section 610 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is committed to the sound discretion of the trial judge. An appellate court will not reverse a judgment because of a ruling in that regard unless the record clearly shows an abuse of that discretion. Brown v. Lemon Cove Ditch Co., 36 Cal.App. 94, 171 P. 705; see, also, People v. Pompa, 192 Cal. 412, 422, 221 P. 198."

In that case, as here, the court properly instructed the jury that the changes made since the accident were to be disregarded by it. No abuse of discretion appears in this connection.

Action for injuries sustained in an automobile collision. From an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, John P. McMurray, J., the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, P. J., held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐933(1, 4)

On an appeal from an order granting a new trial, all presumptions are in favor of the order, and it will be affirmed if it is sustainable on any ground.

New Trial ⇐6

The granting of a motion for a new trial is discretionary with the trial judge to such an extent that an appellate court will not interfere unless an abuse of discretion appears.

3. New Trial ⇐71

Court in considering a motion for new trial is not bound by a conflict in evidence and does not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial when there is any evidence which would support a judgment in favor of the moving party.

4. New Trial ⇐68

Where conflicting inferences are deducible from uncontradicted probative facts, the trial court may draw inferences opposed to those accepted by the jury.

5. New Trial ⇐68

In action for injuries sustained by passenger in automobile which collided with a bus on an intersection, record did not indicate that trial court abused its discretion in granting plaintiff's motion for new trial on the ground that the evidence failed to establish that the accident was solely and proximately caused by negligence of plaintiff's driver.

Carroll, Davis, Burdick & McDonough, San Francisco, for appellants.

Bernard Allard, Kessler & Kessler, Oakland, Leon G. Seyranian, Richard J. Moore, Oakland, of counsel, for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial in a personal injury action. Plaintiff Mary Gonzales brought this action against defendant Pacific Greyhound Lines, its employee, the defendant Bertleson and the City and County of San Francisco, for personal injuries sustained on May 28, 1955, in a collision at the intersection of 7th and Folsom Streets in the City of San Francisco. Plaintiff was a passenger in an automobile operated by her son-in-law, Alexander Gallegos. It was a clear day, traffic was not heavy. Mr. Gallegos was driving west in the right lane of Folsom Street, a two-way street. The defendant Bertleson was driving a Greyhound bus north on 7th Street, a one-way street with four lanes of traffic. The traffic signals at the northeast and southwest corners controlled traffic on Folsom Street; the signals at the northwest and southeast corners controlled traffic on 7th Street. The Gallegos' vehicle and the bus collided in the northwest portion of the intersection.

The complaint alleged that the accident was proximately caused by the negligent operation and maintenance of the Greyhound bus, and the failure of the City of San Francisco to maintain, inspect and control the electrical traffic signals at the intersection of Folsom and 7th Streets. A jury trial resulted in a verdict in favor of all defendants. Judgment on the verdict was entered on August 12, 1957. On August 20, 1957, the plaintiff moved for a new trial against all defendants. On August 30, 1957, the court granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial against the defendants Pacific Greyhound Lines and its employee, defendant Lester R. Bertleson on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. The sole issue on appeal is the propriety of the order granting a new trial against these defendants. Defendants contend that the trial court abused its discretion in granting a new trial, as the accident was solely and proximately caused by the negligence of the driver of the vehicle in which the plaintiff was riding.

[1–3] On an appeal from an order granting a new trial, all presumptions are in favor of the order, and it will be affirmed if it is sustainable on any ground. The granting of a motion for a new trial rests within the discretion of the trial judge to such an extent that an appellate court will not interfere unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears. Britton v. Gunderson, 160 Cal.App.2d 66, 324 P.2d 938. A trial court in considering a motion for new trial is not bound by a conflict in the evidence, and has not abused its discretion when there is any evidence which would support a judgment in favor of the moving party. Where conflicting inferences are deducible from uncontradicted probative facts, the trial court may draw inferences opposed to those accepted by the jury. Ballard v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 28 Cal.2d 357, 358, 170 P.2d 465. "It is only where it can be said as a matter of law that there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment that an appellate court will reverse the order of the trial court." Butler v. Hopewell, 163 Cal.App. 2d 106, 328 P.2d 862, 864; Brooks v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 27 Cal.2d 305, 163 P.2d 689.

[4, 5] The record reveals conflicting evidence on the following matters: whether the traffic signal was on "go" for the Gallegos' vehicle or for the Greyhound bus; the speed of the two vehicles; and whether the car or the bus entered the intersection first. The defendant Bertleson testified that he did not see the car at all before the impact. We conclude that no abuse of discretion appears in the instant case as there is substantial evidence to support a judgment for the plaintiff.

In view of the foregoing, the order for a new trial must be affirmed.

Order affirmed.

v.

William Wendell THOME, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6299.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 31, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of the unlawful possession of marijuana with previous convictions and from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joseph M. Maltby, J., the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that contention with respect to illegal search and seizure would not be considered on appeal and that the evidence sustained conviction.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1036(1)

In narcotics prosecution, contention that officers did not have a search warrant and that they obtained the marijuana by illegal search and seizure would not be considered on appeal where no objection was made to the evidence at trial.

2. Poisons ⇐9

In prosecution for the unlawful possession of marijuana, evidence sustained conviction.

Harrison M. Dunham, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was charged with unlawful possession of marijuana. In a nonjury trial, he was convicted. Allegations in the information that he had been convicted previously of two felonies (robbery and unlawful possession of narcotics) were found to be true. He appeals from the judgment.

Appellant contends that the officers obtained the marijuana by illegal search and seizure; and that the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment.

Officer Faulkner testified that on the morning of December 10, 1957, he received confidential information that defendant would have narcotics in his possession when he returned to his home between 9 a. m. and 11 a. m. on that day. About 10 a. m. of that day, Officers Faulkner and McMahon went to defendant's home, and about five minutes thereafter defendant drove his car (two-door car) into the yard and parked the car. Officer McMahon went to the driver's side of the car and asked defendant to get out. Officer Faulkner (witness) opened the right door of the car and, as he pushed the back of the right front seat forward, a hand-rolled cigarette fell to the floor back of the seat. The cigarette resembled a marijuana cigarette. When Officer McMahon called defendant's attention to the cigarette, defendant said, "If there is anything in that car, it don't belong to me." The officers went to defendant's house, which was about 30 feet from defendant's car. Then defendant grabbed Officer Faulkner's arm and attempted to prevent the officer from entering the house. The officers entered and searched the house. Officer Faulkner found, on a kitchen shelf, a jar in which there were 11 hand-rolled cigarettes, 3 packages of cigarettes wrapped in tinfoil, and 2 paper sacks. In one sack there were seeds, and in the other sack there was a leafy substance. On another shelf he found 2 hand-rolled cigarettes. Defendant said that he owned the car which he drove into the yard. Defendant also said that the cigarettes and sacks, which were found by the officers, "must belong to a J. C. Moss." Later, on the way to the police station, defendant said that a man had stated that he would "plant marijuana" on defendant. Officer Faulkner (witness) knew the defendant and had arrested him previously upon a charge of sale and possession of narcotics.

Officer McMahon testified that when defendant was at the police station, after the arrest, defendant said he would tell where he got the marijuana if the officers would not "use it against" him. After the officer had said that such a promise could not be made, the defendant said that he got it from Bob Buckner.

Officer Castillo testified that, in a conversation with defendant at the police station on December 11, the defendant said that he had the narcotics in his house about five days, he obtained them from a man by the name of Buckner, and that defendant and Tony Tangery had rolled the cigarettes at defendant's house.

The cigarettes and leafy substance were received in evidence. The leafy substance was marijuana, and the cigarettes contained marijuana. The officers did not have a search warrant, or a warrant for the arrest of defendant.

Defendant testified that he told the officers, at the police station, that the marijuana was not his and he did not know how it got into his house or car; and he also told them that if there was any marijuana in his house or car, it had been planted there.

G. Blair, called as a witness by defendant, testified that Dick Jacob paid him $75 to plant marijuana in defendant's house; that he (witness) went into defendant's house and, without the knowledge of defendant, put marijuana in a jar and then put the jar on a shelf in the kitchen; that Jacob told him that he (Jacob) would put a cigarette in defendant's car.

On cross-examination, Blair testified that he had been convicted of violating section 503 of the Vehicle Code (taking automobile without consent of owner), and that he was "doing time on that now."

[1] Appellant argues that since the officers did not have a search warrant, they obtained the marijuana by illegal search and seizure. When the marijuana was offered in evidence at the trial, there was no objection to the offer. At the trial it was stipulated that the exhibits that were introduced at the preliminary hearing might be considered by the court. Those exhibits included the marijuana which was obtained by the officers. Since no objection to such evidence was made at the trial, an asserted point on appeal that such evidence was erroneously received will not be considered. People v. Kelsey, 140 Cal.App.2d 722, 723, 295 P.2d 462.

[2] Appellant argues, with respect to his claim of insufficiency of the evidence, that the direct and positive evidence on his behalf showed that he had no knowledge of marijuana being in his house or car; and that he was convicted irrespective of such evidence on his behalf. The direct and positive evidence, so referred to, apparently is the denial by appellant that he had such knowledge, and the testimony of Blair that he planted the marijuana in the house, and that Jacob said he would plant a cigarette in the car. The sum of appellant's argument is that the judge should have believed the testimony presented by and on behalf of appellant. The credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence were matters for the determination of the trial judge. The judge said that he did not believe the testimony of Blair. The question as to whether defendant knew that the marijuana was in his house or in his car was a question of fact for the trial judge. The evidence was sufficient to support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

Whether there has been a waiver of time limit fixed by listing agreement with broker depends on particular facts and circumstances.

2. Brokers ⇐86(1)

In action to recover real estate broker's commission, evidence supported findings that there were negotiations between broker and owner regarding sale of property after expiration of time limit under listing agreement, that such negotiations were not pursuant to such agreement, that owner refused broker's request that owner sign another exclusive listing, that after expiration of agreement date all efforts of broker to sell the property were pursuant to brochures distributed by owner, and that expiration date was not extended or waived by owner.

3. Brokers ⇐50

If a broker fails to perform the services required of him within time limited by contract, or within such extension of time as may be granted by the principal, he is not entitled to a commission, unless the time limit is waived.

4. Brokers ⇐88(14)

In action to recover real estate broker's commission on sale of owner's property, since court determined upon substantial evidence that owner did not extend or waive time limit of listing contract, it was not necessary to find whether broker produced the buyer for owner's property.

5. Brokers ⇐88(14)

In action to recover real estate broker's commission, wherein trial judge, after having made a definite finding that there was no extension or waiver of time limit of listing contract proceeded to make further finding that "even if" agreement had been extended or if expiration date had been waived such agreement was orally modified, the indefinite finding as to oral modification was of no significance and was not inconsistent with finding that there was no extension or waiver.

6. Appeal and Error ⇐931(7)

If one finding, sustained by sufficient evidence, will support trial court's judgment, an appellate court will presume that judgment was predicated on such finding, and questions relative to other findings become immaterial upon appeal and may be disregarded.

Osburn & Osburn, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Brand & Livingston, Beverly Hills, for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Action to recover real estate broker's commission. In a nonjury trial, judgment was for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

Appellant contends that the court erred in failing to find on certain material issues; that the findings do not support the judgment; that certain findings are inconsistent; and that the court erred in rulings as to admissibility of evidence, and erred in granting defendant's motion to amend his answer to conform to proof.

With respect to asserted failure to find on material issues, appellant argues that the court erred in failing to find (1) whether defendant negotiated with plaintiff regarding a sale of the property after the time limit fixed by the listing agreement, and (2) whether plaintiff produced the buyer. He argues further that findings on those issues, in accordance with the evidence, would have required judgment in favor of plaintiff.

On May 19, 1955, defendant signed a "listing" which provided in part that plaintiff, a real estate broker, had the exclusive right, for 90 days, to sell the defendant's house and lot, and furniture in the house, for $150,000. The property was not sold during the 90-day period (which expired August 17, 1955). Plaintiff advertised the property for sale from May 22, 1955, to and including August 14, 1955.

About September 9, 1955, Mr. Gocio, a salesman for plaintiff, requested that defendant sign another listing which also provided that plaintiff had the exclusive right, for 90 days, to sell the property for $150,000. Defendant refused to sign the proposed listing, and the listing was modified, at his request, to provide that plaintiff had the exclusive right, for 30 days, to sell the property for $150,000. The listing provided further that if the property was sold within 30 days from the date thereof, or if defendant sold the property within 60 days after the expiration of the "agency period" to a person with whom plaintiff had negotiated, defendant would pay a commission of five per cent to plaintiff. The listing also provided that plaintiff would diligently endeavor to find a purchaser for the property upon the terms specified and would advertise said property weekly at no charge to defendant. On September 9, 1955, the defendant, and Gocio as "Sales Representative" of plaintiff, signed the modified listing. Plaintiff advertised the property for sale from September 11, 1955, to and including October 15, 1955, which was the approximate period of the second listing. The property was not sold within the 30-day period provided in the second listing, or within 60 days after the expiration of the 30-day period. (The 30-day period expired October 9, and the 60-day period expired December 8.)

In December, 1955, defendant prepared a brochure with reference to the property, and he mailed copies of it to approximately 200 real estate brokers, including plaintiff. The price of the property without the furniture, as stated in the brochure, was $115,000. Soon after the brochures were mailed, Gocio talked to defendant on the telephone and said that he had received a brochure, and he requested that defendant give another exclusive listing of the property to plaintiff. Defendant refused the request and told Gocio that he (Gocio) would have to handle a sale of the property the same as any other broker. In January, 1956, defendant prepared a revised brochure and mailed copies of it to approximately 200 real estate brokers, including plaintiff. The price of the property (without the furniture), as stated in the brochure, was $110,000; and the price of the property with the furniture was $125,000.

Salesmen for plaintiff, and salesmen for other brokers, took prospective buyers to the property after October 9, 1955 (the expiration date of the 30-day period provided in the second listing).

On February 27, 1956, Gocio showed the property to Mr. and Mrs. Cole. Later, on that day, the defendant, Mr. Cole, Mr. Gocio, and Mrs. Tremaine (a broker who was present at the request of Mr. Cole) had a conversation regarding a purchase of the property by Cole; and, at that time, Gocio tendered to defendant, upon behalf of Cole, a written offer of $100,000 for the property (including the furniture). Defendant rejected the offer and said that he would not sell the property for less than $110,000. On February 29, defendant told Gocio and Mrs. Tremaine that he would sell the property (including the furniture) for $105,000, net to him, and that Mrs. Tremaine and plaintiff would have to obtain their commission from Cole. Mrs. Tremaine and Gocio said that "that was agreeable." Later, on that day, Cole told Mrs. Tremaine and Gocio that he would pay $105,000 for the property, including the furniture, and that, in addition to that amount, he would pay to Gocio and Mrs. Tremaine one-half of the regular commission of five per cent on the $105,000 price amounting to $2,625. Gocio testified that later, on that day (February 29), he talked to defendant by telephone, and he told defendant that defendant was "getting the deal that he had asked for" and that Cole had volunteered to pay the commission. Defendant testified that Gocio did not talk to him by telephone, later on that day; that he (defendant) talked with Mrs. Tremaine by telephone, later that day, and she said, "I have made a deal on your terms. You have a deal."

On March 5, escrow instructions were prepared at a bank. The instructions provided that the purchase price of the house and lot was $90,000; the purchase price of the furniture was $15,000; and no commission was payable through the escrow.

Before the instructions were signed, a controversy arose between Gocio and Cole regarding the amount of commission to be paid to plaintiff. Thereupon defendant talked by telephone to Mr. Barnett, vice-president of plaintiff, regarding the controversy. Defendant testified that Barnett said (in that conversation) that anything Gocio agreed to was acceptable to plaintiff; and that Barnett requested that defendant obtain a written agreement from Cole that he would pay to plaintiff the amount that was agreed upon by Cole and Gocio.

Cole testified that Gocio told him (after that conversation) that he would accept $1,125, instead of $1,312.50, from Cole as plaintiff's commission. A written memorandum was prepared which provided that Cole agreed to pay $1,125 to plaintiff, upon the consummation of the escrow, in full payment for plaintiff's services pertaining to the sale of the property. Cole and defendant signed the memorandum. Then Cole requested Gocio to obtain the signature of one of plaintiff's officers on the memorandum, in a space provided thereon for acceptance by plaintiff. Cole testified that Gocio said that he would obtain the signature; and that Gocio took the memorandum and left the bank. Defendant and Cole signed the escrow instructions. The memorandum was retained by plaintiff and was not signed by any one upon behalf of plaintiff. There was no communication between plaintiff and defendant thereafter until the present action was commenced. The sale was consummated; and the escrow was closed April 5, 1956. The present action to recover $5,250 commission was commenced March 29, 1956, prior to the close of the escrow.

The complaint alleged, in part, as follows: Plaintiff and defendant entered into the agreement of September 9, 1955, referred to above. After the expiration of the 30-day period provided by the agreement, plaintiff, at the request of defendant, continued its efforts to find a purchaser for the property and, with the knowledge and approval of defendant, negotiated with Cole regarding the purchase of the property. Plaintiff performed all obligations required to be performed by it under the agreement of September 9, 1955, "as extended by Defendant * * *." Plaintiff "produced" Cole as a buyer, and on March 5, 1956, defendant and Cole entered into an agreement wherein defendant agreed to sell and Cole agreed to buy the property for $105,000.

Cole was a defendant in the action and, in the second cause of action which was against Cole only, the plaintiff alleged that Cole assumed and agreed to pay plaintiff's commission on the sale. At the commencement of the trial, Cole deposited his check for $1,125 (payable to plaintiff) with a clerk of the court as a tender of the amount to be paid as commission. Plaintiff did not accept the check, but dismissed the action as to Cole. At the conclusion of the trial, the check was returned to Cole.

Defendant filed an answer in which he admitted that he executed the listing agreement of September 9, 1955, and that he sold the property; and he denied the other above-mentioned allegations of the complaint.

The court made findings which were substantially in accordance with the facts above stated regarding the agreements, the negotiations and sale. It also made findings, as follows: After December, 1955, all of plaintiff's efforts to sell defendant's property were made pursuant to the mimeographed brochures. After December, 1955, defendant was "dealing" with plaintiff "pursuant to the mimeographed brochures in the nature of open listings." That defendant, by allowing plaintiff to show and attempt to sell the property after December, 1955, did not extend the "September 9, 1955, agreement or waive the expiration date of October, 1955, contained therein." "Even if the September 1955 written agency agreement between plaintiff and defendant had been extended, or if the October 9, 1955 expiration date had been waived by defendant * * * said agreement was orally modified by plaintiff and defendant on February 29, 1956 to provide for a sale only at a net price of $105,000. to defendant with plaintiff to receive its commission only out of the excess above this amount that the buyer would pay * * *." Plaintiff agreed to accept $1,125 from Cole in full payment of its commission. Under the oral modification, if defendant had sold the property to Cole for $105,000 and if Cole had been unwilling to pay any more than that amount, plaintiff would not have been entitled to receive any commission. After the oral modification of February 29, 1956, plaintiff "stood by and allowed" defendant to make a sale to Cole for $105,000 with knowledge that defendant was relying on "the said oral modification." As a result of plaintiff's silence, and as a result of Gocio's statement to defendant at the bank that the payment of $1,125 to plaintiff by Cole in payment of the commission was satisfactory, plaintiff is estopped to deny "the legal efficacy of the said oral modification." Gocio was the agent of plaintiff and had authority to enter into the agreement of September 9, 1955, and to modify the agreement.

The court concluded, among other things, that the written agency agreement dated September 9, 1955, expired under its terms October 9, 1955; the expiration date was not extended by mutual agreement, and it was not waived by defendant.

[1, 2] Appellant (plaintiff) contends, as above stated, that the court erred in failing to find whether or not defendant continued negotiations with plaintiff after the time limit fixed by the listing agreement; and contends that, in view of the nonconflicting evidence as to negotiations, the court should have found that defendant continued negotiations with plaintiff regarding the sale after such time limit, and that defendant thereby waived the time limit. It seems to be appellant's argument that negotiations to any extent between the owner and the broker, regarding the sale of the property, after the expiration of the time limit fixed by the listing agreement, constitute a waiver of the time limit as a matter of law without regard to any other factors. Whether or not there has been a waiver of the time limit fixed by a listing agreement depends on the facts and circumstances of the particular case. Filante v. Kikendall, 134 Cal.App.2d 695, 700, 286 P.2d 448. It is true that the findings do not include an express statement that defendant did continue, or did not continue, negotiations with plaintiff after the expiration of the time limit. There were findings, however, as to conversations and acts of the parties, regarding the property, after the expiration date. It is apparent from those findings that the court found in effect that there were negotiations between plaintiff and defendant, regarding the sale of the property, after the expiration of the time limit but that such negotiations were not pursuant to the listing agreement. Some of those findings were that defendant refused plaintiff's request that defendant sign another exclusive listing; that defendant told plaintiff that plaintiff would have to handle a sale the same as any other broker; that after the expiration date defendant sent brochures, which were in the nature of open listings, to many brokers; that approximately at the expiration date plaintiff ceased advertising the property for sale; that after December all the efforts of plaintiff to sell the property were pursuant to the brochures. The evidence supports those findings and the finding that the expiration date was not extended or waived by defendant.

[3, 4] Appellant contends that the court erred in failing to find whether or not plaintiff produced the buyer to whom defendant sold the property; and contends that the court should have found that plaintiff produced the buyer. Under the circumstances here the question whether plaintiff produced the buyer was immaterial. If a broker fails to perform the services required of him within the time limited by the contract, or within such extension of time as may be granted by the principal, he is not entitled to a commission, unless the time limit is waived. Ridgway v. Chase, 122 Cal.App.2d 840, 265

P.2d 603. Since the court determined upon substantial evidence, as above stated, that defendant did not extend or waive the time limit, it was not necessary to find whether or not plaintiff produced the buyer.

[5] Appellant contends that the finding that the listing agreement of September 9 was modified on February 29 by an oral agreement is inconsistent with the finding and conclusion that the time limit fixed by the agreement of September 9 was not extended or waived. Appellant argues to the effect that if the agreement of September 9 had terminated there was no agreement to modify. As above shown, the court made a finding that the time limit fixed in the listing agreement had not been extended or waived. Thereafter, in the findings, the court made the alleged inconsistent finding regarding an oral modification. That finding was indefinite in that it was made upon a hypothetical basis. That further finding was in part, as follows: "Even if the September 1955 written agency agreement * * * had been extended, or if the * * * expiration date had been waived by defendant * * * said agreement was orally modified * * * on February 29, 1956 to provide for a sale only at a net price of $105,000 * * * plaintiff to receive its commission only out of the excess above this amount that the buyer would pay * * *." (Italics added.) It thus appears that the trial judge, after having made a definite finding that there was no extension or waiver, proceeded to make a further finding upon the hypothetical basis of assuming facts contrary to his previous finding. The words "Even if," at the beginning of the further finding, show that the judge was proceeding to set up an assumed state of facts as a basis for forecasting what his decision would be if the facts had been different from what he had found them to be. Under such circumstances, the indefinite finding as to oral modification is of no significance, and it is not inconsistent with the finding that there was no extension or waiver.

[6] Appellant contends that "some" of the findings are not supported by the evidence; that some of the alleged findings do not constitute findings for the reason they are summary statements of evidence and not ultimate findings of fact, and they are uncertain, and conjectural. "If one finding, sustained by sufficient evidence, will support the trial court's judgment * * * an appellate court will presume that the judgment was predicated on such finding, and questions relative to other findings become immaterial upon appeal and may be disregarded." Logan v. Forster, 114 Cal.App.2d 587, 602, 250 P.2d 730, 739. As above stated, the court found that defendant did not extend or waive the time limit fixed by the listing agreement. That finding supports the judgment.

Appellant contends that the court erred in granting defendant's motion for permission to file an amendment to his answer to conform to proof; that the amendment filed by defendant does not conform to proof but alleges new affirmative defenses; that the court erred in overruling plaintiff's objections to the introduction of certain evidence regarding such affirmative defenses; and that the court erred in making findings regarding such defenses. As above shown, plaintiff sought (by its complaint) to recover a commission on the basis that the time limit fixed by the listing agreement had been extended or waived. In view of the above conclusion that the evidence was sufficient to support the finding that the time limit was not extended or waived, it is not necessary to determine these contentions regarding the ruling on the motion to amend to conform to proof, and regarding the rulings and findings as to the affirmative defenses.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 9425.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 22, 1958.

For Opinion on Rehearing see 335 P.2d 968.

Action was brought to recover money paid to certain of the defendants under compulsion created by their allegedly wrongful conduct and to recover realty. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Albert H. Mundt, J., entered judgment dismissing the action following an order sustaining general demurrer to the complaint, and the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that complaint alleging plot or conspiracy between two of the defendants, who were the executor and special administratrix of deceased mortgagee, to compel plaintiff-mortgagor to pay over again debts secured by mortgage on ranches, and that those defendants acted with knowledge that debts had been paid, and that they implemented their scheme by filing suit to foreclose discharged mortgage, and clouded title to ranches by recording lis pendens, and that when need of one of the plaintiffs arose to save her home from forced sale under bond judgment, they exerted compulsion inherent in defect in title to ranches, which they created, and that they continued to exert wrongful compulsion, knowing all circumstances, until they received certain sums as condition of relinquishment of their allegedly false claims, stated a cause of action for duress.

Judgment reversed.

1. Limitation of Actions ⇐180(3)

Demurrers seeking to raise bar of three-year limitation statute applicable to an action to recover for fraud should have been overruled, where there was but one count in the complaint, and, though alleged wrongful conduct of certain of the defendants formed basis of the action, in sense that allegations as to alleged wrongful conduct were required to be proved by plaintiffs before any relief could be obtained, plaintiffs nevertheless by the action sought recovery of possession of realty and quieting of their title to realty, and to that extent the action was for recovery of possession of realty within meaning of five-year limitation statute. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 318, 338, subd. 4.

2. Limitation of Actions ⇐182(2)

If it was a contention of any defendant that action was barred in part by statute of limitations, defense of statute was required to be raised by answer, rather than by demurrer. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 338, subd. 4.

3. Pleading ⇐406(8)

Defendants, by failing to object to complaint, on ground that there was more than one cause of action stated without being separately stated, would be deemed to have waived their right to do so and to have consented to go to trial on the complaint as being sufficient to enable court and parties to try fully all issues presented.

4. Threats ⇐10

Complaint alleging plot or conspiracy between two of the defendants, who were the executor and special administratrix of deceased mortgagee, to compel plaintiff-mortgagor to pay over again debts secured by mortgage on ranches, and that those defendants acted with knowledge that debts had been paid, and that they implemented their scheme by filing suit to foreclose discharged mortgage, and clouded title to ranches by recording lis pendens, and that when need of one of the plaintiffs arose to save her home from forced sale under bond judgment, they exerted compulsion inherent in defect in title to ranches, which they created, and that they continued to exert wrongful compulsion, knowing all circumstances, until they received certain sums as condition of relinquishment of their allegedly false claims, stated a cause of action for duress.

* Opinion vacated 335 P.2d 968.

5. Deeds ⇐71

If defendant, who purchased ranch for what was allegedly only one third of its value, drove a harsh bargain with plaintiff-vendor, knowing that she was acting under alleged duress exerted by other defendants, court of equity would be justified in declaring that such defendant be compelled to suffer cancellation of the deed.

6. Money Received ⇐8

If beneficiaries under will were the beneficiaries of allegedly tortious conduct of executor and special administratrix, who represented interests of beneficiaries in handling of the estate, and who allegedly exerted duress on the plaintiffs, beneficiaries ought, in equity and good conscience, to be required to give back what they had thus obtained.

7. Compromise and Settlement ⇐8(3)

Payment made to executor and special administratrix of estate of deceased mortgagee, in settlement of foreclosure suit brought by executor and special administratrix, was not an adjudication that their claims were valid, if payment was made under duress.

This is an appeal taken by plaintiffs from a judgment dismissing their action following an order sustaining demurrers to their complaint as amended without leave to amend further.

The demurrers of the various defendants were general. They also pleaded various statutes of limitations.

The complaint and the amendments thereto are prolix, but for the purposes of this appeal may be summarized as follows: During the lifetime of Frank Weber, plaintiff Thomas B. Leeper, hereinafter called Thomas, who was an attorney at law, borrowed from Weber $10,150 and to secure the payment of his note therefor mortgaged two different ranches owned by him, one being in Sutter County and the other in Sacramento County. During Weber's lifetime, Thomas served Weber as his attorney and the fees so earned were, by agreement between the two, applied by Weber to the payment of Thomas's note which, by said applications, was completely paid, although Weber never executed any satisfaction of the mortgage. During the year 1951, plaintiff Abbie F. Leeper, hereinafter called Abbie, executed an undertaking for the appearance of one Greene for trial in a criminal action. He failed to appear, his bond was forfeited, and demands were made upon Abbie and her fellow bondsman which were not responded to. An action was brought to obtain judgment for the amount of the forfeiture. Judgment was obtained and execution was levied on Abbie's home. Thereupon, Thomas deeded the two ranches to Abbie and her fellow bondsman for the purpose of enabling them to raise the money necessary to discharge the bond judgment. William Beltrami and Hazel Scarlett, defendants in this action and respondents herein, were executor and special administratrix respectively of the estate of Weber, who had died. Notwithstanding that they knew the $10,150 debt had been paid and that Thomas had become thereby entitled to a satisfaction of the mortgage, these two plotted together to compel Thomas to pay the debt a second time and to that end brought an action in Sacramento County to foreclose the mortgage, recording notice of action in that county and in Sutter County. The complaint was filed August 18, 1952, and the notices were recorded at about that date. October 28, 1952, Abbie and her fellow bondsman procured a purchaser for the Sutter County ranch for the sum of $18,000 which would have yielded money sufficient to pay off the bond judgment and release Abbie's home from the levy. But the suit to foreclose the mortgage clouded the title to the Sutter County ranch and prevented the consummation of the sale. Beltrami and Scarlett were informed of the prior payment of the obligation on which they had sued and yet refused to dismiss the action or otherwise clear the title except only on payment to them for the estate of Weber of the amount they claimed to be owing on the mortgage debt. The result was that Abbie, unable by the sale of the Sutter County ranch to obtain sufficient moneys to clear her home, was compelled to make a forced sale of the Sacramento ranch to defendant and respondent LaVerne Charles Scheidel. Acting under the compulsions created by the wrongful acts of Beltrami and Scarlett she proceeded to sell the Sacramento County ranch to Scheidel for $10,760, about one-third of its value. Both sales were consummated. Abbie and her fellow bondsman conveyed the two ranches, the bond judgment was paid off, Beltrami and Scarlett for the Weber estate were paid $12,500 in settlement of their claims and there was left for Abbie over and above all demands the sum of about $4,000. Abbie and Thomas began this action November 30, 1957.

The relief prayed for was for the recovery of the money paid to Beltrami and Scarlett under the compulsions created by their wrongful conduct and also for the recovery from Scheidel of the Sacramento County ranch. Various remedies as to interest, rents, profits and the like, incidental to the main relief asked, were also contained within the prayer. The residuary legatees under the will of Weber were made parties defendant and by the prayer plaintiffs sought to recover from each the portion of the $12,500 which each had received.

Appellants contend that the action was an action to regain title to the Sacramento County ranch and that the right to bring it is to be measured by the five-year statute of limitations. Respondents contend that the action was to recover for fraud and that the right to bring it is to be measured by the three-year statute.

[1, 2] We shall first treat of the issues presented by the demurrer based on the statute of limitations. Although the alleged wrongful conduct of Beltrami and Scarlett forms the basis of the action in the sense that the allegations as to that wrongful conduct must be proved before any relief can be obtained, nevertheless by the action plaintiffs seek the recovery of the possession and the quieting of their title to the Sacramento County real property and to that extent the action is for the recovery of the possession of real property within the meaning of Section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure and is governed by the five-year limitation provided in that section. Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 P. 820. Clearly the action to recover the Sacramento real property is not barred. Beltrami and Scarlett are proper parties to the action for the recovery of that property, for it was their wrong which gives rise to the cause of action which eventuated in the sale at sacrifice of the Sacramento property and its transfer to Scheidel. It may be that equitable considerations may defeat the plea of the plaintiffs that the transfer be set aside and the property restored to them, in which event equity can give the alternative relief of money damages. If such relief be not sufficiently prayed for by the prayer for general relief a simple amendment will suffice to cover the matter. If appellants have stated a cause of action for the wrong alleged to have been committed by Beltrami and Scarlett then the fact that plaintiffs also seek the recovery of the $12,500 obtained by them through their wrongful conduct does not convert the action to one governed by Section 338, Subdivision 4, Code of Civil Procedure, as argued by respondents. There is but one count in the complaint. The demurrer seeking to raise the bar of the statute is general in the sense that it asserts that on the face of the pleading the action is wholly barred. If it be contended by a defendant that the action is barred in part, the defense of the statute must be raised by answer. 31 Cal.Jur.2d, p. 660, sec. 244; Lewis v. Fahn, 113 Cal.App.2d 95, 103, 247 P.2d 831. The demurrers, therefore, of Scheidel and of Beltrami and Scarlett which seek to raise the bar of the statute of limitations ought to have been overruled.

Six residuary legatees under the will of Weber, made parties hereto, are alleged to have received equal parts of the $12,500 paid into the estate of Weber by virtue of the wrongful conduct of Beltrami and Scarlett. Plaintiffs seek to follow the funds into their hands. These distributees also plead the bar of the statute of limitations, arguing that the relief demanded as to them is governed by Section 338, Subdivision 4, Code of Civil Procedure. What has been heretofore said disposes of this contention. Their demurrers likewise ought to have been overruled.

[3] Each of the defendants, respondents here, demurs generally to the complaint. No special demurrers were interposed. If there be more than one cause of action stated without being separately stated, no demurrer has been addressed to that defect. The same must be said as to any objection that might have been raised by demurrer upon grounds of misjoinder. By failing to object to the pleading upon such special grounds, the parties are deemed to have waived their right to do so and to have consented to go to trial upon the pleading as drawn as being sufficient to enable the court and the parties to fully try all issues presented. Smith v. McLaughlin, 81 Cal. App.2d 460, 462–463, 184 P.2d 177; Shahabian v. Najarian, 14 Cal.App.2d 435, 441, 58 P.2d 396.

[4] We will first consider the demurrers of Beltrami and Scarlett. As to them plaintiffs relied upon the concept of illegal business compulsion, which is a type of duress. The doctrine is stated and discussed in McNichols v. Nelson Valley Building Co., 97 Cal.App.2d 721, 218 P.2d 789; Lewis v. Fahn, supra; Wake Development Company v. O'Leary, 118 Cal.App. 131, 4 P.2d 802; and Young v. Hoagland, 212 Cal. 426, 431, 298 P. 996, 75 A.L.R. 654. We think the complaint states a cause of action. It alleges the plot or conspiracy between Beltrami and Scarlett to compel a payment over again of the debts secured by the mortgage upon the ranches; that they acted with knowledge that the debt had been paid; that they implemented their scheme by filing a suit to foreclose the discharged mortgage, and clouded the title to the ranches by recording lis pendens in the counties where the land lay; that when the need of Abbie arose to save her home from forced sale under the bond judgment they exerted the compulsion inherent in the defect in the title to the ranches which they had created by refusing, although knowing her situation, to withdraw from their illegal demands; that they continued to exert their wrongful compulsion, knowing all the circumstances until thereby they received $12,500 as a condition of their relinquishment of their false claims.

It is alleged that the effect of their unlawful compulsion upon Abbie was to so frighten and confuse her that she sold the Sacramento County ranch to Scheidel for some $20,000 less than its value. If these things be true, and we must at this stage in the proceedings take it that they are, then a cause of action for duress is stated. Whether or not there was in the alleged wrongful acts of Beltrami and Scarlett sufficient illegal compulsion to make them responsible for the loss arising is a question for the trier of fact. McNichols v. Nelson Valley Building Co., supra. It is stated in 17A American Jurisprudence, "Duress and Undue Influence", pages 571–572:

"Under the modern view, there is no legal standard of resistance with which the person acted upon must comply at the peril of being remediless for a wrong done to him, and no general rule as to the sufficiency of facts to produce duress. The question in each case is, Was the person so acted upon by threats of the person claiming the benefit of the contract, for the purpose of obtaining such a contract, as to be bereft of the quality of mind essential to the making of a contract, and was the contract thereby so obtained? Hence, under this theory duress is to be tested, not by the nature of the threats, but rather by the state of mind induced thereby in the victim. The means used to produce that condition, the age, sex, state of health, and mental characteristics of the alleged injured party, are all merely evidentiary of the ultimate fact in issue, of whether such person was bereft of the free exercise of his will power. Obviously what will accomplish this result cannot justly be tested by any other standard than that of the particular person acted upon. His resisting power, under all the circumstances of the situation, and not any arbitrary standard, is to be considered in determining whether there was duress."

As this court said in Lewis v. Fahn, supra, 113 Cal.App.2d at page 101, 247 P.2d at page 835, "given an unlawful demand, a threat of groundless litigation unless the unlawful demand be met presents a situation where courts should not too readily listen to a claim by the party extorting the payment that his victim ought to have been a braver man and should have resisted his attack." The complaint states a cause of action in duress.

[5] As to Scheidel it is alleged that he dealt with Abbie, knowing the compulsions under which she labored and under those circumstances negotiated a deal with her whereby, for one-third the value of a $30,000 ranch, he obtained the ranch. It is fairly inferable, even if not expressly stated by the pleader, that from the very circumstances of Abbie's willingness to make so great a sacrifice she was in no condition to be bargained with fairly. If knowing all these things, Scheidel drove the harsh bargain alleged, a court of equity would be justified in declaring that he be compelled to suffer a cancellation of the deed he so procured.

[6] We come now to the general demurrers interposed by the six distributees. They are the beneficiaries of the tortious conduct of Beltrami and Scarlett, who represented their interests in the handling of the estate of Weber. They have received the fruits of extortion. Their very resistance against a demand that they account places them in the position of being accessory to the extortion. In equity and good conscience they ought to give back what they have thus obtained.

The rule is stated in Restatement, Restitution, Section 123, as follows:

"A person who, non-tortiously and without notice that another has the beneficial ownership of it, acquires property which it would have been wrongful for him to acquire with notice of the facts and of which he is not a purchaser for value is, upon discovery of the facts, under a duty to account to the other for the direct product of the subject matter and the value of the use to him, if any, and in addition, to:

"(a) return the subject matter in specie, if he has it;

"(b) pay its value to him, if he has non-tortiously consumed it in beneficial use;

"(c) pay its value or what he received therefor at his election, if he has disposed of it."

See California Annotations to Restatement of Restitution, citing, inter alia, People v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 348; Curran v. Kennedy, 89 Cal. 98, 26 P. 641; Freitas v. Freitas, 31 Cal.App. 16, 159 P. 611.

[7] Finally, respondents all argue that the payment of $12,500 to Beltrami and Scarlett in settlement of the foreclosure suit was an adjudication that the claims therein presented by the plaintiffs in that action were valid. We do not agree. There was no real adjudication of any issue in that action. Abbie was under the same compulsions which compelled her to sell the Sacramento County ranch. The tortious conduct of the plaintiffs in the foreclosure suit operated extrinsically and the same equitable principles that invalidate the land transfer are equally potent to strike through the purported settlement of the false claims. 29 Cal.Jur.2d 109.

The judgment is reversed.

Civ. 23217.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 18, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 14, 1959.

Hearing Granted Feb. 11, 1959.

Action by purchasers of real estate against vendor for money had and received. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, A. Curtis Smith, J., and from order denying motion for new trial, the vendor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that under contract for purchase of realty requiring purchasers to furnish vendor with certain listed items within six months and if they failed to do so then deposit made by purchasers could be retained by vendor as consideration for executing agreement, and providing that if purchasers failed to pay balance of purchase price or complete purchase, sum paid thereon, at option of vendor, could be retained as consideration for execution of agreement, but providing that items required to be furnished should be subject to approval of purchasers and that agreement should be contingent upon their approval, vendor had right to retain deposit made by purchasers when purchasers elected to avail themselves of escape clause by refusing to approve subdivision map as proposed by city authorities.

Purported appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed and judgment reversed.

1. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐3(4)

Written agreement for purchase of realty providing that purchasers would subdivide property and that final subdivision map as approved by necessary governmental bodies should be subject to approval of purchasers and purchasers should have six months within which to furnish certain listed items to vendor, otherwise money deposited was to be forfeited at option of vendor, and that if purchasers failed to pay balance of purchase price or to complete purchase, sum paid could, at option of seller, be retained as consideration for execution of agreement, was a valid bilateral contract to purchase property and not merely an option.

2. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐334(1)

Under contract for purchase of realty requiring purchasers to furnish vendor with certain listed items within six months and if they failed to do so then deposit made by purchasers could be retained by vendor as consideration for executing agreement, and providing that if purchasers failed to pay balance of purchase price or complete purchase, sum paid thereon, at option of vendor, could be retained as consideration for execution of agreement, but providing that items required to be furnished should be subject to approval of purchasers and that agreement should be contingent upon their approval, vendor had right to retain deposit made by purchasers when purchasers elected to avail themselves of escape clause by refusing to approve subdivision map as proposed by city authorities.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

In October, 1956, plaintiffs filed an action in the municipal court against the defendant for money had and received in the amount of $1,500. The defendant answered and cross-complained for $15,000 for breach of contract, whereupon the case was transfered to the superior court. The plaintiffs answered the cross-complaint and after a pretrial conference the case was tried and judgment rendered for plaintiffs on their complaint for the sum of $1,500 and against defendant-cross-complainant [1] on the cross-complaint. Defendant appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. The appeal is on the judgment roll.

[1] On March 16, 1956, plaintiffs entered into a written agreement for the purchase of certain real property from the defendant in Riverside County. Pertinent provisions of the agreement are as follows: (1) "It being understood that the purchasers named herein will subdivide the subject property and the final subdivision map as approved by the necessary governmental bodies, shall be subject to the approval of the purchasers herein, it being further understood that said government bodies shall allow a minimum of 6,000 square feet per lot or a maximum of 9,000 square feet per lot, which the purchasers herein agree to accept." (2) "The purchasers agree to furnish for the approval of the seller documentary evidence of the following items:

"1. Approval of the subdivision by necessary Government agencies.

"2. Construction loan commitments by recognized lending institution.

"3. Permanent financing by recognized lending institution.

"4. Veteran Administration and or FHA approval of site.

"5. Buyers and sellers herein to determine which type of financing shall be acceptable.

"6. Improvement Bond for on site improvements.

"7. Recording of approved subdivision map."

"All above items subject to approval of buyers, this agreement is contingent upon their approval." (3) "It is further understood that the purchasers herein shall have six months from date to comply with the above demand of the seller to furnish said items listed in the preceding paragraph [Nos. 1–7], otherwise, at the option of the seller, the monies deposited herewith shall be forfeited and retained by the seller as consideration for executing this agreement." (4) "Should purchasers herein fail to pay the balance of said purchase price or complete said purchase as herein provided, the sum paid hereon may, at the option of the seller, be retained as consideration for the execution of this agreement," and (5) "We agree to purchase the above described property on the terms and conditions herein stated."

Pursuant to the agreement, plaintiffs deposited $1,500 with the defendant and thereafter unsuccessfully sought to obtain the approval by the Riverside Planning Commission of plaintiffs' tentative subdivision map. The subdivision map proposed by the Planning Commission was not acceptable to plaintiffs. Defendant was notified of these facts and on July 13, 1956, plaintiffs served a notice of rescission upon the defendant in which a demand was made for the return of the $1,500 deposit. The defendant did not return the deposit, consequently plaintiff instituted the present action for money had and received.

In his cross-complaint, defendant alleged that he complied with all terms and conditions of the agreement but that plaintiffs refused to complete the agreement to the damage of defendant in the sum of $15,000. In their answer to the cross-complaint, plaintiffs alleged that the agreement was expressly conditioned upon the approval by plaintiffs of the final subdivision map and that such condition failed to occur and the agreement was thereby rendered impossible to perform and that on or about May 22, 1956, the defendant abandoned the agreement.

The pertinent findings of fact are as follows: "That it is true that" * * * (1) "plaintiffs * * * deposited the sum of fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00) with the defendant * * * as a deposit on the purchase price provided for in the above agreement," (2) "said written agreement provided that the obligation of the purchasers to complete the purchase was conditional upon the approval by the purchasers of the final subdivision map as approved by the City of Riverside," (3) "the Planning Commission of the City of Riverside, California, refused to approve the tentative subdivision map presented by the plaintiffs * * * and that plaintiffs * * * did not approve the subdivision map contemplated by the City of Riverside," (4) "the refusal of plaintiffs * * * to approve the subdivision map proposed by the City of Riverside, California, was reasonable," (5) "upon such failure to approve by the City of Riverside, California, plaintiffs * * * were under no duty to proceed with the purchase * * * according to the provisions of the aforesaid written agreement," (6) "by the terms of the aforesaid written agreement, plaintiffs * * * are entitled to the return of the deposit of fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00) from the defendant," (7) "on July 13, 1956, and within a reasonable time after the ascertainment of the above facts, plaintiffs * * served upon defendant * * * a notice of rescission of the aforesaid written agreement and a notice that the plaintiffs * * had not been able to secure the approval of the City of Riverside, California, of the subdivision map and a demand for the return of the fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00) deposited with the defendant," and (8) "the above set forth terms and conditions of the written agreement have been determined by a consideration of the agreement itself without regard to the parol evidence admitted at the trial." The court further found "that it is not true that plaintiffs * * * refused and failed to perform any of the terms of the written agreement. * * *"

Defendant argues that the instant agreement was not a bilateral contract but rather an option, and the $1,500 was consideration for the option and such consideration cannot be recovered merely because the optionee fails to exercise the option. Defendant predicates his argument on the fact that plaintiffs reserved to themselves the right to approve or disapprove the final subdivision map and, this being the case, they were under no enforceable obligation to purchase the property. This fact, coupled with the provisions for the retention of the deposit (provisions 3 and 4 quoted above), according to defendant, compels a conclusion that the written agreement was an option and not a bilateral contract to purchase the property. Defendant cites Caras v. Parker, 149 Cal.App.2d 621, 623, 309 P.2d 104, 106, where the following language was held to have given rise to an option as support for his position that an option existed in the case at bar: "This escrow is contingent upon Buyer securing approval of city of Manhattan Beach of property described above to be divided into eight lots." The recent decision in Mattei v. Hopper, 51 Cal.2d 119, 330 P.2d 625, fully disposes of defendant's reliance on the reasoning in the Caras case. In the Mattei case, plaintiff, a real estate developer, entered into a written agreement to purchase the defendant's property. The concluding paragraph of the deposit receipt provided: "Subject to Coldwell Banker & Company obtaining leases satisfactory to the purchaser." Defendant refused to perform. Our Supreme Court found a binding contract and held in effect that an otherwise enforceable contract is not vitiated by the inclusion of either a satisfaction or approval clause.[2] In view of the decision in Mattei v. Hopper, supra, the writing in the instant case was not merely an option but constituted a valid bilateral contract.

2. Lawrence Block Co. v. Palston, 123 Cal. App.2d 300, 266 P.2d 856, 858, which held illusory a contract providing "O. P. A. Rent statements to be approved by

[2] We come now to a consideration of the effect of provisions 3 and 4 of the agreement relative to the disposition of the $1,500 deposit in the event the transaction was not consummated. Initially, it should be pointed out that although the word "forfeited" is used in provision 3 it does not appear that either of these provisions when applied to the instant factual situation constituted a forfeiture clause in any proper legal sense. By provision 3 the purchasers were given six months within which to fulfill the requirements of paragraphs 1 to 7 under provision 2, supra. If, however, the purchasers acting in good faith failed to furnish the items and fulfill the requirements set forth in paragraphs 1 to 7 within six months, then the deposit could be "retained by the seller as consideration for executing this agreement." This thought is emphasized by provision 4, which does not use the word "forfeited" and merely says: "Should purchasers herein fail to pay the balance of said purchase price or complete said purchase as herein provided, the sum paid hereon may, at the option of the seller, be retained as consideration for the execution of this agreement." Thus it appears from the face of the agreement that if plaintiffs because of inability to furnish the items mentioned in provision 2 did not go through with the deal the seller was entitled to retain the $1,500 deposit as consideration for executing the agreement.

The last portion of provision 2 is essentially an escape clause: "All above items subject to approval of buyers, this agreement is contingent upon their approval." The purchasers utilized this provision as justification for their failure to complete the purchase. If they acted in good faith in refusing to approve the subdivision map as proposed by the Riverside authorities, their utilization of the "escape" clause constituted no breach of the agreement. But when the purchasers elected to avail themselves of the escape clause the seller had the right on the face of the agreement to retain the $1,500 deposit.

In this case we are only called upon to determine whether the agreement in question, taken by its four corners, supports the findings and judgment of the trial court. The basic finding on which the judgment rests is that "by the terms of the aforesaid written agreement, plaintiffs are entitled to the return of the deposit of $1,500 from the defendant." (Emphasis added.) It is apparent from what we have said that the agreement does not on its face so provide and therefore there is no support in the agreement for this finding. As a consequence, the judgment must be reversed.

In his memorandum decision, the trial judge indicated that what he termed "the forfeiture clauses" of the contract, vis., provisions 3 and 4, supra, were not "as clear as they might be." Our examination of the writing leads us to the conclusion that some aspects of the agreement are not entirely clear. Upon a retrial it would be proper, under the principles stated in Beneficial Fire & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Kurt Hitke & Co., 46 Cal.2d 517, 297 P.2d 428, for the trial court to receive and consider any pertinent extrinsic evidence that may be offered that would tend to aid in the interpretation of the agreement.

The purported appeal from the order denying motion for new trial is dismissed. The judgment is reversed.

Thomas T. KENT, William Kent, Jr., Adeline Kent Howard, Sherman Kent and Roger Kent, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Harold M. KOCH, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 17856.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 29, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1959.

Hearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Action to enforce building restriction in subdivision and to restrain lot owner therein from erecting a certain fence on his property. The Superior Court, County of Marin, Thomas F. Keating, J., entered judgment restraining house owner from erection of fence and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that where party had created a subdivision out of a larger tract of land that he owned and recorded certain restrictions on subdivision with recital that restrictions were for the reciprocal benefit of each and every lot as shown on recorded map, and party sold all of lots owned in subdivision except a certain small parcel which was not suitable for building purposes, party was not entitled to bring action to enforce building restriction.

Reversed.

1. Covenants ⇦77

Where owner of tract created a subdivision thereof and recorded declaration setting forth certain building and other restrictions affecting such subdivision and declaration stated that it was for the direct benefit of each and every lot as shown on recorded map, declaration did not disclose intention to make restrictions for benefit of any property other than that referred to in declaration.

2. Covenants ⇦78

Restrictive covenants made for benefit of other property retained by grantor cannot be enforced by grantor after he no longer owns any property benefited.

3. Covenants ⇦78

Where owner of large tract of land created a subdivision therein and recorded declaration placing certain restrictions on lots of subdivision for the benefit of each and every lot as shown by recorded map and owner no longer retained any lots in subdivision except one small parcel which was unsuitable for building purposes, owner, even though owning some adjacent land, was not entitled to bring action to enforce building restrictions respecting lot in subdivision.

4. Covenants ⇦49

Any provisions of an instrument creating or claiming to create a servitude will be strictly construed and any doubt resolved in favor of free use of land.

5. Covenants ⇦77, 84

Restrictions in a deed cannot be enforced by one lot owner in a tract against another lot owner between whom there is neither privity of contract nor privity of estate.

6. Covenants ⇦78

Where owners of large tract of land created a subdivision therein and recorded declaration setting forth certain restrictions respecting all lots in subdivision and in declaration tract owners declared that they would restrict the sale, ownership, use and occupancy of adjoining contiguous property offered for public sale at time property is offered in such a way as in their opinion will not impair value or desirability of property shown on map for residential purposes, such provision did not give owners, who no longer held any land in the particular subdivision, right to enforce restrictions as to such subdivision.

Morris M. Grupp, San Francisco, for appellant.

Freitas, Allen, McCarthy & Bettini, San Rafael, for respondents.

BRAY, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment restraining him from constructing a green fiberglass panel fence on his property without conforming to a certain declaration of restrictions, conditions, covenants and agreements.

Question Presented.

Defendant raises many questions. However, determinative of the appeal is the question of the right of plaintiffs, owning no lots in subdivision 1 (in which defendant's property is situated) to complain.

Facts.

The facts are undisputed. In 1936 plaintiffs owned a large tract of land in Marin County which they called Kent Woodlands. That year they commenced to subdivide it. Since then they have been continuously developing it and selling lots. In 1936 they recorded the declaration of restrictions which is the basis for this action. The project started with subdivision 1 and then successive units were developed. At the present plaintiffs are preparing the 13th unit. Kent Woodlands is a high-class, single family dwelling residential area, lots selling from $4,750 to $25,000 each. Because of restrictions the minimum priced house and lot is $25,000, ranging from there to $200,000. As each unit was opened a declaration of restrictions as to it was recorded. The restrictions were similar to those in the declaration involved here. However, each declaration subsequent to that of subdivision 1 expressly provided that it was for the benefit not only of the property within the specific unit but for all of the property in Kent Woodlands. Plaintiffs have enforced all restrictions since the beginning. At first, applications for building were made to plaintiffs. Thereafter an Architectural Supervising Committee provided for in declarations other than the subdivision 1 declaration, was appointed by plaintiffs from property owners in Kent Woodlands (none from subdivision 1). There have been approvals and rejections of applications over the period. Plaintiffs contend that if the restrictions in subdivision 1 are not enforced the sales and values of all properties in all the units would be adversely affected. Plaintiffs have sold all lots in subdivision 1, but still own "Parcel A" as shown on the map thereof, retained as an entrance to Kent Woodlands. Apparently a lot is a plot of land sufficient to have a building erected thereon; a "parcel" is a plot of ground insufficient in size to be used for building purposes. Lot 32 in that unit was originally sold to one Spalding who did not build upon it. In 1955 defendant purchased it from Spalding. In November, 1955, he applied to the Architectural Supervising Committee for permission to construct a 6 foot green fiberglass fence around his property line. Contending that such fencing was inappropriate in Kent Woodlands, that it looked like a neon sign, and would have a commercial appearance, the committee denied defendant's application. The committee had denied 11 applications for fences in Kent Woodlands, one of which was in subdivision 1. Some of these denials were on account of color. There are no fiberglass fences in Kent Woodlands.

The trial court found that defendant's lot is subject to the restrictions contained in the first declaration of restrictions; that plaintiffs own and are developing and selling lots in Kent Woodlands, that plaintiffs own no lots but do own a parcel in subdivision 1 known as parcel A and that the lots in the entire Kent Woodlands were sold in accordance with a general plan of restrictions which were for the benefit of all lots in the tract and of plaintiffs.

The Declaration.

The "Declaration of Restrictions, Conditions, Covenants and Agreements Affecting Real Property Known as Kent Subdivision No. 1, Marin County, California," states that the plaintiffs are the owners of and about to sell the land shown on the recorded "Map of Kent, Subdivision No. 1," and desire to subject the property "pursuant to a general plan of improvement, to certain restrictions, conditions, covenants and agreements between them and the several purchasers of said property and between the several purchasers of said property as between themselves as hereinafter set forth, Now, Therefore, the undersigned declare that the property shown on said map is held and shall be sold, conveyed, leased, occupied, resided upon, hypothecated and held subject to the following restrictions, conditions, covenants and agreements between them and the several owners and purchasers of said property and between the several owners and purchasers of said property as between themselves, and their heirs, successors and assigns: 1. All of said restrictions, conditions, covenants and agreements shall be made for the direct and mutual and reciprocal benefit of each and every lot shown on said recorded map and shall be intended to create mutual and equitable servitudes upon each of said lots in favor of each other lot shown on said map, and to create reciprocal rights and obligations between the respective owners of all of the lots shown on said map and to create a privity of contract and estate between the grantees of said lots, their heirs, successors and assigns, and shall, as to the owners of each lot in said tract, his heirs, successors and assigns, operate as covenants running with the land for the benefit of all other lots in said tract and the same shall exist and be binding until the 1st day of January, 1966, at which time they may be continued in force and effect by vote of the owners of the majority of the property, for additional periods of twenty years * * *" (Emphasis added.) Then follow a number of restrictions: "4. No structure, either residence or outhouse, tennis court, swimming pool, wall, fence or other improvements shall be constructed upon any of the said lots without the approval as to location, height and design first having been obtained from the undersigned, their successors and assigns * * 7. Violation of any of the restrictions, conditions, covenants and agreements herein contained, shall give to the undersigned, their successors and assigns, the right to enter upon the property upon or as to which said violation or breach exists, and to summarily abate and remove at the expense of the owner, any erection, thing or condition that may be or exist thereon contrary to the provisions hereof, without being deemed guilty of trespass * * * 12. All purchasers of property shown on said map shall, by the acceptance of contracts or deeds for any lot or lots shown thereon, or any portion thereof, thereby be conclusively deemed to have consented and agreed to all the restrictions, conditions, covenants and agreements. The undersigned further declare that they will restrict the sale, ownership, use and occupancy of adjoining and contiguous property offered by them for public sale at the time when said property is so offered in such a way as, in their opinion shall not impair the value of desirability of the property shown on said map, for residential purposes." (Emphasis added.)

Plaintiffs' Right to Complain.

[1] A mere perusal of said agreement shows that it did not intend to make the restrictions for the benefit of any property other than that referred to in it, namely, the lots shown on the map of subdivision 1. It expressly says that it is for the direct benefit of "each and every lot shown on said recorded map." Time and again it refers to "said lots" meaning the lots shown on that map. There is not the slightest ambiguity in the document. It is impossible to read into such clear language any intent to make the restrictions applicable to any other property. Plaintiffs contend that the last line of paragraph 12 above quoted shows such intention. On the contrary it strongly indicates that the restrictions are for the benefit of subdivision 1 lots only. That sentence instead of stating that plaintiffs would subject the new units (the adjoining and contiguous property) to be opened by them to the same restrictions as required of subdivision 1, or would make any restrictions upon the new units applicable to subdivision 1 lots, merely states that plaintiffs will restrict the sale and use of such property "in such a way as, in their opinion shall not impair the value or desirability of the property shown on said map, for residential purposes." This language discloses that plaintiffs intended the new units to be completely independent of the first unit, except only that they would be restricted in such manner as in plaintiffs' opinion not to impair the desirability for residential purposes of the lots in subdivision 1.

[2, 3] It is well settled in this state that restrictive covenants made for the benefit of other property retained by the grantor can not be enforced by the grantor after he no longer owns any of the property benefited. In Blodgett v. Trumbull, 1927, 83 Cal.App. 566, 257 P. 199, the grantors deeded to the plaintiff a certain lot subject to certain conditions and restrictions in the deed. Although these were not made for the benefit of the adjoining lots which belonged to the grantors, the court held (83 Cal.App. at page 571, 257 P. at page 202): "* * * the grantors did reserve for themselves, their successors, or assigns the right to enjoin, abate, or remedy by appropriate proceedings any breach of any of the restrictions. The right so reserved would be enforceable, in the absence of fraud, while the defendant Trumbull [the surviving grantor] remained owner of the adjoining lots; but after she had parted with the property which would derive benefit from a continuance of the restrictions, she would have no standing, in a court of equity at least, to complain of a breach." In Townsend v. Allen, 114 Cal.App.2d 291, at page 297, 250 P.2d 292, at page 296, 39 A.L.R.2d 1108, the court stated: "However, it does not follow that the grantor retains said right of enforcement even though he has disposed of all land he had retained without making any such restriction. The contrary is shown by cases relating to building and occupation restrictions on subdivisions in which cases the right of enforcement of grantor is considered lost when he has lost all interest in the property to be benefited. In Firth v. Marovich, 160 Cal. 257, 260, 116 P. 729, 731 [Ann.Cas.1912D, 1190] it is said (obiter): 'It is not open to question that building restrictions of the kind contained in the deed * * * are valid and enforceable at the suit of the grantor so long as he continues to own any part of the tract for the benefit of which the restrictions were exacted.'" (Emphasis ours.)

In Marra v. Aetna Construction Co., 1940, 15 Cal.2d 375, 378, 101 P.2d 490, 492 the court said: "The doctrine of equitable servitudes has been invoked chiefly in cases where uniform building restrictions have been imposed pursuant to a general plan for improving an entire tract or real estate subdivision * * *. It is true, however, that a servitude cannot exist in gross, but must be appurtenant to other benefited property."

Plaintiffs rely on language in Weston v. Foreman, 108 Cal.App.2d 686, 692, 239 P.2d 513, 517, to the effect that each new purchaser becomes "equally interested with the subdividers * * * in the continued functioning of the committee" whose duty it was under the restrictive covenants to effectuate the general plan of development of the declared restrictions. From this language plaintiffs deduce that the court was holding that the subdividers would continue after all the lots in the subdivision were sold to have the right to enforce the restrictions. That language contains no such implication. There is nothing in the case to indicate that the subdividers had disposed of all their property in the tract (if they had it is clear that such fact was not before the court and that the court was not passing upon such a situation). The footnote on page 693 of 108 Cal.App.2d on page 517 of 239 P.2d would indicate that the subdividers still owned lots in the tract. Moreover, the dissenting opinion in construing the terms of the restrictive declaration states (108 Cal.App.2d at page 695, 239 P.2d at page 518) that the agreement contemplated that the subdividers desired to retain control of the types of structure to be erected in the tract until they had sold all the lots in it, after which "they contemplated that they would have no further interest therein."

Hannula v. Hacienda Homes, Inc., 34 Cal.2d 442, 211 P.2d 302, 19 A.L.R.2d 1268, cited by plaintiffs, deals solely with the question of whether a restriction attempted to be imposed upon a lot owner by the subdivider came within the purview of the restrictive covenant. The plaintiff conceded that she must submit for the defendant's approval the plans for her proposed residence, but contended that the rejection of her plans went beyond the terms of the covenant. No contention was made that the defendant did not own property in the tract for the benefit of which the covenant was made, nor that the defendant could not enforce the covenant.

[4] It must be remembered in construing the declaration of restrictions that "any provisions of an instrument creating or claimed to create such a servitude will be strictly construed, any doubt being resolved in favor of the free use of the land." Wing v. Forest Lawn Cemetery Ass'n, 1940, 15 Cal.2d 472, 479, 101 P.2d 1099, 1103, 130 A.L.R. 120; Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 181, 183 P. 945. Thus, plaintiffs having disposed of all the lots in subdivision 1, do not have any property to be benefited by the enforcement of the restrictions and have no standing in a court of equity. Actually, plaintiffs do own a small portion of subdivision 1. However, admittedly this "parcel," so-called on the map, is too small for residence purposes and was reserved for the special purpose of parking for the tract office which adjoins it, as an entrance to the tract, and as a location for the tract's signboard. It is obvious that this parcel would in nowise be benefited by the enforcement of the restrictions. Blodgett v. Trumbull, supra, 83 Cal.App. 566, 571, 257 P. 199, points out that after a grantor has parted with the property which would derive benefit from a continuance of the restrictions, such grantor has no standing in court to enforce the restrictions.

[5] Restrictions in a deed cannot be enforced by one lot owner in a tract against another lot owner between whom there is neither privity of contract nor privity of estate. "The leading case on this subject, and the one that is determinative of this appeal, is Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 183 P. 945. In that case, among other things, it was specifically held that such servitudes will be enforced only when part of a general plan expressed in the deed, and when the deed expressly provides such restrictions are for the benefit of the other lots in the tract. In other words, unless specifically stated to be for the benefit of other lot owners, such covenants or restrictions are enforceable only as between the original parties to the deed, or their heirs or assigns." Fees v. Williams, 212 Cal. 688, 690, 300 P. 30, 31; see also Townsend v. Allen, 114 Cal.App.2d 291, 297, 250 P.2d 292, 39 A.L.R.2d 1108.

[6] Plaintiffs' contention that the provision in paragraph 12 to the effect that plaintiffs will restrict the use of property in the units other than subdivision 1 gives them, as owners of property in the other subdivisions, a right to enforce the restrictions on subdivision 1, is answered by Werner v. Graham, supra, 1919, 181 Cal. 174, 183 P. 945, which the court says in Wing v. Forest Lawn Cemetery Ass'n, supra, 15 Cal.2d 472, 480, 101 P.2d 1099, 130 A.L.R. 120, "has oft been cited as the leading case in this state defining the manner in which an equitable servitude may be established." There restrictive conditions were placed in a deed of one lot in a tract which the owner was subdividing according to a map on file. No express statement was included to the effect that they were for the benefit of the other lots in the tract. In selling these other lots the grantor placed similar restrictions in the deeds thereto. The court held that the failure to state in the deed that the restrictions were for the benefit of the other lots in the tract, although most probably the grantor intended them to be, made the restrictions unenforceable by owners of any other lots. It said (181 Cal. at pages 183–184, 183 P. at page 949): "It is undoubted that, when the owner of a subdivided tract conveys the various parcels in the tract by deeds containing appropriate language imposing restrictions on each parcel as part of a general plan of restrictions common to all the parcels and designed for their mutual benefit, mutual equitable servitudes are thereby created in favor of each parcel as against all the others. The agreement between the grantor and each grantee in such a case as expressed in the instruments between them is both that the parcel conveyed shall be subject to restrictions in accordance with the plan for the benefit of all the other parcels and also that all other parcels shall be subject to such restrictions for its benefit. In such a case the mutual servitudes spring into existence as between the first parcel conveyed and the balance of the parcels at the time of the first conveyance. As each conveyance follows, the burden and the benefit of the mutual restrictions imposed by preceding conveyances as between the particular parcel conveyed and those previously conveyed pass as an incident of the ownership of the parcel, and similar restrictions are created by the conveyance as between the lot conveyed and the lots still retained by the original owner. Of this character is Alderson v. Cutting, 163 Cal. [503], 504, 126 P. 157, Ann.Cas.1914A, 1.

"The difference between such a case and the one at bar is that here there is no language in the instruments between the parties—that is, the deeds—which refers to a common plan of restrictions, or which expresses or in any way indicates any agreement between grantor and grantee that the lot conveyed is taken subject to any such plan."

"While the decisions in other states upon the question now before us are in conflict, it is recognized by the law writers that the majority view is to the effect that such restrictions and conditions as those now before us can be enforced only by the owner of a part of the land for the benefit of which the restrictions and conditions were created." Young v. Cramer, 38 Cal. App.2d 64, 68, 100 P.2d 523, 525.

See also Alexander v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 48 Cal.App.2d 488, 492, 119 P.2d 992, 994, where the court stated, referring to the evidence, "It discloses a situation in which the reversionary right is held by an entity which is not the owner of the land in the same tract and cannot claim that its right as a landowner would be adversely affected as to use or value by removal of the restriction. It is held by a corporation as trustee for the syndicate which has disposed of all the property in the tract under restrictions as to use. These obviously had as their basis the benefit to be conferred on other property in the same tract." Just as in our case. Both parties cite Los Angeles University v. Swarth, 9 Cir., 1901, 107 F. 798, 54 L.R.A. 262. There the complainants and others owned large tracts of land adjoining the city of Los Angeles. They joined in a deed to Los Angeles University, a corporation, of 7½ acres of land. The deed provided that the land was to be used exclusively as a campus for the university proposed to be located thereon, and that if prior to a certain date the land was not so used title would revert to the grantors. The court held (at page 806): "In general terms, the benefit of a condition in a grant is reserved to the grantor and his heirs without regard to the ownership of other property; but, where the grant contains a restriction in the nature of a covenant that has relation to a benefit to adjoining property, the restriction can only be enforced in favor of the title to such adjoining property", and that as the complainants failed to show ownership in the land they could not maintain the action to restrain the defendant from using the lands for drilling for oil. The court stated that it was alleged in the complaint that the complainants and the others who had conveyed the land relied upon certain representations that the land would be used exclusively for university purposes to the benefit of the adjoining lands owned by the complainant and others. It then stated that as the complainants had no interest in these adjoining lands, they were no longer interested in the benefit arising from the restriction in the deed and therefore were not in a position to maintain the action. This case upholds the principles we have heretofore discussed and in no way supports the contention that mere ownership of adjoining lands gives the right to enforce restrictions in a deed that does not provide that the restrictions are for the benefit of those adjoining lands.

As plaintiffs have no interest in any property to be benefited by the restrictions, they may not maintain this action.

The judgment is reversed.

Frank S. HOWARD, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 23102.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 19, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 16, 1959.

Wife, having obtained a final decree of divorce, levied upon disability benefits payable to divorced husband in order to enforce payment of allowance made by divorce decree for support of minor child. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Elmer D. Doyle, J., entered orders granting exemption claimed by divorced husband, quashing writ and levy of execution, and releasing funds seized thereunder, and former wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that under West's Annotated Code Civil Procedure, Sections 690.22 and 690.23, disability benefits payable by city to disabled member of fire department were not subject to attachment or execution.

Orders affirmed.

1. Statutes ⇐176

Courts may interpret, but may not rewrite or disregard statutes.

2. Exemptions ⇐76

Statutory exemption of pension and disability payments from attachment or execution was not subject to any exception which would authorize levy upon such payments in order to enforce provision in divorce decree for support of minor child. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 690, 690.1 to 690.25, 690.22, 690.23.

3. Exemptions ⇐62

Statute exempting earnings from attachment or execution for express purpose of providing for the "family" from such earnings uses quoted word as including a divorced wife and the minor children of the marriage. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 690.11.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from the orders granting defendant's motions to quash writ and levy of execution and for release of funds thereunder. Plaintiff, on October 23, 1952, secured a final decree of divorce from the defendant and, by the terms thereof, as modified by order of court on December 10, 1952, he was to pay to plaintiff $50 on the 20th and 5th days of each month for the support and maintenance of their minor child. Subsequently, as a result of an alleged disabling injury, defendant was taken off the active list as a Captain of the Los Angeles Fire Department and thereafter received monthly disability payments. In order to enforce payment of the child support allowance, plaintiff, on or about July 1, 1957, pursuant to section 710 of the Code of Civil Procedure, levied on defendant's disability payments in the hands of the City Comptroller. The funds seized, consisting of $60.85, were deposited with the clerk of the superior court. Defendant asserted a claim of exemption to the above funds based on sections 710(c), 690.22, and 690.23 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and filed a motion, dated July 17, 1957, for an order granting the exemption, quashing said levy, and releasing said funds to the defendant. After a hearing and argument, orders were filed on October 24, 1957, granting the above motions. It is from such orders that the instant appeal is taken.

Sections 690.22 and 690.23 of the Code of Civil Procedure expressly exempt pensions and disability payments from attachment or execution.[1] It is plaintiff's position, however, that as exemption statutes are created for the benefit of the husband's family as well as for himself, such statutes do not apply against claims for alimony or child support. There is nothing in the exemption statutes involved in this appeal which lends support to this position. Sections 690.22 and 690.23 are completely silent regarding any exceptions to the exemptions therein established. Furthermore, section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure[2] provides in clear, unambiguous, and unmistakable language that the only exceptions to the exemptions provided by sections 690.1 to 690.25 are those which are specially set out in those sections themselves.

[1] In order to sustain plaintiff's position, it would be necessary for this court to either rewrite sections 690.22 and 690.23 or to disregard section 690. This court may do neither. Any changes to be made with respect to these sections must come from the legislature. The courts may interpret but not rewrite statutes.

[2] In re Smallbone, 16 Cal.2d 532, 106 P.2d 873, 131 A.L.R. 222, is the only California case dealing with these sections and an alimony judgment. Petitioner was found guilty of contempt for failure to pay support money to his former wife. He was receiving $100 a month pension as a retired city employee. The court held that petitioner's exempt property could be considered in determining whether he was able to pay past due alimony. The court further stated, however, 16 Cal.2d at page

1. C.C.P., § 690.22 reads: "All money received by any person, a resident of the State, as a pension, or retirement or disability or death or other benefit, from the United States Government, or from the State, or any county, city, or city and county, or other political subdivision of the State, or any public trust, or public corporation, or from the governing body of any of them, or from any public board or boards, whether the same shall be in the actual possession of such pensioner or beneficiary, or deposited, loaned or invested by him, is exempt from execution or attachment."

C.C.P., § 690.23, reads: "All money held, controlled or in process of distribution by the State or a city, city and county or other political subdivision of the State, or any public trust, or public corporation, or by the governing body of any of them, or by any public board or boards, derived from the contributions by the State or such city, county, city and county, or other political subdivision, or such public trust, public corporation, governing body, or public board or boards, or by any officer or employee thereof for retirement or pension purposes or the payment of disability, death or other benefits, or benefits payable under the provisions of 'An act to establish a system of unemployment reserves for this State, and making an appropriation therefor,' approved June 25, 1935, are exempt from attachment or execution."

2. C.C.P., § 690, reads: "The property mentioned in Sections 690.1 to 690.25, inclusive, this code, is exempt from execution or attachment except as therein otherwise specially provided, when claim for exemption is made to the same by the judgment debtor or defendant as hereinafter in Section 690.26 provided."

534, 106 P.2d at page 873, that "[t]here is no exception in the exemption laws which would authorize the satisfaction of an alimony judgment out of exempt property belonging to the husband and it is not the province of the courts to read such an exception into the law, in the absence of waiver of the exemption by the husband." This language is applicable to the instant case and justifies the ruling made by the trial court.

Plaintiff relies upon a number of California cases to support her position. Upon analysis, however, the authorities do not sustain her contentions.

Plaintiff cites Bailey v. Superior Court, 215 Cal. 548, 11 P.2d 865, for the proposition that alimony and child support claims may be enforced by execution or attachment. The court in this case only held that exempt property could be taken into consideration when determining whether the defendant was able to pay child support, not that it was subject to execution or attachment.

Avilla v. Avilla, 81 Cal.App.2d 210, 183 P.2d 668, also cited by plaintiff, does not support her position. Here, instead of making a judicial exception in favor of alimony and child support, the court actually granted the full exemption provided for by section 690.10 (seamen's earnings).

Plaintiff cites several California cases where the exemption provision relative to wages [3] apparently has been held inapplicable to claims founded on alimony or child support, and argues that such exception should be likewise applied to the sections presently under consideration. See Bruton v. Tearle, 7 Cal.2d 48, 59 P.2d 953, 106 A.L.R. 580; Lawson v. Lawson, 158 Cal. 446, 111 P. 354; Avilla v. Avilla, supra; Rankins v. Rankins, 52 Cal.App.2d 231, 126 P.2d 125.

[3] Whether or not special status has been accorded to alimony and child support claims under the earnings exemption provision (§ 690.11) is not decisive in the instant case. The language of the earnings exemption section is entirely different from that found in the pension sections. The former has express provision for exceptions to its coverage while the latter make no provision for any exception whatsoever. Furthermore, one purpose of the earnings exemption, as expressly declared by the legislature in the statute, is to provide for the family from such earnings. The courts have given "family" a broad interpretation so as to include a divorced wife and minor children of that marriage. See Yager v. Yager, 7 Cal.2d 213, 220, 60 P.2d 422, 106 A.L.R. 664. Therefore, to hold the husband's earnings exempt from such a claim would defeat the announced purpose of such exemption. The language of sections 690.22 and 690.23 is not open to such interpretation.

Lastly, plaintiff points out that this court in Rankins v. Rankins, supra, stated that the Supreme Court in the Smallbone case did not intend to reverse the policy which permits attachment or execution of earnings in favor of an alimony or child support judgment. This may well be true when the question involves earnings. However, when the above quoted language from the Smallbone decision is applied to the present case, it serves as a clear limitation upon the courts.

[4] In the instant case we only hold that under the code sections here involved the disability funds payable by the city to the defendant are not subject to attachment or execution. This is not to say that plaintiff does not have other remedies available to her to enforce her claim. See In re Smallbone, supra; Bailey v. Superior Court, supra.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

v.

Agnes BANGE, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 23295.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 19, 1958.

Action for breach of contract to form partnership for purpose of constructing, operating and selling residential income units on real property owned by defendant who subsequently sold property. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Paul Nourse, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that evidence sustained finding that plaintiff had undertaken burden of financing project, that 60 days would not be more than a reasonable time to perform and that plaintiff in less than 60 days had virtually accomplished that task when defendant notified him of sale of property and thus made accomplishment of venture impossible.

Affirmed.

1. Partnership ⇐21

An action at law will lie for breach of an agreement to form partnership when its terms are not void for uncertainty or want of mutuality.

2. Partnership ⇐21

Provision in agreement to form partnership that agreement should not be binding unless adequate finances were assured to support the entire endeavor did not render agreement unenforceable but operated to afford a reasonable time for the arranging of necessary finances.

3. Partnership ⇐21

In action for breach of contract to form partnership for purpose of constructing residential income units on real property owned by defendant, evidence sustained finding that plaintiff had undertaken burden of obligation of raising finances, that 60 days was not more than a reasonable time to perform and that plaintiff in less than 60 days had virtually accomplished the task when defendant notified him of sale of her lot and thus made accomplishment of venture impossible.

4. Partnership ⇐21

Award allowing $800 to building contractor for getting bids of subcontractors, arranging financing and the like in connection with proposal to form partnership with real estate owner for purpose of constructing, operating and selling residential income units on property and allowing $200 for preliminary plans made by contractor was not excessive. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 5537.

5. Work and Labor ⇐14(2)

Where building contractor was obligated by agreement to render services in connection with formation of partnership with real estate owner, owner actually or impliedly requested those services and contractor was entitled to recover therefor from owner when owner sold property and thus prevented further performance on part of contractor.

6. Brokers ⇐8(3)
Partnership ⇐21

In action for breach of contract to form partnership for purpose of constructing, operating and selling residential income units on real property of defendant, evidence sustained finding that real estate broker who procured original agreement for plaintiff, who was associated with plaintiff and who acted as agent in setting up the deal was not plaintiff's agent for purpose of rescission of contract or waiver of breach of contract and evidence sustained implied finding that there was no rescission or acquiescence by plaintiff in defendant's breach occurring when she sold property.

Action for damages for breach of contract to form a partnership. The court awarded plaintiff damages of $1,000 and defendant appeals.

The basic agreement was in writing and reads:

"Proposal to Form a Partnership

"September 28, 1956

"We propose to form the Bange Development Company, a partnership, for the purpose of constructing, operating and selling residential income units on the real property known as 5327 Santa Monica Blvd.

"The partnership shall consist of the following:

"1. Clarence Braxdale, general contractor, who herewith agrees to provide plans, construct and manage the proposed structure in the capacity of general partner with the right to one-half of the net profit of the project for his services.

"2. Agnes Bange, present owner of subject property, who herewith agrees to invest her unencumbered lot at an expressed value of $25,000.00. This sum to represent her investment, and upon sale of the completed units she shall be reimbursed in this amount before any division of the net profits—of which she shall also receive her proportionate share.

"3. Any individual or individuals whose financial aid must be secured to the full completion of the project and who will share in the profit according to the amount of their investment.

"This proposal shall not be binding upon any parties signing unless adequate finances are assured to support the entire endeavor.

The trial judge made findings which, in paragraphs I, II, III and IV, are a paraphrasing of the above quoted agreement. He also found that plaintiff agreed to furnish within a reasonable time necessary finances in the form of a building loan of $45,000 to $51,000, and to invest individually or through nominees such additional sums as might be necessary for completion of the project; that plaintiff, between September 28, 1956 and November 21, 1956, and within a reasonable time, performed services in connection with the venture which, exclusive of architectural services, included the conception and preparation of preliminary sketches for a 17-unit apartment house to be erected on defendant's land, contacting financial institutions in an effort to procure a building loan, ascertaining the cost of construction of said proposed apartment house, interviewing subcontractors and materialmen, obtaining bids from subcontractors, having available for investment sufficient moneys to complete said venture; that plaintiff ascertained the estimated cost of construction to be approximately $68,900 and that a building loan could be obtained of approximately $50,000; that plaintiff had available and was ready to invest whatever sums were necessary to complete the project over and above the construction loan; that defendant on or about November 23, 1956, sold the lot upon which the building was to be erected for the sum of $30,000, and refused and failed to invest the said lot in the partnership as agreed; that 60 days was not an unreasonable time within which plaintiff should provide for completion of plans and procuring of necessary financing; that the procuring of a construction loan was frustrated by defendant's acts; that her breach of contract prevented plaintiff from completing performance of the provisions of the agreement on his part to be performed, and as a result thereof he suffered damages; that the value of said services rendered by plaintiff, exclusive of architectural services, was $1,000 and plaintiff was damaged in said sum.

[1] It is settled that an action at law will lie for breach of an agreement to form a partnership when its terms are not void for uncertainty or want of mutuality. 37 Cal.Jur.2d § 18, p. 557; § 81, p. 684; 68

C.J.S. Partnership § 11, pp. 418–419; § 111, p. 555; 40 Am.Jur., § 27, p. 142; § 498, p. 470.

[2, 3] The case was tried and decided long before the decision of Mattei v. Hopper, 51 Cal.2d 119, 330 P.2d 625, but the trial judge seems to have anticipated it and to have held impliedly that there was no want of mutuality or of consideration. The attorneys argue the point, and defendant testified that she relied upon the last paragraph of the contract when she sold her lot and thus prevented further performance on the part of plaintiff. The Mattei reasoning requires a holding that the last paragraph of the instant agreement does not render it unenforceable, but operates to afford a reasonable time (no specific period being mentioned) for the arranging of necessary finances and performance of plaintiff's other obligations. The court ruled that the contract could be supplemented by parol for the purpose of determining where the obligation to raise the finances lay; having done so, it found upon adequate evidence that plaintiff had undertaken that burden; that 60 days would not be more than a reasonable time to perform; that plaintiff in less than 60 days had virtually accomplished that task when defendant notified him of the sale of her lot and thus made the accomplishment of the venture impossible. There appears to be no error in this holding.

[4] The finding of damage is attacked as unsupported by the evidence. Plaintiff valued his services in planning the structure, getting bids from subcontractors, arranging for financing and the like, at $10 an hour; said he spent 240 working hours of which 80 hours were expended after the plans were completed. His overall valuation of the services was $3,000. The judge ruled that preliminary plans are not architect's services (Walter M. Ballard Corp. v. Dougherty, 106 Cal.App.2d 35, 42, 234 P.2d 745) but that final plans fall in that category and as plaintiff was licensed as a contractor, not as an architect, he could not recover for plans other than the preliminary ones. In effect this is a ruling that plaintiff did not come within the exception of Business & Professions Code, § 5537, which relates to plans or drawings for one's own buildings (5 Cal. Jur.2d § 6, p. 128). It is unnecessary for us to determine whether this ruling was correct. Allowing $800 for other services and $200 for preliminary plans would justify the award of $1,000; and that process finds support in the record.

[5] Relying upon Hartley v. Weller, 104 Cal.App.2d 118, 120, 231 P.2d 133 (no application for hearing in Supreme Court), appellant argues that the services of plaintiff were not performed for the benefit of defendant or at her request and, as the partnership had not come into being, there could be no recovery against her for such services. The Hartley case is distinguishable upon the facts. The award at bar was made as an assessment of damages, not by way of an assumpsit, which seems to be the standpoint from which the matter was viewed in Hartley. See, Webster v. Beau, 77 Wash. 444, 137 P. 1013, 1016, 51 L.R.A., N.S., 81, as to the propriety of such an award. Moreover, the Hartley opinion says: "For aught that is disclosed in the complaint appellant incurred this damage voluntarily. The complaint does not charge that respondent had actually or impliedly requested appellant to render any services or incur any indebtedness in his behalf or that of the proposed partnership which would give rise to an obligation therefor in favor of appellant." 104 Cal.App.2d at page 120, 231 P.2d at page 134. In the case before us plaintiff was obligated by contract to render the services for which he was awarded compensation and thus in a sense appellant did "actually or impliedly [request respondent] to render [those] services." We do not consider the Hartley decision to be controlling here.

[6] The original agreement was procured for plaintiff by Mrs. Doris Drake, a real estate broker who was associated with him and acting as his agent in setting up the deal. When defendant telephoned her that she had sold the lot but was not sure the sale would go through, Mrs. Drake said: "Well, if it shouldn't, then we still have a deal." Counsel for appellant now asserts this to have worked a rescission, although defendant herself testified: "The Court: What did you say; that if the sale didn't go through, you still had the deal? A. No, I don't believe so. I don't believe I gave her any answer at all. I might have said, 'The deal is going through.'" The trial judge correctly ruled that there was no showing that Mrs. Drake was plaintiff's agent for any such purpose as rescission or waiver of breach of contract. He was also warranted in finding that there was no rescission or acquiescence in defendant's breach, which ruling is implicit in the formal findings signed by the court.

Appellant's claim that the findings are uncertain, contradictory and inconsistent, cannot prevail for we find no merit in it.

Judgment affirmed.

Principal was chargeable with knowledge of information acquired by her agent in transaction of her business. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 2332; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof. Code, § 10177(h).

4. Principal and Agent ⇐177(3)

An agent's knowledge of content of contract may be imputed to his principal.

5. Trial ⇐251(3)

If there was any contributory negligence shown by evidence, in action to recover for negligence of broker in effecting a voidable sale of real property, court could properly instruct with respect thereto, even though there was no specific plea of contributory negligence.

6. Appeal and Error ⇐959(3)
Pleading ⇐236(4)

The matter of allowing amendments at close of trial rests in sound discretion of trial judge, whose action will not be disturbed in absence of abuse of that discretion.

7. Brokers ⇐38(1)
Municipal Corporations ⇐601(3)

Zoning law is directed toward orderly development of properties within city, not protection of brokers, and principals' violation of zoning ordinance could not constitute such contributory negligence as would preclude their recovery from broker for negligence in effecting voidable sale of real property.

8. Trial ⇐83(2)

Where only good objection to admission of offered evidence was lack of particularization, objection that such evidence was "irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial" was insufficient.

9. Damages ⇐142

As a general rule, special damages must be alleged with particularity.

10. Appeal and Error ⇐231(2)

Trial of special damages issue without specific objection that it is outside of pleadings precludes parties from raising point for first time on appeal.

11. Evidence ⇐121(2)

Verbal act done in performance of her agent's transaction of principal's business was admissible against her and binding upon her.

12. Evidence ⇐220(2)

Statement, made in defendant's presence, that it was all her fault, called for a response from her, and her silence in face of such statement took on character of an admission, and evidence with regard thereto was thus admissible in action to recover for negligence of real estate broker in effecting voidable sale.

13. Fraud ⇐29

Representations made to one person with intention that they will be repeated to another and acted upon by him and which are repeated and acted upon to his injury give person so acting same right to relief as if representations had been made to him directly. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1711.

14. Fraud ⇐21

Where broker put commercial zone into information furnished to real estate board which incorporated same into its multiple listing, as broker intended that it should do, and purchaser came into possession of that listing, read it and relied upon it, legal effect was same as if broker had made representation directly to purchaser, and broker could not successfully assert, as defense to action to recover for her negligence in effecting voidable sale, that purchaser had not relied or acted upon anything done or said by her.

15. Principal and Agent ⇐156

Principal was responsible for her agent's representations. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 2351.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Defendant Turnham appeals from a judgment rendered against her for $3,092.67, based upon her negligence, as a real estate broker, in effecting a sale of real property from plaintiffs to Vernon L. Beck and wife through misrepresentation as to zoning, resulting in a rescission of the deal by Beck and a repurchase of the property by plaintiffs Granberg. The case was tried before a jury whose verdict for said $3,092.67 represents expenses actually incurred by plaintiffs—such as real estate commission, escrow fees, etc.—in consummating the original sale and the repurchase.

The evidence is conflicting. The proof favorable to plaintiffs' contentions is to the following effect. They owned property known as 6820 Balboa Boulevard, in the city of Van Nuys, upon which they conducted a retail nursery and landscaping business. The frontage is 100 feet and lies in two zones defined by the city zoning ordinance; the south 45 feet in zone C-2 which permits of use for a nursery and the north 55 feet in R-1 or single family residential zone, which excludes such nursery use. The line between the two zones ran through the residence situated on the property, and the southern portion was used for conduct of the business while the northerly part had storage of nursery stock upon it and display of a fertilizer sign, neither of which was permissible in an R-1 zone.

Mrs. Turnham was a real estate broker under whom David Graham and James Rogers worked as salesmen; they had authority to sign her name to listing agreements. On or about October 9, 1955, Mr. Graham called upon plaintiffs with a view to listing the property. Mr. Granberg told him of the existence of both R-1 and C-2 zoning upon the premises. A listing agreement was made on October 16th, which employed Mrs. Turnham as realtor to sell the property, and same was signed on her behalf by Graham. At that time Mr. Granberg again told him the facts about the zoning and showed him where the line ran through the dining room in which they were sitting. Mrs. Granberg was not present on that occasion, but at some time before the sale was made (escrow was opened November 26, 1954) she talked with Graham about the zoning. She testified: "Q. Now, what did he say to you and what did you say to him about the property? A. Well, I explained the zoning in the property when it wasn't on C2 and he says this was the words Mr. Graham said. 'We won't mention that. The property will sell beter if we don't mention it.' Q. And what did you say then? A. I said, 'Mr. Graham, you cannot do that. You cannot do that.' Q. What did he say to you? A. 'All right'. And then he left. He left. He was laughing at the same time he said it."

The listing agreement had a form on the back designed for entry of details concerning the property, including the zone. When originally executed this back of the paper was not filled in at all. Graham took the listing to the office and testified he did not fill in that portion. Mrs. Turnham says she did it. In the appropriate place the zone was stated as C-2 without any reference to R-1. An original or copy then went from appellant to the San Fernando Valley Real Estate Board which prepared from it a "multiple listing" and distributed same to all members of the board. It stated the zoning to be C–2.

Mr. Vernon Beck and his wife were looking for C-2 property in the San Fernando Valley for use as a baton school. They contacted the office of broker James A. Milner, with whom Donald Engle, another broker, was associated. They had the multiple listing showing this property zoned as C-2. Beck told Engle he was interested in C-2 property in the valley, was shown such properties for a week or ten days, and then was taken to see plaintiffs' place. The Becks saw and had possession of the multiple listing upon it, and Engle impliedly represented to them that it was C-2 property. Mr. Beck testified: "We had looked at nothing but C2 property throughout the Valley and like I say we wanted a home on this C2 property and, of course, it was taken for granted; that's all we looked for and I think that's all we were shown." Neither Beck nor Engle had any conversation with either plaintiff upon the subject. Herman P. Beck, an uncle of the buyer, was with him when he told Engle that he was looking for C-2 property. He said that no one stated in his presence either on that or on later occasions when he accompanied his nephew, that the plaintiffs' property was C-2, and "I think we went by the listing entirely."

Milner and Engle were acting as subagents of Mrs. Turnham in this deal. When the escrow was closed she received a commission of $1,600, which she divided with Milner, Engle, Graham, Rogers and the Real Estate Board. After the purchase the Becks went to the eastern part of the country and plaintiffs remained in possession by agreement. Late in June the Becks learned that the property was not entirely within the C-2 zone, told Mr. Granberg about it and demanded that he repurchase the property. After some consideration he agreed to do this and repaid the Becks their down payment of $12,000, plus certain interest upon mortgages which they had paid. Then plaintiffs confronted Mrs. Turnham with the situation. Mr. Granberg asked her why the property was not listed right and she replied, "well, I assumed that it was C2." She also said she would not pay back the commission but would sell the property again for plaintiffs without cost. Mr. Graham was present at the time; he kept walking back and forth and said: "It was all Dorothy's fault," referring to Mrs. Turnham. Then followed the lawsuit.

Graham testified that neither of the Granbergs told him about zoning or about the property being in two zones; that he did not fill in the reverse side of the listing agreement and did not tell the plaintiffs that it was all Mrs. Turnham's fault. Appellant testified that she placed the zoning information on the back of the listing agreement; that she did so at plaintiffs' home after asking Mrs. Granberg if "[t]his is a commercial zone" and receiving an affirmative reply. Appellant also denied that she said she had assumed the property was all in a C-2 zone, but admitted that she expressed a willingness to resell for plaintiffs without charge. She also said she did not recall any remark by Graham about its being all her fault.

In this setting the jury found for plaintiffs and the trial judge denied a new trial. Originally, Graham, Rogers, Milner, Engle and San Fernando Valley Real Estate Board were codefendants with Mrs. Turnham. The complaint was in two counts; the first sounded in negligence and the second in fraud. Nonsuit was granted as to the fraud count. Defendants Graham and Rogers were granted nonsuits. The jury found for Milner and Engle. Thus Mrs. Turnham became sole judgment debtor and appellant.

[1–4] Her counsel argues that plaintiffs were using the property illegally and therefore they are precluded from recovering for Mrs. Turnham's negligence. It is said that they are estopped to deny that the entire property was in the C-2 zone; we infer that counsel means that they are estopped to deny that they represented it to be in that zone. The appearance of the premises seems to be the basis of the argument, which overlooks the principle that reliance upon the fact which is claimed to work an estoppel is of the essence of the plea. Gajanich v. Gregory, 116 Cal.App. 622, 634, 3 P.2d 389; American Nat. Bank of San Francisco v. A. G. Sommerville, Inc., 191 Cal. 364, 372, 216 P. 376; Lusitanian-American Development Co. v. Seaboard Dairy Credit Corp., 1 Cal.2d 121, 128, 34 P.2d 139. Here there is no basis for an estoppel in the evidence which the jury credited, for Mrs. Turnham was told through her agent Graham that the property was partially in each of zones C-2 and R-1. The fact that he may or may not have reported this information to his principal is immaterial, for he was acting in the course of his employment and the principal was charged with knowledge of information acquired by him in the transaction of her business. 2 Cal.Jur.2d, § 160, p. 855; Civ.Code, § 2332; Bus. & Prof. Code, § 10177(h). "An agency's knowledge of the content of a contract is imputed to his principal. [Citations.] This rule of law is not a rebuttable presumption. It is not a presumption at all. It is a rule which charges the principal with the knowledge possessed by his agent. [Citations.]" Columbia Pictures Corp. v. DeToth, 87 Cal. App.2d 620, 630, 197 P.2d 580, 586.

[5–7] Appellant claims there was error in the denial of a motion for leave to amend the answer to allege contributory negligence. This motion was made after all parties had rested. It was presented and denied on November 29, 1957; the answer had been filed on May 23, 1956. The contributory negligence claimed by counsel is violation of the zoning ordinance. It is said: "This defense was unknown to the defendant who finally remained in the case until the plaintiff's testimony was finished." But the answer alleges that plaintiffs, "at the time the property was listed and up to the time of sale used all of the property in violation of existing zoning regulations of the City of Los Angeles, that the use plaintiffs were at that time making of the property was as C-2 property." So there was nothing new in the defense. All the evidence was in at the time the motion was made and if there was any contributory negligence shown thereby the court properly could have instructed with respect thereto, although there was no specific plea of contributory negligence. 35 Cal.Jur.2d, §§ 239 and 240, p. 776. There are no instructions in either transcript.

This matter of allowing amendments at the close of the trial rests in the sound discretion of the trial judge, whose action will not be disturbed in the absence of an abuse of that discretion. 39 Cal.Jur.2d, § 244, p. 357; Vogel v. Thrifty Drug Co., 43 Cal. 2d 184, 188, 272 P.2d 1; Rogers Bros. Co. v. Beck, 43 Cal.App. 110, 112, 184 P. 515; Palmer v. Wahler, 133 Cal.App.2d 705, 708, 285 P.2d 8.

There could have been no such abuse of discretion here, for the violation of the zoning ordinance could not constitute contributory negligence. That law is directed toward orderly development of properties within the city, not the protection of real estate agents who undertake to sell a given parcel; hence the violation thereof could not spell negligence as to the broker, who was not within the class for whose protection the law was passed. See, Nunneley v. Edgar Hotel, 36 Cal.2d 493, 497, 225 P. 2d 497; Corbett v. Spanos, 37 Cal.App. 200, 204, 173 P. 769; Hagen v. Laursen, 121 Cal.App.2d 379, 386, 263 P.2d 489; Boie-Hansen v. Sisters of Charity, 152 Cal.App. 2d 845, 848, 314 P.2d 189.

[8–10] It is asserted that the court awarded excessive damages in that the items included were special damages which had not been particularly alleged. The award includes plaintiffs' expenses of both escrows. In the first instance they aggregated $2,065.62, consisting of real estate commission of $1,600, interest on existing loan, $139.03, prepayment penalty, $90.77, service charge, $7.50, termite report, $10, title policy, $131.75, etc. The second escrow amount was $1,027.05, which included an allowance to Becks of $729.90 to cover their expenses of the first escrow, certain insurance and recording fees, interest upon a loan procured by them, etc. The complaint specifically alleges the commission item of $1,600; it also says that upon Becks' rescinding plaintiffs were compelled "to repay to the said Becks all monies which plaintiffs had received from the Becks, plus all expenses incurred by the Becks in connection with their purchase of the property. * * * That plaintiffs have been further damaged by the amount of all expenses incurred by them in connection with the sale of the property to the Becks and the reconveyance of the property from the Becks to plaintiffs, plus the loss to the plaintiffs of the profit and interest to be earned by plaintiffs on the sale of such property to the Becks." When evidence was first offered upon this subject and after the question had been answered, counsel for Graham and Rogers said: "Objected to—irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial," and "Object." Such objections were not sufficient, for the matter was clearly admissible. The only good objection would have been that the items were not particularized. As to the inadequacy of such objections, see, In re Estate of Pierce, 32 Cal.2d 265, 273, 196 P.2d 1; Crocker v. Carpenter, 98 Cal. 418, 421, 33 P. 271; 3 Cal.Jur.2d § 157, p. 636. When the escrow officer later testified to the expenses of the two escrows, no objection whatever was made. Thus appellant stands in the position of one who has not objected at all to the evidence in question.

While the general rule is that special damages must be alleged with particularity (14 Cal.Jur.2d, § 22, p. 651), it is also true of that, as of any other issue, that a trial of the issue without specific objection that it is outside the pleadings, precludes the parties from raising the point upon appeal for the first time. 15 Am.Jur., § 306, p. 750; 3 Cal.Jur.2d, § 140, p. 604; § 142, p. 607; 3 Witkin on California Procedure, § 97, p. 2265; Cockerell v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 42 Cal.2d 284, 288, 267 P.2d 16; Miller v. Peters, 37 Cal.2d 89, 93, 230 P.2d 803; Buckley v. Chadwick, 45 Cal.2d 183, 188, 288 P.2d 12, 289 P.2d 242; Viglione

v. City and County of San Francisco, 109 Cal.App.2d 158, 159–160, 240 P.2d 68; Standley v. Feather River Pine Mills, 112 Cal.App.2d 101, 104, 245 P.2d 657.

[11, 12] Immediately following the granting of the Graham motion for nonsuit appellant's attorney moved "to have all of the testimony of Graham and Rogers stricken from the record on the grounds that it is hearsay and have the jury admonished to disregard all such testimony." This was denied and the ruling as to Graham's testimony is now challenged as error. Counsel's argument goes not to the testimony of Graham but to the statements made by him at the time Mrs. Granberg told him about the zoning, his remarks when he said in appellant's presence that it was all her fault, and his repetition of this last remark to the Granbergs as they were leaving appellant's office and on their way to the automobile. The argument is wholly without merit. The first item was a verbal act done in the performance of the agent's transaction of appellant's business, and of course admissible against her and binding upon her. The statement that "it was all Dorothy's fault," being made in appellant's presence, called for a response from her and her silence took on the character of an admission. The third item probably would have been excluded had objection been made at the time, but that was not done. The presence or absence of Graham as a defendant has no legitimate bearing upon the motion to strike.

[13–15] Finally, appellant argues that Vernon Beck did not rely or act upon anything done or said by her. The point cannot be sustained. Appellant put the C-2 zone into the information furnished the Real Estate Board, which incorporated the same into its multiple listing, as appellant intended it should do. "The law is well settled that 'representations made to one person with intention that they will be repeated to another and acted upon by him and which are repeated and acted upon to his injury gives the person so acting the same right to relief as if the representations had been made to him directly.'" Simone v. McKee, 142 Cal.App. 2d 307, 313, 298 P.2d 667, 671. See, also, Civ.Code, § 1711; Crystal Pier Amusement Co. v. Cannan, 219 Cal. 184, 188, 25 P.2d 839, 91 A.L.R. 1357; 23 Cal.Jur.2d, § 32, p. 78; § 33, p. 79. Beck came into possession of that listing, read it and relied upon it. The legal effect of this was the same as if appellant had made the representation directly to him. Moreover, Engle was appellant's sub-agent and he impliedly represented to the buyer that the property was all within the C-2 zone. Appellant, the principal, is of course responsible for that representation. Civ.Code, § 2351; 2 Cal.Jur.2d, § 69, p. 722.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Robert Bills LEWIS, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6112.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 30, 1958.

Proceeding on an application for a writ of error coram nobis. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Lewis Drucker, J., denied motion, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that bare accusation that district attorney and deputy public defender willfully suppressed evidence was insufficient to justify writ of error coram nobis.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐997(1), 1147

Granting of relief on application for writ of error coram nobis rests largely within lower court's discretion, and its ruling thereon will not be upset on appeal except for an abuse thereof.

2. Criminal Law ⇐997(6)

Writ of error coram nobis is limited writ available only where no other remedy exists, is intended to reach errors of fact extrinsic to record and its function is to bring to attention of court facts which existed at time of trial that would have constituted a valid defense, but which, without negligence on part of defendant, were not presented, either through duress, fraud or excusable mistake and which, not appearing on face of record, would have effected an acquittal of petitioner or, at least, have caused a more favorable judgment to be entered against him.

3. Criminal Law ⇐997(15)

In coram nobis proceedings there is a strong presumption that judgment of conviction is correct.

4. Criminal Law ⇐997(15)

In coram nobis proceeding defendant has burden of overcoming presumption in favor of validity of judgment by establishing through a preponderance of strong and convincing evidence that he was deprived of substantial legal rights by extrinsic causes and lower court is not required to accept at face value the allegations of motion or petition even though it be verified and uncontradicted.

5. Criminal Law ⇐997(4)

Bare accusation that district attorney and deputy public defender willfully suppressed evidence in favor of defendant would not justify granting of writ of error coram nobis.

6. Criminal Law ⇐997(15)

Where defendant alleged that his witness was prevented from testifying, but did not reveal identity of witness, or in what manner or by whom he was prevented from testifying, or to what matters he would have testified had he been given the opportunity, defendant was not entitled to writ of error coram nobis on ground that witness had been prevented from testifying.

7. Criminal Law ⇐997(15)

If defendant, in connection with his allegation, in motion for writ of error coram nobis, that his witness had been prevented from testifying, referred to certain witness who had testified but whom deputy public defender did not see fit to question concerning gun allegedly used in assault with deadly weapon, defendant was not entitled to writ of error coram nobis in absence of showing that such witness would have answered such questions favorably to defendant, or that if he were to be asked such questions in the future, he would so testify, or that if deputy public defender were called he would testify that he had suppressed evidence.

8. Criminal Law ⇐997(11)

Where defendant in his motion for writ of error coram nobis charged that verdict was decided by "lot of means, other than that of a fair expression of opinion" on part of the judge but failed to provide any reasonable explanation therefor, or offer any proof thereon, such general accusations were insufficient to constitute the strong and convincing proof required of defendant to overcome presumption in favor of validity of judgment and denial of writ of error coram nobis was not an abuse of discretion.

9. Criminal Law ⇐997(4)

Defendant's alleged ignorance of law in failing to appeal from judgment was insufficient to justify issuance of writ of error coram nobis.

10. Criminal Law ⇐997(5)

Lack of effective aid of counsel is not properly raised in a proceeding for writ of error coram nobis.

11. Criminal Law ⇐997(4)

Fact that district attorney and deputy public defender were both state officials was insufficient to constitute any evidence of collusion between them or influence or coercion and was insufficient basis for issuance of writ of error coram nobis.

12. Criminal Law ⇐641

Public defender is free from any restraint or domination by district attorney or of prosecuting authorities and is as free to act in behalf of his client as if he had been regularly employed and retained by defendant whom he represents.

Ray M. Davidow, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

On May 7, 1957, defendant was convicted by the trial court of first degree burglary and assault with a deadly weapon. It also found four prior felony convictions alleged in the information to be true and sentenced defendant to the state prison. At the trial he was represented by a deputy public defender. No motion for a new trial was made nor was an appeal taken from the judgment. Four months later, defendant in propria persona filed in the lower court a document denominated "Motion to Annul, Vacate and Set Aside Judgment," later held by this court to constitute an application for a writ of error coram nobis. People v. Lewis, 157 Cal.App.2d 722, 321 P.2d 859.

Defendant in his motion asked the lower court to set aside the judgment of conviction or, in the alternative, accord him a full hearing on his allegations. He alleged therein that the district attorney and the deputy public defender wilfully and knowingly suppressed evidence favorable to him; a defense witness was prevented from taking the stand; the "verdict" was decided by "lot of means, other than that of a fair expression of opinion, on the part of the judge"; he was not given sufficient aid by counsel to protect his rights and he failed to appeal because he was ignorant of the law.

Although defendant admitted that at the trial the prosecution had proved the commission of the burglary and assault charges and connected defendant therewith through positive identification by the victim and evidence that the revolver taken from the burglary was subsequently pawned by defendant, he asserted in his motion that he had been home all night on the night of the burglary and that Andrew Swift saw defendant purchase the revolver from one Scott subsequent thereto. Defendant claimed that he advised the deputy public defender that Swift saw him buy the gun from Scott; that Swift told defendant's lawyer he witnessed the purchase but the public defender refused to ask Swift about it on the stand because "I was afraid to ask the witness, Andrew Swift, the 64 Dollar question; you cannot never tell what a witness answer will be under oath," thereby suppressing "evidence knowingly by him favorable to defendant; and the fact is manifest and undutiable (sic) that he should have ask the witness the said 64 Dollar question," and had he done so "the endition (sic) of judgment would have been prevented."

The verified motion and attached points and authorities were the only documents filed by defendant. No affidavits or proof of any kind in support thereof were proffered by him. It is from the order denying the motion, defendant appeals.

Appellant contends that the lower court abused its discretion in denying the motion and/or in refusing to grant a hearing to which Swift and the deputy public defender should have been subpoenaed, on the ground that the conduct of the deputy public defender in failing to ask Swift about the gun constituted "extrinsic fraud as to the defendant."

[1] The granting of relief in proceedings of this kind rests largely within the lower court's discretion, and its ruling thereon will not be upset on appeal except for an abuse thereof. People v. Bible, 135 Cal.App.2d 65, 286 P.2d 524; People v. Devora, 105 Cal.App.2d 457, 233 P.2d 653; People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 210 P.2d 13.

[2] The writ of error coram nobis is a limited writ available only where no other remedy exists, aimed at reaching errors of fact extrinsic to the record (People v. Bible, 135 Cal.App.2d 65, 286

P.2d 524); and its function, as pointed out in People v. Flores, 147 Cal.App.2d 243, at page 246, 305 P.2d 90, at page 92: "* * * is to bring the attention of the court to such facts as existed at the time of the trial that would have constituted a valid defense, but which, without negligence on the part of the defendant, were not presented, either though duress, fraud or excusable mistake and which, not appearing on the face of the record, would have effected an acquittal of the petitioner or, at least, have caused a more favorable judgment to be entered against him (citations)."

[3, 4] At the outset it should be borne in mind that in coram nobis proceedings there is a strong presumption that the judgment of conviction is correct (People v. Flores, 147 Cal.App.2d 243, 305 P.2d 90; People v. Bobeda, 143 Cal.App.2d 496, 300 P.2d 97; People v. Shorts, 32 Cal.2d 502, 197 P.2d 330) and, as stated in People v. Bible, 135 Cal.App.2d 65, at page 68, 286 P.2d 524, at page 525: "(T)he petitioner is deemed to be prima facie guilty." Defendant, therefore, has the burden of overcoming the presumption in favor of the validity of the judgment by establishing through a preponderance of strong and convincing evidence (People v. Fritz, 140 Cal.App.2d 618, 295 P.2d 449; People v. Shorts, 32 Cal.2d 502, 197 P.2d 330). that he was deprived of substantial legal rights by extrinsic causes (People v. Flores, 147 Cal.App.2d 243, 305 P.2d 90; People v. Devora, 105 Cal.App.2d 457, 233 P.2d 653; People v. Bible, 135 Cal.App.2d 65, 286 P.2d 524). In this connection, the lower court is not required to accept at face value the allegations of the motion or petition even though it be verified and uncontradicted (People v. Martinelli, 118 Cal.App.2d 94, 257 P.2d 37; People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 210 P.2d 13; People v. Fritz, 140 Cal.App.2d 618, 295 P.2d 449).

It is clear from the record before us that defendant failed to meet his burden of producing the necessary "strong and convincing" evidence in support of the charges contained in his motion, and in fact failed to offer or produce any competent proof thereon by way of affidavit or otherwise.

[5] The motion itself contained only the most general charges. Beyond the bare accusation that the district attorney and deputy public defender wilfully suppressed evidence in his favor, defendant did not disclose therein when, how, or in what manner they accomplished this or the nature of the evidence suppressed.

[6, 7] Defendant further alleged in his motion that his witness was prevented from testifying, yet he did not reveal his identity, or by whom, or in what manner he was prevented from testifying, or to what matters he would have testified had he been given the opportunity. If, in this connection, he refers to Andrew Swift, it is obvious from defendant's own statements that Swift was not "prevented from testifying," that he was a witness for defendant at the trial and did testify, even though the deputy public defender in his experience and judgment and under the circumstances, did not see fit to question him concerning the gun. Defendant made no showing, by way of affidavit or direct testimony of Swift, or by any offer of proof, that at the trial Swift would have answered such a question favorably to defendant, or that, if he were to be asked such a question in the future, he would so testify. Nor has defendant made any offer of competent proof by way of affidavit or otherwise, that if the deputy public defender were called, he would testify to the conclusions outlined by defendant in his motion. The lower court had before it only the barest of charges contained in the motion and defendant's hearsay statements. Nor does the record disclose whether defendant himself testified he purchased the gun from Scott, or, if so, whether it was in the presence of Swift. However, it is clear that no one by the name of "Scott" testified at the trial.

As to the third charge that the "verdict" was decided by "lot of means, other than that of a fair expression of opinion, on the part of the judge" defendant has not seen fit to provide any reasonable explanation therefor, much less offer any proof thereon.

[8] We are here confronted with only general accusations, bare of evidentiary support of any kind; and mere legal and factual conclusions based entirely upon hearsay statements of defendant. As such, we deem them to be insufficient to constitute any of the "strong and convincing" proof required of defendant to overcome the strong presumption in favor of the validity of the judgment, in order to establish his right to the writ. The lower court was wholly justified in denying the motion and we find no abuse of its discretion in the record before us.

As to defendant's remaining charges that he was not given sufficient aid of counsel to protect his rights and he failed to appeal his case through ignorance of the law, we deem them likewise to be without merit.

[9] Defendant's alleged ignorance of the law in failing to appeal from the judgment is no more excusable than would be his or his attorney's failure to file notice of appeal because of illness or incapacitation (People v. Dawson, 98 Cal. App.2d 517, 220 P.2d 587). Relief therefrom cannot be found by way of writ of error coram nobis.

[10–12] It is also well settled that lack of effective aid of counsel is not properly raised in a proceeding of this kind. People v. Parseghian, 152 Cal.App.2d 1, 312 P.2d 81; People v. Keller, 151 Cal.App.2d 201, 311 P.2d 14; People v. James, 99 Cal.App.2d 476, 222 P.2d 117; People v. Krout, 90 Cal.App.2d 205, 202 P.2d 635. The suggestion that the deputy public defender and district attorney joined in any way to "wilfully and knowingly" suppress evidence on his behalf, although vague, general and wholly unsupported, in the absence of any ground for such alleged action, can only be the result of an intimation arising out of the fact they are both "state officials." This fact alone is insufficient to constitute any evidence of collusion between them, influence or coercion. In this connection, the court stated in the case of In re Hough, 24 Cal.2d 522, at page 529, 150 P.2d 448, at page 452: "The public defender is free from any restraint or domination by the district attorney or of the prosecuting authorities. He is as free to act in behalf of his client as if he had been regularly employed and retained by the defendant whom he represents." People v. Cole, 152 Cal.App.2d 71, 312 P.2d 701.

For the foregoing reasons the order is affirmed.

Helen REID and B. Louise Merry, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Winifred Alicia LANDON, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 23072.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Dec. 23, 1958.

Action for specific performance of an option agreement and in the alternative for damages for breach. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Santa Barbara County, Ernest D. Wagner, J., in favor of the defendant, the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that the defendant was entitled to rescission of an "option letter agreement" on ground of mistake of fact and that partial rescission of the transaction could be permitted where the agreement was separable from an exchange of deeds.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐931(1)

On plaintiffs' appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant, evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the defendant, indulging all intendments and reasonable inferences in favor of sustaining the findings.

2. Contracts ⇐93(1)

Under statutes permitting trial court to adjudicate rescission of a written contract not any and every mistake is remediable and the "mistake of fact" must not have been caused by the neglect of a legal duty by the claimant, and in determining what conduct amounts to a neglect of duty, there must be an element of carelessness in nearly every case of mistake, and that which does not amount to neglect of a legal duty will not of itself bar rescission, where the mistake does not stem from an original error in judgment. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1577, 1689, 3406.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Mistake of Fact".

3. Contracts ⇐99(1)

Although generally one is presumed to know the meaning of unambiguous language and will be bound by execution of a written instrument including it, rule applies only in the absence of fraud, confidential relationship or circumstances indicating excusable mistake.

4. Contracts ⇐93(1)

In order to authorize rescission of a contract for mistake of fact, mistake must be one material to contract and be such that it animated and controlled conduct of party, go to essence of object in view and not merely be incidental, and court must be satisfied, that but for mistake, complainant would not have assumed obligation from which he seeks to be relieved. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1577, 1689, 3406.

5. Contracts ⇐93(1)

Generally, a mistake of fact authorizing rescission of a contract occurs when a person understands the facts to be other than they are. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1577, 1689, 3406.

6. Appeal and Error ⇐1011(1)

To determine whether a mistake of fact existed, warranting rescission of a contract, the appellate court must accept as conclusive any decision of the trial court in a factual conflict if there is sufficient evidence in the record to support it, and a mere conflict in the testimony as to the mistake does not necessitate a denial of relief. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1577, 1689, 3406.

7. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐18(1)

Where plaintiffs, unknown to defendant, had greater knowledge concerning terms of agreement, giving plaintiff an option to purchase an acre of land, than the defendant and intimate friendship existed between parties and defendant relied on representations of plaintiffs that agreement merely gave the plaintiffs first option to purchase if defendant decided to sell, and had defendant known agreement was not the same she had instructed her counsel to prepare, she would not have signed it and consideration was wholly inadequate, defendant's mistake was due to conduct which constituted neither neglect of duty nor an error in judgment, and defendant was entitled to a rescission of agreement on ground of mistake. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 1577, 1689, 3406.

8. Contracts ⇐171(1)

Whether a contract is susceptible of division depends on its terms, language employed, subject matter covered, nature and purpose of the agreement, its relation to other documents in the transaction and intention of parties as reflected by its terms.

9. Contracts ⇐171(1)

Where the things to be done under a contract are to be done at different times, and the consideration is apportioned to each of the items to be performed, the contract may be severable.

10. Contracts ⇐171(1)

Where defendant never intended to sell the acre sought by plaintiff, an option letter agreement to purchase such acre, which defendant was entitled to rescind because of mistake, was separable from rest of transaction involving an exchange of deeds between parties, where such agreement was not a part of, or connected with, other agreements, and where it could not be said, that deeds' exchange depended upon getting "option" or that exchange of deeds would not have been agreed to unless option had been given.

11. Appeal and Error ⇐1008(3)

The trial court's interpretation of the meaning of an instrument cannot be disturbed on appeal when it appears to be reasonable and consistent with the intention of the parties.

Carleton B. Wood and Paul D. Kolyn, Santa Barbara, for appellants.

Cornwall & Westwick, Santa Barbara, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

Plaintiffs filed an action for specific performance of an option agreement and, in the alternative, for damages for its breach. Defendant's answer set up a general denial and inadequacy of the consideration specified in the agreement and, in addition, alleged that the agreement had been rescinded for fraud and mistake. Plaintiffs appeal from the court's judgment in favor of defendant.

[1] Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to respondent, and indulging all intendments and reasonable inferences in favor of sustaining the findings (Clark v. Redlich, 147 Cal.App.2d 500, 305 P.2d 239), the following is a brief summary of the pertinent facts surrounding the execution of the agreement.

Defendant owned a fifteen-acre ranch in Santa Ynez Valley, upon which she and one Miss Burt resided. As a gift, and for no consideration, defendant deeded one acre thereof to plaintiffs, close friends of hers, who lived and worked in the city. At defendant's invitation, plaintiffs decided to retire to defendant's ranch and open a tearoom. They moved into her home in 1946. Because of the intimate friendship existing among the four women, and defendant wanting them all to share equally with her in the ranch, in May, 1947, without receiving any monetary consideration therefor, she deeded the entire ranch to the four in joint tenancy. At this time plaintiffs relinquished their one acre. Shortly thereafter, plaintiffs constructed a tearoom, hereinafter called Orchard House, on a portion of the premises and opened it for business in the fall of 1947. Miss Burt died shortly thereafter and she is not involved in this litigation. Defendant had no interest in the tearoom and has never claimed any, but in order to help her friends finance it she contributed some of her own money, all of which has been repaid; and with her permission a mortgage was placed on the ranch. Although the ranch was held in joint tenancy, the tearoom was not a joint venture, but was constructed and operated entirely by the two plaintiffs.

In July, 1951, desiring to have in their names alone the land upon which Orchard House was located, plaintiffs proposed to defendant that she deed it to them in return for their deed to the remainder of the ranch. Since defendant at no time had or wanted any interest in Orchard House, she orally agreed with them to exchange deeds. Defendant told them she would have her attorney attend to it. An informal accounting then resulted in the settlement of all accounts, including proration of taxes, insurance, and reimbursement of any money due her; and plaintiffs agreed to pay her $1,000. Thereafter, but during the same conversation, plaintiffs discussed with defendant the one acre lying between Orchard House and the highway.

A factual conflict arises here, but the trial court found, and there is ample evidence thereof in the record, that there was no mention between plaintiffs and defendant of either any option to buy the acre in question or any sale price therefor; and that defendant at no time ever wanted, or intended, to sell the same. The evidence further discloses that after the reciprocal deeds and informal accounting were each discussed and agreed upon plaintiffs then asked defendant if she would sell them the acre between Orchard House and the road. She said she would not and furthermore, it had been leased for five years. Plaintiffs then asked her if they could have the right of first refusal thereon, stating that in return therefor they would give her the right of first refusal on Orchard House. Defendant told them she was not interested in a first refusal right on Orchard House for had she any interest in it she would not have agreed to deed it to them in the first place. She further advised them that she did not want or intend to sell the acre in question. Finally, to keep harmony she agreed to give them a right of first refusal in the event she ever decided to sell. Defendant testified that she at no time agreed to give plaintiffs an option to buy and that the word "option" was never mentioned, nor was the subject of an "option" ever discussed.

Several days thereafter, defendant went alone to her attorney and discussed the various informal agreements, including the proposed reciprocal rights of first refusal, and accordingly asked him to draw the papers. After she left his office, he prepared certain deeds and documents, including a letter agreement which gave plaintiffs a right of first refusal on the acre and defendant a right of first refusal on Orchard House. None of these instruments made any mention of an option to buy.

Thereafter, and without the knowledge of defendant, plaintiffs went to see defendant's attorney who read to them the letter agreement which he had prepared at the request of defendant; and gave them the ranch quitclaim deed to sign. Plaintiffs thereupon told him the letter agreement was in error, that defendant had agreed that they were to have an option to buy the acre instead of only the right of first refusal. Relying on plaintiffs' word, defendant's counsel, without further advising her or consulting with defendant, and without her knowledge, drew a new letter agreement, giving plaintiffs an option to purchase the acre for $200, and defendant a right of first refusal on Orchard House. He mailed the executed quitclaim deed, the grant deed to Orchard House to be signed by defendant, the new option letter agreement and a letter of instruction, not to defendant his client, but to plaintiffs, who first took the documents to their own lawyer for advice and then presented them to defendant for her signature. Defendant had not seen or heard from her counsel since she asked him to prepare the documents and she did not know of the change in the letter agreement; nor did plaintiffs advise her they had been to see her counsel, that they had requested him to change the terms of the letter agreement as opposed to those she asked her lawyer to prepare, that he had done so, or that the document was any different than the one she had originally authorized him to draw. In presenting the letter agreement and other documents to her for her signature, plaintiffs told defendant they were the papers drawn by her lawyer to put their agreement in formal form, and that they all should sign them. Defendant read the documents, including the letter agreement. She saw the word "option" but believed the term to mean the same as a "right of first refusal" upon which they had originally agreed, which she discussed with her counsel and concerning which she asked him to prepare the letter agreement. Since she had not previously discussed any option with plaintiffs, she did not understand the word "option" to mean an option to buy, as explained to her later, or that there was any distinction between that term and the refusal right. She thought she was signing an agreement giving plaintiffs only a right of first refusal.

Relying upon plaintiffs' representations and believing it to be the same document she had instructed her attorney to prepare, she executed the letter agreement, having "utter faith" in her friends and her lawyer. She also signed the grant deed and letter of instruction to her counsel, which incidentally referred to the letter agreement as containing "certain first refusal rights" without any mention of an option. Thereafter, the parties continued to live together for five years during which time no mention was made of any option. However, on August 7, 1956, plaintiffs wrote to defendant advising her they were taking up the option to buy under the letter agreement. This was defendant's first knowledge that the letter agreement actually contained an option to buy, as such. A controversy arose and plaintiffs moved out of defendant's home. Defendant refused to convey the acre and on September 27, 1956, served a notice of rescission of the agreement on plaintiffs.

The trial court found against the material allegations of plaintiffs' complaint and specifically found that the price of $200 for the acre in question was neither reasonable nor adequate consideration therefor, and that the alleged option agreement was neither just nor fair to defendant. Plaintiffs offered no evidence on the issue of damages and the court found they had sustained none. Appellants attack none of these findings. As to the affirmative defenses set up in the answer, the trial court found that plaintiffs' statements to defendant's lawyer that they were to have an option to purchase the acre for $200 were false, although not knowingly and deliberately so; that defendant relied upon the statements in signing the letter agreement and would not otherwise have signed it; and that at all times defendant mistakenly believed she was executing only a right of first refusal. The trial court concluded that the agreement was not fair or equitable to defendant and the consideration for the property was inadequate; that defendant signed the agreement while laboring under a mistake of law and fact; that plaintiffs were not entitled to specific performance thereof or damages; that plaintiff had no right, title or interest in the one acre and defendant had rescinded the agreement on September 27, 1956, on the ground of mistake.

Although plaintiffs have appealed from the entire judgment, they seek to reverse only that portion of the judgment resulting from the trial court's findings and conclusions arising out of the affirmative defenses set up in defendant's answer. They attack only that portion of the judgment declaring the rescission of the option letter agreement and that plaintiffs have no interest, right or title in and to the acre in question. They do not question any other findings or conclusions of the trial court.

Appellants contend the trial court erred in adjudicating the rescission of the option letter agreement because it was not rescindible, and in permitting partial rescission since the agreement was indivisible.

[2] Section 3406, Civil Code, permits the trial court to adjudicate the rescission of a written contract in certain cases mentioned in section 1689, Civil Code, which entitles a party to rescind if his consent was given by "mistake." Appellants' first contention is predicated on the argument that the evidence discloses no "mistake of fact" which would relieve defendant from the terms of the agreement.

It is true that under section 1577, Civil Code, defining "mistake of fact", not any and every mistake is remediable. Of whatever it might consist, the mistake of fact claimed under this section must not have been caused by the neglect of a legal duty on the part of the claimant. In determining what conduct will amount to a neglect of duty the courts recognize there is an element of carelessness in nearly every case of mistake (Van Meter v. Bent Construction Co., 46 Cal.2d 588, 297 P.2d 644) and that which does not amount to the neglect of a legal duty will not of itself bar rescission where the mistake does not stem from an original error in judgment. Brunzell Const. Co. v. G. J. Weisbrod, Inc., 134 Cal.App. 2d 278, 285 P.2d 989; M. F. Kemper Const. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 37 Cal.2d 696, 235 P.2d 7; Klose v. Sequoia Union High School Dist., 118 Cal.App.2d 636, 258 P.2d 515. This rule is particularly applicable in a situation in which false representations were made to induce the execution of the instrument, even though the person making them believed them to be true. The Supreme Court so held in Van Meter v. Bent Construction Co., 46 Cal.2d 588, at page 595, 297 P.2d 644, at page 648, stating: "There is even more reason for not barring a plaintiff from equitable relief where his negligence is due in part to his reliance in good faith upon the false representations of a defendant, although the statements were not made with intent to deceive. * * * A defendant who misrepresents the facts and induces the plaintiff to rely on his statements should not be heard in an equitable action to assert that the reliance was negligent unless plaintiff's conduct, in the light of his intelligence and information, is preposterous or irrational."

[3] In support of their argument that no mistake of fact existed, appellants place great reliance on defendant's testimony that before signing it she read the letter agreement and observed the word "option." They urge that since the term is unambiguous, defendant is presumed to have known its meaning. However, included in her testimony is her statement that although she now knows the meaning of the word "option," she did not then understand it and thought it had the same meaning as a right of first refusal. Although generally one is presumed to know the meaning of unambiguous language and will be bound by the execution of a written instrument including it, the rule applies only in the absence of fraud, confidential relationship or circumstances indicating excusable mistake. Fraters Glass & Paint Co. v. Southwestern Const. Co., 107 Cal.App. 1, 290 P. 45; Wetzstein v. Thomasson, 34 Cal.App.2d 554, 93 P.2d 1028.

[4] Whether the mistake of fact here is one consisting of "an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact present" or a "belief in the present existence of a thing * * * which does not exist" (section 1577, Civil Code), it must be one material to the contract. The mistake must be such that it animated and controlled the conduct of the party; go to the essence of the object in view and not be merely incidental. The court must be satisfied that but for the mistake the complainant would not have assumed the obligation from which he seeks to be relieved (Roller v. California Pacific Title Ins. Co., 92 Cal.App.2d 149, 206 P.2d 694). In Foster v. De Venney, 107 Cal.App. 500, 290 P. 462, the vendor, in a contract of sale, as vendee well knew, was an elderly woman with defective eyesight who relied upon the advice of a third party in business affairs and signed the contract in the mistaken belief it had her advisor's approval. The court found the mistake to be material to the contract and said, at page 504 of 107 Cal. App., at page 463 of 290 P.: "* * * when she signed she believed that the person upon whom she was relying knew the terms of the contract and approved them. Her mistake, therefore, was one material to the contract."

[5] Generally, a mistake of fact occurs when a person understands the facts to be other than they are (People v. Kelly, 35 Cal.App.2d 571, 96 P.2d 372, citing O'Brien v. Det Forende Damphibs Selskab, 94 N. J.L. 244, 246, 109 A. 517; 40 Cor.Jur. 1227). An example is found in Nelson v. Meadville, 19 Cal.App.2d 68, at page 70, 64 P.2d 1116, at page 1117: "If the court was satisfied from all the evidence at the trial that notwithstanding such examination and reading, the plaintiff did not then understand the terms of the instruments and was not aware that they provided for the 25 years' instead of 6 months' option, it was authorized to find that the agreements were accepted by plaintiff under a mistake in this particular. Sullivan v. Moorhead, 99 Cal. 157, 160, 33 P. 796."

[6, 7] To determine whether a mistake of fact existed, we must accept as conclusive any decision of the trial court in a factual conflict if there is sufficient evidence in the record to support it. A mere conflict in the testimony as to the mistake does not necessitate a denial of relief. Nelson v. Meadville, 19 Cal.App.2d 68, 64 P. 2d 1116; Hutchinson v. Ainsworth, 73 Cal. 452, 15 P. 82; Sullivan v. Moorhead, 99 Cal. 157, 33 P. 796. The record before us fully justified the finding of the trial court on the issue of mistake of fact. The testimony of the defendant contained evidence of sufficient substantiality to warrant an adjudication of rescission. We have before us a situation in which plaintiffs, unknown to defendant, had greater knowledge concerning the preparation and the terms of the agreement than she; a circumstance of intimate friendship bordering on a confidential relationship existing between defendant and plaintiffs, trust in plaintiffs, and defendant's reliance upon their false representations. Although the trial court found no fraud to exist, there was clearly an imposition by plaintiffs upon their friend. Had defendant known the agreement was not the same she had instructed her counsel to prepare and its terms were not in accord with her original agreement, she would not have signed it. The $200 consideration was wholly unreasonable and inadequate, the reasonable market value of the acre in July, 1951, being $550 to $800, the enforcement of which would have been unconscionable. It is clear that defendant's mistake was due to conduct that constituted neither a neglect of duty nor an error in judgment and was not "preposterous or irrational," but a natural and reasonable mistake due largely to defendant's reliance on the plaintiffs' representations that the document reflected the terms of her original agreement. Having been told by plaintiffs the letter agreement had been prepared by her counsel, he never having advised her of the change; believing plaintiffs' representations that the document embodied the terms originally agreed upon and not understanding the difference between an "option" and a "first right of refusal," defendant signed the option letter agreement in the mistaken belief that as a matter of fact she was signing quite another document. We conclude that the evidence justified relief from the terms of the agreement (1577 and 1689, Civil Code), and the court's adjudication of defendant's rescission thereof.

[8] A determination of appellants' second contention that the transaction of the parties was single, entire and indivisible and that the option letter agreement, as a part thereof alone, could not be rescinded depends mainly upon the interpretation of the contract and the intention of the parties. Appellants concede that if the option letter agreement is separable from the rest of the transaction, it could be rescinded without disturbing the reciprocal exchange of deeds and the accounting resulting in the payment to defendant of $1,000. Whether a contract is susceptible of division depends on its terms, the language employed, the subject matter covered, the nature and purpose of the agreement, its relation to other documents in the transaction and the intention of the parties as reflected in its terms (Simmons v. California Institute of Technology, 34 Cal.2d 264, 209 P.2d 581; Herzog v. Purdy, 119 Cal. 99, 51 P. 27; Sterling v. Gregory, 149 Cal. 117, 85 P. 305; Conrad v. Thompson, 137 Cal.App.2d 73, 290 P.2d 36).

Substantial evidence in the record discloses that in July, 1951, plaintiffs were originally and primarily interested in obtaining in their names alone the land on which Orchard House was located, that they approached defendant for that purpose and artfully initiated the discussion that resulted in the agreement to execute reciprocal deeds. They proposed to defendant that if she would give them a deed to Orchard House they, in exchange, would deed to her the remainder of the ranch in which they wanted no interest. Although defendant had no particular desire to regain sole title to the ranch, or to retain an interest in Orchard House and was not interested in a right of first refusal on it, otherwise "she wouldn't have deeded it to appellants" in the first place, she was willing to exchange deeds. Thereafter, they discussed the proration of taxes and insurance and repayment of an amount due defendant on her loan, and after an informal accounting, plaintiffs agreed to a payment of $1,000 to make defendant whole. It was after these discussions and agreements the conversation concerning the acre in question took place. Defendant, having no interest in Orchard House, likewise had no interest in selling the acre between it and the highway, did not want or intend to sell it, so told plaintiffs, and had no concern about the subject. Finally, however, "(I)f it pleased them," she told plaintiffs she would agree to reciprocal rights of first refusal although she had no interest in Orchard House and "(I)t was because of them that this was written. They were insistent on it." It is obvious from her testimony that since she never intended to sell the acre she could see no harm in giving them a right of first refusal, and since plaintiffs were insistent, it would keep the friends who lived with her happy. It is also clear that neither the "first right of refusal" on Orchard House nor the same on the acre in question was of any business concern to her and she agreed to them only to preserve harmony and that the reciprocal rights of first refusal at no time entered into their discussion concerning the exchange of deeds or other matters agreed upon, or had any connection with them. It was wholly incidental. That this agreement concerning the right of first refusal was not a part of, or connected with the other agreements, is clearly reflected in the conduct of defendant's counsel. He did not intend the exchange of deeds to be dependent on the letter agreement. Although the deeds themselves contained various agreements relating to water rights, easement for access, etc., and another agreement prorated taxes, removed the encumbrance on the ranch and provided for the $1,000 payment, defendant's counsel prepared the letter agreement on a paper apart from all the others and as the subject of a wholly separate document.

As to its context, the consideration for her "option" is expressly stated in the letter agreement to be defendant's first right of refusal on Orchard House. The document contains its own consideration and has no connection with the exchange of deeds which was reciprocal. It makes no mention of its dependency on or reference to any other document or transaction, and none of the others mention their dependence on the letter agreement. The letter agreement itself embodies the entire agreement between the parties concerning the "option" and first right of refusal, without reference to any accounting between the parties, proration of taxes and insurance, the payment of the $1,000, the release of the encumbrance or any other factor, by expressly providing therein that upon signature, it "shall constitute this letter a contract between us."

[9, 10] Although the deeds were recorded, the letter agreement was neither recorded nor acknowledged. On the record before us it can hardly be said that the deed exchange depended upon getting the "option" or that the exchange of deeds would not have been agreed to unless the option had been given. Plaintiffs were anxious to receive in their names alone a deed to Orchard House. This was their primary object. A later conversation concerning the acre between the house and the road could no more make the exchange of deeds dependent on the "option" agreement than the fact that all the documents were signed at the same time. Furthermore, the deeds were exchanged forthwith, but the "option" could not be exercised until five years later. In addition, where the things to be done under a contract are to be done at different times, and the consideration is apportioned to each of the items to be performed, the contract may be severable. Blonder v. Gentile, 149 Cal.App.2d 869, 309 P.2d 147; Sterling v. Gregory, 149 Cal. 117, 85 P. 305. In the case before us, the consideration is apportioned and none of the documents expressly or even by inference show any interdependence. That such a contract is severable is borne out by the rules set forth in numerous authorities. Pacific Wharf & Storage Co. v. Standard American Dredging Co., 184 Cal. 21, 192 P. 847; In re Marshall's Garage, 2 Cir., 63 F.2d 759.

[11] Implicit in the court's finding that defendant rescinded the option letter agreement and adjudication of the rescission, is the finding that the letter agreement was separate from the other transactions. The trial court's interpretation of the meaning of an instrument cannot be disturbed on appeal when it appears to be reasonable and consistent with the intention of the parties (Hayward Lumber & Investment Co. v. American Nat. Bank, 50 Cal.App.2d 247, 123 P.2d 56).

The record fully justifies the finding that what defendant rescinded was an agreement separate and apart from the other transactions, which could be and was rescinded. The parties were equitably returned to status quo. The rights of both parties in the agreement were cancelled—the option to buy on the one hand and the first right of refusal on the other, and they were left where they would have been had the agreement never been executed.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Roscoe SMITH, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6256.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 30, 1958.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 13, 1959.

Hearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Mark Brandler, J., for unlawfully possessing heroin, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that evidence regarding defendant's offer of a bribe to police officer could be considered as evidence of an admission tending to show consciousness of guilt.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐408

In prosecution for unlawfully possessing heroin, evidence regarding defendant's offer of a bribe to police officer could be considered as evidence of an admission tending to show consciousness of guilt.

2. Poisons ⇐9

In prosecution for unlawfully possessing heroin, whether defendant knew that narcotic was in his automobile was a question of fact for determination by trial judge, and evidence was sufficient to support conviction.

John H. Marshall, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Morris Schachter, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was charged with unlawfully possessing heroin. In a nonjury trial, he was convicted. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant asserts that the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment.

Officer Beeson testified that on November 28, 1957, he received information from a confidential informant that appellant was dealing in narcotics in the area of Jefferson and San Pedro Streets, that appellant met his contacts at a pool hall, and that he gave the stuff to them in front of the pool hall; the informant gave the name of appellant, and described his appearance, and said that he drove a 1947 Cadillac sedan car and that the left rear windwing of the car was missing. He testified further that on November 29, 1957, he received information from another informant that on said day about 6 p. m. appellant had sold twenty "balloons" to five persons at 35th and San Pedro Streets, that appellant always went around the corner for another sale just before the pool hall closed, that appellant had a "stash" at 35th and Trinity Streets, and a "stash" near 29th and Paloma Streets. He testified further that about 12:30 a. m. on November 30 he saw appellant driving a black 1947

Cadillac sedan car and that the left rear windwing of the car was missing; at that time one Williams and one Brown were with appellant, who was driving the car; he (witness) and Officer Appleton followed appellant's car until it stopped near 35th and Trinity Streets; after waiting about a minute, the officers approached the car, and then appellant was in the street walking toward his car; appellant entered the car on the driver's side of the car and shut the door; the appellant and the two other persons (Williams and Brown) were arrested and searched by Officer Appleton; Officer Beeson (witness) was of the opinion that Brown was under the influence of heroin at that time; Officer Appleton removed a paper bag from the lining of the front seat on the driver's side of the car; the bag contained ten "balloons"; when the officer opened the bag, the appellant said: "What is that stuff? I don't know where it came from. I never used dope. I don't have anything to do with it."

Officer Appleton testified that on December 13, 1957 (about two weeks after the arrest), when he was with Officer Brady, he stopped the appellant and "shook him down" to see if he had any narcotics in his possession. Then appellant asked if he might speak to Officer Appleton alone. After Officer Brady had gone to the police car which was about 20 feet away, appellant said to Officer Appleton: "You know, it is getting close to Christmas time. I would like to take care of you and the fellow that was with you the other night." After Officer Appleton asked what he meant, he said, "Well, I would like to give you and your partner some money." When Officer Appleton asked him how much it was worth to him, appellant said, "Well, I would see that each one of you got five bills." Officer Appleton said: "Well when can my partner and I get together with you and talk about it?" Appellant said, "No, I am not going to talk to both of you at the same time because you would have grounds for a bribery case then."

The ten "balloons" were received in evidence. Officer King, a chemist, testified that three of the "balloons" contained heroin.

Appellant testified that prior to his arrest on November 30, he had been to a drive-in cafe and had parked his car there without locking the doors or windows; he was away from the car about half an hour, and there were many persons at the cafe; when he left the cafe, Bloom and Brown were in the front seat of the car with him; after he had stopped near 35th and San Pedro Streets to urinate and had returned to the car, the officers stopped him; that night he was driving a 1947 Cadillac; a window of the car had been broken out, and the lining of the front seat of the car had been torn and was hanging open about six inches; he did not have any narcotics in his possession when he was arrested on November 30, and he did not know anything about narcotics being in his car; on December 13 he did not have a conversation with Officer Appleton such as that related by Officer Appleton concerning the giving of money to the officers.

[1, 2] Appellant argues that there was no proof of knowledge on his part that any narcotic was in the car; and that other persons who were in or near the car could have placed the narcotic there. It was established that heroin was found in the torn lining of the front seat on the driver's side of the car, and the appellant was the owner and driver of the car. The evidence regarding the offer of a bribe by appellant might be considered by the trial judge as an admission tending to show consciousness of guilt. In People v. Velarde, 45 Cal.App. 520, 188 P. 59, it was claimed that the court erred in permitting an arresting officer to testify that soon after the arrest the defendant offered money to the witness (officer) if he would release the defendant. In that case the court said at page 529: "Such evidence, like evidence of flight, is admissible as an admission tending to show consciousness of guilt. It is not to be supposed that one who is innocent, and conscious of the fact, will resort to bribery." In the present case, whether the appellant knew that the narcotic was in his car was a question of fact for the determination of the trial judge. The evidence was sufficient to support the judgment.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

Civ. 23235.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 5, 1959.

Action by city to condemn certain land for use as a part of its public park system. Owners of land lying outside the city limits, but bounded on one side by city boundary line appealed from judgment of condemnation entered by the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Eugene P. Fay, J. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that city had constitutional authority to condemn property outside city limits for park purposes.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇐223

A city had constitutional authority to acquire land for park purposes even though such land was outside its corporate limits. West's Ann.Public Resources Code, §§ 5301–5303.

2. Eminent Domain ⇐196

In eminent domain proceeding by city, evidence sustained finding that public interest and necessity required acquisition by city of certain realty for public park purposes, even though such property was outside corporate limits of the city.

3. Eminent Domain ⇐56

Generally, statutory requirements of necessity as a condition of the exercise of the power of eminent domain are liberally construed by the courts so as not to limit unnecessarily the power of the condemning agency.

4. Eminent Domain ⇐198(2)

Question of whether a taking of property is necessary is for the trier of fact.

5. Eminent Domain ⇐56

In considering question of necessity for a taking under the power of eminent domain, a court may consider immediate future needs of the condemnor, other available facilities, or public economic considerations.

6. Eminent Domain ⇐196

In action by city to condemn land for use as a part of its public park system, evidence sustained finding as to necessity.

7. Eminent Domain ⇐196

In an eminent domain proceeding, condemnor is not required to prove that the acquisition is indispensably necessary, but is required to show merely that the land is reasonably suitable and useful for the improvement.

Arthur J. Manley, Los Angeles, for appellants.

David Rice, City Atty., City of Hawthorne, David R. Denny, Hawthorne, for respondent.

HERNDON, Justice.

The judgment here presented for review condemns certain parcels of land sought by respondent city for use as a part of its public park system. By its ordinance, the City Council declared its determination that the public interest and necessity required the acquisition of certain described parcels of real property aggregating 8.2 acres in area for a public park. Part of this proposed park lies within the corporate limits of the city and part of it lies outside. All the parcels involved in this appeal lie outside the city limits, but each is bounded on one side by the city boundary line.

The adequacy of the compensatory award is not questioned. The questions involved as stated by appellants are as follows: "(1) Can a city be authorized to condemn property outside its limits for park purposes? (2) Did the City of Hawthorne abuse its discretion in seeking to condemn property outside its borders for park purposes? (3) Was there a public necessity for taking the land?"

We have concluded that each of the foregoing questions posed by appellants must be answered adversely to their contentions, and that the judgment at bar is well supported both legally and factually.

[1] First, the power of a city to acquire land for park purposes either by purchase or by condemnation is expressly conferred by section 5301 of the Public Resources Code. Section 5302 of the same code provides that "The land may be within the corporate limits of the city * * * or conveniently adjacent * * *" Section 5303 provides that "The legislative body of any city or city and county may, by ordinance, * * * determine what lands are necessary and proper to be acquired for public parks or boulevards." Appellants do not argue that any of the foregoing statutory provisions is unconstitutional. "There is no constitutional objection to condemnation by a municipal corporation of property wholly outside its corporate limits, if the condemnation has the purpose of serving its inhabitants." 17 Cal.Jur.2d 768, § 231; Sacramento Municipal Utility Dist. v. Pacific G. & E. Co., 72 Cal.App.2d 638, 652, 165 P.2d 741.

[2] Second, the contention that respondent "abused its discretion in seeking to condemn property outside its borders for park purposes" is negated by the well supported finding of the trial court that the public interest and necessity required the acquisition by respondent of the subject real property for public park purposes.

Recognizing that its ordinance would not constitute conclusive evidence of the necessity and propriety of the proposed acquisition of property located outside its territorial limits (Code Civ.Proc. § 1241, subd. 2), respondent assumed the burden of proof in the trial court. Respondent called as an expert witness its Director of Parks and Recreations. His qualifications are not challenged. The testimony of this witness was more than sufficient to sustain the essential findings. He testified to the following effect: that respondent city with a population of some 30,000 had only one public park containing an area of 12.94 acres; that an adequate system of parks would require 1 acre of park for each 100 of population; that the existing park was of such shape and so located that it was neither adequate nor suitable; that the tract, of which the subject parcels are a part, is well suited, properly located and desirable to serve the needs of the community for recreational facilities. The testimony of this witness was neither impeached nor contradicted.

Third, appellants are in error when they argue in effect that the required measure of public necessity is a mechanically absolute necessity, or, to use the language of their brief, that the acquisition must be "indispensably necessary."

[3] Generally, statutory requirements of necessity as a condition of the exercise of the power of eminent domain are liberally construed by the courts so as not to limit unnecessarily the power of the condemning agency. This liberal construction has been applied in several recent cases from other jurisdictions. In Latchis v. State Highway Board, 1957, 120 Vt. 120, 134 A.2d 191, 194, where the statute required "necessity" for condemnation, the court said: "The necessity specified by the statute * * * does not mean an imperative or indispensable or absolute necessity but only that the taking provided for be reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the end in view under the particular circumstances." In Klump v. Cybulski, 1957, 274 Wis. 604, 81 N.W.2d 42, 47, the court said of the statutory requirement: "The 'necessity' required to support condemnation is only a reasonable, and not an absolute or imperative, necessity." And finally in State ex rel. Department of Highways v. Pinson, 1949, 66 Nev. 227, 207 P.2d 1105, 1107, the court said: "* * * the word 'necessity' as used in the statute does not mean an absolute and unconditional necessity as determined by physical causes * * * the word 'necessity' must be deemed to mean a reasonable necessity under all of the circumstances of the particular case."

The cases above reflect the general rule as stated in 29 C.J.S. Eminent Domain § 90, p. 886: "'Necessity,' within the rule that the particular property to be appropriated must be necessary, does not mean an absolute but only a reasonable or practical necessity, such as would combine the greatest benefit to the public with the least inconvenience and expense to the condemning party and property owner consistent with such benefit, although it does not include the taking of land which may merely render the employment of the improvement more convenient or less expensive, or for a necessity which is merely colorable."

In California, as early as 1861, in the leading case of Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229, 251, the Supreme Court had occasion to remark: "To each and every sovereignty belong certain rights which are deemed essential to its existence. * * * When applied to property alone, it is called the dominium eminens, or the right of eminent domain; that is, the right of the sovereignty to use the property of its members for the public good or public necessity. The word necessity, in this connection, is not to be used in too limited a sense; it means a want, an exigency, an expediency, for the interest or safety of the State."

[4] It is, of course, a question for the trier of fact whether a taking is necessary. Spring Valley Water-Works Co. v. Drinkhouse, 92 Cal. 528, 532, 28 P. 681; see 17 Cal.Jur.2d 748–749, § 200.

[5] And, in considering the question of necessity, the court may consider immediate future needs (Kern County High School Dist. v. McDonald, 180 Cal. 7, 14, 179 P. 180), other available facilities (cf. Rialto Irrigating Dist. v. Brandon, 103 Cal. 384, 387, 37 P. 484; Spring Valley Water Works v. San Mateo Water Works, 64 Cal. 123, 28 P. 447), or public economic considerations. Sacramento Municipal Utility Dist. v. Pacific G. & E. Co., supra, 72 Cal.App.2d 638, 654, 165 P.2d 741; see 17 Cal.Jur.2d 748–750, §§ 200–201.

In Montebello Unified School Dist. of Los Angeles v. Keay, 55 Cal.App.2d 839, 842–844, 131 P.2d 384, 386, 387, following an adverse judgment in the trial court, the defendant landowners in a condemnation proceeding appealed, contending that the "* * * parcel of land being condemned was not located in the manner most compatible with the greatest public good and least private injury" as required by statute. Code Civ.Proc. § 1242. Rejecting appellant's contentions, which by implication, attacked the finding that "* * * the public interest and necessity require the acquisition of said property * * *" the court said: "'In all cases where land is required for public use, the state, or its agents in charge of such use' (quoting again from section 1242, Code of Civil Procedure) 'may survey and locate the same,' and in doing so 'the condemning party is vested with wide discretion.' * * * '* * * "we think that when an attempt is made to show that the location made is unnecessarily injurious the proof ought to be clear and convincing, for otherwise no location could ever be made. If the first selection made on behalf of the public could be set aside on slight or doubtful proof, a second selection would be set aside in the same manner, and so ad infinitum. The improvement could never be secured, because, whatever location was proposed, it could be defeated by showing another just as good."'

"In this case it is the school district, acting through its governing board that is the agent of the state in charge of the use for which the land was sought. Civ.Code, § 1001; School Code, §§ 6.102 and 6.103. Its act, in selecting the particular site herein sought, 'should, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be presumed correct and lawful.'"

[6, 7] In reviewing the evidence, which amply supported the disputed finding as to necessity, the court observed that the statute required "* * * a balancing of the greatest public good and the least private injury. A parcel of land with objectionable features is not to be chosen just because poorer land is available." As stated in 1 Nichols, Eminent Domain, 391–392, § 4.11 [4], "* * * it is generally held, necessity does not signify impossibility of constructing the improvement for which the power has been granted without taking the land in question, but merely requires that the land be reasonably suitable and useful for the improvement." See Spring Valley Water Works v. San Mateo Water Works, supra, 64 Cal. 123, 28 P. 447; Rialto Irrigation District v. Brandon, supra, 103 Cal. 384, 387, 37 P. 484; City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 253, 27 P. 604.

The judgment is affirmed.

Crim. 2852.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 31, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of first degree murder. The Superior Court, Solano County, Joseph M. Raines, J., entered judgment, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that direct evidence of a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill is not required to sustain first degree murder conviction, and that deliberation and premeditation may be inferred from proof of such facts and circumstances as will furnish a reasonable foundation for such an inference, and that evidence sustained first degree murder conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

Eileen M. Sullivan, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by Doris H. Maier, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

By indictment, defendant-appellant Charles Woods was accused by the grand jury of Solano County of the crime of murder in that on September 18, 1955, in Vallejo, California, he murdered Nellie Driskell. On November 28th, appellant was arraigned and entered a plea of not guilty. On December 5th, the court granted his motion to enter an additional plea of not guilty by reason of insanity. On January 16, 1956, the court granted his motion to withdraw his pleas and to enter a new and different plea. Thereupon, he personally and through counsel entered a plea of guilty. The court received evidence to determine the degree of the crime, thereafter pronounced a judgment of conviction of murder in the first degree, and sentenced appellant to the state prison for life. Throughout the proceedings appellant was represented by counsel.

The sole contention raised by appellant is that as a matter of law the evidence is insufficient to justify the court's finding him to be guilty of murder in the first degree. He asks this court to reduce the degree of the offense to murder of the second degree. A thorough examination of the entire record, however, convinces us that the trial court's finding of murder in the first degree is supported and that the judgment herein appealed from must be affirmed.

On this appeal this court, at appellant's request, appointed Eileen M. Sullivan, to represent appellant. Counsel has filed on his behalf herein a persuasive brief in support of the contention that the evidence is insufficient to support a finding of first degree murder. The attention of the court has been directed to the discussion of first degree murder appearing in People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 183, 163 P.2d 8, 19, wherein the Supreme Court said:

> "The adjective 'deliberate' means 'formed, arrived at, or determined upon as a result of careful thought and weighing of considerations; as a deliberate judgment or plan; carried on coolly and steadily, esp. according to a preconceived design; * * * Given to weighing facts and arguments with a view to a choice or decision; careful in considering the consequences of a step; * * * unhurried; * * * Characterized by reflection; dispassionate; not rash.' (Webster's New Int. Dist., (2d ed.).) The word is an antonym of 'Hasty, impetuous, rash, impulsive.' (Id.) * * * The verb 'premeditate' means 'To think on, and revolve in the mind, beforehand; to contrive and design previously.' (Webster's New Int. Dict., (2d ed.).)"

Our attention is also directed to the approval in People v. Bender of a statement in People v. Howard, 211 Cal. 322, 329, 295 P. 333, 336, 71 A.L.R. 1385, reading:

> "* * * 'When the killing is proved to have been committed by the defendant, and nothing further is shown, the presumption of law is that it was malicious and an act of murder; but in such a case the verdict should be murder of the second degree, and not murder of the first degree.'"

Counsel cites a number of other decisions discussing the degree of proof required to establish murder of the first degree where the degree of the crime depends upon the presence or absence of premeditation, as is the case here. We feel compelled, however, to say that the record here does not present a case of murder of the second degree as a matter of law; that the proof does no more than to require the trial court in the exercise of its discretion to determine the degree of the crime to have been either first or second degree without power in an appellate court to reverse the conclusion of the trial court that appellant was guilty of murder in the first degree.

Because of the seriousness of the issue presented we think we are justified in relating the evidence in considerable detail. Defendant and appellant Charles Woods shot Nellie Driskell with an automatic pistol shortly before 10:15 a. m. on Sunday, September 18th at the Johnson home in Vallejo, where she lived with her mother and stepfather and other relatives. Woods and Nellie Driskell had been keeping company about two years. Nellie was divorced.

Woods had given two extrajudicial statements, one to deputy Richey of the sheriff's office at 1:05 p. m. on the day of the shooting and the other to the district attorney at 12:30 p. m. on September 19th. The two statements were read into evidence.

On Sunday morning Nellie's stepfather, John Johnson, and his young son Rickey met Woods and accompanied him in his car to the Johnson home. When Johnson entered the living room, Grace Byas, Nellie's cousin, was sitting in a chair, Nellie was sitting on a daybed, and Leonard Walker, an airman from Travis Air Force base, was asleep on a chesterfield.

Johnson testified: He (Johnson) went directly into the bathroom and about ten minutes later heard three shots, "bing, bing, bing." He ran immediately into the living room. With a pistol in his hand pointed at Johnson, Woods walked backwards out the front door. Nellie was lying on the floor against the kitchen door.

Grace Byas testified: Woods came into the living room through the front entrance as Johnson handed her some fly spray he had bought. Woods sat down beside Nellie. Grace sprayed some of the spray on Nellie who got up and opened a window and then closed it at Grace's insistence. Grace continued spraying and talking about the spray. Woods, pointing his gun at Nellie, got up, said "Grace, call the cops." Nellie said, "Charles, don't point that gun toward me." Thereupon, Grace ran toward the back door. Grace heard three shots, the first when she was in the kitchen, the second from the back yard and the third from beside the house next door. Grace estimated that appellant Woods entered the living room three to five minutes after Johnson and was there twenty or twenty-five minutes before the shooting commenced.

Walker testified: He was awakened by a scream and the sound of running footsteps, heard a shot and saw Nellie fall against the wall. Appellant pointed his gun toward Nellie and shot. That was the third shot. Immediately thereafter Johnson stuck his head around the bedroom door, and Woods raised the automatic pistol and said, "Come out, Bubby, I want you, too." Johnson stepped back and Woods turned around and walked out.

Grace Byas testified further: The preceding Monday when Grace was on lower Georgia Street she saw Nellie get up off the street. Nellie said that Woods had pushed her and she fell, that he had humiliated and embarrassed her and would not have an opportunity to do that again. Regarding this occurrence Woods testified that he and Nellie had been drinking and had quarreled over the fact that Nellie ran out of gas when she drove appellant's car to work and had no money to buy gas; that Nellie started to walk away; that he pulled her and she slipped and fell on the sidewalk.

Woods testified further: He saw Nellie on Thursday night and she told him she was sleepy and tired and had to work the next morning. On Friday night he went to the 126 Club where Nellie was working in the kitchen alone. She saw the gun in his belt and asked, "What are you doing with that?" He adjusted the gun in his belt and she said, "Leave it there." Then he told her he would see her later and left.

Friday night Woods went to Nellie's home. A deputy had been called and was there when Woods arrived. The officer told him that Nellie was afraid and asked him if he had "pulled" a gun on her at the restaurant. Woods replied that he had not "drawn" a gun on Nellie. The officer told appellant to stay away from Nellie's house unless he had an invitation to go there.

On cross-examination Woods was asked what his purpose was in going to see Nellie Friday night after the incident in the restaurant. He answered, "Well, I didn't know what she wanted." He was asked further if he had given any consideration on Sunday morning to the warning given by the deputy sheriff. He said he had and concluded, "Well, there was nobody angry. She had time to cool off."

Johnson and Grace Byas each testified that neither detected the odor of alcohol an appellant's breath that morning. Grace said there was no drinking during the period of time appellant was in the living room and that he appeared disturbed. Walker testified that on that morning Woods appeared to have been drinking and looked somewhat haggard and sleepy. Another witness said that Woods appeared sober. The court asked Woods, "Would you say you were drunk or sober, I will put it that way, at the moment of the shooting?" Woods answered, "I was feeling pretty good."

In his statement to the district attorney Woods said that he usually had a gun when he went down town.

Woods testified further as follows: He had been separated from his wife about three years and he and Nellie planned to marry after he obtained a divorce. They had lived together about four months as man and wife in Berkeley. In answer to his inquiries the first time he telephoned on Sunday morning, Nellie said she was not "mad at" him. He told her he wanted to talk with her and would go to see her. She said, "I am still in bed," and hung up. Then he went to Cora's, a club on Georgia Street, where he and three others drank a pint and a half of whiskey. From Cora's he telephoned Nellie again. He told her, "I will see you later," and she said, "I will see you sometime." His purpose in going to see Nellie that morning was to reconcile their differences. He did not feel that their relationship was ended. He did not intend to hurt her in any way. If Nellie refused, then he would go back and try again. He was in love with Nellie. What took place in the Johnson living room that morning was rather hazy in his memory. When he arrived he sat down beside Nellie. In answer to his question she said she was not angry with him. Grace was talking about fly spray. As well as he could remember, Nellie pushed him and he lost control of himself. He has a hot temper. Grace ran into the kitchen. He did not know why he started shooting. When he left his residence that morning he took the gun from under the front seat of his car and put it in his belt. It always had a shell in the chamber. He had no particular reason for carrying the automatic pistol with him on that particular day.

Woods said in his statement to the district attorney that he pulled the gun out, fired it at Nellie and that he was under the impression he was trying to hit her. "I just lost my head. I couldn't think there for a minute. In fact, I loved her. I felt that I couldn't give her up. I couldn't afford to lose her." In his statement to deputy Richey, Woods said that after Nellie fell on the floor he thought she was dead and drove off in his car. His car stopped running and he abandoned it. He then walked to a fountain or club where he unsuccessfully tried to telephone the police.

[1] We think the proper rule to apply to the foregoing evidence is that stated in People v. Byrd, 42 Cal.2d 200, at page 213, 266 P.2d 505, 512, reading as follows:

> "* * * Direct evidence of a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill is not required to sustain a conviction of first degree murder. Deliberation and premeditation may be inferred from proof of such facts and circumstances as will furnish a reasonable foundation for such an inference."

[2, 3] From the evidence the court could conclude this was a case, not uncommon, of a jealous and rejected lover who had determined he would kill his inamorata rather than let her go. Woods had "drawn a gun" on Nellie and for that had been warned by an officer to leave her alone, not to go to the house where she lived until invited. Notwithstanding this admonition he went, and being with Johnson who lived there he managed to get into the house. He was armed. His only attempt at justification of this is his statement he often carried a gun. This the trial court was not bound to accept. He was there for some time under pretense of peace. When rebuffed he killed. The court could well conclude this was premeditated murder.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action arising out of truck-automobile collision which occurred when driver of westbound truck allegedly lost control of vehicle and it crossed over a divider into eastbound lane and was struck by eastbound automobile. From an order of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Joseph L. Call, J., granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial, the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable and it was error to instruct that no inference of negligence arises because an accident has happened and to instruct on unavoidable accident, and giving of plaintiff's instruction that instruction on res ipsa loquitur might appear to constitute exception to general rule that happening of accident does not support an inference of negligence but that instruction on res ipsa loquitur was based upon a special doctrine of law which might be applied under special circumstances and that when all of such conditions were found to exist they begot inference of negligence and proximate cause, did not preclude plaintiff from raising such objection.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐977(3, 5)
New Trial ⇐6

Granting or denying of a motion for a new trial rests, to a great extent, within sound discretion of trial court and will be disturbed on appeal only where it is clearly shown that there has been an abuse of that discretion.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐978(1)

Granting of a new trial on ground that error was committed in giving an instruction can be reversed only if questioned instruction was absolutely accurate and under no reasonable interpretation could possibly have misled or confused the jury.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐978(1)

On appeal from an order granting a new trial on ground that error was committed in giving an instruction, sole issue before reviewing court is whether trial court has abused its discretion and whether giving of erroneous instruction was prejudicial need not be determined by reviewing court.

4. Negligence ⇐138(2)

Where uncontradicted evidence warrants application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, it is error to give a "mere fact of an accident" instruction.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐882(12)
Automobiles ⇐242(2), 246(22, 60)

In action arising out of truck-automobile collision which occurred when driver of westbound truck allegedly lost control of vehicle and it crossed over a divider into eastbound lane and was struck by eastbound automobile, doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable and it was error to instruct that no inference of negligence arises because an accident has happened and to instruct on unavoidable accident, and giving of plaintiff's instruction that instruction on res ipsa loquitur might appear to constitute exception to general rule that happening of accident does not support an inference of negligence but that instruction on res ipsa loquitur was based upon a special doctrine of law which might be applied under special circumstances and that when all of such conditions were found to exist they begot inference of negligence and proximate cause, did not preclude plaintiff from raising such objection.

6. Negligence ⇐140

It is error to give unavoidable accident instruction in negligence case where plaintiff has burden of proving that complained-of injury was proximately caused by defendant's negligence where ordinary instructions on negligence and proximate cause adequately so informed the jury.

Veatch, Thomas & Carlson and Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for appellants.

William B. Murrish, Hollywood, Robert A. Cushman, Los Angeles, for respondents.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

Judgment was entered in favor of defendants at the conclusion of a jury trial in which plaintiffs sought to recover damages for personal injuries. Plaintiffs' motion for a new trial based on the ground that error was committed in giving certain instructions was granted and defendants appeal from the order granting the new trial.

Defendant Wadlow was employed by the defendant company as a gasoline truck driver. While driving a fully loaded company truck westbound on the Hollywood Freeway, Wadlow lost control of the vehicle, which subsequently crossed over a divider into the eastbound traffic. The automobile in which the plaintiffs were riding, which was eastbound, crashed into the rear of defendants' truck as it passed across the eastbound lanes. Wadlow, following the accident, was operated on for acute thrombosis of the right common carotid artery. In was defendants' position that Wadlow suffered a sudden paralyzing stroke without previous warning and that this was the cause of the accident. Plaintiffs, on the other hand, offered evidence that the stroke was not the cause of the accident but rather a result thereof. The evidence was also in conflict on other points. For example, there was conflicting testimony as to when the truck went out of control with respect to where it crossed the divider; whether Wadlow was slumped over the steering wheel and unable to use both his hands; and as to the cause and the time of the tire blowout on the defendants' truck.

The jury was instructed in part as follows: "In law we recognize what is termed an unavoidable or inevitable accident. These terms do not mean literally that it was not possible for such an accident to be avoided. They simply denote an accident that occurred without having been proximately caused by negligence." BAJI 134. "The mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not support an inference that some party or any party to this action, was negligent." BAJI 131. "The mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not give rise to a legal inference that it was caused by negligence or that any party to this action was negligent." BAJI 131.1. "From the happening of the accident involved in this case as established by the evidence, an inference arises that the proximate cause of the occurrence was some negligent conduct on the part of the defendant. That inference itself is a form of evidence, * * *" BAJI 206–B. The first three of these instructions were given at the defendants' request and the last upon plaintiffs' request.

[1, 2] The granting or denying of a motion for a new trial rests, to a great extent, with the sound discretion of the trial court and will be disturbed on appeal only where it is clearly shown that there has been an abuse of that discretion. Shaw v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 50 Cal. 2d 153, 323 P.2d 391; Brandelius v. City and County of San Francisco, 47 Cal.2d 729, 733, 306 P.2d 432; Mazzotta v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 25 Cal.2d 165, 169, 153 P.2d 338. As stated in the Shaw case, supra, at page 159 of 50 Cal.2d, at page 394 of 323 P.2d, "[t]he determination of a motion for a new trial rests so completely within the court's discretion that its action will not be disturbed unless a manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion clearly appears, and the order will be affirmed if it may be sustained on any ground, although the reviewing court might have ruled differently in the first instance. Brandelius v. City and County of San Francisco, 47 Cal.2d 729, 733–734, 306 P.2d 432. In the Brandelius case it was stated that the granting of a new trial could be reversed 'only if * * * the questioned instruction was absolutely accurate and under no reasonable interpretation could possibly have misled or confused the jury.' [Citation.]"

[3] Therefore, if the complained of instructions were in any sense misleading or confusing, the trial court's granting of a new trial must be affirmed. As to the question of the prejudicial effect of the instructions, assuming there was error, the following quotation from the Brandelius case, supra, 47 Cal.2d at page 744, 306 P.2d at page 441, is controlling: "Whether the giving of this erroneous instruction was prejudicial need not be determined by this court on this appeal from the order granting a new trial. It is true that section 4½ of article VI of our Constitution should control the action of the trial court in considering a motion for a new trial, but when the trial court has determined that the error in the instructions was prejudicial and has therefore granted the motion, the sole issue before the appellate court is whether the trial court has abused its discretion. (Citations.)"

Plaintiffs contend that (1) error was committed in giving BAJI 131 and 131.1, supra, in conjunction with and instruction on res ipsa loquitur in a case where res ipsa loquitur was applicable under the undisputed facts, and (2) it was error to instruct on unavoidable accident.

[4, 5] Our Supreme Court has held where uncontradicted evidence warrants the application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, it is error to give the "mere fact of an accident" instruction (BAJI 131, 131.1). Alarid v. Vanier, 50 Cal.2d 617, 327 P.2d 897; Jensen v. Minard, 44 Cal. 2d 325, 329, 282 P.2d 7. In the case at bar, although the evidence is in conflict as to certain aspects of the case, the factual situation necessary to bring the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur into operation exists without contradiction. See Zentz v. Coca Cola Bottling Co., 39 Cal.2d 436, 441, 247 P.2d 344; Michener v. Hutton, 203 Cal. 604, 607, 265 P. 238, 59 A.L.R. 480. In Shaw v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 50 Cal. 2d 156, 323 P.2d 391, 393, the court stated that "[i]n the absence of a proper explanation of the relationship between the two instructions, the words 'mere' and 'considered alone' might not prevent laymen from erroneously concluding that under no view of the evidence could an inference of negligence be drawn from the happening of the accident. And it has been held that where both instructions were given without explanation, an order granting a new trial should be affirmed. Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation, 23 Cal. 2d 256, 261–262, 143 P.2d 929; England v. Hospital of Good Samaritan, 22 Cal. App.2d 226, 230, 70 P.2d 692; Ellis v. Jewett, 18 Cal.App.2d 629, 634, 64 P.2d 432."

Defendants maintain that there was sufficient explanation within the rule of the Shaw case in that, at plaintiffs' request, the court instructed as follows: "Now the instruction just given [on res ipsa loquitur] may appear to constitute an exception to the general rule that the mere happening of an accident does not support an inference of negligence. The instruction, however, is based upon a special doctrine of the law which may be applied only under special circumstances." Then, after setting forth these circumstances, the instruction concludes: "When all these conditions are found to have existed, they beget the inference of negligence and proximate cause concerning which I have instructed you * * *." BAJI 206–C.

In a case where the undisputed evidence does not establish the applicability of res ipsa loquitur doctrine as in the Shaw case, supra, both parties are entitled to instructions consistent with their respective contentions, and it is not error to give BAJI 131 in conjunction with a res ipsa instruction so long as the jury are clearly informed that if they find res ipsa applicable, the mere happening of an accident rule is not to govern. In such a situation, misconception and confusion are avoided. Bazzoli v. Nance's Sanitarium, Inc., 109 Cal.App.2d 232, 240 P.2d 672; Seedborg v. Lakewood Gardens, etc., Ass'n, 105 Cal.App.2d 449, 233 P.2d 943. However, in a case, as the one at bar, where the evidence discloses without conflict that res ipsa loquitur is applicable, the jury is likely to be confused by the giving of the contradictory instruction and the saving grace of the explanatory instruction in those cases in which there is a conflict as to whether the doctrine is applicable has no such effect where the inference of negligence indisputably arises. The jury in the case at bar were first told that no inference of negligence arises because an accident happened; then they were told, due to the evidence in this case, such an inference does arise; finally, the jury was given the explanatory instruction above quoted. This latter instruction could not expunge the confusion which would naturally result in the minds of the jurors from the giving of the first two instructions for they were not told to choose between the two rules, but could have reasonably believed, as both were instructed upon, that somehow both rules were to apply or that they were in fact to make a choice even though not so directed. Consequently, as a result of this confusion, it is possible the jury did not give any weight to the res ipsa inference.

Plaintiffs were in no way precluded from raising the above objection by reason of the fact they requested the giving of BAJI 206–C which, incidentally, referred to the general rule that the mere happening of an accident does not support an inference of negligence. BAJI 206–C did not result in instructing the jury to the same effect as did BAJI 131 and 131.1.

Plaintiffs also questioned the giving of the unavoidable accident instruction (BAJI 134), such being the first instruction quoted in the statement of facts, supra. Butigan v. Yellow Cab Co., 49 Cal.2d 652, 657–660, 320 P.2d 500, expressly held the giving of the unavoidable accident instruction was error in that such instruction served no useful purpose and was confusing. See also Grant v. Mueller, 160 Cal. App.2d 804, 325 P.2d 680; Britton v. Gunderson, 160 Cal.App.2d 66, 324 P.2d 938. Defendants, however, attempt to take the instant case out of the operation of the Butigan decision. First, it is argued, as Butigan was decided after the judgment was rendered in the instant case, it should not be here applied but the prior rule which approved such instruction should instead govern this decision. The obvious answer is that the Butigan decision itself was given retroactive effect, as is common with judicial changes in the law.

Next, defendants suggest that the error sought to be avoided in the Butigan case was caused by the inclusion of additional language in the unavoidable accident instruction there given which was omitted in the present case.[1] That this position is

1. Only the italicized portion of this instruction was given in the instant case.

"In law we recognize what is termed an unavoidable or inevitable accident. These terms do not mean literally that it was not possible for such an accident to be avoided. They simply denote an accident that occurred without having been proximately caused by negligence. Even if such an accident could have been avoided by the exercise of exceptional foresight, skill, or caution, still, no one may be held liable for the injuries resulting from it. Bear without foundation is evidenced by the following quotations from Butigan where language common to the instruction given in the instant case is criticized: "The statement in the quoted instruction on 'unavoidable or inevitable accident' that these terms 'simply denote an accident that occurred without having been proximately caused by negligence' informs the jury that the question of unavoidability or inevitability of an accident arises only where the plaintiff fails to sustain his burden of proving that the defendant's negligence caused the accident. Since the ordinary instructions on negligence and proximate cause sufficiently show that the plaintiff must sustain his burden of proof on these issues in order to recover, the instruction on unavoidable accident serves no useful purpose." 49 Cal.2d at page 659, 320 P.2d at page 504. "The instruction is not only unnecessary, but it is also confusing. When the jurors are told that 'in law we recognize what is termed an unavoidable or inevitable accident' they may get the impression that unavoidability is an issue to be decided and that, if proved, it constitutes a separate ground of nonliability of the defendant. Thus they may be misled as to the proper manner of determining liability, that is, solely on the basis of negligence and proximate causation." 49 Cal.2d at page 660, 320 P.2d at page 505.

Finally, defendants assert that the Supreme Court in the Butigan case expressly stated that in special situations it would be proper to give an unavoidable accident instruction, and that the instant case represents such a special situation. It is true that the Supreme Court excepted certain situations from the ruling of that case, for at page 660 of 49 Cal.2d, at page 505 of 320 P.2d the court stated: "There are situations where it may be necessary to explain the meaning of the words 'unavoidable accident,' for example, where a defendant is charged with a violation of section 602 of the Vehicle Code. That statute makes it a misdemeanor for a person to drive certain vehicles for more than a limited number of hours but provides that the 'section does not apply in any case of casualty or unavoidable accident or an act of God.' It * * * would be proper to explain to the jury the meaning of the terms contained in the exception. The definition of the words 'unavoidable accident' as used in section 602 would not involve any of the problems which arise in connection with the challenged instruction." (Emphasis added.)

[6] While we do not find it necessary to decide whether a special situation within the contemplation of the above quotation is limited to a case where a statute makes reference to an unavoidable accident (see Rayner v. Ramirez, 159 Cal.App. 2d 372, 324 P.2d 83), it is clear that it is error to give the unavoidable accident instruction in a negligence case where plaintiff has the burden of proving that the complained of injury was proximately caused by the defendant's negligence where the ordinary instructions on negligence and proximate cause adequately so inform the jury, for this is the precise holding of our Supreme Court. See Alarid v. Vanier, 50 Cal.2d 617, 327 P.2d 897.

Therefore, as there was error in instructing the jury, it cannot be said that the trial court abused its discretion in granting a new trial and the order appealed from is affirmed.

ASHBURN and HERNDON, JJ., concur.

in mind, however, that if any defendant failed to exercise ordinary care, and if that failure was a proximate cause of the accident in question, then, whether or not such conduct was the sole cause, the accident was not unavoidable, and the defense of unavoidability may not be maintained by that defendant." 49 Cal. 2d at page 657, 320 P.2d at page 503.

Martin HILLHOUSE, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Vernon WOLF, Defendant and Appellant.

Appeal No. 61.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Fresno County, California.

Dec. 26, 1958.

Action for conversion of a sulphuring machine. The Municipal Court, Fresno Judicial District, Fresno County, George W. Huffman, J., entered judgment in favor of plaintiff and defendant appealed. The Superior Court, Appellate Department, DeWolf, J., held that where defendant in 1953, commenced using a sulphuring machine which had been accidentally left in his possession by plaintiff-owner at time defendant acquired possession of a ranch from owner, statute of limitations commenced to run from date of such unauthorized use, and therefore, action commenced by owner in 1957 was time barred, even though owner did not demand return of the machine until 1957.

Judgment reversed and entered in favor of defendant.

1. Bailment ⇐11

Where a sulphuring machine was accidentally left in a party's possession by the owner, the party was bound to take charge of the machine, but had no right to use the machine without the consent of the owner. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1815, 1816, 1835.

2. Trover and Conversion ⇐10

Where a sulphuring machine was accidentally left in a party's possession by the owner, act of the party in using the machine without the consent of the owner constituted an act of conversion. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1835.

3. Limitation of Actions ⇐95(1), 104(1)

The statute of limitations commences to run at the time of the conversion, and not when the owner of the property acquires knowledge of the acts constituting the conversion, although an exception to the rule exists when it is shown that an offending party voluntarily conceals a cause of action, in which case the statute is deemed not to become operative until the aggrieved party discovers the existence of the cause of action.

4. Limitation of Actions ⇐55(5), 66(14)

Where defendant in 1953, commenced using a sulphuring machine which had been accidentally left in his possession by plaintiff-owner at time defendant acquired possession of a ranch from owner, statute of limitations commenced to run at time of such unauthorized use, and therefore, conversion action commenced by owner in 1957 was time-barred, even though owner did not demand return of the machine until 1957. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1815, 1816, 1835.

Wilbur K. Kessler, Kerman, for appellant.

Maurice E. Smith, of the firm of Lerrigo, Thuesen, Thompson & Thompson, Fresno, for respondent.

DE WOLF, Judge.

This is an action in conversion. The trial court gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff from which the defendant has taken this appeal.

The facts in this case are not in dispute. In February, 1951, plaintiff sold a ranch to the defendant who then went into possession of it. The sale of the ranch did not include the selling or purchasing of any of the personal property on the premises. At the time plaintiff turned over possession of the ranch there was left behind a sulphuring machine which is the subject matter of this lawsuit.

The defendant first discovered this sulphuring machine several months after taking possession of the ranch. He found it in an old barn surrounded by sweat boxes. The barn in which he found the machine was in a dilapidated condition, so in the fall of 1951 he moved it to a more sheltered place.

In 1952, the defendant repaired the machine and made an addition to it at a cost of about $75. In 1953, the defendant used the sulphuring machine for his own purposes in his farm work. His next and last use of the sulphuring machine was in 1956.

From the time defendant purchased the ranch in February, 1951, the defendant did not see the plaintiff until about May of 1957, at which time the plaintiff appeared and demanded possession of his sulphuring machine. This demand the defendant refused.

On October 10, 1957, the plaintiff filed an action in the Municipal Court, alleging that the defendant had converted his sulphuring machine. The defendant defended the action on the ground that plaintiff's action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The trial court granted a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and it is from that judgment that the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[1] The facts of this case clearly show the defendant to have been an involuntary bailee of the sulphuring machine, the machine having been accidently left in his possession by the plaintiff. Civil Code, § 1815, subd. 1. As such the defendant was bound to take charge of the machine. C.C. § 1816. But the defendant had no right to use the machine without the consent of the owner. C.C. § 1835. That the defendant did use the machine without the consent of the plaintiff (owner) is conceded.

[2] The act of the defendant in using the machine in 1953 was an act of conversion because a bailee such as the defendant was had no right to use the machine at all. C.C. § 1835; 7 Cal.Jur.2d 630.

It is plaintiff's position that the Statute of Limitations did not commence to run until the defendant refused his demand to return the machine, the demand having been made in May, 1957. On the other hand, defendant contends that the statute began to run, at the very latest, in 1953 when he used the machine.

[3] We are compelled to agree with the defendant. The law of this state provides that the Statute of Limitations commences to run at the time of the conversion and not when the owner of the property acquires knowledge of the acts constituting the conversion. Rose v. Dunk-Harbison Co., 7 Cal.App.2d 502, 46 P.2d 242; First National Bank v. Thompson, 60 Cal.App. 2d 79, 140 P.2d 75; 1 Witkin's Cal.Proc. 646. An exception to this rule exists when it is shown that an offending party voluntarily conceals a cause of action, in which case the statute is deemed not to become operative until the aggrieved party discovers the existence of the cause of action. Pashley v. Pacific Electric Railway Co., 25 Cal.2d 226, 153 P.2d 325. However, the exception is not applicable as the facts in this case in no way show that the defendant voluntarily attempted to conceal from the plaintiff the fact that the plaintiff had a cause of action.

At the trial of the action in the trial court, it was stipulated that the present value of the sulphur machine was $150.

[4] It is our conclusion that the trial judge was in error when he did not rule that the action of the plaintiff was barred by the Statute of Limitations. At the very latest it would appear that the defendant committed an action of conversion in 1953, and it is from that time that the Statute of Limitations started running; consequently, at the time plaintiff filed his action in October, 1957, the action was barred.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed, and

It is ordered that judgment be entered in favor of the defendant.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al., Petitioners,

v.

SUPERIOR COURT of THE COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES et al., Respondents,

Los Angeles Dodgers, Inc. (a Corporation), et al., Real Parties in Interest.

L. A. 25113.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Jan. 13, 1959.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 11, 1959.

Proceeding in prohibition by a city to restrain the superior court from enforcing a preliminary injunction or taking further action in a taxpayers suit to enjoin the certification of the result of a referendum election. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that writ of prohibition was an appropriate remedy; and that a contract by which the city agreed to convey to a ball club land for the erection of a stadium and to use its best efforts to acquire additional land and to employ its best efforts to have eliminated a deed provision restricting the use of certain property acquired from the Housing Authority and to vacate existing public streets was not invalid.

Writ issued.

1. Prohibition ⇐10(1)

The writ of prohibition is an appropriate remedy to arrest the proceedings of a court when there is not a plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law and when the proceedings of the court are without or in excess of its jurisdiction. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1102, 1103.

2. Prohibition ⇐23

The absence of another adequate remedy was determined by the Supreme Court when it granted an alternative writ of prohibition. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1102, 1103.

3. Prohibition ⇐10(1)

To permit the issuance of prohibition, there need not be a lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter or parties in a fundamental sense but only that there be a want or excess of power of the court as defined by the statute or by the rules developed under the doctrine of stare decisis. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1102, 1103.

4. Injunction ⇐85(1)

A court acts in excess of its jurisdiction if it attempts to enjoin the enactment or enforcement of a valid public statute or ordinance.

5. Prohibition ⇐5(3)

A proceeding in prohibition seeking to restrain the Superior Court from enforcing a preliminary injunction in a taxpayer's suit to enjoin certification of a result of a referendum election would lie to test the validity of the ordinance where there was no evidence presenting a substantial question of fact upon the material issues. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 526, subd. 7, 1102, 1103; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3423, subd. 7.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇐225(4)

Adequacy of a consideration for a contract entered into by a municipality with respect to conveyance to a ball club of land for erection of a stadium and which involved the comparative values of the promises of the parties is a matter which in the absence of abuse of discretion rests in the judgment and discretion of the city council.

7. Contracts ⇐10(5)
Municipal Corporations ⇐225(5)

A contract by a city to convey land to a ball club for the purpose of erection of a stadium thereon was not invalid as lacking mutuality in that there was no absolute obligation requiring the club to purchase additional land to be used for recreational purposes or buying it or to pay any amount therefor, nor was the contract defective because it provided that a violation of the agreement by the club regarding its obligations concerning recreation facilities would not affect any transfers of land theretofore made.

8. Contracts ⇐25

Generally, if an essential element of a promise is reserved for the future agreement of both parties the promise gives rise to no legal obligation until such a future agreement is made.

3. Contracts ⇐25

Enforceability of a contract containing a promise to agree depends upon relative importance and the severability of the matter left to the future, and is a question of degree, and may be settled by determining whether the indefinite promise is so essential to the bargain that inability to enforce that promise strictly according to its terms would make unfair, the enforcement of the remainder of the agreement.

10. Contracts ⇐25

Where the matters left for future agreement are unessential, each party will be forced to accept a reasonable determination of the unsettled point or if possible the unsettled point may be left unperformed and the remainder of the contract be enforced.

11. Municipal Corporations ⇐225(5)

A contract by city to convey land to a ball club for the erection of a baseball stadium was not invalid because it left to the future agreement of the parties the location and size of site to be used for oil drilling, nature of recreation facilities to be constructed and maintained for twenty years and the rental to be paid to the city in the event the club exercised its right to use a former ball field prior to the completion of the stadium.

12. Municipal Corporations ⇐225(1)

In considering whether a contract by city to convey land to a ball club for erection of a stadium has a proper public purpose the court must view the contract as a whole, and the fact that some of the provisions may be of benefit only to the baseball club is immaterial provided the city receives benefits which serve legitimate public purposes.

13. Municipal Corporations ⇐225(5)

A contract by city to convey land to a ball club for erection of a stadium was not invalid on the ground that it was not for a proper "public purpose" in view of the transfer of a former ball field from the club to the city and the construction by the club on a parcel of recreation facilities to be used by the city for twenty years together with maintenance thereof.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Public Purpose".

14. Municipal Corporations ⇐225(5)

A contract by city to convey land to a ball club for erection of a stadium thereon when viewed as a whole was not inconsistent because the contract declared that property was no longer required for the use of the city and the recital that 40 acres of the total of the 300 to be conveyed to the club were to be used by the city for needed recreational facilities.

15. Municipal Corporations ⇐225(5)

In determining the validity of contract by city to convey land to a ball club for erection of a stadium, testimony of a council member that no steps were taken by the council acting as a party to determine whether the land was no longer required for the use of the city was properly rejected where the testimony would be insufficient to overcome the ordinance declaration that the land was no longer required by the city.

16. Municipal Corporations ⇐225(3)

In determining the validity of a contract by city to convey land to a ball club for erection of a stadium, testimony of the general manager of the city department of parks that the department was actively seeking and acquiring land to be used for playground and recreational purposes and that the property conveyed was suitable for such purposes was properly rejected.

17. Municipal Corporations ⇐225(5), 870, 871

A city conveying land to a ball club for erection of a stadium could properly agree in return for legitimate benefits it would receive under the contract, that it would use its best efforts to acquire additional land to convey as part of the consideration to be furnished by it, even though the city was in effect agreeing to purchase land and to sell it immediately thereafter to a private corporation, on the ground that the additional land was to be acquired for a proper "public purpose", nor was the contract invalid on the ground that the city was seeking to purchase property for the purpose of making a gift of it to a private enterprise or otherwise improperly using city funds to aid private persons.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Public Purpose".

18. Municipal Corporations ⇐225(3)

Where land acquired from housing authority by deed contained a restriction that it was to be used for public purposes only or residential development or residential subdivision, agreement was not construable as prohibiting the city from selling the property, and under the city charter, when city no longer needed the property, it could sell the property to a ball club for use as a stadium under such terms as the council prescribed by the ordinance.

19. Municipal Corporations ⇐225(2)

An agreement by city to convey property to a ball club for erection of a stadium was not invalid as attempting to make an illegal delegation to a private corporation of the duties of the city council, by agreeing that prior to passage of title the city would spend $2,000,000 to place the property in a proper condition to convey to the club in a manner designated by the club, where the city could not be required to make any expenditures not in accord with the general purposes of the contract.

20. Contracts ⇐153

Contracts must be construed whenever possible so as to make them valid rather than invalid.

21. Municipal Corporations ⇐225(5)

Contract by city to convey land to a ball club for erection of a stadium was not invalid on the ground that the city illegally agreed to vacate streets in the property which would no longer be needed for street purposes, where the agreement was to apply only to such streets as the city might subsequently determine to be no longer needed for street purposes, and the agreement was not invalid as purporting to govern the exercise of the power of the city to determine what streets might no longer be necessary, since the city was merely agreeing to do an act which it should do regardless of the contract.

22. Municipal Corporations ⇐225(2)

The contract of a city to convey land to a ball club for the erection of a stadium thereon was not invalid because of provision requiring the city to spend up to $2,000,000 to place the property in a proper condition to convey to the club on the ground that the provision had the effect of delegating to the club, the power to designate which streets were to be eliminated.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

By this proceeding in prohibition the city of Los Angeles seeks to restrain the superior court from enforcing a preliminary injunction or taking further action in a taxpayer's suit to enjoin certification of the result of a referendum election.

The city council adopted an ordinance authorizing execution of a contract between the city and the Brooklyn National League Baseball Club, Inc., which provided, among other things, for the exchange of certain properties and for the ball club to erect a stadium and procure the transfer from Brooklyn to Los Angeles of the franchise of the major league baseball club known as the "Dodgers." Following the filing of a referendary petition, the city council voted to place the ordinance on the ballot for approval or disapproval by the voters, and at the ensuing election a majority of the voters favored adoption of the ordinance. Thereafter respondent superior court granted a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction restraining the city council from declaring the result of the election.

Two prior actions were filed by some of the real parties in interest. One was brought to secure a declaration that the ordinance and contract were invalid and to enjoin any proceedings thereunder (Ruben v. City of Los Angeles, L.A. Superior Court No. 687210); in the other similar relief was sought together with mandamus and prohibition (Kirshbaum v. Housing Authority, L.A. Superior Court No. 699077). Judgments were rendered enjoining the execution of the contract, and appeals therefrom are now pending in this court. In a third action filed by Kirshbaum against the city, a preliminary injunction was issued enjoining certification of the result of the referendum election. (Kirshbaum v. City of Los Angeles, L.A. Superior Court No. 703023.) This proceeding was then brought by the city to prohibit the superior court from enforcing the preliminary injunction or from taking further steps in the third action.

[1–3] The writ of prohibition is an appropriate remedy to arrest the proceedings of a court when there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law and when the proceedings of the court are without or in excess of its jurisdiction. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1102, 1103. The absence of another adequate remedy was determined by this court when we granted an alternative writ. Cf. Atkinson v. Superior Court, 49 Cal.2d 338, 342, 316 P.2d 960; Bowles v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.2d 574, 582, 283 P.2d 704. To permit the issuance of prohibition it is not necessary that there be a lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter or parties in the fundamental sense but only that there be a want or excess of the power of the court as defined by statute or by rules developed and followed under the doctrine of stare decisis. Tide Water Associated Oil Co. v. Superior Court, 43 Cal.2d 815, 821, 279 P.2d 35; Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 287 et seq., 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715.

Subdivision 7 of section 3423 of the Civil Code and the second subdivision 7 of section 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure provide that an injunction cannot be granted to "prevent a legislative act by a municipal corporation."

Subdivision 4 of section 3423 of the Civil Code and the second subdivision 4 of section 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure similarly provide that an injunction cannot be granted to "prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for the public benefit." The basis for these statutory provisions is to be found in the doctrine of separation of powers of government into three independent departments. See Reclamation Dist. No. 1500 v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 672, 682, 154 P. 845; Glide v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 21, 24 et seq., 81 P. 225.

[4, 5] A court acts in excess of its jurisdiction if it attempts to enjoin the enactment or enforcement of a valid public statute or ordinance. Financial Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court, 45 Cal.2d 395, 402, 289 P.2d 233; Santa Clara County v. Superior Court, 33 Cal.2d 552, 557–559, 203 P.2d 1; Reclamation Dist. No. 1500 v. Superior Court, supra, 171 Cal. 672, 676, 681–682, 154 P. 845; Wheeler v. Herbert, 152 Cal. 224, 241, 92 P. 353; Glide v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 21, 23 et seq., 81 P. 225; Loftis v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.App.2d 346, 352 et seq., 77 P.2d 491; State Board of Equalization v. Superior Court, 5 Cal. App.2d 374, 378, 42 P.2d 1076; cf. Moore v. Superior Court, 6 Cal.2d 421, 424, 57 P. 2d 1314. Although prohibition should not issue where the propriety of the trial court's action depends upon questions of fact (Brock v. Superior Court, 11 Cal.2d 682, 687 et seq., 81 P.2d 931; Agricultural Prorate Comm. v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.2d 550, 586–587, 55 P.2d 495), none of the persons attacking the contract has pointed to any evidence which would present a substantial question of fact upon a material issue. It follows that prohibition will lie to test the validity of the ordinance.

The contract, as set forth in Ordinance No. 110,204, provides that the city will convey to the ball club 185 acres, more or less, of land presently owned by it in Chavez Ravine and will use its best efforts to acquire at a reasonable cost and convey additional land to make a total of about 300 acres, reserving, among other things, an oil drilling site not to exceed five acres, the location of the site to be mutually agreed upon by the parties. Title to 40 acres of the 300, to be designated by the ball club, is to be retained by the city for 20 years to assure performance by the ball club of its obligations to provide and maintain certain recreational facilities during that period, after which title is to be conveyed to the club.

The city is to employ its best efforts to have eliminated or modified a deed provision restricting the use of certain property acquired by the city from the Los Angeles Housing Authority, provided that if the city is unable to have the restriction altered to permit the use contemplated by the ball club, the contract shall be of no further effect. Upon conveyance of the property to the club, existing public streets therein no longer needed for street purposes will be vacated, and the city, upon demand of the ball club, is to commence proceedings to vacate such streets and deliver title to the club. Prior to passage of title to any of the 300 acres, the city is to spend up to but not to exceed $2,000,000, in the manner to be designated by the ball club, to place such property in a proper condition to convey to the ball club. The city also is to perform certain acts with respect to construction of additional streets, rezoning the property, and obtaining funds from the county for access roads.

The ball club agrees to construct on the Chavez Ravine property, at its expense, a modern baseball stadium seating at least 50,000 people. It will move to Los Angeles "the present Brooklyn National League franchise and ball team known as the 'Dodgers.'" Further, the club will convey to the city the land and improvements known as Wrigley Field, reserving the right to use of the field until the stadium is completed, conditioned upon payment of a rental to be mutually agreed upon.

Recreational facilities costing not over $500,000 are to be constructed by the ball club on the 40-acre portion of the Chavez Ravine property referred to above, such facilities to be mutually agreed upon prior to conveyance of the property. The club is to maintain the recreational facilities on the 40-acre parcel at an annual cost of $60,000, and in the event the maintenance does not amount to that much in any year, the club is to pay the city the difference between $60,000 and the actual cost. The ball club is under no obligation to furnish personnel for the operation of the recreational facilities, and, with certain exceptions, the city is to have control of them.

In addition, the agreement contains a number of recitals of fact and declarations of policy to the general effect that the contract will be beneficial to the city and that the property which the city now owns and is to convey to the ball club is no longer required for the use of the city.

The city reserves all mineral rights in the Chavez Ravine property, and it is to acquire all mineral rights in Wrigley Field. The agreement directs that one-half of the receipts from the mineral rights is to be placed by the city in a special trust fund and expended solely for the purpose of providing and maintaining recreational facilities to promote the youth program of the ball club, the location and type of facilities to be mutually agreed upon by the parties. The ball club has given formal notice to the city that the club has waived and relinquished all rights conferred upon it under these provisions and has assigned to the city all such rights. The provisions being solely for the benefit of the club, it could properly waive them, and there is no longer any reason to treat them as parts of the contract.

[6] The benefits to be received by the city are apparent, and the adequacy of the consideration, which involves the comparative values of the promises of the parties, is a matter which, in the absence of abuse of discretion, rests in the judgment and discretion of the city council. Cf. Wehrle v. Board of W. & P. Com'rs, 211 Cal. 70, 72–73, 293 P. 67; Nickerson v. County of San Bernardino, 179 Cal. 518, 521 et seq., 177 P. 465; Burns v. American Casualty Co., 127 Cal.App.2d 198, 206, 273 P.2d 605.

[7] There is no merit to the argument that the contract lacks mutuality in that there is no absolute obligation requiring the ball club to purchase the 40 acres to be used for recreational purposes or binding it to pay any amount therefor. The contract expressly declares that at the end of the 20-year period during which the ball club is to operate the recreational facilities, title to the 40 acres shall be conveyed to the club "without further consideration" if all the terms of the agreement pertaining to the facilities have been fully performed. The consideration for this conveyance obviously is to be found in the various obligations which must be performed by the ball club whether or not it accepts the 40 acres. The contract likewise is not defective because it provides that a violation of the agreement by the ball club regarding its obligations concerning the recreational facilities will not affect any transfers of land theretofore made. The city is amply protected, in the event of such a default, by the fact that it may continue to retain title to the 40 acres and, in addition, may maintain an action for damages for breach of contract.

[8–10] The contract is claimed to be void because it contains promises to agree in the future. The general rule is that if an "essential element" of a promise is reserved for the future agreement of both parties, the promise gives rise to no legal obligation until such future agreement is made. Ablett v. Clauson, 43 Cal.2d 280, 284–285, 272 P.2d 753. The enforceability of a contract containing a promise to agree depends upon the relative importance and the severability of the matter left to the future; it is a question of degree and may be settled by determining whether the indefinite promise is so essential to the bargain that inability to enforce that promise strictly according to its terms would make unfair the enforcement of the remainder of the agreement. See 1 Williston on Contracts (3rd ed. 1957) §§ 45, 48, pp. 152, 156–158. See also Belcher v. Williams, 151 Cal.App.2d 615, 620, 311 P.2d 861. Where the matters left for future agreement are unessential, each party will be forced to accept a reasonable determination of the unsettled point or if possible the unsettled point may be left unperformed and the remainder of the contract be enforced. Wilson v. Wilson, 96 Cal.App.2d 589, 593–595, 216 P.2d 104; see 1 Williston on Contracts (3rd ed. 1957) § 48, pp. 156–158.

[11] The contract leaves to the future agreement of the parties the location and size, within five acres, of the site to be used for oil drilling, the nature of the recreational facilities to be constructed and maintained for 20 years on the 40-acre parcel, and the rental to be paid to the city in the event the ball club exercises its right to use Wrigley Field prior to completion of the stadium. The reservation of an oil drilling site and the establishment and maintenance of the recreational facilities on the 40-acre parcel are, of course, important features of the contract, but, in our opinion, the uncertainty with respect to the exact location and size of the drilling site and the details with respect to the recreational facilities are matters which should not be treated as rendering the contract void. There is no indication that the city and the ball club are unable to come to an agreement as to them, and, if the parties cannot do so, the court may determine the matters within the test of reasonableness referred to above, in accordance with the general purposes of the contract. Similarly, the court could fix a reasonable rental for Wrigley Field, if this should ever become necessary.

[12, 13] In considering whether the contract made by the city has a proper public purpose, we must view the contract as a whole, and the fact that some of the provisions may be of benefit only to the baseball club is immaterial, provided the city receives benefits which serve legitimate public purposes. Cf. City of Oakland v. Williams, 206 Cal. 315, 319 et seq., 274 P. 328; County of Los Angeles v. La Fuente, 20 Cal.2d 870, 876–877, 129 P.2d 378. The transfer of Wrigley Field from the ball club to the city and the construction by the club on the 40-acre parcel of recreational facilities to be used by the city for 20 years, together with maintenance of the facilities for that period, are obviously for proper public purposes. In view of these direct benefits, it is unnecessary for us to consider whether the city could properly expend public funds for the various indirect benefits which the public will receive under the contract, such as the bringing to the city of a major league baseball club, the construction by the club of its new stadium, and the return of the Chavez Ravine property to the tax rolls.

[14] When the contract is viewed as a whole, there is no actual inconsistency, as argued, between the declaration, on the one hand, that the 185 acres of Chavez Ravine property now owned by the city are no longer required for the use of the city and the recital, on the other hand, that 40 acres of the total of 300 to be conveyed to the club are to be used by the city for needed recreational facilities. The provisions, when read together, may properly be interpreted as meaning that the city has no need for the Chavez Ravine property with the exception of the use of the 40-acre parcel over a 20-year period for the recreational facilities referred to in the contract. As we have seen, the city retains control of and title to that 40-acre parcel for the purpose of obtaining the needed facilities. It is difficult to see anything improper in an agreement by which a city, owning more land than it needs, conveys some of that land in exchange for the construction and maintenance of needed facilities for use by the city over a 20-year period. It is immaterial that the facilities are to be located on the land which the city thus sells; in fact, under the circumstances involved here, it is of advantage to the city that the facilities are to be so located because this enables the city to retain title for the 20-year period as a means of securing the performance of the promises of the ball club regarding the construction and maintenance of the facilities.

[15, 16] Kirshbaum, in action No. 699077, offered to prove by the testimony of a council member that no steps were taken by the council acting as a body to determine whether the land was no longer required for the use of the city. The offer was rejected by the trial court upon the ground that the minutes of the council are the best evidence until there is a dispute as to their correctness, and our attention has not been called to any portion of the minutes which would support Kirshbaum's assertion or to any evidence that the minutes are incorrect. Moreover, the offered evidence, if admitted, would be insufficient to overcome the declaration in the ordinance that the land to be conveyed by the city was no longer required by the city, since the offer does not show any fraud or abuse of discretion by the council. Likewise insufficient to overcome the declaration are Kirshbaum's offers to prove by the testimony of the general manager of the city's department of recreation and parks that this department was actively seeking and acquiring land to be used for playground and recreational purposes and that the Chavez Ravine property is suitable for such purposes.

[17] In our opinion the city can properly agree that, in return for legitimate benefits which it will receive under the contract, it will use its best efforts to acquire additional land to convey as part of the consideration to be furnished by it, even though the city is in effect agreeing to purchase land for the purpose of selling it immediately thereafter to a private corporation. If the city had so desired, it clearly could have added to the contract price, in cash, the reasonable value of the additional land which it agreed to use its best efforts to acquire, and there is no essential difference if the city, instead of paying the amount in cash, uses the money to acquire property and then conveys the property as part of the contract consideration. Section 2(11) (1) of the city charter authorizes the city to buy "anything useful or convenient" in connection with the exercise of the city's powers. While a city may not purchase land when no public use or purpose is involved, in the present case the additional land is to be acquired for a proper public purpose, namely, that of furnishing the type of contract consideration which enables the city to enter into a bargain which it deems advantageous. The contract does not require the city to use eminent domain to acquire the additional land, and we need not determine whether that method could be employed for such a purpose. This case does not present the situation of a municipal government which seeks to purchase property for the purpose of making a gift of it to a private enterprise or of otherwise improperly using city funds to aid private persons, because the property which the city is to endeavor to buy, if acquired, will not be given away to anyone but will be used as part of the consideration of a contract entered into for a legitimate public purpose.

[18] It is contended that the city does not have power to sell to a private corporation land held by the city subject to a public purpose restriction imposed by the grantor's deed to the city and that the city has no power to enter into an agreement with a private corporation obligating the city to extinguish such a restriction. This contention relates to land acquired from the Housing Authority of the City of Los Angeles by a deed containing a restriction reading, in part, "to be used for public purpose only; and not to be used directly or indirectly by the City of Los Angeles, or its grantees, successors in interest, assigns, or any other person or persons whatsoever claiming by, through or under the City of Los Angeles, for a period of 20 years from and after the date hereof, for residential development or residential subdivision." The city, as we have seen, agrees to use its best efforts to have the restriction eliminated or modified to permit the use contemplated by the club, and it is provided that if the city is unable to have the restriction changed, the contract shall be of no further effect.

The grantor did not intend by this provision to prohibit the city from selling the property; the provision contains no such limitation and plainly contemplates the possibility of a sale in that the restriction is made applicable to use of the property by the "grantees" and "assigns" of the city. Under section 393 of the charter, when the city no longer requires the use of property, it may, with certain exceptions not pertinent here, sell the property upon such terms and conditions as the council prescribes by ordinance. In view of the declaration by the council that the city no longer requires the use of the property, the city's promise to use its best efforts to have the deed restriction removed cannot be said to constitute an illegal agreement binding the city council to exercise its judgment in the future. Any possibility that the Housing Authority may have a right to complain of a termination of the public use upon a sale by the city will disappear if the city is able to obtain the Housing Authority's consent to eliminate the restriction. Similarly, such a consent will obviate any difficulty with respect to the restriction against residential use of the property. Whether or not the Housing Authority has power to execute, and is willing to execute, a release of its rights under the deed restriction is a question which relates to the performance rather than to the validity of the contract and is not before us in this proceeding.

[19] We find no merit to the claim that the city has attempted to make an illegal delegation to a private corporation of the duties of the city council by agreeing that, prior to passage of title, the city shall spend $2,000,000 to place the Chavez Ravine property "in a proper condition to convey to" the ball club, the manner in which the money will be spent for such purpose to be designated by the club. It seems obvious that the city could not be required by the ball club, under this provision, to make any expenditures not in accord with the general purposes of the contract. The city could have paid the money to the club outright, as part of the contract consideration, without retaining any control over the manner or purpose for which the money should be spent, and the arrangement by which the city will keep possession of the money until it is spent and, in addition, retain some control of how it is spent, is an advantage to the city which does not militate against the validity of the contract.

[20, 21] It is contended that the city is illegally agreeing to vacate streets under the provision that the existing public streets in the Chavez Ravine property which will no longer be needed for present or future street purposes will be vacated and the city will, upon demand of the ball club, commence proceedings to vacate the streets. It is an elementary rule that contracts must be construed, whenever possible, so as to make them valid rather than invalid, and the provision, when read as a whole, may be construed as not imposing on the city any improper obligation. The clear implication is that the agreement will apply only to such streets as the city may subsequently determine to be no longer needed for street purposes. The agreement does not purport to control or govern the exercise of the power to determine what streets may no longer be necessary but to provide that, when the determination is made, the city will commence the required statutory procedure.

It is to the advantage of a city and the public to vacate a street which is no longer needed and thereby relieve the city of the expense and responsibility of maintaining it in proper and safe condition. By this part of the contract the city is merely agreeing to do an act which it should do regardless of contract once it determines that there is no longer a need for a particular street. Cases which declare that agreements to vacate or sell a street are invalid as being attempts to evade the statutory modes of procedure and safeguards or to bind local officials in advance as to the exercise of their judgment in the future, are clearly distinguishable. See County of San Diego v. California Water etc. Co., 30 Cal.2d 817, 824, 186 P.2d 124, 175 A.L.R. 747; People v. City of Los Angeles, 62 Cal.App. 781, 218 P. 63.

[22] Ruben asserts, in opposition to the conclusion we have reached with respect to vacation of streets, that we must also consider the paragraph which provides that the city shall spend up to $2,000,000 to place the property in a proper condition to convey to the ball club and that the manner in which the money is to be spent is to be designated by the club. He urges that this paragraph, when read together with the provision relating to the vacation of streets, has the effect of delegating to the club the power to designate which streets are to be eliminated. The contract, however, does not purport to authorize either the city or the ball club to use any of the $2,000,000 to remove a street where such removal has not been duly authorized in appropriate vacation proceedings. If it should be determined in such a proceeding that a particular street remained necessary for public use as a street, the stadium obviously could not be built at that location, but this possibility does not go to the validity of the contract. At most it might render performance impossible, a matter which is not now before us.

Let the writ issue as prayed.

Alfred W. GOMES, Appellant,
v.
Selma F. E. BYRNE, Respondent.

Sac. 6919.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
Jan. 9, 1959.

Salesman's action against dog owner for injuries inflicted by dog. The Superior Court, Butte County, Dudley G. McGregor, J., entered judgment for dog owner and salesman appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence J., held that where door to door salesman approached owner's home which was enclosed by fence and had been followed along fence by dog which had barked at salesman prior to salesman's opening gate and entering yard in which dog was confined, salesman voluntarily exposed himself to an obvious hazard and assumed risk of being bitten by dog.

Affirmed.

Opinion 321 P.2d 495 vacated.

Carter, Schauer and McComb, JJ., dissented.

1. Animals ⇐71

In adopting so-called "dog bite" statute legislature did not tend to render inapplicable such defenses as assumption of risk or wilfully invited injury, and those defenses are available in all proper cases. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3342; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

2. Negligence ⇐105

Elements of defense of assumption of risk are, a person's knowledge and appreciation of danger involved and his voluntary acceptance of risk.

3. Animals ⇐71

If plaintiff, bitten by dog after having opened gate into enclosed yard in which dog was kept, had recognized danger that dog would bite him, plaintiff's knowledge was sufficient to constitute assumption of risk although plaintiff did not know whether or not dog had a history of viciousness. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3342; West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

4. Animals ⇐71

Where salesman, approaching yard which was enclosed by fence, was followed along fence by dog which had barked at him for some 50 feet and salesman then opened gate and entered yard, he voluntarily exposed himself to the obvious hazard and assumed risk of being bitten. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3342.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff sought damages under the so-called Dog Bite Statute (Civ.Code, § 3342) for injuries inflicted by defendant's dog. Following a trial without a jury, judgment was entered for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from said judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The latter order is not appealable and therefore the purported appeal therefrom must be dismissed. Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

Defendant is a practical nurse and uses her premises as a private nursing home. At the time of the occurrence, the house and yard were surrounded by a wire fence with a closed gate. A path led from the gate to the front door. No signs were posted on the premises indicating that peddlers or solicitors were unwelcome, nor was there any sign warning of a vicious dog.

Plaintiff, a salesman for the Fuller Brush Company, was canvassing in the neighborhood of defendant's home. As he walked along the sidewalk approaching the gate leading to defendant's door, the dog in the enclosed yard followed him along the inside of the fence for about fifty feet, barking continuously all the way. Plaintiff nevertheless opened the gate and walked into the yard, whereupon the dog bit him on the right lower leg, causing a puncture wound and superficial abrasions. Defendant, having heard the dog barking, went to the door and met plaintiff as he came up the steps. Plaintiff said that the dog had bitten him; defendant expressed her sorrow at the mishap; and plaintiff responded with the statement that it was one of "the hazards of the game." Plaintiff gave defendant a catalogue and left. The next day plaintiff again called at defendant's home and at that time defendant bought some merchandise from him.

Section 3342 of the Civil Code provides: "The owner of any dog is liable for the damages suffered by any person who is bitten by the dog while in a public place or lawfully in a private place, including the property of the owner of the dog, regardless of the former viciousness of the dog or the owner's knowledge of such viciousness. A person is lawfully upon the private property of such owner within the meaning of this section when he is on such property * * * upon the invitation, express or implied, of the owner."

The trial court's denial of recovery was based upon findings that (1) plaintiff was not a business visitor or invitee on the premises; (2) that plaintiff was negligent in entering defendant's premises; and (3) that plaintiff assumed the risk. Since we have concluded that the record sustains the finding that plaintiff assumed the risk, it is unnecessary to consider his contention that he was lawfully on the premises or his further contention that contributory negligence is not a bar to recovery under the Dog Bite Statute.

[1] In adopting section 3342 of the Civil Code, the Legislature did not intend to render inapplicable such defenses as assumption of risk or wilfully invited injury. Therefore those defenses are available in all proper cases. See Smythe v. Schacht, 93 Cal.App.2d 315, 321, 209 P.2d 114; see also 2 Harper and James, The Law of Torts, (1956) § 14.12, pp. 843–845.

Plaintiff contends that the defense of assumption of risk is not available here because there was no showing that the dog had a history of viciousness or that plaintiff knew of that history. He argues that the knowledge required of a plaintiff before he can be held to have assumed the risk is identical to that which had been required to impose liability on the owner of the dog prior to the enactment of section 3342 of the Civil Code. We have concluded that plaintiff's position cannot be sustained.

[2, 3] The "elements of the defense of assumption of risk are a person's knowledge and appreciation of the danger involved and his voluntary acceptance of the risk." Prescott v. Ralph's Grocery Co., 42 Cal.2d 158, 162, 265 P.2d 904, 906; emphasis added. Thus if plaintiff recognized the danger that the dog would bite him, his knowledge was sufficient although he did not know whether the dog had a history of viciousness.

Plaintiff claims, however, that there was no showing that he had actual knowledge of that danger. It may be assumed for the purpose of this discussion that the defense of assumption of risk is not available unless the plaintiff had actual knowledge, as distinguished from constructive notice, of the risk. See Prescott v. Ralph's Grocery Co., supra, 42 Cal.2d 158, 162, 265 P.2d 904; Sloboden v. Time Oil Co., 131 Cal.App.2d 557, 562, 281 P.2d 85; 35 Cal. Jur.2d, Negligence, § 277, p. 823; Comment, 10 So.Cal.L.Rev. 67, 74. But actual knowledge of the risk may be inferred from the circumstances. Ching Yee v. Dy Foon, 143 Cal.App.2d 129, 138–139, 299 P.2d 668.

[4] Here the dog had followed plaintiff along the fence for fifty feet, barking all the way. Under these circumstances, the risk was obvious. Notwithstanding the dog's display of hostility, plaintiff elected to leave his place of safety upon the public sidewalk and to enter upon defendant's enclosed private property. In so doing, he voluntarily exposed himself to the obvious hazard. It was a calculated risk on plaintiff's part, or, as he expressed it, one of the "hazards of the game." We therefore conclude that the trial court's finding that plaintiff assumed that risk is amply supported by the evidence.

The purported appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed, and the judgment is affirmed.

I dissent.

I find nothing in the record to support the trial court's finding that the plaintiff assumed the risk. As the majority correctly points out, one of the elements of the defense of assumption of risk is knowledge of the danger involved. This element is clearly absent in this case.

The majority has held that "the risk was obvious." The sole predicate for its position is that "the dog had followed plaintiff along the fence for fifty feet, barking all the way." To hold that this single piece of evidence is sufficient to show that the plaintiff had knowledge of the danger is unrealistic and erroneous.

One does not have to be an expert on dogs to know that a dog that barks is not necessarily vicious or dangerous. When a dog barks and runs alongside of a passer-by, more often than not it is only being playful and seeking attention. Action of this sort by a dog, barring other circumstances, is not a sufficient basis from which to draw an inference that the passer-by has actual knowledge that the dog might bite. It is so common and harmless as to not alarm him at all.

There are additional facts which vitiate such an inference. The dog was a small dog about a foot high and was not one of the breeds known to be either vicious by nature or normally thought to be vicious or dangerous. Throughout the trial, in fact, defendant's counsel, apparently attempting to underplay the fact that the dog bit the plaintiff, referred to it as "the little dog." Also, no signs had been posted warning of the dog. As has been pointed out above, the only evidence upon which the finding of actual knowledge is based is that the dog barked at the plaintiff. Under all the circumstances, this is not sufficient.

The finding of the trial court that the plaintiff was negligent in entering defendant's premises is similarly erroneous. The record is devoid of evidence indicating that the plaintiff was negligent in any way. However, even if there was such evidence, it appears that ordinary contributory negligence is not a defense to liability under Civil Code section 3342. See, Smythe v. Schacht, 93 Cal.App.2d 315, 322, 209 P.2d 114.

The third finding that the trial court made a basis for denial of recovery was that the plaintiff was not a business visitor or invitee on the premises. This also appears to be incorrect.

Salesmen are considered invitees when they come to a place which they have good reason to believe is open for possible dealings with them. (Prosser, Law of Torts, p. 457.) In this case the plaintiff was selling products which he could reasonably believe would be useful to the defendant, and in which she would be interested. Moreover, defendant had not posted signs indicating that peddlers and salesmen were unwelcome. In light of these facts, the plaintiff was justified in believing that defendant's premises were open to him. "Every man, by implication invites others to come to his house as they may have proper occasion either of business or courtesy or information, etc." Duval v. Rowell, 124 Cal.App.2d Supp. 897, 901, 269 P.2d 249, 251; DeLay v. Braun, 63 Cal.App.2d 8, 10, 146 P.2d 32; Cambou v. Marty, 98 Cal.App. 598, 601, 277 P. 365. It seems clear that the plaintiff was lawfully on the defendant's premises.

I would reverse the judgment.

v.

STAR PAVING COMPANY (a Corporation), Appellant.

L. A. 25024.

Supreme Court of California,

In Bank.

Dec. 31, 1958.

General contractor brought action against paving subcontractor to recover damages because of refusal of subcontractor to perform paving according to bid which subcontractor submitted to general contractor. The Superior Court, Kern County, William L. Bradshaw, J., entered judgment adverse to the subcontractor, and the subcontractor appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that where paving subcontractor submitted bid for paving work to general contractor, and bid was silent with respect to right of paving subcontractor to revoke the bid, and general contractor used the bid in making its own successful bid on the main contract, general contractor's reliance on paving subcontractor's bid made the bid irrevocable, and that fact that subcontractor's bid was result of mistake was no defense.

Affirmed.

Opinion, 323 P.2d 477 vacated.

1. Contracts ⇦1

Where there was no evidence that subcontractor offered to make its paving bid, which it submitted to general contractor, irrevocable in exchange for use of its figures by general contractor in computing his bid, and there was no evidence that would warrant interpreting general contractor's use of subcontractor's bid as the acceptance thereof, binding general contractor, on condition that general contractor receive the main contract, to award paving subcontract to paving contractor, there was neither an option supported by consideration nor a bilateral contract binding on both parties.

2. Estoppel ⇦85

Promise which promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on part of promisee, and which does induce such action or forbearance, is binding if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise.

3. Contracts ⇦218

Submission of paving bid to general contractor by subcontractor constituted a promise to perform on such conditions as were stated expressly or by implication in the bid or were annexed thereto by operation of law.

4. Contracts ⇦218

If offer for unilateral contract is made, and part of consideration requested in the offer is given or tendered by offeree in response thereto, offeror is bound by a contract, the duty of immediate performance of which is conditional on full consideration being given or tendered within time stated in offer, or, if no time is stated therein, within a reasonable time.

5. Contracts ⇦19

Reasonable reliance resulting in foreseeable prejudicial change in position affords a compelling basis for implying a subsidiary promise not to revoke an offer for a bilateral contract.

6. Contracts ⇦85

Absence of consideration is not fatal to enforcement of implied subsidiary promise not to revoke an offer for a bilateral contract.

7. Contracts ⇦19

Where paving subcontractor submitted bid for paving work to general contractor, and bid was silent with respect to right of paving subcontractor to revoke the bid, and general contractor used the bid in making its own successful bid on the main contract, general contractor's reliance on paving subcontractor's bid made the bid irrevocable.

8. Contracts ⇦21

General contractor cannot reopen bargaining with subcontractor and at same time claim a continuing right to accept the original offer of subcontractor.

9. Contracts ⇐93(1)

If general contractor had reason to believe that paving contractor's bid was in error, general contractor could not justifiably rely on the bid in making the general contractor's main bid.

10. Contracts ⇐93(1)

Where paving subcontractor submitted bid for paving work to general contractor, and bid was silent with respect to right of paving subcontractor to revoke the bid, and general contractor used the bid in making its own successful bid on the main contract, fact that bid of paving subcontractor was result of mistake would not relieve paving subcontractor from its obligation.

11. Damages ⇐155

In action by general contractor against paving subcontractor to recover damages caused by subcontractor's refusal to perform paving work according to bid of $7,131.60 submitted by subcontractor to general contractor, allegation of complaint that after subcontractor's default, general contractor was forced to procure services of third party to perform paving for $10,948.60 sufficiently alleged attempt by general contractor to mitigate damages.

12. Pleading ⇐406(7)

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment for plaintiff in an action to recover damages caused by defendant's refusal to perform certain paving work according to a bid it submitted to plaintiff.

On July 28, 1955, plaintiff, a licensed general contractor, was preparing a bid on the "Monte Vista School Job" in the Lancaster school district. Bids had to be submitted before 8:00 p. m. Plaintiff testified that it was customary in that area for general contractors to receive the bids of subcontractors by telephone on the day set for bidding and to rely on them in computing their own bids. Thus on that day plaintiff's secretary, Mrs. Johnson, received by telephone between fifty and seventy-five subcontractors' bids for various parts of the school job. As each bid came in, she wrote it on a special form, which she brought into plaintiff's office. He then posted it on a master cost sheet setting forth the names and bids of all subcontractors. His own bid had to include the names of subcontractors who were to perform one-half of one per cent or more of the construction work, and he had also to provide a bidder's bond of ten per cent of his total bid of $317,385 as a guarantee that he would enter the contract if awarded the work.

Late in the afternoon, Mrs. Johnson had a telephone conversation with Kenneth R. Hoon, an estimator for defendant. He gave his name and telephone number and stated that he was bidding for defendant for the paving work at the Monte Vista School according to plans and specifications and that his bid was $7,131.60. At Mrs. Johnson's request he repeated his bid. Plaintiff listened to the bid over an extension telephone in his office and posted it on the master sheet after receiving the bid form from Mrs. Johnson. Defendant's was the lowest bid for the paving. Plaintiff computed his own bid accordingly and submitted it with the name of defendant as the subcontractor for the paving. When the bids were opened on July 28th, plaintiff's proved to be the lowest, and he was awarded the contract.

On his way to Los Angeles the next morning plaintiff stopped at defendant's office. The first person he met was defendant's construction engineer, Mr. Oppenheimer. Plaintiff testified: "I introduced myself and he immediately told me that they had made a mistake in their bid to me the night before, they couldn't do it for the price they had bid, and I told him I would expect him to carry through with their original bid because I had used it in compiling my bid and the job was being awarded them. And I would have to go and do the job according to my bid and I would expect them to do the same."

Defendant refused to do the paving work for less than $15,000. Plaintiff testified that he "got figures from other people" and after trying for several months to get as low a bid as possible engaged L & H Paving Company, a firm in Lancaster, to do the work for $10,948.60.

The trial court found on substantial evidence that defendant made a definite offer to do the paving on the Monte Vista job according to the plans and specifications for $7,131.60, and that plaintiff relied on defendant's bid in computing his own bid for the school job and naming defendant therein as the subcontractor for the paving work. Accordingly, it entered judgment for plaintiff in the amount of $3,817.00 (the difference between defendant's bid and the cost of the paving to plaintiff) plus costs.

Defendant contends that there was no enforceable contract between the parties on the ground that it made a revocable offer and revoked it before plaintiff communicated his acceptance to defendant.

[1] There is no evidence that defendant offered to make its bid irrevocable in exchange for plaintiff's use of its figures in computing his bid. Nor is there evidence that would warrant interpreting plaintiff's use of defendant's bid as the acceptance thereof, binding plaintiff, on condition he received the main contract, to award the subcontract to defendant. In sum, there was neither an option supported by consideration nor a bilateral contract binding on both parties.

Plaintiff contends, however, that he relied to his detriment on defendant's offer and that defendant must therefore answer in damages for its refusal to perform. Thus the question is squarely presented: Did plaintiff's reliance make defendant's offer irrevocable?

[2] Section 90 of the Restatement of Contracts states: "A promise which the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee and which does induce such action or forbearance is binding if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise." This rule applies in this state. Edmonds v. County of Los Angeles, 40 Cal.2d 642, 255 P.2d 772; Frebank Co. v. White, 152 Cal.App.2d 522, 313 P.2d 633; Wade v. Markwell & Co., 118 Cal.App.2d 410, 258 P.2d 497, 37 A.L.R.2d 1363; West v. Hunt Foods Co., 101 Cal.App.2d 597, 225 P.2d 978; Hunter v. Sparling, 87 Cal.App.2d 711, 197 P.2d 807; see 18 Cal.Jur.2d 407–408; 5 Stan.L.Rev. 783.

[3] Defendant's offer constituted a promise to perform on such conditions as were stated expressly or by implication therein or annexed thereto by operation of law. (See 1 Williston, Contracts [3rd. ed.], § 24A, p. 56, § 61, p. 196.) Defendant had reason to expect that if its bid proved the lowest it would be used by plaintiff. It induced "action * * * of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee."

[4] Had defendant's bid expressly stated or clearly implied that it was revocable at any time before acceptance we would treat it accordingly. It was silent on revocation, however, and we must therefore determine whether there are conditions to the right of revocation imposed by law or reasonably inferable in fact. In the analogous problem of an offer for a unilateral contract, the theory is now obsolete that the offer is revocable at any time before complete performance. Thus section 45 of the Restatement of Contracts provides: "If an offer for a unilateral contract is made, and part of the consideration requested in the offer is given or tendered by the offeree in response thereto, the offeror is bound by a contract, the duty of immediate performance of which is conditional on the full consideration being given or tendered within the time stated in the offer, or, if no time is stated therein, within a reasonable time." In explanation, comment b states that the "main offer includes as a subsidiary promise, necessarily implied, that if part of the requested performance is given, the offeror will not revoke his offer, and that if tender is made it will be accepted. Part performance or tender may thus furnish consideration for the subsidiary promise. Moreover, merely acting in justifiable reliance on an offer may in some cases serve as sufficient reason for making a promise binding (see § 90)."

[5] Whether implied in fact or law, the subsidiary promise serves to preclude the injustice that would result if the offer could be revoked after the offeree had acted in detrimental reliance thereon. Reasonable reliance resulting in a foreseeable prejudicial change in position affords a compelling basis also for implying a subsidiary promise not to revoke an offer for a bilateral contract.

[6] The absence of consideration is not fatal to the enforcement of such a promise. It is true that in the case of unilateral contracts the Restatement finds consideration for the implied subsidiary promise in the part performance of the bargained-for exchange, but its reference to section 90 makes clear that consideration for such a promise is not always necessary. The very purpose of section 90 is to make a promise binding even though there was no consideration "in the sense of something that is bargained for and given in exchange." (See 1 Corbin, Contracts 634 et seq.) Reasonable reliance serves to hold the offeror in lieu of the consideration ordinarily required to make the offer binding. In a case involving similar facts the Supreme Court of South Dakota stated that "we believe that reason and justice demand that the doctrine [of section 90] be applied to the present facts. We cannot believe that by accepting this doctrine as controlling in the state of facts before us we will abolish the requirement of a consideration in contract cases, in any different sense than an ordinary estoppel abolishes some legal requirement in its application. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the defendants in executing the agreement [which was not supported by consideration] made a promise which they should have reasonably expected would induce the plaintiff to submit a bid based thereon to the Government, that such promise did induce this action, and that injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise." Northwestern Engineering Co. v. Ellerman, 69 S.D. 397, 408, 10 N.W.2d 879, 884; see also, Robert Gordon, Inc., v. Ingersoll-Rand Co., 7 Cir., 117 F.2d 654, 661; cf. James Baird Co. v. Gimbel Bros., 2 Cir., 64 F.2d 344.

[7] When plaintiff used defendant's offer in computing his own bid, he bound himself to perform in reliance on defendant's terms. Though defendant did not bargain for this use of its bid neither did defendant make it idly, indifferent to whether it would be used or not. On the contrary it is reasonable to suppose that defendant submitted its bid to obtain the subcontract. It was bound to realize the substantial possibility that its bid would be the lowest, and that it would be included by plaintiff in his bid. It was to its own interest that the contractor be awarded the general contract; the lower the subcontract bid, the lower the general contractor's bid was likely to be and the greater its chance of acceptance and hence the greater defendant's chance of getting the paving subcontract. Defendant had reason not only to expect plaintiff to rely on its bid but to want him to. Clearly defendant had a stake in plaintiff's reliance on its bid. Given this interest and the fact that plaintiff is bound by his own bid, it is only fair that plaintiff should have at least an opportunity to accept defendant's bid after the general contract has been awarded to him.

[8] It bears noting that a general contractor is not free to delay acceptance after he has been awarded the general contract in the hope of getting a better price. Nor can he reopen bargaining with the subcontractor and at the same time claim a continuing right to accept the original offer. See, R. J. Daum Const. Co. v. Child, Utah, 247 P.2d 817, 823. In the present case plaintiff promptly informed defendant that plaintiff was being awarded the job and that the subcontract was being awarded to defendant.

[9, 10] Defendant contends, however, that its bid was the result of mistake and that it was therefore entitled to revoke it. It relies on the rescission cases of M. F. Kemper Const. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 37 Cal.2d 696, 235 P.2d 7, and Brunzell Const. Co. v. G. J. Weisbrod, Inc., 134 Cal. App.2d 278, 285 P.2d 989. See also, Lemoge Electric v. San Mateo County, 46 Cal.2d 659, 662, 297 P.2d 638. In those cases, however, the bidder's mistake was known or should have been known to the offeree, and the offeree could be placed in status quo. Of course, if plaintiff had reason to believe that defendant's bid was in error, he could not justifiably rely on it, and section 90 would afford no basis for enforcing it. Robert Gordon, Inc., v. Ingersoll-Rand, Inc., 7 Cir., 117 F.2d 654, 660. Plaintiff, however, had no reason to know that defendant had made a mistake in submitting its bid, since there was usually a variance of 160 per cent between the highest and lowest bids for paving in the desert around Lancaster. He committed himself to performing the main contract in reliance on defendant's figures. Under these circumstances defendant's mistake, far from relieving it of its obligation, constitutes an additional reason for enforcing it, for it misled plaintiff as to the cost of doing the paving. Even had it been clearly understood that defendant's offer was revocable until accepted, it would not necessarily follow that defendant had no duty to exercise reasonable care in preparing its bid. It presented its bid with knowledge of the substantial possibility that it would be used by plaintiff; it could foresee the harm that would ensue from an erroneous underestimate of the cost. Moreover, it was motivated by its own business interest. Whether or not these considerations alone would justify recovery for negligence had the case been tried on that theory (see Biakanja v. Irving, 49 Cal.2d 647, 650, 320 P.2d 16), they are persuasive that defendant's mistake should not defeat recovery under the rule of section 90 of the Restatement of Contracts. As between the subcontractor who made the bid and the general contractor who reasonably relied on it, the loss resulting from the mistake should fall on the party who caused it.

Leo F. Piazza Paving Co. v. Bebek & Brkich, 141 Cal.App.2d 226, 296 P.2d 368, 371, and Bard v. Kent, 19 Cal.2d 449, 122 P. 2d 8, 139 A.L.R. 1032, are not to the contrary. In the Piazza case the court sustained a finding that defendants intended, not to make a firm bid, but only to give the plaintiff "some kind of an idea to use" in making its bid; there was evidence that the defendants had told plaintiff they were unsure of the significance of the specifications. There was thus no offer, promise, or representation on which the defendants should reasonably have expected the plaintiff to rely. The Bard case held that an option not supported by consideration was revoked by the death of the optionor. The issue of recovery under the rule of section 90 was not pleaded at the trial, and it does not appear that the offeree's reliance was "of a definite and substantial character" so that injustice could be avoided "only by the enforcement of the promise."

[11, 12] There is no merit in defendant's contention that plaintiff failed to state a cause of action, on the ground that the complaint failed to allege that plaintiff attempted to mitigate the damages or that they could not have been mitigated. Plaintiff alleged that after defendant's default, "plaintiff had to procur the services of the L & H Co. to perform said asphaltic paving for the sum of $10,948.60." Plaintiff's uncontradicted evidence showed that he spent several months trying to get bids from other subcontractors and that he took the lowest bid. Clearly he acted reasonably to mitigate damages. In any event any uncertainty in plaintiff's allegation as to damages could have been raised by special demurrer. Code Civ.Proc. § 430, subd. 9. It was not so raised and was therefore waived. Code Civ.Proc. § 434.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 5, 1959.

Action arising out of collision occurring when plaintiff made left turn onto highway from exit road of drive-in theater and was struck by defendant's automobile, which was traveling on highway in direction which plaintiff turned. The Superior Court, Santa Clara County, Thomas O'Donnell, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action against defendant for damages incurred in an automobile accident. The defendant cross-complained against the plaintiff. The jury found in favor of defendant on plaintiff's complaint and in favor of the cross-defendant on defendant's cross-complaint. From the judgment entered on such verdicts the plaintiff appeals. The sole point urged is that an instruction offered by her and refused by the trial court should have been given.

The accident occurred shortly after 1 a. m. on September 11, 1955. Plaintiff was on an exit road of a drive-in theater, which road enters into Almaden Road in San Jose. Plaintiff intended to make a left turn and proceed in a northerly direction on that road. She testified that she waited at the intersection for three or four minutes, waiting for a break in the traffic on Almaden Road. Finally it appeared to her that the nearest automobile approaching the exit road where she was stopped, which was presumably the car of defendant, was some 200 to 400 feet from where she was stopped. It, too, was proceeding northerly on Almaden Road. Plaintiff entered Almaden Road and made a left turn. She had proceeded about three or four car lengths, or from 50 to 75 feet, when she was hit from the rear by the car of defendant.

The testimony produced by defendant was that as defendant approached the drive-in exit going northerly, he was going about 30 or 35 miles per hour; that he first noticed plaintiff's automobile when he was about 100 feet from the exit road; that plaintiff's car was then stopped at the entrance to Almaden Road; that when defendant was but 50 feet from the exit road plaintiff's car started forward and turned in front of defendant; that defendant was unable to stop, and his car struck plaintiff's car in the rear; that the accident occurred 31 feet north of the exit road; that defendant was going but 15 to 20 miles per hour at the time of impact.

[1] Plaintiff urges that the decisive question at the trial was, which of the two vehicles had the right of way at the time of the accident under section 553 of the Vehicle Code. It is then contended that it was prejudicial error for the trial court to refuse to give the following instruction offered by plaintiff: "If you find from the evidence that the automobile operated by the defendant Hischier did not constitute an immediate hazard at the time the plaintiff entered the highway from the theatre driveway, then the defendant was required to yield the right of way to the plaintiff."

The proffered instruction undoubtedly states a correct principle of law.

Section 553 of the Vehicle Code provides that: "The driver of a vehicle about to enter or cross a highway from any private road or driveway or from an alley * * * shall yield the right of way to all vehicles approaching on said highway." Literally, this section would require the prospective entrant from a private road to yield the right of way to all vehicles on the highway regardless of where they were. This would be an unreasonable interpretation. For that reason, the courts have interpreted the section to mean that a prospective entrant from a private road may lawfully enter a highway so long as there is no vehicle so near as to constitute an immediate hazard. Wakefield v. Horn, 109 Cal.App. 325, 293 P. 97; Jansen v. Sugiyama, 29 Cal.App.2d 717, 85 P.2d 476; McDougall v. Morrison, 55 Cal.App.2d 92, 130 P.2d 149; Malinson v. Black, 83 Cal.App.2d 375, 188 P.2d 788; see cases collected 7 Cal.Jur.2d p. 54, § 243. In Todd v. Stanfield, 111 Cal.App.2d 615, 245 P.2d 331, the court affirmed a trial court that gave an instruction that, under this section, the driver on the highway, if his car did not present an immediate hazard to the car entering from a private road, should have yielded the right of way. Thus, the instruction proffered by plaintiff stated a proper rule of law applicable to the facts. But this, alone, does not necessarily require a reversal.

[2] A party is not entitled to have the jury instructed in the particular phraseology selected by such party, even if the language selected states correctly an applicable rule of law, if the court does, properly, instruct on the issue involved. This elementary principle, supported by numerous cases, is stated as follows in 24 Cal.Jur. p. 806, § 79: "Numerous cases establish the rule that it is not error for a court to refuse to give a requested instruction if the subject matter thereof is substantially incorporated in the instructions given. A party is not entitled to have the jury instructed in any particular phraseology, and may not complain on the ground that his requested instructions are refused if the court, of its own motion or otherwise, correctly announces the substance of the law applicable to the case; this is true even though the requested charges state the principles involved more clearly and definitely than those given." See also Jaeger v. Chapman, 95 Cal.App.2d 520, 213 P.2d 404; Ideal Heating Corp. v. Royal Indem. Co., 107 Cal.App.2d 662, 237 P.2d 521.

[3, 4] It is our opinion that, in the instant case, the trial court adequately and properly instructed on the proper interpretation of section 553 of the Vehicle Code. The court properly instructed as to the general duty of the defendant as follows: "It is the duty of the driver of any vehicle using a public street or highway to exercise ordinary care to avoid placing himself or another person in danger; to use like care to avoid an accident from which injury might result; to be vigilant at all times, keeping a lookout for traffic and other conditions to be reasonably anticipated; and to keep the vehicle under such control that, to avoid a collision with any person or with any other object, he can stop as quickly as might be required of him by eventualities that would be anticipated by an ordinarily prudent driver in like position."

After reading section 553 of the Vehicle Code to the jury, the court then instructed:

"Section 553 of the Vehicle Code, being the last section just read to you, which provides that the driver about to enter a highway from a private road or driveway shall yield the right of way to all approaching vehicles, does not literally mean that such driver must yield to all vehicles on such highway regardless of how far away they are. That section means that a driver about to enter a highway from a private road or driveway must yield the right of way to any vehicle approaching on said highway which constitutes an immediate hazard.

"You may ask yourselves the question: When has a vehicle approached so close to an intersection between a private driveway and a highway as to constitute an immediate hazard? The answer is that the approaching vehicle is that close whenever, if a reasonably prudent person were in the position of the driver who has stopped his automobile at the entrance to the highway, he would apprehend the probability of colliding with the approaching vehicle were he then to enter the highway.

"When the law says that one person has the right of way over another, its purpose simply is to establish a practical basis for necessary courtesy on the highway, and its meaning is that when at any given moment of the time two persons, neither of whom then occupies the space in question, desire to proceed into the same place on the highway, one of them shall yield. The other has the privilege of the immediate use of the space in question. That privilege is his right of way.

"No question of right of way arises until an actual conflict exists in the desires of two persons to enter into immediate use of a place on the highway not then occupied by either, and which only one can use at the time. In other words, the law gives no one a right to eject another from a place on the highway, nor to collide with him nor to injure him simply because the latter occupies the space which the former wants to use."

In our opinion these instructions adequately covered the field. Although the trial court did not expressly state that it is the duty of the driver on the highway to yield the right of way when his car does not constitute an immediate hazard to the driver entering from the private road, such a rule is necessarily and clearly implied from the instructions quoted above. The instructions quoted can be given no other reasonable interpretation.

The plaintiff contends that the instructions given were general in nature, and that she was entitled to a specific instruction on this pivotal issue. It is undoubtedly the law that the giving of a general instruction covering the field in an abstract way does not justify the refusal of a requested specific instruction. Gilbert v. Pessin Grocery Co., 132 Cal.App.2d 212, 282 P.2d 148; Fletcher v. Pierceall, 146 Cal.App.2d 859, 304 P.2d 770. But, it is our opinion that, properly construed, the given instructions were not mere general, abstract statements of the law, but were sufficiently specific. "It is also well established that a reviewing court should adopt the construction and effect of an instruction which will support rather than defeat the judgment if it is reasonably susceptible of such interpretation." Mullanix v. Basich, 67 Cal.App.2d 675, 681, 155 P.2d 130, 132; see also Reuter v. Hill, 136 Cal.App. 67, 28 P.2d 390.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Civ. 23130.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 7, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Action for injuries sustained by motorcycle officer who struck cable placed across highway under construction by contractor. Judgment for the plaintiff in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, A. E. Paonessa, J., and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J., pro tempore, held that an instruction on the statute respecting warning signs in performance of work on the highways was properly given; that the question of proximate cause was for the jury; that the evidence established the contractor's noncompliance with the statute and that while refusal of an instruction as to speed was error it was not prejudicial.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Statutes ⇐223.2(14)

The provisions of the Vehicle Code with respect to types of warning signs, lights and devices to be placed upon a highway by contractor engaged in construction work and the provisions of the Streets and Highways Code respecting the closing of any highway and notice of such closing are not in conflict but are complementary of each other. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, § 465.7; West's Ann.Streets & High.Code, §§ 124, 125.

2. Automobiles ⇐279

The purpose of the provisions of the Vehicle Code and the Streets and Highways Code is to give warnings to traffic moving upon a portion of the highway that is open but which is approaching construction work, whether that work has partially or totally closed the highway under construction, and under the former, if the contractor complies therewith, he has fulfilled the duty that he owes to the public but he is precluded from placing any signs or devices other than those specified by the department's manual and if he does so and his departure is the proximate cause of injury to another, he cannot escape responsibility. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 465.7; West's Ann.Streets & High.Code, §§ 124, 125.

3. Automobiles ⇐309(2)
Trial ⇐241

In action for injuries against construction company when motorcycle officer ran into a cable placed across a highway by the contractor to warn of road under construction, instruction in the language of the Vehicle Code with respect to warning signs, lights and devices for use in performance of works upon the highway and that one who violated the statute was negligent as a matter of law was proper. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 465.7; West's Ann.Streets & High.Code, §§ 124, 125.

4. Automobiles ⇐278, 279

In action for injuries sustained by motorcycle officer who ran into a cable that was stretched across the highway under construction by construction contractor, fact that plaintiff was not approaching but was starting from within that portion of the highway upon which signs and barricades had been erected by the contractor did not preclude the application of the Vehicle Code on the ground that the plaintiff was not a person whom the statute was designed to protect and that a failure by the contractor to comply with the statute did not constitute an actionable wrong against the plaintiff. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 465.7.

5. Negligence ⇐56(3)

The violation of a statute is of no consequence unless it operates as a proximate cause of the accident.

6. Automobiles ⇐285, 306(7), 308(10)

In action for injuries sustained by motorcycle officer who struck a cable placed across highway by construction contractor, that plaintiff knew the road was closed and negligently failed to observe sign stating that which the plaintiff already knew did not preclude a recovery but whether the failure of the contractor to comply with the statute in erection of the barrier was the proximate cause of the accident was a question of fact for the jury and evidence supported a finding adverse to the contractor. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 465.7.

7. Automobiles ⇐306(2)

In action for injuries sustained by motorcycle officer who struck a cable placed across highway under construction by contractor where cable was a barrier or barricade which blocked the entire highway and did not conform with the statutory specifications for such a barrier, evidence justified recovery against the contractor on the ground that he did not comply with the statute. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 465.7.

8. Trial ⇐252(8)

In action for injuries sustained by motorcycle officer who struck cable placed across highway under construction by contractor, refusal to give instructions based upon relationship of licensee and licensor was not error in view of the absence of evidence thereof.

9. Licenses ⇐43

A "license" in respect to real property is an authority to do an act which without it would be unlawful.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "License".

10. Appeal and Error ⇐204(1), 237(2)

Where evidence was received without objection and no motion to strike it was made, defendant could not complain on appeal of its admission as error.

11. Trial ⇐240

Instruction respecting the inference that one who looks in the direction of an object clearly visible sees it was properly refused where it was but a statement of a commonplace and was argumentative in form.

12. Automobiles ⇐309(4)
Trial ⇐260(8)

In action for injuries sustained by motorcycle officer who struck cable placed across highway under construction by contractor, refusing to instruct on the basic speed law was error under the evidence but was not prejudicial in view of other instructions. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 510.

Spray, Gould & Bowers, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Obegi & High, Van Nuys, for respondent.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $50,000 entered upon the verdict of the jury in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff through the alleged negligence of defendant.

The relevant facts as established by substantial evidence are: The defendant under contract with the Division of Highways, Department of Public Works of the State of California, engaged in certain road construction work involving the straightening and at one place lowering Topanga Canyon Road in the County of Los Angeles. The portion of the highway under construction was six-tenths of a mile in length and was approximately midway between the northern end of Topanga Canyon Road at Ventura Boulevard and its southern end at the Pacific Coast Highway. By the terms of its contract with the State, the defendant was permitted, on working days, to close the portion of the road under construction to all traffic between the hours of 9 a. m. and 4 p. m. On May 18, 1956, the work had been substantially completed and the work was to be accepted and the highway opened on the afternoon of that day. The plaintiff was at that time employed as a highway patrolman for the Highway Patrol of the Motor Vehicle Department of the State. On the morning of May 18th, he had been ordered by his superiors to patrol Topanga Canyon Road and particularly that portion which had been straightened through the work done by the defendant. This patrol work was done upon a motorcycle. Shortly before 9 a. m. on the day in question, plaintiff stopped his motorcycle beside a small building that was situated on the west side of the highway immediately north of the project and which was used by the defendant's superintendent in connection with the work. On an occasion prior to the day in question he had noticed that the portion of the highway under construction was closed to traffic by a cable stretched across the highway. While plaintiff was engaged in conversation, employees of the defendant placed signs and barricades upon the highway both north and south of the point at which plaintiff was seated on his motorcycle. Plaintiff saw the work being done. The barricades were in the nature of cross-arms and wooden horses with flashing lights and some bore the word "caution" on them and others "Road Closed." These were staggered across the highway so as not to leave room for an automobile to pass between them. South of these barricades they stretched across the highway between two 8 x 8 wooden posts set in concrete, a steel cable about one-half or five-eighths inches in diameter. There were no signs, flags or other objects attached to and pendent from the cable. This was the last barrier erected. There was conflict in the evidence as to whether the center of this cable was supported by a wooden post painted white. Just north of the cable were three diamond-shaped signs which were supported by posts five feet in height. The cable was between 31 and 36 inches in height where it was attached to the posts. There was conflict in the evidence as to how close these signs were to the cable, the witnesses varying in their estimates from over 30 feet to two feet.

The method of barricading the highway used and the barricades erected, including the cable, were designated for use by defendant by the resident engineer of the Board of Public Works after his plan therefor had been approved by that body.

Plaintiff testified that during the conversation above referred to, he asked one Cowan, the job superintendent, if it was alright for him to go through to the Coast Highway and if any cables were up, and that Cowan replied that there were no cables in place and that plaintiff might proceed. No other witness supported his testimony in this regard. At the close of this conversation plaintiff started his motorcycle and drove onto the highway, turned south, passed between certain of the barriers and signs and struck the cable. The force of the collision was such that it sheared off, above the ground level, one of the 8 x 8 posts to which the cable was attached and plaintiff and his motorcycle came to rest on the highway approximately 40 feet south of the point of collision.

There was a conflict in the evidence as to whether the cable was visible from the point at which plaintiff was seated on his motorcycle beside the construction shack. Plaintiff testified that he did not see it at any time and did not know that it was in place.

At the request of plaintiff the court instructed [1] the jury in the words of section

1. "Section 465.7 of the California Vehicle Code provides as follows: 'The State Department of Public Works shall determine and publicize the specifications for uniform types of warning signs, lights and devices to be placed upon a highway by any person, firm or corporation engaged in performing work which interferes or endangers the safe movement of traffic upon such highway. On and after July 1, 1942, only those signs, lights and devices as are provided for in this section shall be placed upon a highway to warn traffic of work which is being performed on such highway.' "

[X]

"The Department of Public Works of the State of California, pursuant to the provisions of Section 465.7 of the Cali-

465.7 of the Vehicle Code and a portion of the "Manual Of Warning Signs, Lights, And Devices For Use In Performance Of Work Upon Highways" issued by the Department of Public Works in 1955. The court further instructed the jury that one who violated section 465.7 of the Vehicle Code was negligent as a matter of law.

[1–3] Defendant does not claim error in the form of these instructions but asserts that section 465.7 of the Vehicle Code did not prescribe the duties owed by the defendant in closing the highway and was therefore not applicable. It bases its contention that the giving of these instructions was error upon the fact that section 465.7 is contained in the Vehicle Code and that the subject matter of that code has nothing to do with the construction or repairs of highways but only with moving traffic upon highways. It asserts that the only duties owed by it to the general motoring public in closing a highway, were those imposed by sections 124–125 of the Streets & Highways Code which in substance provide that the Department of Public Works may restrict the use of or close any highway for the protection of the public and may give notice of such restriction or closing by erecting "suitable barriers or obstructions" upon the highway. It therefore contends that as the barriers and signs erected were those designated by the Board of Public Works to be used on the project and were deemed by it to be suitable, the defendant did not breach any duty it owed to the plaintiff. Defendant cites no authority to support its contention and we do not find it tenable. The provisions of 465.7 of the Vehicle Code and the provisions of 124–125 of the Streets & Highways Code are not in conflict but the Vehicle Code section is complementary of the provisions of the Streets & Highways Code as set forth in the section cited. The purpose of both statutes is to require that warnings be given to traffic moving upon a portion of the highway that is open but which is approaching construction work, whether that work has partially or totally closed the highway under construction. Section 465.7 of the Vehicle Code establishes an uniform method and system to be followed by a contractor in giving that warning and limits the signs and barriers that may be used to those meeting the specifications therefor made by the State Department of Public Works and published by it. Under the provisions of 465.7 if the contractor complies with section 465.7 he has fulfilled the duty that he owes to the public but he is precluded from placing any signs, lights or devices other than those specified by the department's Manual, and if he does so and his departure is the proximate cause of injury to another he cannot escape responsibility. Section 465.7 of the Vehicle Code was clearly applicable under the facts established by the evidence.

[4] Defendant further contends that assuming the applicability of section 465.7 of the Vehicle Code, it was designed to protect the motoring public approaching the closed area and that as plaintiff was not approaching but started from within that portion of the highway upon which signs and barricades had been erected, he was not a person whom the statute was designed to protect and therefore a failure to comply with the statute did not constitute an acfornia Vehicle Code, has declared the following to be those signs, lights and devices which are authorized to be placed upon a highway by person, firm or corporation engaged in performing work which interferes with or endangers the safe and orderly movement of traffic upon such highway: Barriers or Barricades shall present a vertical face of not less than five and one-half inches facing traffic. If the barrier or barricades is composed of more than one cross or face member, such members shall present a total vertical face of not less than nine inches, no face member considered being less than four inches. Barriers or barricades shall be painted: a. All yellow, or b. With yellow and black alternate stripes on cross or face members. Stripes shall be at an angle of between forty-five and sixty degrees from the horizontal and not less than three inches in width. The yellow stripes may be of greater width than the black stripes."

tionable wrong against the plaintiff. This contention cannot be sustained. The Manual promulgated by the Department of Public Works provides that all "barriers or barricades shall present a vertical face of not less than five and one-half inches facing traffic" and should be painted all yellow or with yellow and black alternate stripes on face members. Undoubtedly the purpose of specifying the width of the vertical face of a barrier and its color was to make sure that it would be visible to persons approaching it and thus to prevent persons traveling on the highway, even though they may have passed other barriers and warning signs, from colliding with it. The provisions of the Manual as to the construction of a barrier apply not only to the first barrier that may be erected but to all barriers or barricades and are for the protection of those who might enter the highway between signs as well as those who might approach from beyond the signs but fail to observe their warnings. In our opinion the plaintiff was a person whom the statute and regulation were designed to protect.

[5, 6] Defendant asserts that assuming that the cable was a barrier, the fact that it did not comply with the statute was not a proximate cause of the accident. No citation of authority is needed for the proposition defendant advances that the violation of a statute is of no consequence unless it operates as a proximate cause of an accident. That proposition has no application here. Defendant's argument that because the plaintiff knew the road was closed and because he either did not see or ignored the signs stating that the road was closed demonstrates that if the barrier had been constructed in accordance with the statute the plaintiff would not have seen it is wholly untenable. Certainly it could not be said as a matter of law that because he proceeded, knowing the road was closed and negligently failed to observe signs stating that which he already knew, that he would not have observed the last barrier had it been constructed in accordance with specifications set forth in the Manual. Whether the failure to comply with the statute in the erection of the barrier in question was a proximate cause of the accident, was a question of fact for the jury. That question has been determined by the jury adversely to the defendant and the evidence supports its finding.

[7] It is beyond dispute that the cable was a barrier or barricade which blocked the entire highway and that it did not conform to the statutory specifications for such a barrier. These facts themselves effectively dispose of the contention made by appellant that the evidence failed to show that defendant did not comply with the statute. If it be assumed, as defendant contends, that the evidence failed to show that other signs and barriers erected by it did not conform to the statutory specifications, that fact would in no wise excuse it from failure to comply with the statute as to the barrier in question.

[8] Defendant requested, and the court refused to give instructions based upon the relationship of licensor and licensee. This refusal is assigned as error. We find nothing in the evidence which would have justified the trial court in giving the requested instructions.

[9] A license in respect to real property "is an authority to do" an "act which without it would be unlawful." Fisher v. General Petroleum Corp., 123 Cal.App.2d 770 at page 776, 267 P.2d 841, at page 844; 31 Cal.Jur.2d 210. The lawfulness of plaintiff's intended use of the closed portion of the highway was not dependent upon any authority to use it from the defendant. His use of it would have been as an officer of a department of the State acting in the performance of his duty and as such lawful. Further, the accident did not occur within that portion of the highway over which defendant had a limited power of control nor was the accident the result of any defect in the premises over which the defendant had such a right of control but on the contrary was caused by a barrier which defendant had erected to prevent entry into that portion of the highway. No question of a license was involved.[2]

[10] The plaintiff testified without objection as to statements made to him by defendant's construction superintendent relative to his proceeding from the construction shack to the Coast Highway. Defendant now asserts that it was error to receive this testimony as there was no evidence that Cowan had authority to grant permission to anyone to pass over the closed road. The evidence having been received without objection and no motion to strike having been made, defendant cannot here assign its admission as error. (3 Cal. Jur.2d 634.)

[11] Defendant requested that the court instruct the jury in accordance with BAJI 140.[3] The request was denied. The court did not err in refusing this instruction. It is but a statement of a commonplace and is argumentative in form. Cooper v. Smith, 209 Cal. 562, at page 566, 289 P. 614, at page 616; Callahan v. Theodore, 145 Cal. App.2d 336, at page 339, 302 P.2d 333, at page 334; Laursen v. Tidewater Associated Oil Co., 123 Cal.App.2d 813, at page 818, 268 P.2d 104, at page 107.

[12] The defendant requested the court to instruct the jury in accordance with section 510 of the Vehicle Code. (Basic speed law.) The submitted instruction was in the form of BAJI 144 as printed in the fourth edition of that work.

Under the evidence the defendant was entitled to the instruction requested. The plaintiff testified that immediately before the accident he was traveling at approximately 26 miles per hour and the evidence as to the force of the impact would justify the jury in believing that he was traveling at a speed in excess of his estimate. It was a question of fact for the determination of the jury as to whether under the circumstances his speed was a reasonable one. While the court erred in refusing the requested instruction, we have concluded that the defendant was not prejudiced thereby.

By its instructions the court in addition to defining negligence, ordinary care and contributory negligence instructed the jury that one who was guilty of contributory negligence could not recover from another for injuries suffered.[4] It further instructed the jury as follows: "Inasmuch as the amount of caution used by the ordinarily prudent person varies in direct proportion to the danger known to be involved in his undertaking, it follows that in the exercise of ordinary care, the amount of caution required will vary in accordance with the nature of the act and the surrounding circumstances. To put the matter in another way, the amount of caution required by the law increases as does the danger that reasonably should be apprehended."[5] The evidence is undisputed that the plaintiff knew that the road was closed to travel by the public and that he had seen certain barricades and signs being put in place and that in approaching the cable he passed between two of them with only six inches to spare on each side. Under the instructions given the jury were told that plaintiff was required to use the amount of caution which an ordinarily prudent person, having the same knowledge of danger as the plaintiff had, would have used under the same circumstances. That this would include caution as to the speed at which he was driving seems evident.

2. We do not have any question here as to the rights and the liabilities of the parties had the plaintiff sustained an injury by reason of some defect in the highway under construction.

3. "General human experience justifies the inference that when one looks in the direction of an object clearly visible, he sees it, and that when he listens, he hears that which is clearly audible. When there is evidence to the effect that one did look, but did not see that which was in plain sight, or that he listened, but did not hear that which he could have heard in the exercise of ordinary care, it follows that either some part of such evidence is untrue or the person was negligently inattentive."

4. BAJI 103 as modified.

5. BAJI 102A.

The speed at which it is unlawful to drive a vehicle under section 510 of the Vehicle Code is one which is not reasonable having due regard for the traffic on, and the surface and width of the highway. In other words, it is a speed greater than that at which a person who is exercising requisite caution under the existing circumstances would drive. For all practical purposes the instruction given by the court and which we have quoted above, placed the same duty upon the plaintiff as would have been placed upon him by the giving of the instruction refused. The jury having been instructed upon the proposition of the caution which the plaintiff was required to exercise, it does not seem probable that they would have arrived at a different verdict had that proposition been specifically directed to the question of speed by giving the requested instruction.

The judgment is affirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL of the State of California and Alcoholic Beverage Control Board of the State of California, Respondents.

Civ. 9386.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 6, 1959.

Mandamus proceeding to review revocation of general on-sale liquor license. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Albert H. Mundt, J., denied peremptory writ of mandate and the licensee appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Warne, J. pro tem., held that where the license was revoked on each of six counts separately, severally and collectively, and two of the counts were sufficiently alleged and the findings pertaining to them were supported by substantial evidence, the judgment would be affirmed even if the remaining four counts were insufficiently alleged and the findings pertaining to them were not supported by substantial evidence.

Affirmed.

1. Constitutional Law ⇐287

Revocation of general on-sale liquor license on premises allegedly frequented by prostitutes who solicited acts of prostitution was not a violation of substantive and procedural due process even though licensee may have been personally unaware of such activities, where such activities were known to and were encouraged by bartender employed by licensee. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23000 et seq., 24200(b), 25601.

2. Intoxicating Liquors ⇐106(4)

General on-sale liquor license could be revoked for permitting premises to be used as disorderly house in violation of section of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, even though a violation of that section constituted a misdemeanor. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200(b), 25601.

3. Intoxicating Liquors ⇐106(4)

Any conduct constituting a violation of any of the sections of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act is a ground for suspension or revocation of liquor license. West's Am.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23000 et seq., 24200(b), 25601.

4. Intoxicating Liquors ⇐108(10)

In proceeding for revocation of general on-sale liquor license on ground that licensed premises were used as disorderly house and that acts of prostitution were solicited therein and that users of narcotics, prostitutes, pimps and panderers resorted to the premises, the admission into evidence of the record of licensee's bartender for crime of pandering would not be presumed to have prejudiced the licensee where the record was not before the trial court and was not a part of the record on appeal. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200(b), 25601.

5. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇐312

In administrative proceedings, the courts are more interested with fair notice to the accused than they are to adherence to the technical rules of pleading. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 11503.

6. Intoxicating Liquors ⇐108(5)

Where proceeding for revocation of general on-sale liquor license on ground that licensee permitted acts of solicitation for purpose of prostitution was tried on theory that such acts occurred on the licensed premises and the evidence substantially supported such theory, the licensee could not assert on appeal that the charges against him and the findings thereon failed to show that the acts occurred on the licensed premises. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 11503, 11506; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof. Code, § 25601.

7. Intoxicating Liquors ⇐108(10)

Where general on-sale liquor license was revoked on each of six counts separately, severally and collectively and two of the counts were sufficient in their allegations and the findings thereon were supported by sufficient evidence, judgment revoking license would be affirmed even though four counts may have been insufficiently alleged and even though the findings pertaining thereto may not have been supported by substantial evidence. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 24200(b).

WARNE, Justice pro tem.

An accusation was filed with the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control charging George L. Nelson, doing business as California Club, the possessor of a general on-sale liquor license, with six violations of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. Count I of the accusation charges the keeping of a disorderly house between November 10, 1955, and November 26, 1955. Count II charges that the appellant on the 10th day of November, 1955, permitted one Frances Patterson to solicit an act of prostitution. Count III charges that appellant on the 12th day of November, 1955, permitted one Sally Franklin to solicit an act of prostitution. Count IV charges that appellant on the 17th day of November, 1955, permitted one Ruth Rose to solicit an act of prostitution. Count V charges that appellant between November 10 and November 26, 1955, permitted his licensed premises to be used "as a resort for illegal possessors or users of narcotics, prostitutes, pimps and panderers," and Count VI charges that on November 26, 1955, appellant permitted his licensed premises to be used by one Yvonne Joyner, a known prostitute, to solicit an act of prostitution.

After a hearing upon the accusations, the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, hereinafter referred to as the department, rendered its decision finding the charges to be true and revoked appellant's license separately and severally as to each count, and the Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board affirmed the department's decision. The appellant then sought a writ of mandate in the superior court. The court affirmed the decision of the department and denied a peremptory writ of mandate. The appellant has appealed from the judgment of the superior court.

As stated by the trial court, it appears from the evidence "that from November 10th to November 26th, 1955, the premises operated by petitioner were, during the late evening and early morning hours, frequented by known prostitutes, pimps, and panderers and a known narcotics addict, also a known panderer. It is also clear from the evidence that during said period the known prostitutes solicited patrons of the establishment and liquor control agents on those portions of the premises upon which the activities permitted by the license were conducted. The activities stated were not only known to the bartender, an employee of the petitioner, but were, in fact, encouraged and participated in by him while he was engaged in the course and scope of his employment with petitioner and while on the premises."

Appellant does not question the sufficiency of the evidence to support Counts I and V.

[1] The appellant contends that to revoke his license for the acts of his employees is a violation of "substantive and procedural due process." He argues that, impliedly at least, he, as a licensee, had no knowledge that prostitutes were frequenting his premises or that they were soliciting acts of prostitution. While it is true that there is no direct evidence that the petitioner was personally aware of the stated activities, although on two evenings he was present on the premises when the activity was being carried on, he was aware that there had been a substantial increase in the number of women patronizing the business, a fact which pleased him as he testified that "a bar without a girl in it is a dead bar." In Mantzoros v. State Board of Equalization, 87 Cal.App.2d 140, 196 P. 2d 657, 660, the court held that the licensees could be liable for the action of their employees in making a sale after hours even though it was not shown that the sale was known to, or directed or authorized by the licensees. "* * * The licensee, if he elects to operate his business through employees must be responsible to the licensing authority for their conduct in the exercise of his license, else we could have the absurd result that liquor could be sold by employees at forbidden hours in licensed premises and the licensees would be immune to disciplinary action by the board. * * * [Citing cases.]" Also see Karides v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, 164 Cal.App.2d 549, 331 P.2d 145; Swegle v. State Board of Equalization, 125 Cal. App.2d 432, 270 P.2d 518; Endo v. State Board of Equalization, 143 Cal.App.2d 395, 300 P.2d 366.

[2, 3] Appellant also contends that the department does not have jurisdiction to consider a case arising under section 25601 of the Alcoholic Beverage Act, since a violation of that section constitutes a misdemeanor and should be tried in a court of law. There is no merit in this contention. Section 24200(b) provides that one of the grounds for revoking a license is: "[V]iolation by a licensee of this division," that is division 9 of the Business and Professions Code. Section 25601 is part of that division, and it is quite clear that any conduct constituting a violation of any of the sections of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act is a ground for the suspension or revocation of the license. Further, this is a civil proceeding, not a criminal prosecution; hence the fact that section 25601 constitutes a misdemeanor does not limit the power of the department to proceed where the facts are such as to bring it within the provisions of the section. The constitutional provisions and cases relating to criminal proceedings cited by appellant are not applicable.

[4] Appellant also contends that the hearing officer committed prejudicial error in admitting into evidence the record of Don Taylor, appellant's bartender, for the crime of pandering. (Exhibit E.) The exhibit was not before the trial court, nor is it a part of the record on this appeal. "It cannot be presumed on appeal that the appellant has been prejudiced by the introduction of evidence which does not appear in the record." Turano v. Bailey, 86 Cal.App. 402, 404, 260 P. 841.

Appellant also contends that Counts II, III, IV and VI do not state a cause of action and that the findings of fact as to said counts do not support the accusation. Apparently, this contention is based upon the failure to set forth in each of the above mentioned counts an allegation that the acts of solicitation for the purpose of prostitution occurred on the licensed premises. The findings are essentially in the words of the accusation.

[5] While section 11503 of the Government Code provides that the charges shall be set forth in ordinary and concise language the acts or omissions with which the licensee is charged, to the end that the licensee will be able to prepare his defense, and the accusation shall specify the statutes and rules which the licensee is alleged to have violated, but shall not consist merely of charges phrased in the language of the statutes and rules, nevertheless, in administrative proceedings, as stated in Wright v. Munro, 144 Cal.App.2d 843, 848, 301 P.2d 997, 1000 "the courts are more interested with fair notice to the accused than they are to adherence to the technical rules of pleading."

[6] While Counts II, III, IV and VI do not, standing alone, fully comply with the requirements of section 11503, Counts I and V do allege specifically that the acts therein complained of occurred on the licensed premises. Further, the accusation referred to section 25601 of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act which can only be violated by acts occurring on the premises or in conjunction with the premises. Nor did the appellant at any time prior to the hearing complain of the deficiency of the accusation. While the appellant filed objections under section 11506 of the Administrative Procedure Act, there was no contention that the accusation was uncertain in that it could not be determined therefrom where the acts charged occurred. This is indicative that he was in no way misled or prejudiced. A reading of the transcript of the evidence clearly shows that the case was tried on the theory that all of the acts complained of occurred on the premises, and the evidence substantially supports such theory. When a case is tried on the "assumption that a cause of action is stated, that certain issues are raised by the pleadings, that a particular issue is controlling, * * * neither party can change this theory for purposes of review on appeal." (3 Witkin, California Procedure 2264.)

[7] Even if it could be said that Counts II, III, IV and VI were insufficient and prejudicially defective and that the findings pertaining to said counts were not supported by substantial evidence, the judgment, nevertheless, would still have to be affirmed since the license was revoked on each of the six counts separately, severally and collectively. When a penalty is imposed on each of several counts in such manner, the court need only find that one of the several counts is sufficient. Genser v. State Personnel Board, 112 Cal.App.2d 77, 245 P.2d 1090.

We conclude that there is no merit in this appeal and that the judgment must be and it is affirmed.

Carlos Fernando LUJAN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6394.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 13, 1959.

Defendant was convicted of possession of narcotics. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that evidence sustained conviction and that where judge, before imposing sentence, incorrectly stated that establishment involved was under control of defendant and attorney representing defendant replied that that was correct, defendant was precluded from complaining if court proceeded further upon that faulty assumption.

Affirmed.

In prosecution for possession of narcotics, prosecution had burden of proving possession, actual or constructive, and knowledge of nature of contraband on part of defendant, but such knowledge could be proved circumstantially. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Appeal from judgment of conviction of possession of narcotics in violation of § 11500, Health & Safety Code. It is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of guilty and that the court committed error in sentencing the defendant.

Viewing the evidence in the light of the rules declared in People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778, and a host of later cases declaring the same principles, there remains no doubt of its sufficiency to support a conviction. Having been informed that one Lopez was using his place at 2210½ South San Pedro Street, Los Angeles, for the meeting of narcotic addicts and was there selling narcotics to them, the police at 1:00 a. m. on February 8, 1958, entered those premises and placed all occupants under arrest. One of them was defendant Lujan. His eyes were glassy, pupils beady, and he was sniffling like he had a cold. One of the arresting officers, who was stipulated to be an expert on the subject, testified that defendant then was under the influence of a narcotic. He asked defendant if he was an addict and defendant said he was. Asked to show his arms, defendant did so and the officer observed puncture wounds on the right one. The officer saw defendant drop a key into a waste basket and took it into his possession. It bore the name and address of the Richard Hotel and had on it room No. 55. Questioned about it, defendant said it was the key to his room. The officers took him to that hotel, asked him if they could search his room, and he replied in the affirmative. As officers Breckenridge and Uno entered the latter went to an upholstered chair, turned over the cushion and found in the seat a box containing empty capsules, an eye-dropper, hypodermic needle, spoon and a rubber contraceptive containing a powdery white substance which proved to be 70 grains of heroin. In a medicine cabinet was a can of lactose. In a desk drawer were found measuring spoons and under the mattress a white handkerchief folded in such manner as to be usable as a tourniquet.

There was also found in the desk drawer a rent receipt which bore date of February 1, 1958 and acknowledged receipt from Carlos Lujan of nine dollars for rent of room 55 "from 2-1 to 2-8." The officers found no clothing or personal belongings in the room. No other person had rented it for that period and there is no evidence of its use by anyone other than defendant.

He testified in his own behalf, claiming that he moved out of room 55 the day before the arrest and that he did not own or know anything about the narcotic and the paraphernalia which were found in room 55. He said that he had rented the room and when his rent was up he just walked out and failed to turn in the key; that his clothes were at his home, 3407 Blanchard Street, and he had no personal belongings at the hotel; also, that he did not drop the key in the waste basket and that the officers took it off his person.

[1, 2] The prosecution had the burden of proving possession, actual or constructive (People v. White, 50 Cal.2d 428, 325 P.2d 985), and knowledge of the nature of the contraband on the part of defendant, which knowledge like any other issue may be proved circumstantially (People v. Blinks, 158 Cal.App.2d 264, 267, 322 P.2d 466; People v. Magdaleno, 158 Cal.App.2d 48, 51, 322 P.2d 89); the question of reasonable doubt is for the trial court, not the appellate tribunal (People v. Poindexter, 51 Cal. 2d 142, 330 P.2d 763).

[3] Counsel for appellant emphasizes the claim that defendant was not shown to have had any connection with the heroin because he had moved out of the hotel room on the previous day. Only defendant's testimony supports that assertion and the trial judge rejected it, not without reason. Appellant had a home of his own but had rented a room in this hotel at previous times; it does not appear that he had taken any of his clothes or personal belongings to the room on this occasion; his rent receipt gave him a right of occupancy through the eighth of February, or until some prescribed hour of that day; certainly his time had not expired at 1:00 a. m.; no one else was occupying the room at the time of search or for almost a week prior to that event. Defendant did not check out at the hotel. He said he just walked out. The key was in his pocket at the time of arrest but he surreptitiously sought to rid himself of it before a search of his person began. He was a confessed addict and was under the influence of a narcotic at the time of his arrest and the later search of his room. His constructive possession of the drug and the equipment for its injection is the natural conclusion from the evidence, as is an intention on his part to return to the room. His knowledge of the nature of the hidden objects is equally clear from the evidence accepted by the court. The proof is amply sufficient to support the conviction.

At the time of hearing of application for probation and sentencing of defendant the trial judge made some remarks which indicate a momentary confusion as to the identity of the defendant and appellant claims prejudice ensuing therefrom. Appellant was charged with a prior felony, violation of § 503, Vehicle Code, and that was found to be true. Probation was denied and defendant was sentenced to the state prison for the term prescribed by law.

[4–6] Before imposing sentence the judge said: "Well, this was an establishment which was under the control of the defendant, if I remember rightly," and the attorney then representing appellant replied: "That is correct." Thus appellant was precluded from complaining if the court perchance proceeded further upon that faulty assumption. But the court, in sentencing this defendant, adhered to the record, recited the facts correctly and properly sentenced him to state prison for the term prescribed by law. The court also remarked: "In addition to these more formal matters, the record shows that the defendant has a considerable police record here, in addition to the matter just referred to." Section 11712 prescribes as punishment for a first conviction of possession of narcotics imprisonment in the county jail for not more than a year or in the state prison for not more than ten years. The sentence imposed here was undoubtedly a lawful one and any remarks made by the judge tending to reveal incorrect reasoning on his part in reaching a correct result are to be ignored; it is the correctness of the judgment that must control, not the reasoning lying back of it. People v. Grana, 1 Cal.2d 565, 571, 36 P.2d 375; People v. Lindsey, 90 Cal.App.2d 558, 564, 203 P.2d 572; People v. Hudson, 97 Cal.App.2d 572, 577, 218 P.2d 60; People v. Henry, 86 Cal.App.2d 785, 790, 195 P.2d 478; People v. Burdette, 78 Cal.App.2d 591, 594, 178 P.2d 8. Appellant was clearly guilty of the charge upon which he was convicted. There was no miscarriage of justice in sentencing him to the penitentiary.

Judgment affirmed.

Ellis O. BARBER, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6274.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 5, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Herbert V. Walker, J., of grand theft and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held, with regard to defendant's contention that but one offense occurs when fraudulent representations induce victim to enter into contract for sale of stock which provides for installment payments and where separate payments are made pursuant thereto, that evidence showed three separate, distinct and different sales of stock, all based upon false representations made before first sale, and not as an installment type contract.

Affirmed.

1. False Pretenses ⇐49(1)

In prosecution for grand theft, evidence sufficiently established that defendant had been guilty of a fraud and false pretense. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 26104(a); West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 487, subd. 1.

2. False Pretenses ⇐49(1)

In prosecution for grand theft, wherein defendant contended that but one offense occurs when fraudulent representations induce victim to enter into contract for sale of stock which provides for installment payments and where separate payments are made pursuant thereto, evidence showed three separate, distinct and different sales of stock, all based upon false representations made before first sale, and not as an installment type contract. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 484.

3. Criminal Law ⇐565

In prosecution for grand theft, evidence, on limitations issue, established that defendant had been absent from state for a period of time. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 800.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from the orders granting probation to the defendant upon charges of grand theft.

In an information filed in Los Angeles county on February 18, 1957, the defendant was charged in four counts (I, III, V and VII) with the crime of violating section 26104(a), Corporations Code, and in three counts (II, IV and VI) with the crime of grand theft (Penal Code, § 487, subd. 1).

The defendant was found not guilty of the charges under the Corporations Code, and guilty of the grand theft charges.

Counts II and IV charged the defendant with taking $500 of the personal property of George McLain, Sr., on or about the days of March 30, 1954 and June 14, 1954, respectively. In count VI the defendant was charged with taking $500 from Richard E. Harvuot on or about July 24, 1954. The information further set forth that the defendant was out of the state of California and not within it for the period from October, 1956 to February 4, 1957, and that he had previously been convicted of the crimes of violation of the Corporate Securities Act and grand theft.

It was stipulated that the cause might be submitted upon the transcript of the preliminary hearing, each side reserving the right to offer additional evidence. The defendant was found guilty as heretofore mentioned, and probation was granted for three years on conditions, among others, that the defendant make restitution and pay fines of $1,000 each on counts II and IV.

A résumé of the facts is as follows: H. B. Turner and the defendant agreed in February, 1952, to form the Death Valley Panamint Mining Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as the company. Turner and his partners owned twenty-six mining claims in Death Valley and a five-ton mill. Turner and his partners were to receive 49 per cent of the stock in the company in exchange for their claims and the mill. The defendant was to receive 51 per cent of the stock of the company for his payment of all expenses in the construction of a road to the claims and for his purchase and assignment to the company of two house trailers, a bulldozer and equipment and machinery to build the road. The road was started in March. In March the company was incorporated in Nevada with a capital stock of 500 shares at $100 par value per share. The mill which the Turner group had contributed was transported by burro into the mountains and left disassembled. In June amended articles of incorporation were filed providing for a capital structure of 50,000 shares at $1 par value per share. In that same month the Turner group was issued 12,250 shares of stock and their claims and mill were assigned to the company. At the same time 12,750 shares were issued to the defendant. The defendant finished the construction of the road a short time later, and some work such as building a camp was done. The mill was never assembled. Nothing was done after November, 1952. A bank account of the company, opened in April, 1952, was closed out finally in March, 1953.

A son of the defendant traded to the company some equipment, including a welding outfit, for 2,200 shares of the company's stock. The certificate for this stock was dated September 3, 1952, and was the only stock he ever received.

In November, 1953, the defendant bought for himself a mill and the Arcturus mining claim. This mill was located about eight miles from Baker, California, and was about 75 miles from the mill owned by the company. In December, 1953, the company authorized the purchase of this mill and mine for 100,000 shares of its stock and also resolved that the capital structure of the company be changed to provide for 250,000 shares of $1 par value for each share.

The defendant conducted operations at his mill from November, 1953, until the summer of 1954. He returned the Arcturus claim to the former owner, Gaskins, and bought two other mining claims, the Telegraph and the Telegraph Extension. In exchange for 100,000 shares of stock issued to him in December, 1954, the defendant gave to the company the mill near Baker and the two Telegraph claims in lieu of the Arcturus claim.

Mrs. Madelon Baker traded an automobile for 1,500 shares of the stock of the company in February, 1954. She went to the mill at Baker with Gaskins in January 1954, and met the defendant who told her that she would be receiving large dividends in about three months. She received the 1,500 shares, which were issued to her directly from the company, for turning her car over to Gaskins. No certificate was ever issued to Gaskins.

Mrs. Baker told McLain about the mine and her investment in the company and he indicated some interest in meeting the defendant and buying some stock. The defendant stopped in McLain's office in February, 1954, and was told by Mrs. Baker that McLain was enthusiastic about the stock. Mrs. Baker introduced the defendant to Mr. McLain. The defendant told McLain that he was in mining activities and that the name of his company was the Death Valley Panamint Mining Company; that the venture was kept very close in the family; that it was a small affair and that no effort was being made to sell any stock outside; that the company had an operating mill just eight miles out of Baker, had a number of very excellent mining claims and that it was a going concern. He further stated that they expected, within a short time, to pay high dividends each month and they needed some capital for salaries at the mill and mine, and for equipment and machinery at the mine, and that was why he, the defendant, wanted to sell some stock. The defendant also stated that the money from the purchase of any stock would go to help expand the operations at the mines, toward corporate purposes, and would be used for payrolls at the mill and mine owned by the company at Baker. McLain asked for a financial statement but never received it.

McLain mailed a check dated February 11, 1954, for $2,000, made payable to the Panamint Mining Company. The check was received and endorsed by the defendant and the money therefrom was deposited in the defendant's bank account in Riverside, California, on February 15, 1954.

McLain mailed another check for $500, made payable to Death Valley Panamint Mining Company, to the company in care of the defendant at Baker. This check was endorsed by the defendant and the money therefrom was deposited in his account on April 7, 1954.

McLain mailed another check for $500, dated June 14, 1954, made payable to Death Valley Panamint Mining Company. The defendant deposited this check in his account at the bank at Riverside on June 21, 1954.

Mrs. Baker also told Richard Harvuot about the company. He was interested and bought 500 of her 1,500 shares. Mrs. Baker and Harvuot went to Baker in the spring of 1954 and she introduced Harvuot to the defendant. Harvuot wanted to buy some stock but was told by the defendant that there was none for sale.

The defendant gave Mrs. Baker 500 shares of his stock for her services, and to show his gratitude to her for being instrumental in bringing McLain's $3,000 to his aid.

The company issued 500 shares to Harvuot on June 5, 1954. This was done in accordance with an understanding arrived at between Mrs. Baker and the defendant, so that it would not be necessary for her to break up her 1,500 share certificate.

A son of the defendant called Mrs. Baker and told her that a friend of his had some stock and was willing to sell at half price. Mrs. Baker said she couldn't buy it but that she had a friend who could. She called the defendant and talked to him about the conversation she had had with his son. The defendant stated that he was displeased with the boy for wanting to sell at half price, but it was legitimate and if she wanted to buy it he, the defendant, would issue the stock directly to her because the stock had never been issued to the boy, who was supposedly a friend of his son. Mrs. Baker talked to Harvuot and he said he would buy at that price. Mrs. Baker was then told by the son that the boy friend had decided not to sell his stock.

The defendant talked to Mrs. Baker and explained that he was in receipt of some very fine engineering reports about the Telegraph Mine and that he knew McLain and Harvuot would be interested. There was a meeting of Mrs. Baker, Harvuot, McLain and the defendant at Mrs. Baker's home, where the defendant stated that he had purchased the mine for a very good price, that they could go in and haul out the ore and with a mill operating, it was all ready to start moving. The defendant said it was a very fine investment for the company and that he needed capital to develop the mine. He wanted Mrs. Baker and Harvuot to buy more stock. The defendant pointed out to Harvuot that if he bought the stock which his son's friend had for sale it would only result in the money going into the boy's pocket, whereas if he bought stock from him or the company that the money would go into his original investment and into the development of the Telegraph mine, and therefore be a wise thing to do. Harvuot later talked to the defendant and told defendant he would buy half of the 2,000 shares available at $500, if the defendant could arrange it. The defendant told Harvuot to make his check out to him, and this was done. The check was endorsed by the defendant.

In 1955, McLain made a trip to Baker and was told at the property that the defendant was in Los Angeles. McLain wrote to the defendant and attempted to recover some of his money.

A Los Angeles county investigator assigned to the District Attorney's office attempted to serve a warrant on the defendant at Baker on January 31, 1957. The attempt was unsuccessful and it was learned that the defendant was no longer living there. The defendant was arrested on February 7, 1957, and at that time he stated that he had left Baker in October, 1956, and had been living in Las Vegas since about that time.

None of the money received from Harvuot and McLain ever went to the benefit of the company.

The prior conviction was admitted.

The defendant contends on appeal:

(1) The evidence was insufficient to show an intent to commit grand theft by false representation;

(2) Defendant could not have been properly convicted on both Count II and Count IV as together they constituted but one offense; and

(3) The statute of limitations had run on any offense covered by Counts II and IV.

Section 484 of the Penal Code provides in part that any person who shall "* * * by any false or fraudulent representation or pretense, defraud any other person of money, * * * is guilty of theft."

This court, speaking through Mr. Presiding Justice White, said in People v. Massey, 151 Cal.App.2d 623, at pages 658–659, 312 P.2d 365 at page 387: "The elements of the crime of grand theft on this theory [fraud committed by false pretenses] of obtaining money or property by false pretenses are: (1) an intent to defraud; (2) an actual fraud committed; (3) the use of false pretenses to perpetrate the fraud; and (4) reliance upon the fraudulent representations in parting with the money or other property. (Citing cases.)"

[1] It is not necessary to recite all of the evidence in this case; suffice it to say that enough already has been set forth herein to show, upon a study thereof, that the defendant was guilty of a fraud and false pretense. The evidence disclosed that the venture was not as described by the defendant in that, among other things, the stock was not closely held and it was not a small family affair. Furthermore, the only mill which the company owned was not even assembled and was some 75 miles from Baker. The defendant himself owned the mill near Baker and was operating it for himself. The company was not a going concern and had been dormant since November, 1952. The money from the sale of the stock was not used for the company, but was used by the defendant for his personal expenses. In People v.

Massey, supra, 151 Cal.App.2d at page 659, 312 P.2d at page 387, it was appropriately stated: "What constitutes fraud and false pretense may not be the subject of a definite or invariable rule, but we feel that it may justly be said that included therein are the elements of trick, cunning, dissembling and unfair ways by which another is deceived. Deception deliberately practiced for the purpose of gaining an unfair advantage of another is fraud."

A complete reading of the transcript discloses that the defendant knew that many of the representations he made were false, and that he intended to and did defraud McLain. As to Harvuot, it is clear that the defendant fabricated testimony about who received the money from Harvuot, thereby showing a consciousness of guilt. And in any event, in the present situation, it was not necessary that the property taken inure to the benefit of the defendant. People v. Ashley, 42 Cal.2d 246, 259, 267 P.2d 271; People v. Rabe, 202 Cal. 409, 423, 261 P. 303; People v. Coffelt, 140 Cal.App. 444, 449, 35 P.2d 374.

In our opinion the evidence is sufficient to sustain the contentions of the prosecution.

[2] As to the defendant's second contention, defendant insists that but one offense occurs where fraudulent representations induce the victim to enter into a contract for the sale of stock which provides for installment payments and where separate payments are made pursuant thereto.

We view the evidence as showing three separate, distinct and different sales of stock, all based upon false representations made before the first sale, and not as an installment type contract. See People v. Rabe, supra, 202 Cal. 409, at page 413, 261 P. 303, at page 305, and also People v. Ashley, supra, 42 Cal.2d 246, at page 273, 267 P.2d 271, at page 288, where it is pointed out:

> "The claim of error is predicated upon the denial of a motion to have the prosecution elect between the two counts charging defendant with grand theft from Mrs. Neal, and between the two counts charging him with grand theft from Mrs. Russ. It is contended that only one theft was committed as to each of the prosecuting witnesses. 'Where the proof in a given case is sufficient to show the existence of a fraudulent intent or purpose on the part of an accused to obtain property from another by false or fraudulent representations, the making of the first false representations which moved or induced the person to whom they were made to part with his property does not immune the defrauding person from punishment for subsequently obtaining from said person other property which was parted with under the influence of the fraudulent representation, which were still operating upon the mind of the defrauded person at the time he passed his property into the hands of said designing person.' (Citing case.)"

The defendant relies upon People v. Lima, 127 Cal.App.2d 29, 273 P.2d 268, and Dawson v. Superior Court, 138 Cal.App.2d 685, 292 P.2d 574; but a reading of those cases convinces us that the facts in the instant case and those in the cited cases are very different.

[3] As to the defendant's third contention, namely, that the statute of limitations had run as to counts II and IV: even assuming that counts II and IV are but part of one offense (and not separate offenses, as we believe them to be), the statute of limitations had not, in our opinion, run.

Section 800 of the Penal Code reads in part as follows:

> "An indictment for any other felony than murder, the embezzlement of public money, the acceptance of a bribe by a public official or a public employee, or the falsification of public records, must be found, and information filed, or case certified to the superior court, within three years after its commission. * * *"

It was proved and established that the defendant was absent from the state of California for a period of time, and the statute was tolled during such period. The information was filed three years and eight days after the first payment, and the statute was tolled for about three months, consequently it is clear that the prosecution was not barred.

The order granting probation is affirmed.

Civ. 23041.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 5, 1959.

Action by trucker against co-partnership to recover sum claimed to be due as freight undercharges on lumber which he allegedly hauled for defendants. The defendants moved for change of venue on ground of convenience of witnesses and that ends of justice would be promoted by change. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kenneth N. Chantry, J., entered order denying motion and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that examination of affidavits filed and the entire record disclosed that it could not be said as a matter of law that trial court had abused its discretion in denying defendants' motion for change of venue from county in which five of the six individual defendants resided and where the main office of partnership was located.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐965
Venue ⇐52(1)

Changes of venue on ground of convenience of witnesses lies essentially within judicial discretion of judge and his rulings will not be disturbed unless it clearly appears as a matter of law that there has been an abuse of discretion.

2. Venue ⇐51, 52(1), 68

Under statute authorizing court to change place of trial when convenience of witnesses and ends of justice would be promoted by change, both convenience of witnesses and ends of justice must concur and moving party has burden of proving that both conditions will be met. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 397, subd. 3.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐965
Venue ⇐68

Where defendants moved for change of venue on the ground of convenience of witnesses and promotion of the ends of justice, burden was on defendants to establish by affidavit or otherwise that both conditions were met, and upon denial of motion the reviewing court must inquire as to whether there was substantial evidence before trial court that ends of justice would be served by retaining action for trial in county in which it was originated and if there was such evidence on record determination was within the trial court's judicial discretion and order complained of must be affirmed. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3.

4. Venue ⇐70

In moving for change of venue on ground of convenience of witnesses and promotion of ends of justice direct evidence of facts showing that ends of justice will be served by granting or denying change is not required, and trial court may rely not only on direct facts set forth in affidavits but also on any reasonable and relevant inference arising therefrom, and weight to be given affidavits is for the trial court to determine. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3.

5. Venue ⇐51, 52(1)

Substantial consideration of time, expense and convenience are obviously material to issue of whether convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by change of venue. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 397, subd. 3.

6. Venue ⇐51, 52(1)

The location of books and records in another county is not relevant to question of convenience of witnesses in hearing on motion for change of venue, but such fact may be considered on question of whether ends of justice will be served by making more expeditious the production of records. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 397, subd. 3.

7. Venue ⇐70

In action by trucker against copartnership to recover sum allegedly due as freight undercharges on lumber allegedly hauled for copartnership, an examination of affidavits filed with respect to defendants' motion for change of venue and the entire record, failed to disclose as a matter of law that trial court had abused its discretion in denying defendants' motion to change place of trial from county in which five of the six individual defendants lived and in which copartnership had its main office. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 397, subd. 3.

HERNDON, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendants from an order denying their motion for change of venue from Los Angeles County to Humboldt County on the grounds of the convenience of witnesses and that the ends of justice would be promoted by the change. The sole question presented is whether the trial court's ruling constituted an abuse of discretion.

Plaintiff is a truck operator; he seeks to recover the sum of $67,295.79 claimed to be due as freight undercharges on lumber which he allegedly hauled for defendants from sawmills in Northern California to various outlets in Southern California, principally in Los Angeles County. Defendants were sued individually and as copartners doing business as Pacific Fir Sales. Five of the individual defendants reside in Los Angeles County and the main office of the partnership, where the company's records are kept, is in this county. One partner, W. J. Ivey, resides in Humboldt County. The action was originally filed in Los Angeles in April, 1955, and an amended complaint incorporating the results of a complicated freight charge re-rating, on which this action rests, was filed in September, 1956.

The defendants filed an answer on May 29, 1957, in which they admitted they were partners doing business as Pacific Fir Sales, but denied that plaintiff had hauled lumber for them, that plaintiff's trucking rates were below the legal minimum or that any additional sum was due. The answer also alleged as an affirmative defense that plaintiff had contracted directly with the various sawmills which supplied the lumber, and that plaintiff was aware that defendants simply acted as sales agent for the sawmills and "had no interest or ownership in any of said lumber or in any of said mills." Defendants also alleged that plaintiff had made Pacific Fir Sales his agent to collect and turn over the freight charges collected from the consignees of the lumber and that funds which defendants had paid to plaintiff constituted advances on the freight bills against collections for plaintiff's account from the consignees. A letter from plaintiff to defendants alleged to embody the agreement between them was made part of the answer.

Thereafter, defendants moved to change the venue of the action from Los Angeles to Humboldt County on the ground that "the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change." § 397, subd. 3, Code of Civil Procedure. In support of their motion defendants filed the affidavit of defendant M. W. Crook, in which he revealed the names of six persons whom defendants proposed to call as witnesses necessary to establish their defense. The affidavit recites: that all of these witnesses live in the Humboldt-Siskiyou region, some 500 to 600 miles from Los Angeles; that all of them are actively engaged in the lumber or trucking business in that area; that it would be extremely inconvenient for them to leave their businesses and come to Los Angeles to testify; and that, because of the distance from their place of residence to the place of trial, said witnesses could not be compelled to attend the trial.

Mr. Crook's affidavit concludes with a summary of the expected testimony of the proposed witnesses, including that of one George Vochatzer who allegedly served as plaintiff's manager in the Humboldt area and solicited the sawmills for the hauling work involved herein. The other five proposed witnesses are identified as operators or employees of sawmills from which plaintiff hauled lumber. It is stated that each of these witnesses would testify that plaintiff contracted with his mill directly and that in each transaction Pacific Fir Sales acted simply as a sales agent.

Plaintiff filed four affidavits in opposition to the motion for change of venue, including that of Vince Bordelon, (identified as a "rate expert" engaged by plaintiff in April, 1955, to re-audit plaintiff's freight bills) whom plaintiff proposed to call as an expert witness. Mr. Bordelon's affidavit states that he "has personal knowledge of the facts upon which he will testify at the trial," that he resides and is employed in Los Angeles County and that it would be extremely inconvenient for him to leave his employment to testify at a trial in Humboldt County.

Plaintiff's attorney, Mr. Colangelo, executed two affidavits. In one he indicated that state tariff regulations require a higher freight rate for off-rail than for on-rail destinations, and that the undercharges arose because the original freight bills had been prepared as if each destination was a railhead. He averred that plaintiff proposed to call a number of unidentified persons who could testify as to what rail facilities were in fact available at the several consignee's places of business. The second affidavit indicated that it would be necessary to subpoena the records of defendant Pacific Fir Sales, which were kept in their offices in Los Angeles County.

Finally, plaintiff submitted the affidavit of R. W. McCoy, an ex-employee of plaintiff presently residing and employed in Los Angeles County, who averred that it would be extremely inconvenient for him to attend a trial in Humboldt County because he could not obtain leave from his present employment.

The nature of Mr. McCoy's expected testimony is revealed in the following extracts from his affidavit: "That between the dates of September 30, 1953 and July 31, 1954, deponent was employed as dispatcher for E. A. Minatta, the plaintiff herein; that during the period September 30, 1953–July 31, 1954, he personally assisted E. A. Minatta in the negotiations and arrangements leading up to the agreement between said E. A. Minatta and defendants Pacific Fir Sales. * * * Deponent in his capacity of supervisor of said Oakland Yard of plaintiff received all instructions for the delivery of the lumber from said yard from the defendants herein and he can testify concerning the instructions so received from the defendants, and deponent knows and can testify that defendants agreed to pay to plaintiff the freight charges covering all of said shipments."

[1] The question to be answered is whether the record as above summarized shows an abuse of discretion in the denial of the motion. As recently stated by this court: "Change of venue on the ground of convenience lies essentially within the judicial discretion of the judge and his ruling will not be disturbed unless it clearly appears as a matter of law that there has been an abuse of that discretion." Edwards v. Pierson, 156 Cal.App.2d 72, 76, 318 P.2d 789, 792; Chaffin Construction Co. v. Maleville Bros., 155 Cal.App.2d 660, 662, 318 P.2d 196; Di Giorgio Fruit Corporation v. Zachary, 60 Cal.App.2d 560, 563, 141 P.2d 8.

[2, 3] Pursuant to subdivision 3 of section 397 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court may, on motion, change the place of trial "When the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change." Both of these conditions—convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice—must concur and "* * * the moving party has the burden of proving that both conditions will be met." Peiser v. Mettler, 50 Cal.2d 594, 328 P.2d 953, 960; Willingham v. Pecora, 44 Cal.App.2d 289, 295, 112 P.2d 328. Since the burden was on appellant to establish by affidavit or otherwise that both conditions of section 397, subd. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure were met, we must inquire if there was substantial evidence before the trial court that the ends of justice would be served by retaining the action for trial in Los Angeles County. If there is such evidence in the record, the determination was within the trial court's judicial discretion, and the order complained of must be affirmed. Edwards v. Pierson, supra, 156 Cal.App.2d 72, 76, 318 P.2d 789.

[4] There is no requirement that there be direct evidence of the facts showing that the ends of justice will be served by granting or denying the change. "The trial court may rely not only on the direct facts set forth in the affidavits, but also on any reasonable and revelant inference arising therefrom." Harden v. Skinner and Hammond, 130 Cal.App.2d 750, 755, 279 P.2d 978, 981; cf. Benjamin v. Benjamin, 128 Cal.App.2d 367, 371, 275 P.2d 43. And the weight to be given the affidavits in support of and in opposition to the motion was for the trial court to determine. Rios v. Lacey Trucking Co., 123 Cal.App.2d 865, 869, 268 P.2d 160.

[5, 6] There are several logical and valid inferences arising from the instant record which would support a determination by the trial court that the ends of justice would be better served by retaining the action in Los Angeles County. The action was properly brought in the county where five of the six individual defendants reside, where the main office of the defendant partnership is found, and where its records are kept. Attorney Colangelo's affidavit states that the records of defendant partnership must be subpoenaed to establish that "the freight charges were to be paid by Pacific Fir Sales." He also avers that "* * * the obligation for the payment of the freight was assumed by Pacific Fir Sales as an integral part of each transaction, and that the plaintiff herein had nothing whatsoever to do with the determination of the rate for the freight, nor in the negotiations therefor." From these averments it is not unreasonable to infer that the "records" of defendant which might be subpoenaed would include considerable and possibly voluminous memoranda, accounting materials, and correspondence. Although it may be assumed that these records could be made available by service of appropriate process upon the partner residing in Humboldt County, the trial court was not obliged to ignore the obvious advantages of having the records conveniently accessible to the trial court's process for purposes of discovery examination, pre-trial proceedings and the trial itself. Substantial considerations of time, expense and convenience are obviously material to the issue. Harden v. Skinner and Hammond, supra, 130 Cal.App. 2d 750, 755, 279 P.2d 978; see Bartholomae Oil Corporation v. Associated Oil Co., 203 Cal. 176, 179, 263 P. 516. The fact that a defendant's books and records are located in another county is not relevant to the question of convenience of witnesses, (Peiser v. Mettler, supra, 50 Cal.2d 594, 328 P.2d 953) but such facts may be considered on the question whether the ends of justice will be served by making more expeditious the production of records. Harden v. Skinner and Hammond, supra, 130 Cal.App. 2d at page 755, 279 P.2d at page 981; cf. People v. Spring Valley Co., 109 Cal.App. 2d 656, 667, 241 P.2d 1069.

Also, the action was brought by plaintiff in the county in which most of the deliveries of lumber were made. The affidavits indicate that the physical characteristics of the railhead facilities at each of the several points of destination have a direct bearing upon essential issues in the present litigaton, since the appropriate freight rate depends on the type of rail facilities at the consignee's place of business. The trial court could reasonably have concluded that the ends of justice would be better served by retaining the action for trial in this county where the terminals in question were located and where witnesses qualified to testify as to the nature of the facilities at the several locations would be readily available. Cf. Bartholomae Oil Corporation v. Associated Oil Co., supra, 203 Cal. 176, 179, 263 P. 516.

Further, it does not appear that there would have been an abuse of discretion if the trial court had denied the motion on the grounds of the convenience of witnesses. By his affidavit, Mr. McCoy indicated he "knows and can testify that defendants agreed to pay plaintiff the freight charges covering all of said shipments," and his affidavit shows that he will be inconvenienced if the change in the place of trial is ordered. The trial court was obliged to consider the convenience of plaintiff's witness as well as defendants'. "It is no abuse of the trial court's discretion to deny a motion for a change of the place of trial made on the ground of the convenience of witnesses, if the affidavit of the defendant in opposition to the motion shows that his witnesses will be inconvenienced if the change be ordered." People v. Spring Valley Co., supra, 109 Cal.App.2d 656, 667, 241 P.2d 1069, 1075; Churchill v. White, 119 Cal.App.2d 503, 507, 259 P.2d 974. And "The mere numerical majority of the witnesses on one side or the other does not necessarily determine the merits of the motion." Wood v. Silvers, 35 Cal. App.2d 604, 607, 96 P.2d 366, 367, 97 P.2d 265; People v. Spring Valley Co., supra, 109 Cal.App.2d at page 667, 241 P.2d at page 367. The motion is addressed to the trial court's judicial discretion, and "* * * the moving party must stand upon the strength of his showing rather than upon the weakness, if any, of the opposition." Chaffin Construction Co. v. Maleville Bros., supra, 155 Cal.App.2d 660, 664, 318 P.2d 196, 199.

[7] We adopt and apply to the case at bar the following language from Churchill v. White, supra, 119 Cal.App.2d 503, 507, 259 P.2d 974, 976: "An examination of the affidavits filed herein and the entire record viewed in the light of the rules stated in the cases cited impels the conclusion that it cannot be said as a matter of law that the trial court abused its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion, and ruling, in effect, that plaintiff had failed to prove both of the conditions requisite to a change of the place of trial." v.

Daniel Rodriguez TORRES, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 1394.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 8, 1959.

Prosecution for violation of statute providing that any person who while under the influence of intoxicants drives a vehicle and when so driving does "any act forbidden by law" or "neglects any duty imposed by law" which act or neglect proximately causes injury to any other person than himself, is guilty of a felony. The Superior Court, Imperial County, L. J. Mouser, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, Acting P. J., held that evidence, including testimony that defendant was under the influence of alcohol, was speeding, and injured at least four passengers in another vehicle with which he collided at an intersection, sustained conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

J. Frederick Rosen, Coachella, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and John A. Vander Lans, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MUSSELL, Acting Presiding Justice.

Appellant was charged in four counts in an information with violations of section 501 of the California Vehicle Code. He entered a plea of not guilty to all counts, waived trial by jury, and was found guilty on all four counts by the court. He was granted three years probation, conditioned upon his serving ninety days in the county jail and the payment of a fine of $300. His sole contention on his appeal from the judgment is that the evidence was insufficient to support it.

On November 2, 1957, at about 10:00 p. m., appellant was driving a Ford pickup easterly on Main Street in the city of Brawley, when his car struck a Chevrolet automobile being driven south on Eighth Street and through the intersection of Eighth and Main Streets, in said city. Main Street runs east and west and Eighth Street north and south, with stop signs on Eighth Street on both sides of Main. A deputy sheriff, who was driving east on Main Street, testified that the Ford pickup passed him at an estimated speed of from 45 to 50 miles per hour about a block east of Eighth and Main Streets. Appellant was driving a Ford pickup and one Frank Morales was a passenger. After the pickup passed him the deputy observed a Chevrolet automobile headed south on Eighth Street and stopped at its intersection with Main. He heard the pickup truck's brakes screech before it collided with the Chevrolet in the intersection. After the accident and while at the scene, the deputy smelled a strong odor of alcohol on the appellant's breath.

Charlie Hudson, the driver of the Chevrolet, testified that there were six passengers riding with him in his car at the time of the accident; that he brought his car to a complete stop at the stop sign on Eighth before he entered the intersection; that he looked both ways on Main Street and, seeing no cars coming in either direction, proceeded south into the intersection; that he did not see the pickup until it was from one to one and one-half car lengths from his car and he estimated the speed of the pickup at 50 miles per hour when the accident happened.

Doris Jones, Barbara Jones, Vada Smith and Joseph Smith, all passengers in the Chevrolet, were injured in the accident.

Appellant was taken to a hospital in an ambulance and before he left the scene of the accident stated that he would consent to a blood alcohol test. James Reynolds, a police officer who arrived at the scene of the accident within a few minutes after it happened, testified that he smelled the odor of alcohol on appellant's breath and noted that his eyes were watery and bloodshot. A sample of his blood for a blood alcohol test was taken from appellant at the hospital by a technologist. Another technologist took the blood sample to the sheriff's crime laboratory and upon examining it, found that the alcohol content of the blood sample was .231 per cent. He testified that it was his opinion that anyone with a blood alcohol content above .15 per cent would be under the influence of intoxicating beverages; that a person with a blood alcohol content of .231 per cent would have his reflexes and reasoning power impaired; that he would be semi-anesthetized and that his vision would be impaired.

The evidence is amply sufficient to show that the appellant at the time of the accident was driving a vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

In People v. Haeussler, 41 Cal.2d 252, 261, 260 P.2d 8, 13, the trial court told the jury that "* * * it was unnecessary to find that Mrs. Haeussler was 'drunk' or 'intoxicated'; it would be sufficient if it were found that intoxicating liquor had 'so far affected the nervous system, brain or muscles as to impair to an appreciable degree the ability to operate the vehicle in a manner like that of an ordinarily prudent and cautious person in the full possession of his faculties, using reasonable care and under like conditions.'" On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the degree to which a person must be influenced by alcohol to warrant a conviction under section 501 of the Vehicle Code was correctly stated in the instruction given.

In People v. Markham, 153 Cal.App.2d 260, 270, 314 P.2d 217, 224, it was held that in a prosecution under this statute it is not necessary to prove any specific degree of intoxication, but that in each case where a person is charged with a violation of section 501 of the Vehicle Code, the question whether the accused was "under the influence of intoxicating liquor" is a question of fact to be determined by the court or jury from all the proven circumstances of the case; that > "We are satisfied that the prevailing rule in this and many other states is, '* * * that expert testimony is admissible where the conclusions to be drawn by the jury depend on the existence of facts which are not common knowledge and which are peculiarly within the knowledge of men whose experience or study enables them to speak with authority thereon, and in those cases in which the conclusions to be drawn from the facts stated, as well as knowledge of the facts themselves, depend upon professional or scientific knowledge or skill not within the range of ordinary training or intelligence. In such cases not only the facts but the conclusions to which they lead, may be testified to by qualified experts. Of course any such opinion may be accepted or rejected by the jury. (Citing cases.)' People v. Tucker, 88 Cal.App.2d 333, 339, 198 P.2d 941, 944. No distinction is made by the law in weighing evidence, between expert testimony and evidence of other character (citing cases)."

There is substantial evidence in the record from which the trial court could and did infer that the appellant was driving his pickup truck at a speed in excess of that permitted by sections 510 and 511 of the Vehicle Code. The record shows that four persons were injured in the accident; that appellant was under the "influence of intoxicating liquor"; and that he was driving his truck at an unlawful speed in the business district of the city of Brawley at the time of the accident, which act and neglect proximately caused bodily injuries to the occupants of the Hudson automobile.

Judgment affirmed.

v.

COUNTY OF COLUSA, a body corporate and politic being a subdivision of the State of California, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 9491.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Dec. 30, 1958.

Hearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Action against county for injuries to plaintiff resulting from negligence of county's employee in county hospital in negligently administering blood transfusions to plaintiff while he was a private paying patient in the hospital, wherein the county filed a demurrer. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Colusa County, Warren Steel, J., sustaining the demurrer the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Warne, J. pro tem., held, inter alia, that the complaint did not state a cause of action in view of governmental immunity attaching to county in operation of county hospital.

Affirmed.

1. Counties ⇐222

Complaint alleging that plaintiff was a private paying patient in county hospital for purpose of receiving blood transfusions, and that plaintiff was injured because of county employee's negligence in carelessly examining plaintiff and carelessly administering the transfusions of a type other than that of plaintiff's did not state cause of action against county.

2. Counties ⇐144

The operation of a county hospital is a governmental function and hence governmental immunity attaches to such operation with result that counties are not responsible for negligence in care or treatment of patients in such hospital.

3. Counties ⇐146

Where private paying patient in county hospital was injured because of alleged negligence in administering blood transfusions, county was not liable on theory that in employing incompetent and unlicensed technician to perform laboratory tests county created a dangerous and defective condition of public property for which it was liable under statute, since no dangerous or defective condition of property was involved and action was based solely on negligence of county's employee acting within scope of his employment. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

4. Counties ⇐146

A county is not liable in absence of a statute for damages resulting from negligence of its employees while performing a governmental function.

5. Counties ⇐146

The imposition of a charge for services by county hospital was not inconsistent with exercise of governmental functions so as to render county liable for negligence of hospital employee in administering blood transfusions to a private paying patient.

Herron & Winn, San Francisco, for appellant.

WARNE, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant county in an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from the negligence of the defendant's agent in caring for plaintiff while he was a patient at the defendant's hospital. The judgment was entered upon the sustaining of a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend.

[1] The complaint alleges that the defendant is a body corporate and politic being a subdivision of the State of California, and at all times maintained and operated Colusa County Memorial Hospital; that at all times relevant to this action defendant employed a laboratory technician, who was acting within the scope of his employment; that plaintiff was a private paying patient for the purpose of receiving blood transfusions; that the plaintiff's blood was examined and typed by defendant, and blood transfusions were given to plaintiff by defendant. It is further alleged that defendant so negligently and carelessly examined plaintiff and so negligently and carelessly administered and performed the blood transfusions that the plaintiff was caused to and did receive blood transfusions of a type other than that of plaintiff's, and as a result thereof plaintiff sustained personal injuries. The complaint also alleges compliance with the various claim statutes prior to the commencement of this action, that is filing a verified claim against the defendant county within the time allowed by law, etc. and the rejection thereof by the board of supervisors of said county.

Such a cause of action does not lie against a county. Griffin v. County of Colusa, 44 Cal.App.2d 915, 113 P.2d 270; Calkins v. Newton, 36 Cal.App.2d 262, 97 P.2d 523; Latham v. Santa Clara County Hospital, 104 Cal.App.2d 336, 231 P.2d 513. Not only did the Supreme Court not see fit to grant a hearing in any of the cited cases, but it has given express approval to the rule of sovereign immunity enunciated therein. Talley v. Northern San Diego Hospital District, 41 Cal.2d 33, 39, 257 P.2d 22.

[2] In his brief plaintiff recognizes the fact that the latest cases which have been decided by the Supreme Court of this state have taken the position that the operation of a county hospital is a governmental function, and that governmental immunity attaches to such operation with the result that the counties have not been held responsible for negligence in the care or treatment of patients in county hospitals. However, he contends that those decisions are unrealistic and unjust and should be overruled. While some appellate courts, on reaffirming the rule, have criticized the doctrine as being outmoded and unjust, relief must be secured from the supreme court or the legislature and not from an intermediate court that is bound by prior decisions.

[3–5] As a further contention appellant attempts to evade the force and effect of the doctrine of sovereign immunity cited in the hereinabove mentioned cases. He alleges that defendant county is not cloaked with sovereign immunity from liability under the factual situation in this case since it employed an incompetent and unlicensed technician to perform laboratory tests and thereby created a dangerous and defective condition of public property for which it is liable under section 53051 of the Government Code. There is no merit in this contention.

It clearly appears to us that under the allegations of plaintiff's complaint no dangerous or defective condition of public property is involved. The action is one based on negligence of one of defendant's employees acting within the scope of his employment. Such an action does not come within any of the provisions of section 53051. A county is not liable in the absence of a statute for damages resulting from the negligence of its employees while performing a governmental function. Morrison v. Smith Bros., 211 Cal. 36, 293 P. 53; Hanson v. City of Los Angeles, 63

Cal.App.2d 426, 147 P.2d 109; Fox v. City of Pasadena, 9 Cir., 78 F.2d 948; Brown-Crummer Inv. Co. v. City of Burbank, D.C., 17 F.Supp. 469. Nor is the imposition of a charge for services by the county hospital inconsistent with the exercise of governmental functions. Calkins v. Newton, supra; Latham v. Santa Clara County Hospital, supra.

Further this court rejected a like contention in an analogous situation in the case of Grove v. County of San Joaquin, 156 Cal.App.2d 808, 320 P.2d 161. In that case, as in the instant case, the complaint indicated that the plaintiff's injuries were not due to any defective condition of public property, a jail, or any general plan of use in operating it.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 17947, 17948.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Dec. 23, 1958.

Action for reasonable value of services allegedly rendered decedent during two years before her death. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Milton D. Sapiro, J., entered judgment in favor of each plaintiff and defendant executor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J., held that evidence was sufficient to show that services were rendered at decedent's request, with expectation of plaintiffs, known to decedent, that the services were to be compensated for and that such expectation existed when the services were rendered.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⚖221(2)

In order to support a judgment for reasonable value of services allegedly rendered a decedent, a plaintiff is required to show that the services were rendered at decedent's request with expectation of plaintiff known to decedent, that the services were to be compensated for, and that such expectation existed when the services were rendered.

2. Executors and Administrators ⚖253, 256(6)

Intention of a decedent to pay for services rendered, and expectation of compensation may be inferred from conduct where equity and justice require compensation for services to a decedent, as well as from direct communications, and the question of existence of such intention and expectation is one of fact, and the determination of the trial court is to be affirmed unless it is unreasonable under all the circumstances.

3. Executors and Administrators ⚖205(1)

Services rendered in expectation of a devise of realty would support a judgment for reasonable value of services rendered a decedent.

4. Executors and Administrators ⚖221(5)

In action for reasonable value of services allegedly rendered decedent during two years before her death, evidence was sufficient to show that services were rendered at decedent's request, with expectation of plaintiffs, known to decedent, that the services were to be compensated for and that such expectation existed when the services were rendered.

5. Stipulations ⇐1

A "stipulation" is an agreement between attorneys.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Stipulation".

6. Stipulations ⇐14(1)

Courts will tend to construe in favor of a stipulating party, or even wholly disregard a stipulation inadvertently made in conflict with a party's theory of his case.

DRAPER, Justice.

Appeals from two judgments are here upon a consolidated record. Plaintiffs are sisters. They filed claims against the estate of Aurora Brignardello for the reasonable value of services allegedly rendered to her during the two years before her death. The executor of her will rejected both claims, and plaintiffs brought these actions. After trial to the court sitting without a jury, judgment was rendered in favor of each plaintiff for $2,000. Defendant executor appeals.

Plaintiffs lived next door to decedent. The latter was 84 years old at the time of her death. She had been ill for some time and there is evidence that she was senile and unable fully to care for herself. There is testimony that she spent a major part of each day of her last two years with plaintiffs, and that they provided her meals daily, took her on frequent visits to her doctor, drove her to places she desired to visit, bought minor items for her, and provided labor and materials for repairs to her home. There is evidence that plaintiffs believed her to have no cash and no assets save her somewhat dilapidated home. In this situation, there was no agreement fixing any compensation for plaintiffs. However, decedent repeatedly said to plaintiffs "No good deed ever goes unrewarded, and you will get your reward." She also said that nobody but the husband of one of the plaintiffs would ever get her house, and that she would see that they had the first opportunity to buy the house at a reasonable price. Her estate amounted to almost $250,000.

[1] The parties agree that, to support the judgment, the record must contain evidence showing that the services were rendered at decedent's request, with the expectation of plaintiffs, known to decedent, that the services were to be compensated for, and that such expectation existed when the services were rendered. See 27 Cal.Jur. 202; 58 Am.Jur. 516. Appellant's sole contention is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment. There is little question that the services were rendered. Although appellant suggests that decedent did not request them, there is much evidence that she did ask for the aid of respondents.

[2–4] Appellant's principal contention is that there is no evidence to show that respondents' services were rendered with any expectation of compensation, and none that decedent knew respondents expected any material reward. But "'[t]he intention to pay and the expectation of compensation may be inferred from conduct where equity and justice require compensation, as well as from direct communications.'" Winder v. Winder, 18 Cal.2d 123, 128, 114 P.2d 347, 350, 144 A.L.R. 935. The question is one of fact, and the determination of the trial court is to be affirmed unless it is unreasonable under all the circumstances. Mayborne v. Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank, 46 Cal.App. 178, 183, 188 P. 1034. In many cases of this type, as here, the evidence would support a finding either way, but such state of the record requires affirmance. Lloyd v. Kleefisch, 48 Cal.App.2d 408, 410, 120 P.2d 97; Payne v. Bank of America, 128 Cal.App.2d 295, 303, 275 P.2d 128. Appellant places great stress upon respondents' testimony that they did not expect payment. But the trial court could view this testimony as referring to cash payment, as being reasonable in the light of respondents' opinion that decedent had no cash, but as not in any way negativing an expectation of material reward other than cash. Services rendered in expectation of a devise of real property will support a judgment for the reasonable value of the services. Winder v. Winder, supra, 18 Cal. 2d 123, 114 P.2d 347. While the evidence in the case at bar could well support a finding in appellant's favor, we are satisfied that in the testimony as to the declarations, acts and circumstances of the parties there is substantial evidence to support the judgment. It is significant that defendant executor himself testified that respondents "padded this claim so much that I had to reject it. Now, if it had been a fair claim I would have approved it." The claims were for $9,500 each. The court allowed $2,000 each.

Appellant, however, urges that counsel for respondents stipulated in open court that respondents' services were rendered "without expectation of compensation for them." This claim is based upon a statement made during cross-examination of one of respondents. She testified, regarding the aid given by her sister and herself to decedent "We were told to do it for her soul's sake." Appellant's counsel then asked:

> "And you were both doing it for that reason? A. Yes, we were, up to the time we found she had an estate of $350,000 and had taken us in so grossly.
> "Q. And it was then for the first time that you expected to get any payment?
>
> "Mr. Collins (respondents' attorney): I will stipulate that that is so, if that will help your case, Mr. Picard.
>
> "Mr. Picard (appellant's attorney): Will you answer it yourself?"

This last question was directed to the witness. The question was read by the reporter, answered by the witness, and appellant's counsel examined her in further detail upon this issue. Later witnesses were similarly examined upon the same issue.

[5, 6] A stipulation is an agreement between attorneys. Palmer v. City of Long Beach, 33 Cal.2d 134, 142, 199 P.2d 952. It seems obvious that the attorney for appellant rejected the offered stipulation. His detailed examination of later witnesses shows clearly that he did not accept or rely upon the claimed stipulation as to expectation of payment. Even if the stipulation were accepted, it could hardly be given the effect contended for by appellant. As already pointed out, the evidence warrants the view that even if decedent's apparent financial condition negatived an expectation of payment in money, it did not preclude the expectation of compensation or reward through the asset of decedent's home. Still further, the cases tend to construe in favor of the stipulating party, or even to wholly disregard, a stipulation which is "inadvertently made in conflict with a party's theory of his case." Back v. Farnsworth, 25 Cal.App.2d 212, 220, 77 P.2d 295, 299; see also 1 Witkin, California Procedure, § 56.

Judgments affirmed.

and for sale of brake hose to garage for resale and use of such defective hose on motorist's automobile. From a judgment of nonsuit entered by the Superior Court, Sacramento County, Malcolm C. Glenn, J., in favor of garage and manufacturer on one cause of action and from a judgment in favor of garage on jury verdict in other action for personal injuries, the motorist appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that where motorist took his automobile to garage when brakes failed and mechanic installed a new brake hose and motorist returned and got his automobile after the repair was finished and while driving down a hill after traveling a distance of approximately 70 miles, during which time motorist noticed brakes were spongy, his brakes failed and automobile went out of control and went off highway at a curve at bottom of hill and into a gulley and it was found that threads on male end and those on female end of hose were stripped, doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable.

Judgments reversed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐927(3)

On appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of nonsuit entered in an action in which plaintiff contended that evidence warranted an instruction on res ipsa loquitur, evidence must be reviewed in light most favorable to the plaintiff.

2. Automobiles ⇐16, 368

Where motorist took his automobile to garage when brakes failed and mechanic installed a new brake hose and motorist returned and got his automobile after repair was finished and while driving down a hill after traveling a distance of approximately 70 miles, during which time he noticed brakes were spongy, his brakes failed and automobile went out of control and went off highway at a curve at bottom of hill, and it was found that threads on male end and those on female end of hose were stripped, doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable in action by motorist against garage and manufacturer of brake hose.

3. Negligence ⇐121(2)

An accident must be of a kind which ordinarily does not occur in absence of someone's negligence, it must be caused by an agency or instrumentality in control of defendant, and it must not have been due to any voluntary action or contributory negligence on part of plaintiff before doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable.

4. Negligence ⇐136(6)

Where evidence is conflicting or subject to different inferences, it is for jury, under proper instructions, to determine whether each of conditions necessary to bring in rule of res ipsa loquitur are present.

Robert A. Zarick, Sacramento, and Anthony J. Scalora, Sacramento, for appellant.

Johnson, Davies & Greve, Sacramento, for respondent Vogel Chevrolet.

Fitzwilliam, & Memering, Sacramento, for respondent General Motors.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit entered in favor of defendants Vogel Chevrolet Company and General Motors Corporation on the second cause of action alleged in plaintiff's second amended complaint and from a judgment entered in favor of defendant Vogel Chevrolet upon a jury verdict as to the first cause in an action for personal injuries. The first cause of action alleged negligence on the part of Vogel in installing a brake hose on plaintiff's automobile. The second cause alleged that General Motors negligently manufactured the brake hose and negligently sold the same to Vogel for resale and use and that Vogel was negligent because it used the defective hose on plaintiff's auto.

[1] Since this is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit and since plaintiff contends that the evidence warranted an instruction on res ipsa loquitur we are confronted with two well established rules, each compelling us to review the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff. See, Dunn v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 43 Cal.2d 265, 272 P.2d 745, and Edgett v. Fairchild, 153 Cal.App. 2d 734, 738, 314 P.2d 973.

[2] The evidence so reviewed shows that while plaintiff was driving in downtown Sacramento his brakes failed. The car was taken to the Vogel garage and was assigned for repair to one Alexander, a mechanic in the employ of Vogel. Vogel's practice appears to have been that when a car was brought in for repair, an employee would discuss the condition of the car with the customer and following his diagnosis the car would be assigned to a mechanic accompanied by a time card which set forth the repair instructions. In this case the mechanic was instructed to "replace brake hose, adjust and bleed the brakes." Pursuant to the instructions, Alexander went to the parts department and obtained a new hose. All parts were ordered from General Motors Oakland plant. Brake hoses were packaged and delivered two in a carton, and upon receipt the carton was opened and the hoses placed in a bin where they remained until requested by a mechanic. Only the employees so assigned were allowed in that specific department. When the new parts were taken from the package they were "looked at" and if anything was "obviously wrong it was seen" and the part returned to General Motors. The parts manager recalled no defective hoses being returned during the time in question. After Alexander obtained the hose from the parts department, he examined it, determined it to be satisfactory and proceeded to install it on plaintiff's car. Plaintiff, who was there at that time, looked at the hose, noted that it appeared new, but made no particular inspection and left the garage before it was installed. After installing the hose and checking the brake system, Alexander tested the same and found it to be in good working order. Upon plaintiff's return he was informed the repair was finished. He in turn tested the brakes by stepping on the pedal, found them to be satisfactory, paid his bill and left. He concluded one errand in downtown Sacramento, drove to his home in the northern part of the city, and then to the home of his mother in Grass Valley, altogether a distance of approximately 60 miles. The brakes felt all right to him when he left Sacramento, but on the way to his mother's they appeared "spongy". Following dinner at his mother's he left to visit his brother in Penn Valley, some 10 to 12 miles distant from Grass Valley. The highway in this area traverses rolling foot-hill country. While descending Martell Grade he noticed some deer grazing along the highway. When he stepped on the brake pedal to slow down for the deer, there was a snapping sound, and the pedal went all the way to the floorboard. The car immediately began to pick up speed with the result that it went out of control, making it impossible for plaintiff to negotiate a turn at the bottom of the hill. As a result the car went over the side of the road into a gulley some 30 feet below the road bed. There were no skid or other tire marks on the paved portions of the highway but there were marks on the shoulder. Following the accident the car was towed to a garage in Grass Valley. When the brake system was examined six days after the accident, it was found that the threads on the male end and those on the female part of the hose were stripped. The hose, which was introduced in evidence, also showed that the brass nipple insert on the female end was flattened. The witness Alexander, who was called under Section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, first testified that it would have been impossible to have installed the hose so as to have stripped the threads. However he later testified that when threads are stripped upon installation, "you're in for a lot of trouble."

[3] It is plaintiff's contention that the court erred in failing to give his requested instruction on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, as set forth in BAJI, 206–C, Vol. 2, pages 642–643. As stated in Seneris v. Haas, 45 Cal.2d 811, 823, 291 P.2d 915, 53 A.L.R.2d 124, the conditions to be met before the doctrine may be applied are that the accident must be of a kind which ordinarily does not occur in the absence of some one's negligence, that it must be caused by an agency or instrumentality in control of the defendant and that it must not have been due to any voluntary action or contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.

In regard to the first element certainly it cannot be said that brakes ordinarily fail immediately after repair. The testimony relied upon by defendants as dispelling this element as a matter of law does nothing more than present a conflict in the evidence. Defendants further argue that since Vogel had relinquished control of the car to plaintiff the second requisite had not been met. The fact that the accident occurred after plaintiff took the car from the garage does not preclude application of the rule provided there is no evidence that the instrumentality had been improperly handled or that its condition otherwise changed as control was relinquished by defendants. Burr v. Sherwin Williams Co., 42 Cal.2d 682, 268 P.2d 1041. As to the third condition it is defendants' contention that plaintiff was contributorily negligent by driving the car after the brakes were spongy; that the curves where the accident occurred could be negotiated at 30 miles per hour; that there was no evidence of brake fluid on the pavement; that there were tire marks on the shoulder, and that the damaged brake hose was not discovered until six days after the accident all point to the conduct of the driver and not the defective brakes as the cause of the accident. Again this only presents a conflict.

[4] Thus where, as here, "the evidence is conflicting or subject to different inferences, it is for the jury, under proper instructions, to determine whether each of the conditions necessary to bring into play the rule of res ipsa loquitur are present." Baker v. B. F. Goodrich Co., 115 Cal.App. 2d 221, 229, 252 P.2d 24, 29. In amplification of the previous rule the court in the Seneris case, supra, 45 Cal.2d at page 827, 291 P.2d at page 924, further held:

"* * * The conclusion that negligence is the most likely explanation of the accident, or injury, is not for the trial court to draw, or to refuse to draw so long as plaintiff has produced sufficient evidence to permit the jury to draw the inference of negligence even though the court itself would not draw that inference; the court must still leave the question to the jury where reasonable men may differ as to the balance of probabilities (Res Ipsa Loquitur in California, Prosser, 37 Cal. L.Rev. 183, 194–195). The inference of negligence is not required to be an exclusive or compelling one. It is enough that the court cannot say that reasonable men could not draw it. Bauer v. Otis, 133 Cal.App.2d 439, 443, 284 P.2d 133. The existence of the conditions upon which the operation of the doctrine is to be predicated is a question of fact and the right of the jury to find those facts must be carefully preserved Black v. Partridge, 115 Cal.App.2d 639, 646, 252 P.2d 760; Rose v. Melody Lane, 39 Cal.2d 481, 247 P.2d 335; Knell v. Morris, 39 Cal.2d 450, 247 P.2d 352; Milias v. Wheeler Hospital, 109 Cal.App.2d 759, 241 P.2d 684."

Additionally in the present case there is evidence to show that the defect in the hose was patent not latent. In discussing a similar situation, the Supreme Court in Escola v. Coca Cola, etc., 24 Cal.2d 453, 459–460, 150 P.2d 436, 439, held:

"If the explosion resulted from a defective bottle containing a safe pressure, the defendant would be liable if it negligently failed to discover such flaw. If the defect were visible, an inference of negligence would arise from the failure of defendant to discover it. Where defects are discoverable, it may be assumed that they will not ordinarily escape detection if a reasonable inspection is made, and if such a defect is overlooked an inference arises that a proper inspection was not made. A difficult problem is presented where the defect is unknown and consequently might have been one not discoverable by a reasonable, practicable inspection."

A situation even more comparable to the instant case was presented in Northern v. General Motors, 2 Utah 2d 9, 268 P.2d 981. There it was held that where the purchaser of a new truck sustained damages when the steering mechanism, which was alleged to have been defective, broke and caused the truck to turn over, the questions whether the defect in the mechanism existed at the time it was assembled, whether the defect could have been discovered by reasonable inspection, and whether the injury to the purchaser was caused by the failure of the defective steering mechanism, were questions for the jury. In that case the facts showed that the shaft in the steering column, which was completely enclosed until the time of the accident, had a distinct penetration of rust at the place of the break. Such evidence, the court said, was sufficient to support a reasonable inference that the defect existed at the time it was assembled, and that the evidence was likewise sufficient to support the conclusion that the defect was such as could have been discovered by reasonable inspection. The court in the Northern case cited Hooper v. General Motors, 123 Utah 515, 260 P.2d 549, where it was held that where a wheel and rim separated, causing the wheel to collapse, and the evidence showed loose connections, it was some evidence of a defective wheel at the time of the assembly and some evidence of the cause of the accident, and certainly from such evidence reasonable minds could infer that the wheel was defective at the time of assembly.

What we have heretofore said concerning the applicability of the rule res ipsa loquitur to the nonsuit as it applies to both defendants is equally applicable to the first cause of action on which the jury found for the defendant.

Since the case must be reversed for the reasons heretofore set forth, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the further questions raised by plaintiff.

The judgment of nonsuit as to the second cause of action and the judgment entered pursuant to the verdict of the jury on the first cause of action are reversed.

Action by wife for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, A. T. Shine, J., rendered judgment, and husband and some of his sons and their wives appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, P. J., held that where properties were placed in name of partnership in which husband owned a 70% interest and sons owned 15% interest each, husband dominated partnership, which was a device through which husband held title to properties of which he remained a true owner, partnership was dissolved while divorce action was pending pursuant to plan whereby sons received parcels of real property under verbal agreements that after divorce case was over property would be returned to husband or to partnership, and husband executed note for more than $273,000 secured by deed of trust on three other properties, properties were properly distributed to wife as community property and deed was properly cancelled on basis that there was evidence of fraud.

Affirmed.

1. Divorce ⇐150(2), 253

In action for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, findings by reference to pleadings or paragraphs of pleadings were adequate and exact findings as to value of property awarded to either party were not required. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 94.

2. Divorce ⇐127(4), 130

In action for divorce, evidence sustained wife's right to divorce on ground of extreme cruelty and her testimony was sufficiently corroborated by testimony of her daughter. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 94.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1011(1)

Where evidence is conflicting, there is no function for reviewing court to perform other than that of affirming judgment.

4. Divorce ⇐27(1)

In determining whether certain acts and conduct constitute extreme cruelty, each case must be determined according to its particular circumstances. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 94.

5. Divorce ⇐127(4), 184(6)
Evidence ⇐584(3)

Testimony of one witness entitled to credit is sufficient to establish a fact in a civil case and in a hotly contested divorce case the corroboration required is slight and its sufficiency is largely for trial court.

6. Husband and Wife ⇐266

Agreement as to community nature of assets may be inferred from statements on parties' income tax returns.

7. Husband and Wife ⇐264

In action by wife for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, evidence of husband and children was not sufficient to overcome presumption of community property especially where records which might have been of assistance in tracing funds had either been burned or disappeared. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 94, 164.

8. Husband and Wife ⇐249

If separate property of husband and wife cannot be traced, commingled property is treated as community property. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 164.

9. Husband and Wife ⇐264

In action by wife for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, evidence supported finding that certain instruments prepared and signed by wife under husband's direction establishing certain properties as his separate property were made and delivered only for convenience of husband in order to expedite management of properties, and upon oral understanding that wife was not relinquishing any rights therein. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 94, 164.

10. Divorce ⇐249(3), 275(2)

Where properties were placed in name of partnership in which husband owned a 70% interest and sons owned 15% interest each, husband dominated partnership which was a device through which husband held title to properties of which he remained a true owner, partnership was dissolved while divorce action was pending pursuant to plan whereby sons received parcels of real property under verbal agreements that after divorce case was over property would be returned to husband or to partnership, and husband executed note for more than $273,000 secured by deed of trust on three other properties, properties were properly distributed to wife as community property and deed was properly canceled on basis that there was evidence of fraud.

11. Divorce ⇐252

Where wife obtained divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, and husband had during course of marriage been engaged in 25 to 30 businesses of different kinds, award of businesses to husband in their entirety and award of real property holdings of approximate gross value of $1,350,000, subject to outstanding federal and state tax liens in excess of $1,000,000, to wife was not an abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 94.

William E. Ferriter, San Francisco, Richard E. Macey, Stockton, Czar S. Winters, San Francisco, for appellants.

Suren Toomajian, Oakland, Franklin C. Stark, Oakland (Stark & Champlin, Edward L. Barrett, Jr., Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the Superior Court of Alameda County, granting a divorce to respondent Mrs. Helen Fong, also known as Fong Hong May. Mrs. Fong filed her complaint for divorce on the grounds of extreme cruelty in February 1954, and requested custody of the four minor children, support and maintenance for herself and the children, an equitable award of community property, attorneys fees and expense money. Appellant Dr. Fong Wan, also known as Fong Poy (hereafter referred to as Dr. Fong), answered and also cross-complained for divorce on the grounds of extreme cruelty. By order of the Court, Mrs. Fong was permitted to file a supplemental complaint which alleged that the two adult sons of Dr. Fong's first marriage, Richard and Edward, held in trust certain community property located in Oakland, which had been transferred to them without consideration and in fraud of Mrs. Fong's rights. The wives of Richard and Edward, Gracina and Amy, respectively, were also added as defendants to determine their claims. The supplemental complaint further named as party defendant, Leslie N. McReynolds, an accountant for Dr. Fong, and alleged that McReynolds had been named as trustee under a deed of trust by which Richard and Edward claimed a lien against certain community property, located in San Francisco, and that this deed of trust was given without consideration and in fraud of Mrs. Fong's rights. McReynolds is not a party to this appeal.

Richard and Edward denied Mrs. Fong's allegations, and by cross-complaint, sought to quiet title to the various properties in their names. Mrs. Fong answered with a denial; Dr. Fong with a disclaimer of any interest in the properties. After eleven days of trial, the court made findings of facts and conclusions of law, ordered Richard and Edward to refrain from disposing of the Oakland properties or using any of the rentals therefrom, and entered an interlocutory judgment and decree of divorce in favor of Mrs. Fong.

Dr. Fong, his sons Richard and Edward, and their wives appeal therefrom, contending that: 1) the trial court failed to make findings on all material issues; 2) the evidence is insufficient to support the findings and judgment; 3) the court erred in its determination of the community property of the parties and made an unjust, inequitable, arbitrary, and capricious division of such community property.

The parties were married on September 27, 1925, and separated on February 18, 1954. During the course of the marriage, Dr. Fong had been engaged in 25 to 30 businesses of different kinds, including night clubs and restaurants in San Francisco and Oakland, and his own business as a Chinese herb doctor in both cities. These business ventures were determined to be a part of the community property and awarded in their entirety to him. Dr. Fong had also acquired real property holdings of an approximate gross value of $1,350,000. These properties were awarded to Mrs. Fong, subject to outstanding Federal and State tax liens in excess of $1,000,000. Of the eight children of the marriage, four were minors at the time of the trial. Mrs. Fong received custody of the children. This portion of the judgment is not challenged by the appellants.

At the time of the trial, Dr. Fong was delinquent for $12,700 in support and maintenance payments for Mrs. Fong and the children and $750 in accounting fees in violation of a court order. In further violation of court orders, Dr. Fong did not keep up the premium payments on certain life insurance policies. At the trial, Dr. Fong clearly indicated that he had no intention of complying with any court order with which he did not agree, and refused to sign bonds for the support of his minor children.

After a careful perusal of the voluminous record and briefs, we conclude that appellants' contentions are devoid of merit. Rather, the trial court is to be commended for reaching such a just result in the light of voluminous, intricate and conflicting evidence; witnesses requiring interpreters; abuse from Dr. Fong, and Dr. Fong's repeated assertions that he would not comply with the court's orders.

[1] Appellants contend that findings of the trial court were not made upon all material issues and did not comply with the statute. Findings by reference to the pleadings or paragraphs of the pleadings are adequate. Kalmus v. Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, 132 Cal.App.2d 243, 281 P.2d 872; LaMar v. LaMar, 30 Cal.2d 898, 186 P.2d 678. There is no authority for appellants' position that exact findings as to value are required in a case like this one. See Lamb v. Lamb, 131 Cal.App.2d 489, 280 P.2d 793.

[2–5] Appellants' second contention that there is insufficient evidence to support respondent's right to a divorce on grounds of extreme cruelty, is not borne out by the record. While there is conflicting evidence on this issue, the record reveals ample substantial evidence to support the result reached by the trial court. Where the evidence is conflicting, there is no function for the reviewing court to perform other than that of affirming the judgment. Clewett v. Clewett, 136 Cal.App.2d 913, 289 P.2d 512. In determining whether certain acts and conduct constitute extreme cruelty, as defined by Civil Code, § 94, each case must be determined according to its particular circumstances. McFall v. McFall, 58 Cal.App.2d 208, 136 P.2d 580. Respondent's testimony on the issue of extreme cruelty was sufficiently corroborated by the testimony of her daughter, Juanita. The testimony of one witness entitled to credit is sufficient to establish a fact in a civil case. Leffingwell v. Faubion, 89 Cal.App. 157, 160, 264 P. 306. In a hotly contested case the corroboration required is slight and its sufficiency is largely for the trial court. Jones v. Jones, 135 Cal.App.2d 52, 286 P.2d 908.

[6–8] Appellants contend that the trial court had no jurisdiction to award the parcels of real property located in San Francisco to Mrs. Fong as community property, as these properties were the separate property of Dr. Fong. They rely on Dr. Fong's testimony that these properties, although acquired in 1944, were bought with $150,000 in separate funds which Dr. Fong had held, in fact, since before the marriage. Dr. Fong's testimony was contradicted by Mrs. Fong, from statements given by Dr. Fong to Central Bank, and the amended 1944 Federal income tax returns which referred to the properties as purchased with community funds. An agreement as to the community nature of assets may be inferred from statements on the parties' income tax returns. Heck v. Heck, 63 Cal.App.2d 470, 147 P.2d 110; Kenney v. Kenney, 128 Cal.App.2d 128, 274 P.2d 951. Appellants' evidence was not sufficient to overcome the presumption of community property. See Civil Code, § 164, where the presumption is particularly strong in the case of a marriage as long as this one. In re Duncan's Estate, 9 Cal.2d 207, 70 P.2d 174. Even if appellants' evidence is viewed most favorably, records which might have been of assistance in tracing funds had either been burned or disappeared. If separate property cannot be traced, commingled property is treated as community property. Mueller v. Mueller, 144 Cal.App.2d 245, 301 P.2d 90.

[9] Appellants also rely on certain instruments prepared and signed by Mrs. Fong under Dr. Fong's direction, which establish the San Francisco properties as his separate property. Aside from Mrs. Fong's testimony that she couldn't read English and did not know what she signed, there is ample evidence to support the trial court's finding that these instruments were made and delivered only for the convenience of the husband in order to expedite management of the properties, and upon the oral understanding that Mrs. Fong was not relinquishing any rights therein.

Appellants next argue that the Oakland properties were the assets of the partnership of Fong & Sons, or of Richard and Edward, and that the lien of the San Francisco properties was the property of Richard and Edward. The evidence indicates that when the Oakland properties were acquired, Dr. Fong was not a citizen of the United States; Richard and Edward were. To avoid the effects of the Alien Land Law, Dr. Fong used various devices to permit him to acquire property. Dr. Fong made down payments on some of the properties as "loans" to the persons, who then received record title but never repaid the "loans". Some of the properties were deeded to the sons and other, with the understanding that the property was held in trust for Dr. Fong and would be placed in his name whenever he wanted. Two financial statements, one dated 1933 and one dated 1934, stated that Dr. Fong held unrecorded deeds to some of the Oakland properties. Included among the properties held under unrecorded deeds were two parcels deeded to Richard and Edward as minors, in 1921 and 1923. At the trial, however, Richard and Edward claimed these parcels under 1955 deeds from Fong & Sons. When questioned about the financial statements at the trial, Dr. Fong stated he lied on the statements and usually lied when it was to his advantage.

Dr. Fong became a citizen in 1944. In 1945, the partnership of Fong & Sons was formed. Four of the San Francisco properties and all twelve Oakland properties were placed of record in the name of Fong & Sons. While the partnership records show that Dr. Fong owned a 70% interest and Richard and Edward 15% each, the evidence indicates that the partnership was simply another device through which Dr. Fong held titles to properties of which he remained the true owner. Neither Richard nor Edward in 1945 owned the Oakland properties which they purported to exchange for the interest in the partnership, nor was any money of their own invested in these properties. Their 15% interests were not gifts to them. Mrs. Fong never consented to any gifts to the sons as she did not, until the time of trial, know of the various transactions relating to the Oakland properties, or that funds from Dr. Fong's other businesses went into the Oakland properties. Dr. Fong completely dominated the partnership; he wrote all checks and had charge of all of its money and property. He used the partnership funds freely as his own, paid no interest on huge sums allegedly borrowed from the partnership, and paid no rent on certain properties which were supposedly those of the partnership.

The partnership was dissolved in 1954, while this divorce action was pending, pursuant to the plan of Dr. Fong and Richard and Edward to defeat Mrs. Fong's rights. Richard and Edward received nine parcels of real property in Oakland and the balance due on another Oakland parcel which like two others had been sold. Dr. Fong also executed to them a note for $273,678.10, secured by a deed of trust on the three San Francisco properties. These transfers were made on a verbal agreement that after the divorce case was over, the property would be returned to Dr. Fong or Fong & Sons. On dissolution, there was no audit or appraisal of the partnership assets. The dissolution did not purport to follow the partnership agreement. Appellants could not explain the origin of the $273,678.10 charge against Dr. Fong. Appellants' accountant could not account for a discrepancy of $100,000 in the partnership records.

[10, 11] From the above it is clear that there is evidence of fraud and the trial court properly distributed the Oakland properties to Mrs. Fong as community property and cancelled the deed of trust in the amount of $273,678.10. Nor can we find any indication that the trial court abused its discretion in the determination and distribution of the community property. Crouch v. Crouch, 63 Cal.App.2d 747, 147 P.2d 678.

There is no merit in appellants' further contentions that all appellants were not properly made defendants; that the pleadings did not properly put in issue the true ownership and equitable ownership of all of the properties; that Richard and Edward were "misled into not raising the defense of the statute of limitations."

We conclude that the judgment finds support in the record before us.

Judgment affirmed.

DRAPER, J., concurs.

DOOLING, Justice (dissenting).

I concur in the judgment. However, I wish to elaborate my reason for agreeing with the somewhat cryptic statement in the opinion that: "There is no authority for appellants' position that exact findings as to value are required in a case like this one."

The only finding as to value is by reference to the first amended complaint. In paragraph VII of that complaint plaintiff alleges on information and belief that the community property is in excess of one million dollars in value. The finding is that all of the allegations of this paragraph are true. While the allegation is made on information and belief the finding is that this allegation is true. This is a sufficient finding of the fact alleged.

The more difficult question is presented by the fact that the court made no finding of the value of the property awarded to either party. Thus it is impossible to determine from the findings what proportion (by value) of the property the court awarded to either party.

The wife obtained the decree on the ground of extreme cruelty. She was thus entitled to receive more than one-half of the community property (Harrold v. Harrold, 43 Cal.2d 77, 82, 271 P.2d 489) and the court in its discretion might have awarded all of the community property to her (Barham v. Barham, 33 Cal.2d 416, 431, 202 P.2d 289).

Were the wife appealing she could properly complain that in the absence of a finding of the value of the respective properties awarded to each it could not be determined that she in fact received the more than one-half to which she is entitled. Villafuerte v. Villafuerte, 125 Cal.App.2d 466, 469, 270 P.2d 526. The husband, who is not entitled as of right to any particular portion of the community property, is in no such position to complain. Pope v. Pope, 102 Cal.App.2d 353, 372 et seq., 227 P.2d 867.

PATROSSO, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by the defendants Greendale Park, Inc., and Ralmor Corporation from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in the principal sum of $12,535.96 plus interest on the sum of $16,271.41 from September 1, 1955.

The complaint is in two counts. The first seeks to foreclose a mechanic's lien for the value of sash doors, frames and jambs furnished by plaintiff pursuant to an agreement with defendant Ralmor and used in the construction of residences upon 100 lots in a tract of land owned by the defendant Greendale. The second cause of action is in the form of a common count for goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered to the appellants. Prior to the trial the first count was dismissed and the case went to trial upon the second cause of action alone. Defendants filed separate answers to the second count. Defendant Greendale denied that it was indebted to the plaintiff in any sum. Ralmor, while admitting that it was indebted to plaintiff, pleaded a counterclaim in the sum of $3,735.45 for damage alleged to have been sustained by it as a result of defective material furnished by the plaintiff.

At the pretrial hearing which was held on May 16, 1957, plaintiff stated that, while not pleaded, plaintiff upon the trial would contend "that the ownership of stock in Ralmor Corporation and Greendale Park, Inc. is the same or substantially the same so as to constitute one corporation the alter ego of the other." In response counsel for the defendant stated that it would "object to the introduction of any evidence on the subject of alter ego on the ground that the complaint does not set forth facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action based on the alter ego principle." No request was then or later made by the plaintiff to amend its complaint and the action went to trial upon the second count of the original complaint on July 2, 1957. At the trial following the opening statement of counsel for the plaintiff, defendants' counsel stated that he would object to any evidence tending to establish that each of the defendants was the alter ego of the other, and thereafter objected to all evidence tending to establish this fact. All of these objections were overruled and evidence was received upon the basis of which the trial court made the following findings:

"VI

"That there is a unity of interest and ownership of both defendants Ralmor Corporation and Greendale Park, Inc.

"VII

"That the defendant Ralmor Corporation was and is merely an instrumentality through which the defendant Greendale Park, Inc. conducted its operations as a business convenience.

"VIII

"That both of said defendants are insolvent.

"IX

"That fraud and injustice would result unless both of said corporations were held equally responsible to plaintiff for plaintiff's claim."

[1, 2] As its first ground for reversal of the judgment Greendale contends that the trial court erred in admitting over its objection evidence designed to establish that it and Ralmor were the alter ego of each other upon the ground that such evidence was outside of the issues made by the pleadings. While it is true that the complaint is devoid of any allegation to this effect it now appears to be the established rule in this State that where a defendant is charged with liability his denial thereof is sufficient to authorize the reception of evidence to establish such liability upon the principle of the alter ego or at least that under circumstances such as here present the reception of such evidence does not constitute reversible error. In Gordon v. Aztec Brewing Co., 1949, 33 Cal. 2d 514, at page 523, 203 P.2d 522, at page 527, the court in answering a similar contention to that advanced here by the appellants said:

"It is contended by the defendant that the issue of whether there existed an alter ego relationship was not pleaded and was therefore not before the trial court. Defects in the complaint may be cured by allegations of the answer. Vaughn v. Jonas, 31 Cal.2d 586, 603–604, 191 P.2d 432; Hartman Ranch Co. v. Associated Oil Co., 10 Cal.2d 232, 248-249, 73 P.2d 1163; Marr v. Postal Union Life Ins. Co., 40 Cal.App.2d 673, 680–681, 105 P.2d 649. In its answer the defendant denied that it was engaged in the business of bottling, selling and distributing ABC beer at any time mentioned in the complaint. The question of which entity manufactured the beer and was responsible for the safety of its containers, was thereby sufficiently raised. Furthermore, even if the pleadings were to be considered deficient in this respect, it is clear that the defendant has not been misled to its prejudice by any variance between pleadings and proof. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 469. From the beginning of the proceedings it was prepared to maintain, and did maintain throughout the trial, that the liabilities of the partnership could not be fastened upon the corporation."

Like language is to be found in Wilson v. Nobell, 1953, 119 Cal.App.2d 341, 348, 259 P.2d 720, 724 where it is said:

"Although there was no direct issue raised by the pleadings that the Nobell Research Foundation was the alter ego of Albert Nobell it was not prejudicial under the circumstances to admit evidence on that question. Both Nobell and the Foundation were parties to the action and represented by the same counsel. Nobell was a principal witness and in possession of all the facts relative to the creation of the Foundation and its relation to him. When it developed that Nobell was indebted to plaintiff; that he was 'broke' and that he had turned funds and contracts over to the Foundation it became important and proper to inquire into the relationship between Nobell and the Foundation so that the corporation might not be used by him to commit either a fraud or an injustice. Gordon v. Aztec Brewing Co., supra, 33 Cal.2d at page 520, 203 P.2d at page 522 [525]; Associated Oil Co. v. Seiberling Rubber Co., 172 Wash. 204, 19 P.2d 940; Thomson v. L. C. Roney & Co., supra [112 Cal.App.2d 420, 246 P.2d 1017]; Mirabito v. San Francisco Dairy Co., supra [1 Cal.2d 400, 35 P.2d 513; 8 Cal.App.2d 54, 47 P. 2d 530]."

Here as in the cases cited, the defendants were apprised well in advance of the trial that the plaintiff intended to rely upon the doctrine of the alter ego in order to charge Greendale; both corporations were parties to the action and represented by the same counsel and the officers and principal stockholders of both corporations who were in possession of all of the facts relative to the creation of both corporations and their relations and transactions with each other testified upon the trial. Under these circumstances conceding that the plaintiff's complaint was deficient in the particular above referred to, it may not be said that defendants were misled to their prejudice by any variance between the pleading and the proof.

[3] Greendale next contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the trial court's findings hereinabove quoted to the effect that Ralmor was the alter ego of Greendale. The evidence upon this score may be epitomized as follows:

Ralmor was incorporated in 1951, its sole stockholders being R. L. Blink and his wife and M. S. Hoffberg and his wife, each owning 50 shares of stock which had been issued at its par value of $1 per share. The same parties composed its board of directors. Mr. Blink was at all times its president and treasurer and Mr. Hoffberg was at all times its vice-president and secretary. Greendale was incorporated in August 1954. Its sole stockholders consisted of Mr. Hoffberg and Mr. Blink each owning 250 shares of stock which had been issued at its par value of $1 per share. Its board of directors consisted of Mr. Hoffberg and Mr. Blink and their attorney. The minutes disclose, however, that the latter was not present and did not participate in any meetings of the board of directors subsequent to September 13, 1954. Mr. Hoffberg was at all times its president and Mr. Blink was at all times its vice-president and secretary. The evidence justified the inference that Greendale was organized for the purpose of acquiring a tract of land in the Antelope Valley and building homes thereon. The property in question had been purchased by Messrs. Hoffberg and Blink and it was conveyed to the corporation subject to an encumbrance in the sum of $100,000 in consideration of the issuance by the corporation to Messrs. Hoffberg and Blink of its promissory note in the sum of $45,000. Both corporations' offices were located in the same premises and they had at least some employees in common.

After the transfer to Greendale of the tract of land previously mentioned and on January 20, 1955, Greendale entered into a building construction contract with Ralmor whereby the latter agreed to construct houses on the 100 lots in the tract at cost plus a fee of $500 per house. On the following day Greendale borrowed from the Bank of America $1,194,000 upon its note secured by a trust deed upon the land which sum, under the agreement with the bank, was to be disbursed through an escrow as the construction of the houses on the property progressed. In connection with this loan Greendale, Ralmor, Mr. and Mrs. Blink and Mr. and Mrs. Hoffberg executed an agreement with the bank whereby they jointly and severally guaranteed the construction and completion of each house and the full and complete performance of all work required to be done by the plans and specifications and the payment in full for all labor and materials used in connection with said construction work and the completion of each of said houses free and clear of any and all mechanics' liens. Contemporaneous with the execution of the last mentioned agreement another agreement was executed between the bank and the same parties whereby the latter jointly and severally guaranteed to purchase from the bank for the unpaid principal balance plus accrued interest the loan upon any and all houses which had not been paid in full within nine months from the date thereof. Simultaneously Messrs. Greendale and Ralmor executed a written order to the bank wherein and whereby they authorized the bank to pay to Ralmor or Greendale the proceeds of the bank loan as the same was disbursed by it under the loan agreement.

Insofar as the record discloses the only business of the corporations during the period with which we are concerned was the construction of the houses upon the tract in question and the sale thereof. The financial records which were introduced in evidence disclosed numerous loans from Greendale to Ralmor and from Ralmor to Greendale. Both corporations appear to have operated largely on money borrowed from Messrs. Blink and Hoffberg and others including one Greendale who purchased $50,000 of Greendale debentures but under an agreement whereby Blink, Hoffberg and Ralmor agreed to repurchase the same for the principal amount upon Mr. Greendale's demand and they were later so purchased by Blink and Hoffberg. Each corporation was heavily indebted and unable to pay its obligations.

Upon the basis of the foregoing evidence the trial court was warranted in concluding, as it did, that each corporation was but an instrumentality or conduit of the other in the prosecution of a single venture, namely, the construction and sale of houses upon the tract in question. Both corporations had the same stockholders, directors and officers, occupied the same premises as their offices and had common employees. Each was without substantial capital. Cf. Automotriz Del Golfo De California S. A. De C. V. v. Resnick, 47 Cal. 2d 792, 796, 797, 306 P.2d 1. When Greendale was without funds required for its operation and Ralmor had funds available a loan was made from the latter to the former and vice versa. Each corporation received the benefit of the materials supplied by the plaintiff and incorporated in the houses which were under construction upon the tract. There was such unity of interest and ownership that the separateness of the two corporations had in effect ceased and an adherence to the fiction of a separate existence of the two corporations would, under the circumstances here present, promote injustice and make it inequitable for Greendale to escape liability for an obligation incurred as much for its benefit as for Ralmor. As said in Thomson v. L. C. Roney & Co., 1952, 112 Cal.App.2d 420, 427–428, 246 P.2d 1017, 1021: "Where injustice would result from a strict adherence to the doctrine of separate corporate existence, a court will look behind the corporate structure to determine the identity of the party who should be charged with a corporation's liability. D. N. & E. Walter & Co. v. Zuckerman, 214 Cal. 418, 420, 6 P.2d 251, 79 A.L.R. 329. Since the separate personality of a corporation is but a statutory privilege it must not be employed as a cloak for the evasion of obligations. The conditions which must be present before the corporate veil will be pierced are outlined in Minifie v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481, 487, 202 P. 673, 676, where the court points out that before the obligations of a corporation can be regarded as those of another person, the following circumstances must appear: 'First, that the corporation is not only influenced and governed by that person, but that there is such a unity of interest and ownership that the individuality, or separateness, of the said person and corporation has ceased; second, that the facts are such that an adherence to the fiction of the separate existence of the corporation would, under the particular circumstances, sanction a fraud or promote injustice.' The second requirement suggested in Minifie v. Rowley, supra, is further refined in the following expression: '* * * where the recognition of the fiction of separate corporate existence would foster an injustice or further a fraud the courts will refuse to recognize it. (Citing cases.) It is not necessary that the plaintiff prove actual fraud. It is enough if the recognition of the two entities as separate would result in an injustice. (Citing cases.) Here confusion would be promoted and an unjust result be accomplished if the maintenance of the two entities controlled by the same persons and having an identical name were permitted to frustrate a meritorious claim.' Gordon v. Aztec Brewing Co., 33 Cal.2d 514, 522–523, 203 P.2d 522, 527."

[4] Finally appellants complain that the trial court erred in allowing interest upon the sum of $16,271.41 rather than on the sum of $12,535.96 for which judgment was awarded and with this contention we are constrained to agree. The arguments advanced by respondent in support of the trial court's action in this particular are (1) that the parties stipulated that plaintiff was entitled to interest from September 1, 1955, and (2) that the amount of appellants' offset in the sum of $3,573.45 "was not established until the time of trial." It is true that the parties stipulated that interest, if allowable, should commence to run from September 1, 1955, but this does not imply a stipulation that interest should be awarded upon a sum greater than that for which the court should award judgment. The second argument is equally without merit for by virtue of the Code of Civil Procedure, section 440, where cross-demands exist between parties they "shall be deemed compensated, so far as they equal each other." See Jones v. Mortimer, 1946, 28 Cal.2d 627, 632, 170 P.2d 893. Thus to the extent that appellants had a right to offset against respondent's claim the amount of damage sustained by reason of the delivery of defective materials plaintiff's claim was satisfied. Appellants never owed plaintiff $16,271.41 but only $12,535.96 for which the court awarded judgment.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the words "plus interest in the sum of $2,141.21" and substituting in lieu thereof the following: "together with interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum from September 1, 1955." As so modified the judgment is affirmed, neither party to recover costs upon appeal.

CARUSO CAR CO., Inc., et al., Defendants and Respondent.

Civ. 23285.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 31, 1958.

Action to rescind a conditional sales contract for the purchase of an automobile. From an adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., the purchasers appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Patrosso, J. pro tempore, held that where the purchasers did not pay as part of the down payment the sum of $300 in "cash" as recited in the contract but only executed a note in such amount, the conditional sales contract was invalid and the purchasers were entitled to rescind.

Judgment reversed.

1. Sales ⇐114, 452, 464

The statute respecting conditional sales was enacted for the benefit and protection of purchasers of motor vehicles under conditional sales contracts, and contracts which do not conform to the requirements of the statute are illegal and as purchaser is not regarded as in pari delicto with seller, he may rescind the contract. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2982.

2. Sales ⇐461

Requirement of the statute that conditional sales contracts for motor vehicles contain statements therein specified implies that such statements when set forth in the contract shall be true, the word "cash" in the statute not being used in any other than its usually understood meaning of money. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2982.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Cash".

3. Sales ⇐461

Where purchasers of an automobile on time payments did not pay as part of the down payment the sum of $300 in cash as recited in the contract but only executed a promissory note for such amount, the promise of the purchaser was not "money's worth" or "cash" within the conditional sales statute and hence the contract was invalid, it being immaterial whether the seller of the automobile accepted note as payment. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 2981(f), 2982, subds. 2, 3.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Money's Worth".

4. Equity ⇐65(1)

Where purchasers of automobile on time did not pay as part of the down payment the sum of $300 in cash as recited in the contract but only executed a note therefor, alleged fact that the purchasers promised to secure a loan from the proceeds of which they agreed to pay their note did not establish that they were before the court with "unclean hands" and hence barred from rescission of the conditional sales contract, since the purchasers were not to be deemed in pari delicto with the seller of the motor vehicle. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 2981(f), 2982, subds. 2, 3.

5. Sales ⇐461

The purpose of the statute respecting conditional sales contracts was to require that all agreements between buyer and seller of a motor vehicle to be set forth in the conditional sales contract and the statute cannot be nullified by the device of stating in the contract that the unpaid balance of the purchase price was a certain sum payable in a certain number of monthly installments whereas in truth the unpaid balance was much larger. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 1642, 2982.

6. Sales ⇐461

The prescribed forms and requisites of the statute respecting conditional sales contract for motor vehicles are mandatory and the failure of the seller to comply therewith renders the contract unenforceable. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2982.

Arnett L. Hartsfield, Jr., Margolis, McTernan & Branton, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Cecil W. Collins and Jack B. Tenney, Los Angeles, for respondent.

PATROSSO, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiffs appeal from an adverse judgment in an action instituted to rescind a conditional sales contract for the purchase of an automobile executed between the plaintiffs and defendant Caruso Car Company, Inc., which contract was subsequently assigned to the defendant Commercial Credit Corporation. The sole question presented is whether the contract in question conforms to the requirements of section 2982 of the Civil Code.

On August 19, 1956, appellants entered into a written agreement with respondent Caruso for the purchase of a used 1956 Plymouth automobile. As part of the transaction the appellants traded in a 1953 Ford convertible for which they were given credit in the sum of $920. The conditional sales contract executed between the parties contained among other things the following provisions:

"1.	Cash Delivered Price (Including any sales tax and extra equipment)
	License	27.00	$3,661.80
"2.	Down Payment: Cash	$300.00
	Trade-in:	$———
	Make Ford Year 1953
	Model No. BPC1002865
	Amount Owing on Trade-in	$———
	Purchaser's Equity in Trade-in	$920.00
	Total Down Payment		$1,220.00
"3.	Amount Unpaid on Cash Price		$2,441.80
"6.	Amount of Unpaid Balance		$2,441.80
"7.	Time Price Differential (Finance Charge)		611.00
"8.	Contract Balance (Purchaser's Obligation)		$3,052.80

"Payable in 36 equal consecutive monthly instalments of $84.80 each, the first instalment payable October 4 1956."

In truth and in fact appellants did not pay $300 or any sum in cash as recited in the contract but they executed a promissory note in this amount payable to the respondent Caruso, it being agreed at the time between the parties that the appellants would procure a loan elsewhere in a sufficient amount to pay the note. Caruso referred the appellants to the Public Finance Company in Glendale for the purpose of securing such a loan and in this connection prepared a confidential credit application which was executed by the appellants and which they were directed to take to the office of the Finance Company. In accordance therewith, appellants delivered such application to the Finance Company and were later advised that it would make a loan of $300 to the appellants provided they executed a promissory note in the sum of $475 payable in 19 monthly instalments of $25 each and secured the same by a lien upon appellant's household furniture. The appellants refused to accept the loan upon these terms and on August 31, 1956, gave notice of rescission of the contract to the respondents wherein they offered to return the automobile purchased upon return to them of the Ford automobile which they had transferred to Caruso. Respondents refused to consent to a rescission and the appellants refusing to make any payments on the contract, the automobile was repossessed on November 23, 1956, following which the present action was instituted.

Civil Code, section 2982, as it read at the time of the execution of the contract here in question provided in part as follows: "(a) Every conditional sale contract for the sale of a motor vehicle, with or without accessories, shall be in writing and shall contain all of the agreements between the buyer and the seller relating to the personal property described therein. It shall be signed by the buyer or his authorized representative and by the seller or its authorized representative, and when so executed an exact copy thereof shall be delivered by the seller to the buyer at the time of its execution. It shall recite the following separate items as such, in the following order: 1. The cash price of the personal property described in the conditional sale contract. 2. The amount of the buyer's down payment, and whether made in cash or represented by the net agreed value of described property traded in, or both, together with a statement of the respective amounts credited for cash and for such property. * * * 3. The amount unpaid on the cash price, which is the difference between Items 1 and 2."

[1] It is now well settled that section 2982 was enacted for the benefit and protection of purchasers of motor vehicles under conditional sale contracts; that such contracts not conforming to the requirements thereof are illegal and as a purchaser is not to be regarded in pari delicto with the seller he may rescind the contract. Carter v. Seaboard Finance Co., 1949, 33 Cal.2d 564, 573, 203 P.2d 758; Lewis v. Muntz Car Co., 1958, 50 Cal.2d 681, 328 P.2d 968.

[2, 3] The requirement of the statute that such conditional sale contracts contain the statements therein specified necessarily implies that such statements when set forth in the contract shall be true for otherwise the very purpose of the statute would be defeated. Here it is admitted that the appellants did not pay as part of the down payment the sum of $300 in cash as recited in the contract but only executed a promissory note in this amount. There is nothing to suggest that the word "cash" in the statute is used in any other than its usually understood meaning of money. People v. Quiel, 1945, 68 Cal.App.2d 674, 678, 157 P.2d 446; In re Estate of Chamberlain, 1942, 56 Cal.App.2d 458, 463, 132 P.2d 488, 491. In the case last cited the court said: "Solvent credits are not cash in the ordinary understanding of the latter term. Upon the former appeal it was said: 'Cash is "current money in hand or readily available."' ([In re Chamberlain's Estate], 46 Cal.App.2d 16, at page 20, 115 P.2d 235, at page 237.) The court there approved of another definition reading: '"Cash" means especially "ready money" at command, subject to free disposal; not tied up in a fixed state. It is almost the equivalent of "loose money."' 1 Bouv. Law Dict., Rawles' Third Revision, p. 428, defines 'cash' as: 'That which circulates as money, including bank bills but not mere bills receivable.' The money represented by the notes of the corporation and also by the book credits was available for distribution to the beneficiaries not upon demand but upon its receipt by the trust from the corporation and upon the decision of the trustees to make distribution. How or when the corporation's notes to the syndicate were payable does not appear. Promissory notes cannot be treated as cash in the construction of a will except where the language of the will shows that the testator considered them to be cash and disposed of them as such. Otherwise, as held on the first appeal, the word 'cash' should be given its common and ordinary meaning." (Emphasis added.)

The promise of appellants as evidenced by the execution of the promissory note is no more "cash" than their promise in the contract to pay the balance of the contract price as therein set forth in installments. Each is a mere promise to pay and such a promise does not constitute "cash" within the meaning of the statute. In re Estate of Chamberlain, supra; Pierce v. Bryant, 5 Allen, 91, 93, 87 Mass. 91, 93; State ex rel. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. of Nebraska v. Moore, 48 Neb. 870, 67 N.W. 876, 878; Palliser v. United States, 136 U.S. 257, 263, 10 S.Ct. 1034, 34 L.Ed. 514, 517; Citizens' Nat. Bank of Stamford v. Stevenson, Tex.Civ.App., 211 S.W. 644, 645; Commonwealth v. Dow, 217 Mass. 473, 105 N.E. 995, 998; Fidelity Savings State Bank v. Grimes, 156 Kan. 55, 131 P.2d 894, 896.

Respondents point to subdivision (f) of section 2981 of the Civil Code which defines "down payment" as follows: "(f) 'Down payment' shall mean that part of the cash price which the buyer pays or agrees to pay to the seller in cash or property value or money's worth at or prior to delivery by the seller to the buyer of the personal property described in the conditional sale contract."

From this they argue that the promissory note executed by the appellants was "money's worth" but it is apparent from a mere reading of this provision that it distinguishes between "cash" and "money's worth." Likewise subdivision 2 of section 2982 hereinabove quoted distinguishes between "cash" and "money's worth" for it requires a separate statement in the contract as to what portion of the down payment is made "in cash" and that "represented by the net agreed value of described property traded in" and subdivision 3 of the same section requires a statement of "the amount unpaid on the cash price." Thus the contract here violates both subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 2982 as it falsely states that the amount of $300 had been paid in cash as well as the unpaid balance of the cash price, for after crediting appellants with the value of their trade-in there remained unpaid upon the cash price of $3,661.80 not $2,441.80 as stated in the contract but the sum of $2,741.80, of which latter sum $300 was evidenced by the appellants' promissory note.

Respondents next argue that whether the promissory note was given and accepted as payment by the respondent Caruso was a question of fact and in this connection they refer to the trial court's finding that the note was given "in lieu of $300 cash as part of the down-payment." However, it is immaterial whether or not Caruso accepted the note as payment for the fact remains that it was not "cash" as stated in the contract, and if, as the trial court found, the note was accepted "in lieu of $300 cash" it is clear that the note was something other than cash. Moreover, Mr. Guccione, the general manager of the used car department of Caruso who was called as a witness for the respondents testified that the note was not taken in part payment of the car.

[4] Respondents also contend that because the appellants promised to secure a loan from the proceeds of which they agreed to pay their note they are before the court with unclean hands and hence barred from securing the relief which they seek. The ready answer is, as previously pointed out, that appellants are not deemed to be in pari delicto with the respondents and hence are not precluded from urging the illegality of the contract.

[5] Respondents further contend that by virtue of section 1642 of the Civil Code the conditional sale contract and the promissory note "are to be taken together and interpreted as a single contract." From this premise they argue that as the "purpose of the statute is to protect purchasers of motor vehicles against excessive charges by requiring full disclosure of all items of cost" the requirement of the statute is met because when the contract and note are read together all items of cost are fully disclosed. The plain language of section 2982, however, discloses that it was the Legislature's purpose to require "all of the agreements between the buyer and the seller" to be set forth in the conditional sale contract. Indeed if respondents' contention in this regard were accepted the statute could be nullified by the simple device, as was done here, of stating in the conditional sale contract that the unpaid balance of the purchase price was $2,441.80 payable in a certain number of monthly installments whereas in truth the unpaid balance was $2,741.80.

[6] Finally respondents contend that section 2982 "is a shield * * * and not a sword" and inasmuch as the appellants "were fully informed of their total obligations involved in the transaction, and they understood the full significance of their agreement" [1] they were in no way deceived or misled with respect thereto. This may be conceded but the concession does not aid the respondents. The Supreme Court has declared that the "prescribed form and requisites" of section 2982 are mandatory and that the failure of a seller to comply therewith renders the contract unenforceable. Carter v. Seaboard Finance Co., supra.

The judgment is reversed.

SHINN, P. J., and VALLÉE, J., concur.

1. It may be noted that, although the assistant manager of Caruso testified that when he referred appellants to the Public Finance Company he knew that in order to secure a loan of $300 from that company they would be required to execute a note for approximately $475.00 if the loan were repayable in 19 monthly installments, it does not appear that he so informed the appellants. Thus, it may well be doubted if it can be said that the appellants "were fully informed of their total obligations involved in the transaction, and they understood the full significance of their agreement."

Tadeusz BUDNY, and Felix Florkewicz, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

BANK OF AMERICA, N. T. & S. A., a corporation, as Trustee under the Last Will and Testament of John A. Florkewicz, deceased, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 18263.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Jan. 8, 1959.

Suit was brought for declaration that testamentary trust was invalid, on ground that it violated rule against perpetuities and rule against restraints on alienation. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, Marvin Sherwin, J., entered judgment adverse to the plaintiffs, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J., held that where same issue was necessarily before Probate Court previously, and Probate Court's decree of distribution had become final, issue was res judicata.

Judgment affirmed.

Judgment ⇐725(3)

Where issue whether testamentary trust was invalid on ground that it violated rule against perpetuities and rule against restraints on alienation, was necessarily before Probate Court, and Probate Court's decree of distribution had become final, issue was res judicata in subsequent suit in Superior Court for declaration that testamentary trust was invalid, on ground that it violated rule against perpetuities and rule against restraints on alienation. West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 9; West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 715.1, 715.2, 716, 771; West's Ann.Prob. Code, § 1021.

Richard J. Spear, Robert S. Thaman, Oakland, for appellants.

S. Lennart Cederborg, Felton L. Watson, Oakland, for respondent.

DRAPER, Justice.

Plaintiffs' complaint seeks declaration of the invalidity of a testamentary trust, alleging that "administration was had and closed" upon the estate of the testator and quoting the challenged provisions of the trust from the will "and * * * the Decree of Final Distribution." Demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiffs appeal from the ensuing judgment. The assertion that the trust is invalid is based solely upon its claimed violation of the rule against perpetuities and that against restraints upon alienation. Cal.Const. Art. XX, sec. 9; Civ.Code, §§ 715.1, 715.2, 716 and 771. Appellants' brief concedes that decree of final distribution to the trustees was made November 18, 1954, and has become final. This action was filed July 26, 1956. Plaintiff Budny is a co-trustee with defendant, and plaintiff Florkewicz, a brother of testator, is one of the beneficiaries.

It is unnecessary to determine whether the testamentary trust is vulnerable to the attack here made. That issue was necessarily before the probate court, and its decree of distribution, having become final, is res judicata. Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 139, 51 P. 38; Matter of Trust of Trescony, 119 Cal. 568, 51 P. 951; Smith v. Vandepeer, 3 Cal.App. 300, 85 P. 136; In re Estate of O'Connor, 158 Cal.App.2d 187, 322 P.2d 616. Even where the parties concede that the trust improperly restrains alienation, the decree of distribution cannot be collaterally attacked. Crew v. Pratt, supra. Appellants rely upon language in Wharton v. Mollinet, 103 Cal.App.2d 710, 229 P.2d 861, which they assert to be in conflict with this rule. But this decision was sharply criticized in Wogman v. Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co., 123 Cal.App.2d 657, 664, 267 P.2d 423, and petition for hearing by the Supreme Court in the latter case was denied.

It is clear that plaintiff Budny, to whom distribution was made as a trustee, is within the class of "heirs, devisees and legatees" as to whom the decree of distribution is final. Prob.Code, § 1021. Similarly, plaintiff Florkewicz, as one of the beneficiaries of the testamentary trust, is bound by the decree. In re Estate of Loring, 29 Cal.2d 423, 431, 175 P.2d 524.

Judgment affirmed.

Francis HENDERSON, Alta Marie Henderson et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5912.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 13, 1959.

Action to recover a real estate broker's fee. From a judgment of the Superior Court, San Bernardino County, James E. Cunningham, Sr., J., granting a nonsuit the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shepard, J., held, inter alia, that evidence including showing that brokerage agreement was not exclusive, that plaintiff understood that owner had right to sell his property himself or through another broker without paying any commission to plaintiff, that plaintiff had produced a prospective buyer and that owner sold his property to a third party who allegedly had some dealings with such prospective buyer, failed to show any collusion between the prospective buyer and the owner so as to entitle plaintiff to recover his fee, and hence the trial court's judgment of nonsuit was proper.

Affirmed.

1. Trial ⇐382, 384

On motion for nonsuit trial court must give plaintiff's evidence its full legal weight and disregard all evidence conflicting therewith, and must give plaintiff the advantage of a legitimate inference that may be drawn from the evidence, and after having done so, if there is any evidence of sufficiently substantial character to support a verdict in plaintiff's favor the motion for nonsuit must be denied.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐927(3)

On appeal from judgment for nonsuit, the appellate court must view the evidence in light most favorable to the appellant and such rule is the same whether trial is before court with a jury or before the court alone.

3. Brokers ⇐53, 84(2)

In order for broker to recover his fee he must prove that he produced a buyer, ready, able and willing to buy the realty involved, and that he was procuring cause of the sale and not just one link in a chain of causes, and it is not enough that he impart information that tends to arouse interest.

4. Brokers ⇐86(1)

In action to recover a real estate broker's fee, evidence including showing that brokerage agreement was not exclusive, that plaintiff understood that owner had right to sell his property himself or through another broker without paying any commission to plaintiff, that plaintiff had produced a prospective buyer and that owner sold his property to a third party who allegedly had some dealings with such prospective buyer, failed to show any collusion between the prospective buyer and the owner so as to entitle plaintiff to recover his fee, and hence the trial court's judgment of nonsuit was proper.

Marshall L. Miles, San Bernardino, for appellant.

Paul B. Wilson, Redlands, for respondents.

SHEPARD, Justice.

This is an action to recover a real estate broker's fee. After plaintiff rested his case the trial court granted a nonsuit. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment entered for defendants.

[1, 2] When considering a motion for nonsuit it is the duty of the trial court to give to plaintiff's evidence its full legal weight, to disregard all evidence conflicting therewith, and to give plaintiff the advantage of every legitimate inference that may be drawn from the evidence. After having done so, if there is any evidence of sufficiently substantial character to support a verdict in plaintiff's favor the motion for nonsuit must be denied. Thus, when an appeal is from a nonsuit, the appellate court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the appellant. Raber v. Tumin, 36 Cal.2d 654, 656 (1) (2), 226 P.2d 574.

The rule is the same whether the trial is before the court with a jury, or before the court alone. Lasry v. Lederman, 147 Cal.App.2d 480, 488(10), 305 P.2d 663.

Viewing the evidence in this light, it appears that on November 22, 1954, defendant Henderson signed a broker's real estate listing with plaintiff's employer assignor for the sale of 74 acres of land near Highland, California. Plaintiff produced a prospective buyer named Ralph Padulla, showed him the property, and introduced him to defendant, making a suggestion for segregated sale of an area 100 x 200 feet containing the principal improvements in order to pay off an encumbrance. No decision was then reached by Padulla. Defendant later sold this property to one Edward Norris and plaintiff was informed of this by defendant near the end of December, 1954. This sale was within the time limit expressed in the plaintiff's brokerage agreement. Plaintiff at no time contended that the brokerage agreement was exclusive, and at the trial testified that it was a "non-exclusive" or "open" listing, and that plaintiff understood by their agreement that defendant had the right to sell the property himself or through another broker without paying any commission to this plaintiff.

In February, 1955, plaintiff was at a meeting of realtors at the office of the Southwest Management Company (where Padulla worked) and met a Mr. C. E. Justice, who worked in the same office as Padulla. Mr. Justice told plaintiff something about the defendant's property, apparently attempting to interest plaintiff in selling it. Plaintiff did not know of, nor offered any proof of, any contractual relationship between Justice and Padulla. Justice apparently was not available for testimony at the trial, and Padulla had died sometime previous thereto.

Norris was a T. V. actor. The deed from defendant to Norris was returned by the Title Company to the same address as that used by Padulla. Norris testified he was acquainted with Padulla; that he saw the property first in the summer of 1954 responsive to a newspaper ad; that he later talked to Padulla about it; that Padulla said he had seen the property and liked it; that he was not sure if this talk was before or after he (Norris) purchased the property; that he (Norris) after purchasing the property had Padulla assist him in selling the property and paid Padulla for such selling; that a piece 100 x 200 feet was sold by Norris to a third party; that the title company was never authorized to send the deed from defendant to Norris to the Padulla address; that Norris had never lived at that address; and that the only reason he could think of for their use of such mailing address was "They claimed he said he was my leg man." The testimony of Norris was as a witness for plaintiff. There was no claim of surprise and no offer to refute any part of it. It stands uncontradicted.

[3] In order for plaintiff to recover he must prove that he produced a buyer, ready, able and willing to buy the realty involved; that he was the procuring cause of the sale and not just one link in a chain of causes. It is not enough that he impart information that tends to arouse interest.

Nelson v. Mayer, 122 Cal.App.2d 438, 445 (5) (6), 265 P.2d 52.

[4] Plaintiff's evidence produces no more than a weak suspicion that there might have been some collusive dealings between Padulla and Norris. Actually, the most reasonable solution is that Padulla, not sufficiently interested himself to buy the property, upon Norris' inquiry gave Norris encouragement and advice just as Norris testified. However that may be, plaintiff's evidence falls far short of any proof of collusion between Padulla and this defendant, and the trial court's judgment of nonsuit was in order.

The judgment is affirmed.

Libel action. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Jesse W. Curtis, Jr., J., sustained defendants' demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend and entered a judgment of dismissal and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shepard, J., held that newspaper article published by defendants, stating that the District Court of Appeal upheld a lower court's judgment of nonsuit in a slander suit defendants' newspaper brought against plaintiff, and that newspaper appealed in the belief that if decision extending legislative privilege to city councilmen were allowed to stand, "the public would have no protection against malicious statements made by unscrupulous members of any minor legislative body", and a second article discussing the question of whether a member of a minor legislative body such as a city council, has the right to say "anything he wishes about anybody in an official proceeding, without regard to the laws of slander" were not libelous, since the language of the first article clearly applied to an indeterminate group of fictitious persons who might at some unstated future time "unscrupulously" defame other persons in a legislative proceeding, and the second article was merely a presentation of a point of view upon an issue that had become one of public interest.

Libel and Slander ⇐21

Newspaper article published by defendants, stating that the District Court of Appeal upheld a lower court's judgment of nonsuit in a slander suit defendants' newspaper brought against plaintiff, and that newspaper appealed in the belief that if decision extending legislative privilege to city councilmen were allowed to stand, "the public would have no protection against malicious statements made by unscrupulous members of any minor legislative body", and a second article discussing the question of whether a member of a minor legislative body, such as a city council, has the right to say "anything he wishes about anybody in an official proceeding, without regard to the laws of slander" were not libelous, since the language of the first article clearly applied to an indeterminate group of fictitious persons who might at some unstated future time "unscrupulously" defame other persons in a legislative proceeding, and the second article was merely a presentation of a point of view upon an issue that had become one of public interest.

Jack B. Tenney, Los Angeles, for plaintiff.

Wilson & Wilson, San Bernardino, for defendants.

SHEPARD, Justice.

This is an action for libel. Plaintiff alleges that defendants falsely and maliciously published of and concerning plaintiff two newspaper articles for the purpose of exposing him to hatred, contempt and ridicule. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend and entered a judgment of dismissal. Plaintiff appeals.

The first article, insofar as is necessary to understand what is claimed by the plaintiff to be libelous, reads as follows:

"District Court Upholds

"Slander Suit Judgment.

"Ontario—The District Court of Appeal has upheld a lower court's judgment in The Daily Report's slander suit against Oregon Smith * *.

"The suit grew out of remarks made by Smith in 1953, then an Ontario councilman, that The Daily Report was 'following a Communist Party line.'

"When the action came to the Superior Court on March 7, 1955, Smith's attorney * * * argued that 'the defamatory remarks * * * were made at a legislative proceeding and were therefore fully privileged.'

"Judge Raymond Thompson * * * concurred * * * and brought a judgment for nonsuit. This was the ruling which has been upheld by the District Court of Appeal. * * *

"The Daily Report had appealed in the belief that, if the decision were allowed to stand, 'the public would have no protection against malicious statements made by unscrupulous members of any minor legislative body.'"

The second article, insofar as is necessary to understand what is claimed to be libelous, reads as follows:

"Unbridled License

"Does a member of a minor legislative body, such as a city council, have the right to say anything he wishes about anybody in an official proceeding, without regard to the laws of slander?

"He does indeed!

"The question was one which The Daily Report pursued through the courts of the State of California. The answer was the same from the Superior Court, the District Court of Appeal, the Supreme Court: A councilman is a 'legislator' under the law and as such has complete privilege to make any defamatory remarks.

* * * * * *

"The newspaper sued. Smith pleaded immunity. He said he was a 'legislator' * * * The newspaper appealed the decision. It did so in the belief that a member of a minor legislative body, elected by the people and drawing public funds, should not have a privilege which the people do not have.

"Smith's silly statement that The Daily Report was a Communist Party line newspaper was never an issue with the courts. It was conceded to be defamatory—even by the defense!

"In pleading for dismissal Jack Tenney, Smith's attorney, said that the 'complaint as it now appears on the face thereof does not state a cause of action; it shows that the defamatory remarks made by the defendant were made at a legislative proceeding * * *.'

"Tenney's characterizing the remarks as 'defamatory' is in the court record."

It appears from the complaint, and an amendment thereto, that for a number of years "The Daily Report" has been sharply critical of plaintiff, using at times somewhat vitriolic terminology. These matters are set up in the complaint for the apparent purpose of showing malice in fact by defendants toward plaintiff, and it is apparent that some of them might possibly have been the subject of actions for libel had plaintiff chosen to proceed thereon.

However, in the particular articles alleged in the case here at bar the trial court on demurrer concluded that the alleged defamatory language of the first publication was such that even by innuendo it could not be made to apply to plaintiff; that it clearly applied to an indeterminate group of fictitious persons who might at some unstated future time "unscrupulously" defame other persons in a legislative proceeding.

With this decision we are in agreement, and we believe the case cited by the trial court sufficiently covers the point. Appellant has cited a large number of other cases which he believes indicate a different conclusion. We have been at pains to read all of them and while there is some language which, taken out of context, might give some comfort to plaintiff's position, it is our view that each case when read as a whole is clearly distinguishable from the case at bar.

> "An accusation such as that complained of cannot have the quality of a libel unless there be a certainty as to the individuals accused. There is nothing in the published article that makes a personal application to the plaintiff. He cannot by use of the colloquium make the language which is applicable to so large a group of persons be made specifically to refer to him." (Noral v. Hearst Publications, Inc., 40 Cal.App.2d 348, 350(1), 104 P.2d 860, 862.)

> "The office of an innuendo is to declare what the words meant to those to whom they were published. When the words themselves, under any circumstances, would convey to those who read or hear them a meaning within the statutory definitions, there is no occasion for the pleading of an innuendo. Conversely, if the words under no circumstances could convey a defamatory meaning, then no innuendo can make them defamatory." (Washer v. Bank of America, 21 Cal.2d 822, 828(1), 136 P.2d 297, 301, 155 A.L.R. 1338.)

The trial court likewise held that the article upon which the second count is based is clearly a presentation of a point of view upon an issue that had become one of some public interest; that the particular portions complained of are merely arguments and would be recognized by anyone as such; that under the circumstances here presented they are not such as would sustain a cause of action for libel. With this view we likewise agree.

> "In determining whether or not it is libelous, the article must be read as a whole in order to understand its import and the effects which it was calculated to have upon the minds of those who read it." (Howard v. Southern Cal. etc. Newspapers, 95 Cal.App.2d 580, 584 (2), 213 P.2d 399, 402.

The defense of legislative privilege essentially says: conceding our statement to be defamatory, still we cannot be held liable because we are protected by the cloak of absolute privilege under Civil Code section 47, paragraph 2. In speaking of the defense of privilege, the Supreme Court said: "This defense is essentially one of confession and avoidance * * *." (Stevens v. Snow, 191 Cal. 58, 64(4), 214 P. 968, 970.)

We agree with plaintiff that it would have been error in this case to refuse to permit plaintiff to amend if the basis of the ruling were on the special demurrer. (Guilliams v. Hollywood Hospital, 18 Cal.2d 97, 104(9), 114 P.2d 1.) However, plaintiff has nowhere suggested a desire or possibility of amendment except in respect to special damages and such an amendment would not affect the matters we have discussed.

The judgment of dismissal is affirmed.

Helen C. MILLS, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

George J. RUPPERT, Jr., Barbara A. Ruppert, Raymond Berney (sued herein as Raymond Burney) and Hazel Berney (sued herein as Hazel Burney), Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 9485.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 9, 1959.

Action by tenant against landlords for breach of covenant to repair. The Superior Court, Mendocino County, Lilburn Gibson, J., entered judgment awarding plaintiff $312.32 for repair of exterior walls and $500 for decrease in rental value for two months, but denied any further damages. Plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that where motel lease required tenant to keep and maintain premises, except exterior walls and roof, which landlords agreed to repair, and provided that tenant would hold landlords harmless for any damage or injury to any person, or to goods, wares and merchandise of any person, arising from use of premises by tenant or failure of tenant to keep the premises in good repair, landlords were liable for interior wall damage caused by disrepair to exterior wall.

Judgment affirmed as modified and cause remanded with directions.

1. Landlord and Tenant ⇐152(7)

Where motel lease required tenant to keep and maintain premises, except exterior walls and roof, which landlords agreed to repair, and provided that tenant would hold landlords exempt and harmless for any damage or injury to any person, or to goods, wares and merchandise of any person, arising from use of premises by tenant or failure of tenant to keep the premises in good repair, landlords were liable to tenants for interior wall damage caused by disrepair to exterior wall.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇐166(6)

Where motel lease required tenant to keep and maintain premises, except external walls and roof, which landlords agreed to repair, and provided that tenant waived all claims against lessors for damage to goods, wares, and merchandise from any cause arising at any time, and landlords attempted to repair wall each time they were notified of leaks, and the conditions under which rugs would be deemed a part of the realty under the lease had never become applicable, lessors were not liable for damage to floor covering which had been subjected to water which leaked through the wall.

3. Landlord and Tenant ⇐166(6)

A lease is a matter of private contract between the landlord and the tenant with which the general public is not concerned, and if the parties see fit to contract that the landlords shall not be liable for damages to tenant's property resulting from his negligence or the negligence of his employees, the law permits him to do so and the courts must give effect to and enforce such contracts.

4. Landlord and Tenant ⇐154(3)

In motel tenant's action against landlords for damages for alleged breach of express covenant to keep in repair the exterior walls and roofs, evidence supported finding that tenant suffered loss of only $500 in rentals and not a loss of $1,140 as claimed by tenant.

5. Landlord and Tenant ⇐154(3)

In motel tenant's action against landlords for damages for alleged breach of express covenant to keep in repair the exterior walls and roofs, evidence warranted finding that tenant suffered no damages for injury to the leasehold.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Helen C. Mills, lessee, commenced an action against the above-named defendants, lessors, to recover damages for defendants' alleged breach of an express covenant to keep in repair the exterior walls and roofs of the motel building. The complaint alleged that as a result of defendants' breach rain penetrated the walls causing damage consisting of: (a) the expense of making the necessary repairs to the exterior walls ($312.32) and the interior of same ($243.80); (b) damage to wall to wall carpeting and pads from the said water due to the respondents' failure to make repairs; (c) damages due to diminution of reasonable rental value of the premises from the execution of the lease up to the time the repairs were made at $500.00 per month, and thereafter to date of trial; (d) damages to appellant's leasehold interest. The total amount of damages prayed for was $35,000.

The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury. The court awarded plaintiff the sum of $312.32 for repair of the exterior walls and $500.00 for decrease in the rental value for the months of December, 1955, and January, 1956, but denied any further damages. Plaintiff has appealed from said judgment.

The record shows that on July 21, 1954, Helen C. Mills entered into a written lease with Raymond Berney, Hazel Berney, George J. Ruppert, Jr. and Barbara A. Ruppert for the lease of a building known as the City Center Motel in Ukiah, California. The lease was for a term of 10 years at a total rental of $120,000 or $1,000 a month. The lease provided that "Lessee shall, at her sole cost, keep and maintain said premises and appurtenances and every part thereof (excepting exterior walls and roofs which Lessor agrees to repair), including glazing, sidewalks adjacent to said premises and the interior of the premises, in good and sanitary order, condition and repair, * * *." The lease also provided: "7. Lessee, as a material part of the consideration to be rendered to Lessor, hereby waives all claims against Lessor for damages to goods, wares and merchandise, in, upon or about said premises and for injuries to persons in or about said premises, from any cause arising at any time, and Lessee will hold Lessor exempt and harmless from any damage or injury to any person, or to the goods, wares and merchandise of any person, arising from the use of the premises by Lessee, or from the failure of Lessee to keep the premises in good condition and repair, as herein provided."

During the winter of 1954–55, the south wall of the building developed leaks. The lessors notified the contractor and he attempted to repair the wall. However, the attempt was unsuccessful. In June, 1955, Mrs. Mills notified the lessors that the wall had not been waterproofed, and the contractor applied a sealing liquid to it. In November, 1955, the wall leaked again, and again Mrs. Mills notified the lessors. She asked that the wall be repaired in a satisfactory way. Mr. Berney came to the premises with the contractor to inspect the wall, and the lessors agreed to repair it. On December 10, 1955, the contractor arrived to do the work. He obtained the keys to the rooms without Mrs. Mills' knowledge. When she discovered this, she ran up to him and an argument ensued. There is a conflict in the evidence as to whether or not the contractor struck her. In any event, Mrs. Mills ordered him off of the premises. The following Monday Mrs. Mills arranged to have the wall repaired by another person, but due to the torrential rain of the winter, the work was not completed until the end of January. During this period of heavy rainfall, the water came through the wall damaging floor coverings and staining the interior walls of certain rooms. This water damage made certain rooms too damp to rent for a period.

[1] Appellant Helen C. Mills first contends that the trial court erred in not allowing her $243.80 for repairing the interior of the wall. The only question is whether or not the provision in the lease that the lessee should keep and maintain at her sole expense the premises (excepting exterior walls and roof) prevents her from recovering for the damage to the interior walls caused by the disrepair to the exterior wall. No parol evidence as to the meaning of this phrase was introduced so the interpretation becomes a question of law. We believe this provision should be construed to mean that if damage was caused as a result of something occurring in the interior of the building, Mrs. Mills would suffer the loss; but if the damage was the result of a failure to keep the exterior wall in repair, the loss would fall on the lessors. We are fortified in this belief by the fact that the provision waiving all claims for damage to goods, wares and merchandise from any cause arising at any time specifically exempts damage to certain items. We believe a proper construction would be that by limiting the amount of damage in certain particulars, impliedly, the parties meant that in other particulars there would be no limitation. If so, the lessors would be liable for damages to the interior walls caused by failure to repair the exterior wall. The court found that the amount of damage to the interior walls was $243.80. We believe that appellant should have been awarded this amount.

[2, 3] Appellant also contends that she should have been permitted to recover $883.65 which was the cost of cleaning and replacing floor coverings which had been damaged by water and dampness. The trial court denied recovery because of the clause which provided that the lessee waived all claims against the lessors for damage to goods, wares and merchandise. Such clauses have been held to be valid (Inglis v. Garland, 19 Cal.App.2d Supp. 767, 773, 64 P.2d 501; Werner v. Knoll, 89 Cal.App.2d 474, 475, 201 P.2d 45) except where the lessor has been guilty of what the courts call willful or active negligence. Butt v. Bertola, 110 Cal.App.2d 128, 242 P.2d 32; Barkett v. Brucato, 122 Cal.App. 2d 264, 264 P.2d 978. As stated in Inglis v. Garland, supra, 19 Cal.App.2d Supp. at page 773, 64 P.2d at page 504: "We think it is the law that 'A lease is a matter of private contract between the lessor and the lessee with which the general public is not concerned. And if the parties see fit to contract that the lessor shall not be liable for damages resulting from his negligence or the negligence of his employees, the law permits them to do so; and the courts must give effect to and enforce such contracts.' * * *" And as stated by this court in Werner v. Knoll, supra, 89 Cal.App.2d at page 475, 201 P.2d at page 46: "Clearly said section 1668 does not declare unlawful all contracts, the object of which is to exempt individuals from the consequence of their own acts, but only those contracts which would exempt one from the consequences of his own fraud, willful injury or violation of law whether willful or negligent. It is noteworthy that the only use of the word negligent in said section is in a restrictive sense and only in connection with violations of law. Therefore it necessarily follows, that by the obvious omission from the provisions of said section 1668 of the Civil Code, contracts seeking to relieve individuals from the results of their own negligence are not invalid as against the policy of the law as therein provided, and hence are neither contrary to public policy nor expressed provision of the law as set forth in said section 1667."

The court made a finding that the negligence of the lessors was passive negligence. This finding is supported since each time the lessors were notified of the leaks they made an attempt to repair the wall. Appellant also contends that the rugs were not goods, wares and merchandise, and, secondly, the act of the lessors was not negligence but a breach of the covenant to repair. The lease provided that the lessee shall pay the purchase price and cost of installation of all rugs installed upon said premises and in the event the lessee abandoned the premises, or the lease was terminated because of a breach, the rugs should be deemed a part of the realty. For the purpose of this action, the rugs were not a part of the realty. It was only under certain conditions that they would become so, and the conditions never became applicable. Under such circumstances, the waiver provision should be held to be applicable and the lessors not liable for damage to the floor coverings. There is no reason why, in a case such as this, a party can not contract against liability for breach of covenant. As stated in 6 Corbin on Contracts, page 870: "* * * a landlord may contract so as to be bound to pay for repairs and yet exempt himself from liability for consequential injuries caused by his failure to perform his contractual duty."

[4] Appellant contends further that the court erred in allowing only $500 for loss of rentals. Appellant submitted figures that indicated that she lost $1140 in rentals from the period of November 25th to January 30th. These figures were based on regular rental fees and on apparently normal occupancy. There was testimony that a large part of the occupants were commercial travelers who received commercial rates and whose occupancy was usually during the week and not on weekends. There was considerable testimony as to the loss of occupancy, and the records kept by appellant, and other evidence, were before the court. It is clear that conflicting inferences can be drawn from the evidence, and the court was not bound to accept appellant's conclusion that she lost $1140 in rentals. We believe that the following statement in the memorandum opinion of the trial court is supported by the record: "[T]he Court thinks that from what the records disclose the rental value of said premises was decreased at most $250.00 a month, and then only for the two months of December, 1955, and January, 1956. The Court, therefore, thinks that she has been damaged to the extent of $500.00 in this respect, and is entitled to judgment for that sum."

[5] Appellant's final contention is that she should have been allowed damages for injury to the leasehold. However, the evidence upon this issue is conflicting, and we believe that the record fully supports the conclusion of the trial court as stated in its memorandum opinion as follows:

> "The last claim of plaintiff is that she suffered $25,000.00 damages by reason of these leaky walls as a direct and proximate cause thereof, in and that the plaintiff's interest in the property as her leasehold and good will was worth $25,000.00 before the damage and was worth nothing after the damage. With this contention the Court is unimpressed. When Mrs. Mills took over this motel it was a newly constructed edifice. It was, and still is, a very attractive place; it was and is excellently situated, almost in the heart of the City of Ukiah. Mrs. Mills is undoubtedly an excellent business manager and motel operator. (The day she signed this lease must have been one of her off days.) Situated as this motel is on the main street of the City of Ukiah, to-wit, State Street, with Highway 101, the Redwood Highway, joining it on each end of the City, with a tremendous amount of traffic going through this area at all times; and under the situations above expressed the operation of the motel had to be a success, and it was a success from the very beginning, and has always been, and it still is. The record, particularly the records which she has presented here, clearly show this. The only damage the Court can see that she has sustained in this regard is the slight damage she sustained for the two months hereinabove mentioned and for which she has been given credit."

The judgment appealed from is modified and the cause is remanded to the trial court with directions to add to the judgment against respondents the sum of $243.80 for repairs to the inside of the exterior wall, making the total amount of the judgment the sum of $1056.12; and as so modified, the judgment is affirmed. The parties to bear their own costs on appeal.

Sylvester HINTON, Jr., Robert Lee Jackson and Robert Reginald Cozine, Defendants.

Robert Lee Jackson and Robert Reginald Cozine, Appellants.

Cr. 6346.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 5, 1959.

Prosecution resulting in convictions of violation of Section 288a of the Penal Code, rape and kidnapping by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Edwin L. Jefferson, J., and defendants appealed from judgments of conviction, orders denying motions for new trial and applications for probation and from orders directing confinement in the state prison. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that evidence sustained convictions and that the defendants' confessions, which they subsequently claimed were obtained under duress, were properly admitted as voluntary in nature.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1153(6)

Where there is conflict of evidence as to whether confessions have been freely and voluntarily made, determination of the question rests in the sound discretion of trial court and if determination is supported by substantial evidence his finding is binding upon reviewing court.

2. Criminal Law ⇐531(3)

In prosecutions resulting in convictions for violation of Section 288a of the Penal Code, kidnapping and rape, there was substantial evidence to support finding of trial judge that defendants' confessions, which they contended were made under duress, were freely and voluntarily given. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 207, 261, subd. 4, 288a.

3. Kidnapping ⇐5
Rape ⇐51(1)
Sodomy ⇐6

Evidence sustained convictions of violations of Section 288a of the Penal Code, rape and kidnapping. West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 207, 261, subd. 4, 288a.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1160

Rule, that before verdict of jury which has been approved by trial court can be set aside on ground of insufficiency of evidence it must clearly appear that upon no hypothesis is there sufficient substantial evidence to support conclusion in the court below, is applicable to crime of kidnapping as well as to other crimes. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 207.

5. Rape ⇐14

Consent to intercourse induced by fear is no consent at all and when a woman reasonably determines that she cannot resist without peril to her life or safety, no further resistance is demanded by the law and the necessity of resistance is to be measured by all of the circumstances of the case. FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by Robert Lee Jackson from an order denying a motion for a new trial, from an order denying his application for probation, from an order that he be confined in the state prison and from a judgment finding him guilty of kidnapping, rape and a violation of section 288a, Penal Code. It is also an appeal by Robert Reginald Cozine upon the same grounds and from the same charges.

In an information filed in Los Angeles county each of the above named defendants was charged with seven counts of crime. The first count charged that the defendants stole and took one Louise Van Eyk and carried her from one part of Los Angeles county to another part of the same county, in violation of section 207, Penal Code (kidnapping). The second, fourth and sixth counts charged each defendant, among other things, with a violation of section 261, subd. 4, Penal Code (rape), in that each of said defendants had an act of sexual intercourse with Louise Van Eyk without her consent and against her will. The third, fifth and seventh counts alleged, among other things, that the defendants respectively participated in the act of copulating their sexual organ with the mouth of Louise Van Eyk in violation of section 288a, Penal Code.

Each defendant entered a plea of not guilty to each charge. Hinton later withdrew his plea of not guilty to the first count and entered a plea of guilty thereto. Appellants and their attorney waived a jury trial. In effect, each defendant was found guilty of each count with which he was charged.

A résumé of the facts is as follows: At about 2:00 o'clock a. m., December 1, 1957, Louise Van Eyk was walking to her home on 17th Street in Los Angeles with a friend and neighbor, Patricia Marconi. When the two women were about half a block south of 12th Avenue an automobile driven by Hinton pulled into a driveway directly in front of them, thereby blocking the sidewalk. Two colored men, Jackson and Cozine, started to get out of the automobile. Mrs. Van Eyk and Mrs. Marconi started to cross the street, rather than to wait for the car to back out of the driveway.

When Mrs. Van Eyk was about one-half way across the street one of the men lunged at her. She screamed and started to run, however one of the men grabbed her and pulled her into the waiting car. Mrs. Van Eyk was white, married, twenty-two years old, of small stature, weighing about 95 pounds, and less than five feet in height. Each of the defendants was approximately six feet in height. During the struggle at this point, Mrs. Van Eyk lost one of her shoes. She bit a finger of one man. Mrs. Marconi was able to escape and did so. As she ran she looked back and saw the men dragging Mrs. Van Eyk into the car.

After Mrs. Van Eyk was in the car she continued to scream. She was hit several times and told to "shut up." One of her feet had not been pulled completely into the car and was lodged in the door when it was closed. The continued slamming of the door on her foot caused her to scream as they travelled along in the automobile. Hinton was driving the car and Jackson was riding in the front seat. Mrs. Van Eyk was on the floor in the front of the car and Cozine was in the back seat. One of the men shouted, "Shut that bitch up," following which she was struck on the face. Cozine kept saying, "I want to shoot her," "Shoot the bitch," "I am going to shoot her, I will kill her if she doesn't shut up." The other men told him to "Put the gun away. She is being—she is quiet now, she is being good." After a considerable drive the car was parked and she was told to get out and keep her eyes down, which she did. She was taken to a wire mesh fence about six and one-half to seven feet high and was directed to climb it. Upon reaching the top of the fence one of the men lifted her off and placed her on the ground. She was again told to keep her eyes down and to make no sound, and was threatened with death if she made any noise. One of the men was in front and two were behind her as they walked along to a door of a building. She was ordered into the building.

When inside of the building one of the men started to pull off her coat; another of the men said, "No, she is going to do a strip. Leave the coat on. She will take it off herself."

The only persons in the house with Mrs. Van Eyk were the three defendants. A phonograph was started and she was directed to take her clothes off and she did so. She was then in the center of a room. She was told to dance, to shake and move her body, and to get down on the floor and lift up her legs.

The acts which thereafter were committed upon Mrs. Van Eyk by each of the defendants and the acts which she was compelled to perform are so lascivious, depraved and vicious as to be almost indescribable. No useful purpose could possibly be served by setting forth herein the revolting details of what took place, other than to say that the evidence amply and sufficiently sustains each charge against each defendant.

Other acts of violence also occurred which are not necessary to relate herein. Quite some time later Hinton re-entered the room and Mrs. Van Eyk tried to explain that she was tired and wanted to go home, was worried and was in pain, and said she was "just begging for them to take me home." Hinton replied that, "the others have had it twice and I haven't." Whereupon he compelled her to commit a lecherous act and then had sexual intercourse with her.

Hinton ordered her to dress. She was taken out an exit other than the gate she had climbed to get into the house. As they left, Jackson was in front of her and Hinton was behind her. Jackson went into the street to see whether it was clear to take her out. She was then taken to a car and told by Jackson to get on the floor. Hinton drove the car. During the ride Jackson forced her to commit another lustful act with him. The car was stopped and Jackson asked Hinton, according to Mrs. Van Eyk's testimony, if he wanted to have me again before they threw me out." Hinton said, "No."

Jackson got out of the car and ordered her to get out and to walk in front of him with her eyes down. He then ordered her to run. She ran down the street and around a corner where she was found by two friends who were among those searching for her. It was then about 5:30 o'clock a. m. and the friends took her home.

While in police custody Jackson freely and voluntarily stated that he had been with Hinton and Cozine on the morning of December 1st, and that they had forced a girl into the car Hinton was driving; that she was taken to 4230 South Main Street, forced to undress and dance, that he had two acts of intercourse with her, and that he had committed other acts with her which constituted one of the crimes herein charged.

Cozine, while in police custody freely and voluntarily stated that while driving on the morning of December 1st, with Hinton and Jackson, Hinton driving, they had seen the two girls walking; that Hinton pulled the car into a driveway; that the girls were hailed; that he and Jackson got out and approached the two girls; that he did not grab the girl he approached, but that Jackson forced the other girl into the car against her will; that the car was driven to Cozine's house and that he, Hinton and Jackson had had intercourse with her.

Jackson and Cozine each asserted that the statements made by them to the police were not freely and voluntarily made; that the officers referred to them as "niggers" and they were put in fear and signed the statements only because of such fear.

It is also apparently the contention of the appellants that Mrs. Van Eyk had an opportunity to escape and did not take advantage of such opportunity, and that she could have made outcries (apparently louder than the evidence shows she did make), and that therefore this court should reverse the judgment.

[1, 2] Considering the matter of the confessions: In each instance in this case, the admission of a confession was preceded by a pre-showing of its free and voluntary character. The appellants made their showing at the time to the trial court claiming that there was force, fear or duress in securing their statements, and the judge evidently did not believe either of them. "* * * Where there is a conflict of evidence as to whether confessions had been freely and voluntarily made the determination of the question rests in the sound discretion of the trial judge, and if it is supported by substantial evidence his finding is binding upon a reviewing court. People v. Dolan, 38 Cal.App.2d 96, 98, 100 P.2d 791. The ruling of the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal unless there has been an abuse of discretion." People v. Cucco, 85 Cal.App.2d 448, 452, 193 P.2d 86, 88.

[3] The evidence is amply sufficient to establish the convictions for each offense charged.

In People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778, 779, it was said:

> "* * * The court on appeal 'will not attempt to determine the weight of the evidence, but will decide only whether upon the face of the evidence it can be held that sufficient facts could not have been found by the jury to warrant the inference of guilt * * * before the verdict of the jury, which has been approved by the trial court, can be set aside on appeal upon the ground' of insufficiency of the evidence, 'it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below. * * * We must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict.' * * *"

[4] The rule is applicable to kidnapping, as well as to other crimes. People v. Hight, 94 Cal.App.2d 100, 105, 210 P.2d 270.

The evidence as to the kidnappings heretofore set forth demonstrates without question that it sufficiently supports the convictions, and was sufficiently corroborated. Mrs. Marconi, who witnessed the abduction, told of being with Mrs. Van Eyk and as to how she was forcibly put into the car and transported. Officer Triggs further corroborated the story by testifying to the finding of one of Mrs. Van Eyk's shoes which was lost in the struggle, and further the signed statements of the appellants corroborated the story.

As to the rape charges, the defendants were charged with violation of subdivision 4 of section 261 of the Penal Code, which reads as follows:

> "* * * an act of sexual intercourse, accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, under either of the following circumstances:
>
> * * * * * *
> "4. Where she is prevented from resisting by threats of great and immediate bodily harm, accompanied by apparent power of execution, * * *."

[5] Consent induced by fear is no consent at all. When a woman reasonably determines that she cannot resist without peril to her life or safety, no further resistance is demanded by the law. People v. Harris, 108 Cal.App.2d 84, 89, 238 P.2d 158. The necessity of resistance is to be measured by all of the circumstances of the case, including the relative strength and ability of the persons, the uselessness of resistance and the degree of force manifested. People v. Burnette, 39 Cal.App.2d 215, 102 P.2d 799; People v. Cassandras, 83 Cal.App.2d 272, 278, 188 P.2d 546.

Mrs. Van Eyk testified, "I was praying that I would live and that is all I was thinking about is that I could live through it, and I was doing everything I could to survive," and the record would seem to bear her out. As said in People v. Harris, supra, 108 Cal.App.2d at page 89, 238 P.2d at page 161, "Her yielding to a superior force rather than suffer the possible consequences was more discreet than to cry up to the stars and be left in the gutter unconscious, if not dead."

[6, 7] Next considering the motions for a new trial: The only grounds urged for a new trial are that the verdict is contrary to the evidence within the meaning of subsections 6 and 7 of section 1181, Penal Code. The matter was addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. We have found no abuse of that discretion. People v. Shaheen, 120 Cal.App.2d 629, 640, 261 P.2d 752.

[8, 9] No appeal lies from the order denying appellants' application for probation and the trial court's determination to deny probation constituted a proper exercise of discretion. See, People v. Jackson, 89 Cal.App.2d 181, 182, 200 P.2d 204; People v. Walters, 148 Cal.App.2d 426, 427, 306 P.2d 606; People v. Jennings, 129 Cal.App.2d 120, 123, 276 P.2d 124. Indeed, from a reading of the record it is almost inconceivable that a defendant, under the circumstances related in this case, could secure probation. The defendants engaged in a course of conduct which demonstrated beyond question that they are vicious, depraved and corrupt beyond expression. In the writer's opinion the appellants are extremely fortunate to go to the state prison on concurrent terms; there are many places in the world today where the disposition would be very much less favorable to them.

The appellants' counsel in this matter has been of no assistance to this court; in fact he has made our work more arduous than it would have been had no brief been filed. He failed to make even a semblance of compliance with Rule 13 of the Rules on Appeal for the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal. He plainly violated both the spirit and the letter of the rules.

The attempted appeals from the orders denying the applications for probation, and the attempted appeals from the orders directing that the defendants be confined in the state prison are, and each is, dismissed.

The appealable judgments and orders denying motions for a new trial are, and each of them is, affirmed.

Civ. 9378.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Jan. 8, 1959.

Hearing Denied March 4, 1959.

Action for injuries sustained by a welder against defendant whom he was assisting in aligning punching dies on a press owned by the defendant's employer. From an order of the Superior Court, Sacramento County, Gordon A. Fleury, J., granting the plaintiff's motion for a new trial after a verdict for defendant and from a judgment entered upon the verdict, the defendants appeal and the plaintiff cross-appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that the evidence would authorize a verdict that the defendant was guilty of negligence proximately causing the plaintiff's injury and hence the trial court properly granted the plaintiff's motion for new trial. The court further held that since the order granting a new trial must be affirmed such affirmance automatically vacated the judgment from which the plaintiff had appealed requiring a dismissal thereof.

Order granting new trial affirmed.

Cross-appeal by plaintiff dismissed.

New Trial ⇐68

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff while assisting defendant in aligning punching dies on a press owned by the defendant's employer, evidence would support a verdict that the defendant was negligent in adjusting the dies and that such negligence proximately caused the plaintiff's injuries, and hence the trial court properly granted the plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

3. Negligence ⇐121(3)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff, a welder employed by another against defendant whom he was assisting in aligning punching dies on a press owned by the defendant's employer, where jury could find that accident was of the kind which ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence and that it was caused by an instrumentality in the defendant's control and not due to any involuntary contribution by the plaintiff, the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" applied.

In an action for injuries where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable, the fact that no instruction on res ipsa loquitur was requested by the plaintiff or given by the trial court was immaterial where there was no reason why the jury might not have drawn inference of negligence without a specific instruction authorizing them to do so.

This is an appeal from an order of the trial court granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial after a defense verdict. There is also presented a cross-appeal taken by plaintiff from the judgment entered upon the defense verdict.

[1] The stated ground upon which the new trial was granted was insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict of the jury. As stated in Re Estate of Green, 25 Cal.2d 535, 542, 154 P.2d 692, 696:

"'* * * The rules of law applicable to an appeal from such an order are well settled. A trial court in considering a motion for new trial is not bound by the rule of conflicting evidence. [Citing cases.] When the motion is granted, as here, for insufficiency of the evidence, it is only in rare cases showing abuse of discretion that an appellate court will interfere because the trial judge must weigh all the evidence and determine the just conclusion to be drawn therefrom. [Citing cases.] It cannot be held that a trial court has abused its discretion where there is a conflict in the evidence or where there is any evidence which would support a judgment in favor of the moving party.' Hames v. Rust, 14 Cal.2d 119, 123–124, 92 P.2d 1010, 1012."

Respondent, Ralph Hutton, suffered a loss of vision in his left eye as the result of an accident when a fragment of metal penetrated his eye while he was assisting appellant Borland in aligning punching dies on a 100-ton hydraulic press owned by Borland's employer, Pagni. Borland, at the time, was in charge of the punching operations and of the press and was acting in the scope of his employment by Pagni. Hutton was a welder employed by Fontaine & Bean, a sheet metal firm in Sacramento. Although an experienced welder, he had never operated a hydraulic punch or brake press and had had no experience in setting or aligning punching dies in such presses. Hutton's employers fabricated and supplied sinks made of 14-gauge stainless steel. To shear, to brake and to punch the holes in the steel sheets they sent the sheets to Pagni who had a press that would do that work. Hutton was sent to Pagni to transport 12 or 14 sheets of steel to Pagni's works, there to be sheared, braked and punched. Although he had no specific instructions to assist in the work, he also had no orders not to do so. When he arrived at the Pagni plant with the sheets he found that by assisting in the work to be done he would be able to return to his employers with sufficient sheets that had been sheared, braked and punched to enable him to continue his work of completing sinks which were needed by his employer. Borland was assigned by his foreman to do the press work. He and Hutton marked the sheets for shearing and punching, using a pattern supplied for that purpose. They then sheared them, which readied them for punching. Hutton and Borland then went over to the press to set it up for punching. Borland selected the punching dies to be used. The dies consisted of two parts, the punch, commonly referred to as the male die which is set in the head or ram of the press, and the bottom or female die or matrix, which is fastened in place on the bed of the press. When the dies are set the sheet to be punched is inserted between and the punch is then pressed through the metal into a hole in the matrix. The punch fits very closely into the hole in the matrix, the tolerance being about one to two thousandths of an inch. There was expert testimony that there are two customary and approved methods of setting the dies and so adjusting them that the punch will descend smoothly into the matrix without its edge striking the matrix. By one method both dies are in an engaged position on the bed of the press when the press head is lowered to the punch, which is then secured by set screws to the press head. The head is then raised without disengaging the dies and after properly aligning the female die on the press bed it is secured in that position, thus assuring that when the press is operated the punch will descend smoothly into the matrix. Another customary and approved method is to secure the punch to the press head, then hold the female die up to the punch, engage the two and then lower the entire assembly to the press bed when the female die can be secured to the bed. Borland did not employ either method. With Hutton assisting him they first secured the punch in position against the press head by lifting it into place and attaching it by the set screws. The punch assembly weighed about 25 pounds. They then placed the female die, which weighed about 40 pounds, on the bed of the press and moved it into approximately correct position to receive the punch. They then lowered the press head, with the punch in position, to within about an inch of the top of the matrix and approximately over the hole into which it was to go in operation. Hutton observed that the female die was not lined up laterally so as to admit the punch and he reached over and made a manual adjustment, moving it about an eighth or a quarter of an inch to the right. He then stepped back to get a better look, at which time Borland released the punch which came down and, being improperly adjusted, struck the female die instead of entering into the hole. There was a crunching sound as the punch struck the female die and a chip of metal flew off, piercing Hutton's eye. The method used by Borland was one which, according to the testimony, could be followed, but the testimony also showed that if that method was being followed then when the punch closely approximated the matrix the further lowering ought to be completed by the use of an inching device which would permit lowering the punch as little as one thousandth of an inch at a time, thus affording ample opportunity to accurately adjust the female die to the descending punch so as to properly accommodate it. This device was on the press but Borland did not use it.

[2] It seems obvious to us that the foregoing evidence would support a jury verdict that Borland had been guilty of negligence in adjusting the dies and that that negligence proximately caused Hutton's injury. The jury could infer that of three safe methods Borland ignored all and depended on visual measurement for adjusting the dies; that in view of the great power of the press a failure to so adjust the dies that the punch would descend smoothly into the matrix would probably cause compression fracturing of the metal of the die and the matrix; and that this was just what happened. Several persons at varying distances from the press heard the crunch of metal against metal. We think it unnecessary to elaborate further. We hold that the evidence was sufficient to support a verdict for Hutton had the jury rendered one and that therefore the trial court's order granting a new trial cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[3] There is another reason why in this case and on this record the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict for Hutton cannot be challenged. From the evidence the jury could find that the accident resulting in injury to Hutton was of a kind which ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence; that it was caused by an instrumentality in the control of Borland; and that it was not due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of Hutton. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur could be applied by the jury. Seneris v. Haas, 45 Cal.2d 811, 823, 291 P.2d 915, 53 A.L.R.2d 124. Surely, one engaged in setting dies for punching holes in sheet metal by use of a 100-ton press would be careful not to permit the punch to descend against the matrix to the damage of the metal composing both. There were customarily-used methods by which this could be easily avoided and the particular press here involved was equipped with an inching device to avoid that result if the method actually used by Borland was being followed. The impact of the punch upon the matrix, resulting in the discharge of the steel particle that injured Hutton, could have been found by the jury to have been something that does not ordinarily occur in the absence of negligence in setting the dies.

The jury could likewise have found that the instrumentality causing the injury was under the control of Borland acting in the scope of his employment by Pagni. And, finally, the jury could have found that the accident was not due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of Hutton.

[4, 5] The fact that no instruction on res ipsa was requested by Hutton or given by the trial court is not material. The doctrine concerns a type of circumstantial evidence upon which a plaintiff may rely to discharge his burden of proving a defendant's negligence. Such evidence was given to the jury in this case. There appears to have been no reason why the jury might not have drawn the inference of negligence without a specific instruction authorizing them to do so. Fedler v. Hygelund, 106 Cal.App.2d 480, 487, 235 P.2d 247; Rose v. Melody Lane, 39 Cal.2d 481, 488, 247 P.2d 335.

[6] For the reasons given, the order granting a new trial is affirmed. Since the affirmance of the order granting a new trial will automatically vacate the judgment from which respondent has appealed, that appeal is dismissed. See Lee v. Cranford, 107 Cal.App.2d 677, 681–682, 237 P.2d 986.

STATE of California, DEPARTMENT OF PROFESSIONAL AND VOCATIONAL STANDARDS, CONTRACTORS STATE LICENSE BOARD, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 23036.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Jan. 12, 1959.

Mandamus proceeding to compel contractors' state license board to restore plumbing contractors' licenses and to dismiss proceedings in which order revoking licenses was made. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Donald E. Dunbar, J., entered judgment ordering that writ of mandate issue, and the board appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that the Superior Court's finding that applicants, in obtaining the licenses, made no misrepresentation of facts in respect to their previous work experience was supported by substantial evidence.

Appeal by the Contractors' State License Board from a judgment ordering that a writ of mandate issue commanding it to restore to petitioners the licenses to carry on their business as a plumbing contractor and to dismiss the proceedings in which an order revoking the licenses was made.

On July 18, 1955 respondent Backman filed an application with the board for a plumbing contractor's license. At the top of page 3 of the application form provided by the board there was printed: "The right to take an examination is predicated on the construction experience of the person to be examined. The examinee must have had, within the ten years immediately preceding the date of filing this application, not less than four years experience as a journeyman, foreman, supervising employee or contractor in the particular classification of license for which application is made. * * * Credits are allowed for construction experience had in the particular classification of the building and construction industry for which an examination is taken. It is, therefore, advantageous to list fully such experience in detail." Beneath this paragraph were printed headings, under which Backman listed his experience as follows:

"Employed by or Worked for (If self employed—so state)	Worked as: Describe in Detail work Done (See instruction sheet)	From— Month and Year	To— Month and Year
Name Waldow Plmbg. Co. self-emp. (partnership) Address 416 W. Broadway Long Beach, Calif.	Full responsibility and complete managership of company. All estimating and full direction of men and jobs	1/1/54	present
Name Don W. Bivens Plmbg. Address 3393 Orange Ave. Long Beach, Calif.	plumber repair plmbg. and part-time estimator	July, 1952	Dec., 1953
Name Waldow Plmbg. Co. address 416 W. Broadway Long Beach, Calif.	plumber. Due to failing health of Mr. Waldow, examinee (with help of another employee) had full responsibility of shop—estimating and directing jobs, and men	Sept. 1949	July 1952"

The registrar approved the application and Backman took the examination. He failed to pass Part II of the examination by almost three credits; however, based on the experience listed in his application, and pursuant to section 726[1] of Title 16 of the California Administrative Code, three credits were added by the registrar to his score, giving him a passing grade. On September 7, 1955 he was issued a plumbing contractor's license. On October 14, 1955 Backman and Frances C. Robinett made application for a partnership plumbing contractor's license in their names, doing business as Waldow Plumbing and Heating Company. A partnership license was issued November 3, 1955, without examination, under authority of section 774[2] of Title 16 of the Administrative Code, based on the individual plumbing contractor's license previously issued to Backman.

On April 9, 1956 an accusation was filed by an investigator for the board, charging in substance that Backman had violated sections 7112, 7115, and 7122 of the Business and Professions Code in that, in his application for the individual license, he had misrepresented material facts with respect to his work experience and he had failed to comply with section 7068 of that code and section 724 of Title 16 of the Administrative Code,[3] and was therefore subject to disciplinary action under section 7112 of the Business and Professions Code.[4] It was further alleged that since th partnership license was obtained on the basis of the license issued to Backman individually the partnership was also subject to disciplinary action.

A hearing was held by a hearing officer after which he found that Backman had misrepresented in his application that he had been a journeyman plumber and supervising employee for four years when in fact he had been only an apprentice plumber with no supervising authority for a substantial part of this period; the mis-

1. Section 726: "Experience credits shall be computed and added to the examination grade for experience had within the last 10 years immediately preceding application (service in the armed forces shall extend this 10-year period on a year for year basis), as a journeyman, foreman, supervising employee or contractor, in the same classification within which the applicant applies for license, at the rate of one credit for each six months or the major portion thereof, commencing with and including the fifth year and ending with and including the nineth year of such experience.

"Credits for experience shall be added only to the grade attained in Part II of the examination. A maximum not to exceed 10 credits may be added for experience."

2. Section 774: "No written examination shall be required of any applicant or of any of the personnel of any applicant, who shall have previously personally qualified by written examination within a period of four years immediately preceding the date of filing of application for license in the same classification within which the applicant presently files for license."

3. Section 724: "Every applicant for a contractor's license must have had, within the last ten years immediately preceding the filing of the application, not less than four years experience as a journeyman, foreman, supervising employee or contractor in the particular class within which the applicant intends to engage as a contractor.

"An applicant who was a former license holder or who was a member of a licensee entity actively engaged in conducting the business of such licensee in the same classification applied for may compute his experience as a journeyman, foreman, supervising employee or contractor in the classification applied for without regard to the ten-year limitation.

"An applicant shall not be jeopardized in computing time by his service in the armed forces of the United States during a National Emergency and such length of service may be added to the ten years mentioned above.

"Acceptable technical training in an accredited school will be counted as experience, but in no case will technical training count for more than three years experience.

"The required experience shall be possessed by one member of the applicant entity or by a responsible managing employee therefor and he shall be required to take the examination."

4. Section 7112: "Misrepresentation of a material fact by an applicant in obtaining a license constitutes a cause for disciplinary action."

statement was as to a material fact relative to his experience; in reliance thereon a plumbing contractor's license was issued; and the individual and partnership licenses were subject to disciplinary action. His recommendation that both licenses be revoked was adopted by the board.

Respondents Backman and Robinett petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandamus to compel the board to restore the licenses. The court found: the evidence adduced at the hearing on the accusation is insufficient to sustain the decision of revocation; the evidence before the board showed that respondents are not guilty of any of the charges alleged in the accusation or any of the violations of law charged therein; there is no substantial evidence that respondents had been guilty of any misrepresentation of facts in obtaining the licenses; there is not sufficient evidence to show that Backman made any misstatement of fact whereby he obtained any credit of three points of credit allowed him by the registrar; there is not sufficient evidence to show that Backman made any misstatement of any fact in his application or otherwise relative to his experience, as required by section 7068 of the Business and Professions Code; the evidence is conclusive that Backman neither knew of the granting of credits by the registrar until after he had been granted his license nor did he request the registrar to grant him any credits for his experience in his application or otherwise; the evidence is conclusive that Backman took the examination solely on the basis of his written application which he presented to the board in good faith; the finding of the hearing officer that the registrar, in reliance on Backman's experience record, allowed an additional three points to Backman is not true for the reason there is no misstatement of facts in the application on which the registrar could have relied.

The court further found: Backman was employed as an apprentice plumber from September 1949 until June 10, 1953; during that period he did the work of a journeyman plumber whenever required to do so; from September 1949 to July 1952 Backman was employed by Waldow; during that period he and another employee ran the business; Backman did estimating and all kinds of plumbing work, repairs, new work, and supervising the work; during the time he worked for Bivens—July 1952 to December 1953—he was recognized by his employer as a senior apprentice; soon after he went to work he worked as a journeyman and in the opinion of his employer his work was such as to qualify him as a journeyman, and he gave him a truck and let him go ahead and work in the capacity of a journeyman; Bivens paid him journeyman's wages; he remained on a journeyman's scale as long as he was employed by Bivens and he did everything a journeyman plumber would do and most of the time by himself; he did new construction jobs, repair work, fill in, estimated, sold jobs, and supervised the work of other plumbers; from January 1, 1954 to the time of the hearing Backman had full responsibility and complete managership of Waldow, did all estimating, and had full direction of men and jobs.

The court concluded that Backman did not make any misrepresentation of fact in his application. The board appeals from the judgment ordering issuance of the writ.

Appellant contends that by the use of the word "plumber" in his experience record on the application Backman represented he was a journeyman; and that the failure to state he was not constituted a misrepresentation as a matter of law.

[1] It is well settled that in a proceeding of this kind the hearing in the superior court is a trial de novo. Wisler v. California State Board of Accountancy, 136 Cal. App.2d 79, 84, 288 P.2d 322. "That the trial court in this case was 'authorized by law to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence' is well established. [Citations.] As stated in the last cited case Hohreiter v. Garrison, 81 Cal.App.2d 384, at page 402, 184 P.2d 323, at page 334, 'Thus the ultimate power of decision rests with the trial court. * * * The rule quoted[5] is as applicable in reviewing the findings of a judge as it is when considering a jury's verdict. * * * Appellate courts, therefore, if there be any reasonable doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a finding, should resolve that doubt in favor of the finding.'" Moran v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 32 Cal.2d 301, 308, 196 P.2d 20, 25; Cooper v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 35 Cal.2d 242, 246, 217 P.2d 630, 18 A.L.R.2d 593; Nardoni v. [2] Appellant argues the case as though this court has the power to reweigh evidence. That is not the law. Where, as here, the superior court reweighs the evidence and makes findings, the only function of the reviewing court is to determine whether those findings are supported by substantial evidence. Hutchinson v. Contractors' State License Board, 143 Cal.App.2d 628, 631, 300 P.2d 216.

[3] The question here is whether the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to respondents, sustains the finding of the trial court to the effect that the charges against Backman were not supported by the weight of the evidence. Manning v. Watson, 108 Cal.App.2d 705, 712, 239 P.2d 688.

The findings of the trial court are supported by substantial evidence. Backman testified that by the use of the word "plumber" in the application he intended to say that he worked as a plumber, did plumbing all by himself, that he was doing regular plumbing work, and that was the sole thing he meant. Frace, the only plumber at Waldow's when Backman first went to work there in 1948, testified that he, Applegate, and Backman took turns doing the work as it came up, with Mr. Waldow acting as dispatcher; in certain instances when more than one man went on a job the one who originally started it would supervise the work of that job and in his opinion would be considered the supervisor. From September 1, 1948 to September 1949 Backman worked for Waldow as an apprentice, and from September 1949 to July 1952 he worked for Waldow as a journeyman. Mrs. Waldow, who went to work in her husband's shop in 1951, testified that Backman shared equal responsibility for running the shop with another plumber, Frace, which included directing and supervising jobs as well as doing plumbing work by himself. In this connection she stated "they were much more efficient than a lot of people that we had there" and that Mr. Waldow hired or fired plumbers on the recommendation of Backman. Bivens, Backman's employer from July 1952 to December 1953, testified: "[A]ctually, the man was put out to work as a journeyman soon after he came to work for me. His work was such as to qualify him, in my mind, for my particular type of work, so I let the man. I didn't hold him back at all. I gave him a truck and let him go ahead and work in the capacity of a journeyman. * * * [H]is work was such that I couldn't afford to hold the man back. * * *" After the first month he paid Backman journeyman's wages.

Backman testified his experience in the plumbing field began in September 1948 when he went to work for Waldow Plumb-

5. The rule quoted is: "[O]n appeal from the judgment of the trial court, 'The rule as to our province is: "In reviewing the evidence * * * all conflicts must be resolved in favor of the respondent, and all legitimate and reasonable inferences indulged in to uphold the verdict if possible. It is an elementary * * * principle of law, that when a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court."'" ing Company as an apprentice. At that time he worked with a journeyman, delivering materials, working with the tools of the trade, and acting as an "all-round plumbing flunkie and apprentice." In July 1949 he was sent out on jobs and worked by himself. During this time Mr. Waldow's health was such that he permitted Backman, Applegate, and Frace to run the shop. The three men took turns doing the work as it came up, and whoever started a job originally would supervise the work of that job. Backman would indicate on the particular jobs he sold how they were figured and would direct the work to be done. Different techniques were employed in figuring the various jobs, and a determination had to be made in each case as to the best technique in order to save the company money and meet the requirements of the Long Beach code. He further testified that during the period from September 1949 to July 1952 he estimated, supervised, and worked on about 1,000 jobs.

Also in evidence were there certificates "In Support Of Examinee's Experience Qualifications" subscribed and sworn to, and a letter, which were filed with the board in support of Backman's application as follows: 1. A certificate by the chief plumbing inspector for the city of Long Beach which stated he had personally known Backman for seven years and that Backman had worked for Bivens and Waldow as a "plumber." The registrar had the power under section 725 to permit Backman to take the examination even though he did not "possess the specific experience required in Section 724." Section 725 provides: "When an applicant fails to possess the specific experience required in Section 724, but has some equivalent of knowledge and/or training and/or experience, the registrar is empowered to pass upon the sufficiency of such combination, and if in his judgment it makes for an equivalent of the required experience, he is authorized to certify to such fact." (Emphasis ours.) The omission of any classification such as journeyman or apprentice was apparent on the face of the application. If the registrar had deemed the application insufficient in any respect he could have returned it to Backman. Section 706 of the rules and regulations of the board which prescribes the form of application states: "Nothing contained herein shall be construed to limit the registrar's authority to seek from an applicant such other information pertinent to the character, experience and past and future methods of doing business as may be deemed necessary in order to pass upon the applicant's qualifications." Under the heading "Power of Registrar to Deny Insufficient Applications" section 710 provides: "The registrar is hereby expressly authorized to refuse the issuance of a license to any applicant who wilfully fails or refuses to give the information so requested or to furnish the required signed references." (Emphasis ours.) And section 711 provides: "Incomplete or insufficient applications shall be returned to the applicant with the tendered fee, and the reason for such rejection made known to the applicant." There was nothing in the application or in the instructions with respect to it which required the applicant to state whether he had been employed as journeyman, foreman, supervising employee, or contractor. Counsel for the board so conceded below. We do not agree with counsel for the board that no apprentice would file an application because of the statement appearing thereon that he must have four years experience "as a journeyman." If such were the fact, section 725 of the rules and regulations would be meaningless. Section 725 provides a well-defined exception to the requirements of section 724. The two provisions must be read together and as so read we do not think any apprentice who does not possess the specific experience required in section 724, but has some equivalent in knowledge, training, and experience, is excluded from applying for examination and license.

[4] The board's theory, in effect, is that the term "plumber" in the plumbing industry means "journeyman" and Backman's use of the word misled the board into believing he held the classification of journeyman. Backman did not state in his application, as appellant asserts, that he was a journeyman plumber. He stated he "Worked as" a "plumber." Backman had been doing exactly that. There was evidence that the word "plumber" may mean either a journeyman plumber or an apprentice plumber. The statement in the application that Backman worked as a "plumber" was literally true. The trial court could reasonably conclude that Backman's answer in his application stating that he "Worked as" a "plumber" followed by a detailed description of his experience was not proved untrue. The circumstances ing Co. since September 1949. He has taken membership in the Association in 1954 and has established a most enviable record of operating a most ethical shop. I have been able to examine his records and find that he has been always at the top of his class and a leader in the business. Mr. Backman graduated from High School in Nebraska and served four years in the United States Navy as a Second Class Petty Officer as a specialist in aircraft hydraulics. He was honorably discharged from the service and now operates his own business as a partner Mr. Waldow who holds the C–36. Due to the very poor health of Mr. Waldow we have encouraged Mr. Backman to try to obtain his own C–36 in order that no unpleasant circumstance might become evident in the passing of his partner."

here are such as to reasonably justify an inference that no misrepresentation of fact was made, as the trial court found. A reasonable inference from the evidence is that the licenses were not issued in reliance on any misrepresentation. The court could reasonably conclude from the evidence that Backman had had 4 years' experience as a plumber or as a supervising employee at the time he filed the application and that he had not made any misrepresentation; that his statement that he "Worked as" a "plumber" and the statement of his experience were not misrepresentations. In determining whether there is ground for disciplinary action, the matter of good faith is important. Sautter v. Contractors' State License Board, 124 Cal.App.2d 149, 156, 268 P.2d 139. See Collins v. Caminetti, 24 Cal.2d 766, 771, 151 P.2d 105, 154 A.L.R. 1141. It would be strange indeed if Backman could be found to have intentionally misrepresented by stating that he had worked as a "plumber" when the chief plumbing inspector of Long Beach, the president of Associated Plumbing Contractors of Long Beach, and Mr. Waldow had used exactly the same terminology in describing his experience. The evidence and the inferences to be drawn therefrom fully support the trial court's finding that no misrepresentation of fact was made.

[5] Appellant also contends that Backman lacked the experience required by section 724; consequently he was not qualified to possess either the individual or the partnership license; and the licenses being void, the trial court could not order them restored. There was no charge in the accusation and the hearing officer made no finding that either Backman or the partnership did not possess the qualifications of a plumbing contractor. The sole charge and finding was that Backman misrepresented material facts in his application. The issue in the superior court as stated by counsel for appellant board was whether Backman "was guilty of a material misrepresentation in violation of Section 7112 of the Business and Professions Code," and "The only question is whether or not Backman realized, was this an innocent mistake." In any event there was ample evidence that Backman, within the last 10 years immediately preceding the filing of the application, had had not less than four years experience which would qualify him for a contractor's license. The certificates of the chief plumbing inspector of Long Beach, the president of Associated Plumbing Contractors of Long Beach, and Mr. Waldow so showed. There is substantial evidence indicating Backman's experience was such that the registrar could have qualified him as a plumbing contractor under either section 724 or 725.

No. 22954.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Dec. 22, 1958.

Hearing Granted Feb. 18, 1959.

Actions, consolidated for trial, between two cities attacking annexation proceedings before the respective city councils. The Superior Court, Ventura County, Atwell Westwick, J., entered judgment adverse to one city, and such city appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tempore, held, inter alia, that where territory encompassed in city's annexation proceedings was not contiguous to city boundaries as they existed at time the proceedings were presented to city's council but was contiguous to territory subsequently annexed by city, fact that such territory was contiguous at time of adoption of ordinances of annexation was not sufficient to meet requirement of contiguity.

* Opinion vacated 341 P.2d 318.

Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇐33(9)

Annexation protests which did not represent one half of value of territory proposed to be annexed to city were insufficient to defeat the annexation proceeding. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 35300–35326.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇐33(9)

In actions between two cities attacking annexation proceedings before the respective city councils, question whether territory included within one proposed annexation was inhabited within meaning of annexation statute was one of fact. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 35303.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇐29(4)

In city annexation proceedings, resolution of fact question whether territory included within proposed annexation was inhabited within meaning of annexation statute would not depend upon whether places at which registered voters ate and slept were within boundaries of proposed annexation but upon whether such places of abode were within and were an integral part of parcel included within boundaries of proposed annexation. West's Ann.Gov. Code, § 35303.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇐33(6)

In actions between two cities attacking annexation proceedings before the respective city councils, evidence sustained finding that territory included within one of the annexations was inhabited within meaning of annexation statute. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 35303.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐891, 1122(1)

Upon application to district court of appeal to take further oral evidence and to make submitted findings of fact contrary to trial court's findings, application which was not supported by an affidavit setting forth the facts to be proved was defective. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 23(b).

6. Municipal Corporations ⇐33(8)

Where, in actions between two cities attacking annexation proceedings before the respective city councils, issue as to uninhabited character of one of territories to be annexed was clearly raised and was tried, argued, and determined upon stipulated facts, district court of appeal would not resolve conflict between stipulated facts and facts asserted by unsuccessful party and make findings contrary to those made by trial court in order to reverse the judgment. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 35303.

7. Municipal Corporations ⇐29(4)

Where contiguity of all portions of territory of proposed annexation depended upon less than a 40-foot overlap of the easterly boundary of one tract and the westerly boundary of another, the whole proposed annexation was void. West's Ann.Gov. Code, §§ 35002.5, 35302.

8. Municipal Corporations ⇐29(4)

If any part of territory within boundaries of proposed annexation under the Uninhabited Territory Act of 1939 is not contiguous, whole proceeding is void, even though a part may be contiguous, and council of annexing city does not obtain jurisdiction over any of the noncontiguous territory. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 35002.5, 35302.

9. Municipal Corporations ⇐33(8)

Where, in actions attacking city annexation proceedings, question of contiguity of particular proposed annexation had not been passed upon by trial court but was, at request of district court of appeal, presented to it on briefs, and facts were undisputed, and, if matter were retried, trial court could make no finding except one of noncontiguity, district court of appeal would make such finding. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 956a.

10. Municipal Corporations ⇐33(1)

First city annexation proceeding to be commenced will prevail over subsequent proceeding, if first proceeding is otherwise valid. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 35302, 35308, 35309.

11. Municipal Corporations ⇐29(4)

Where territory encompassed in city's annexation proceedings was not contiguous to city boundaries as they existed at time the proceedings were presented to city's council but was contiguous to territory subsequently annexed by city, fact that such territory was contiguous at time of adoption of ordinances of annexation was not sufficient to meet requirement of contiguity, despite the "intercontiguity."

12. Constitutional Law ⇐70(1)

District court of appeal could not, under guise of interpretation, legislate or interpret one act by the provisions of another when the Legislature had expressly provided that only provisions of the pertinent act should govern proceedings had thereunder. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 35100 et seq., 35104, 35141, 35300–35326.

13. Municipal Corporations ⇐33(2)

Until city annexation ordinance was effective, territory included within annexation was not territory over which city could exercise governmental function and was still only territory in process of annexation. West's Ann.Elections Code, § 1770; West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 35316, 35317.

14. Municipal Corporations ⇐33(2)

Passage of city annexation ordinance did not effectively annex territory described therein, and ordinance had no effect until conditions specified in annexation legislation had occurred or been fulfilled. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 35316–35318; West's Ann.Elections Code, § 1770.

Jerome H. Berenson, City Attorney City of Port Hueneme, and Burke, Williams & Sorensen, Los Angeles, for appellant City of Port Hueneme.

Joseph W. Goss, City Attorney Oxnard, for respondent City of Oxnard.

NOURSE, Justice pro tempore.

The above entitled matters were consolidated for trial, findings of fact and conclusions of law made in the consolidated cases, and both matters determined by a single judgment.

City of Port Hueneme, hereinafter called "Hueneme," appeals from that judgment.

The first action mentioned in the caption is an attack by Hueneme on two annexation proceedings commenced under the "Annexation of Uninhabited Territory Act of 1939" (Gov.Code, §§ 35300–35326) and which were known as Oxnard Annexations 55–3 and 55–5. These proceedings were pending before the City Council of the City of Oxnard, hereinafter called "Oxnard," at the time of the commencement of the action.[1] The second action is an attack by Oxnard upon an annexation proceeding commenced under the Uninhabited Territory Act and which at the commencement of that action was pending before the City Council of Hueneme. This proceeding was known as the Hueneme (Brucker-Lown) Annexation.

The case was tried upon a stipulated statement of facts, admissions in the pleadings, and the exhibits attached to the pleadings in the action, which include maps of the lands covered by the annexation proceedings attacked, portions of the territory that were within the limits of the respective cities at the time of the commencement of annexation proceedings attacked and the territory included within an annexation known as Oxnard Annexation No. 55–2.

A portion of Exhibit "A" attached to the complaint in the action brought by Hueneme is here reproduced as a part of this opinion together with certain symbols which we have added in order to make this map understandable when reproduced in black and white (in the original certain areas are distinguished by colors).[2]

1. Both Oxnard and Hueneme are cities of the sixth class.

2. All map references hereafter made are to the map reproduced.

② From Oxnard Map

The pertinent facts are: On March 7, 1955, and at all relevant times herein, the diagonally hatched territory shown on the map and marked "B" was within the limits of Oxnard and the diagonally hatched territory designated "A" was within the limits of Hueneme.

Prior to February 23, 1955, Oxnard Annexation 55–2 was commenced. By this proceeding it was sought to annex to Oxnard the strip of land which is shaded on the annexed map and designated "D." On February 23, 1955, ordinance Number 506 annexing D to Oxnard passed its second reading before the city council. No referendum petition was filed against this ordinance and it became fully effective on April 5, 1955. Within the territory of D were situated a portion of Oxnard's industrial wasteline and a portion of Oxnard's main interceptor sewer.

On March 4, 1955, the owner of the tract of land which borders Hueneme Road on the north and which is contiguous to D (it is horizontally hatched and marked "E" on the map) submitted to the Ventura County Boundary Commission a petition (Oxnard Annexation 55–3) for the annexation of that tract to Oxnard. On March 7 the boundary commission approved the description and on that day the city council received the petition and adopted its resolution of intention Number 1602 and established April 12, 1955, as the date of public hearing. On April 26, 1955, after public hearing, the City Council of Oxnard adopted ordinance Number 510 purporting to annex the territory within Annexation 55–3.

[1] Prior to March 8, 1955, a petition known as the "First Proposed Brucker-Lown Annexation" was submitted to the county boundary commission for approval of the description of the territory described therein. This territory was comprised of a number of parcels, each under separate ownership. The most northerly of these parcels, known as the "Brucker land," we have designated "F1." The most northerly portion of F1 is contiguous to Port Hueneme. Parcel F1 is adjoined to the south at Pleasant Valley Road by a parcel which we have designated "F2" the northerly boundary of which overlaps the southerly boundary of F1 by a distance of less than 40 feet. (Hueneme asserts the overlap is 38.59 feet, Oxnard claims it to be but 34.26 feet.) F2 is adjoined on the south by F3. F3 is adjoined on the south by a parcel of land which contains that portion of the land contained in Oxnard Annexation 55–3, which lies westerly of the southerly extension across Oxnard Annexation 55–3 of the easterly boundary of F3. This land is adjoined on the south at Hueneme Road by a large tract designated "F" on the map; as originally described this parcel included the portions of that tract which we have designated F5 and F6. At the time this petition was submitted to the boundary commission there were approximately 18 adults living within the territory encompassed by the petition, less than 12 of whom were registered voters.[3] Thereafter and before the approval of the boundaries by the boundary commission, nine of the unregistered residents registered as voters, making a total of 14 registered voters in the area. Hueneme thereupon withdrew the first proposed boundaries and substituted therefor boundaries which excluded from the territory originally described those portions thereof which are designated F4, F5 and F6. F4, F5 and F6 contained residences which were inhabited by a total of eight of said registered voters and the number of registered voters whose places of habitation were within the boundaries of the proposed annexation as those had been amended was, by the exclusion of F4, F5 and F6, reduced to six. The amended description was approved by the boundary commission on March 8 and on that date the petition known as "Port Hueneme Annexation (Brucker-Lown)" was submitted to the Hueneme City Council and on that day it adopted its resolution of intention Number 289. At the public hearing held pursuant to this resolution of intention the owners of parcels F2, F3 and that portion of Oxnard Annexation 55–3 which lay within the Brucker-Lown Annexation protested the annexation.[4] On May 4, 1955, the Council of Hueneme adopted annexation ordinance Number 84 purporting to annex the property within the Brucker-Lown Annexation to Hueneme.

On March 14, 1955, the county boundary commission approved the description contained in a petition for the annexation to Oxnard of certain uninhabited territory consisting of a rectangular-shaped piece of land connected by a strip of land to tract D (Oxnard Annexation 55–2) at its northerly boundary. This tract and strip are cross-hatched and designated on the map as "H." On March 14 the petition for the annexation of H as Oxnard Annexation 55–5 was presented to the City Council of Oxnard and on that date it passed its resolution of intention. On April 26, 1955, the City Council of Oxnard adopted ordinance Number 511 purporting to annex the territory within Annexation 55–5 to Oxnard. Within the boundaries of Annexation 55–5 is situate a portion of Oxnard's main interceptor sewer.

3. Territory is deemed uninhabited if less than 12 registered voters reside within it at the time the petition is filed with the counsel. Gov.Code, § 35303.

4. These protests did not represent one-half of the value of the territory proposed to be annexed and were therefore insufficient to defeat the proceeding. Gov.Code, § 35313.

Neither the land sought to be annexed by Oxnard Annexation 55–3 nor the land sought to be annexed by its Annexation 55–5 was, at the time of the resolutions of intention passed in connection therewith, contiguous to the city of Oxnard as its boundaries existed then, but each of them was contiguous to the lands within Oxnard Annexation 55–2 (tract D on the map). The strip of land which is a part of Oxnard Annexation 55–5 (parcel H on the map) includes a portion of the Brucker land in the Hueneme (Brucker-Lown) Annexation.

The only parcel contained in the Hueneme Bruckner-Lown Annexation which touches upon a boundary of the city of Hueneme as those boundaries existed on March 8, 1955, is parcel F1.

The Hueneme Annexation.

By paragraph 4 of the judgment appealed from it is decreed "That Port Hueneme Resolution 289, Ordinance 84 and the Brucker-Lown Annexation are void and non-effective," and by paragraph 7 of the judgment it was decreed "That the City of Port Hueneme has no rights to be declared in its favor as against the City of Oxnard or any of its Council members under the issues in these cases" and by paragraph 8 of the judgment it is decreed "That the City of Port Hueneme is not entitled to take anything by its Petition for Writ of Mandate and said Petition is denied." By paragraph 14 of the judgment Hueneme and the members of its council were ordered to cease and desist from further proceedings in connection with the Brucker-Lown Annexation and ordered to terminate that proceeding.

The trial court found as a fact that the territory described in the Brucker-Lown petition and in the resolution of intention adopted by the council of Hueneme was inhabited territory and concluded that all proceedings under that annexation were without legal sanction and void because the territory was inhabited within the meaning of Government Code, section 35303.

[2, 3] Whether the territory included within the proposed annexation was inhabited is a question of fact. The resolution of this question of fact does not depend upon whether the registered voters' places of abode, i. e. the places where they ate and slept, were within the boundaries of the proposed annexation but upon whether those places of abode were within and an integral part of a parcel which was included within the boundaries of the proposed annexation. People ex rel. Pennington v. City of Richmond, 141 Cal.App.2d 107, 111–113, 296 P.2d 351. Hueneme concedes that the question is one of fact but contends that the findings of fact and conclusions of law drawn therefrom by the trial court are unsupported by the evidence. With this we cannot agree.

It was stipulated that each of the several parcels, F1, F2, F3, F and that portion of Oxnard Annexation 55–3, which was included in the Hueneme Annexation was in separate ownership and that there was 18 adult residents within the boundaries of the first proposed Brucker-Lown Annexation. It was stipulated that of these adults less than 12, in fact but five, were registered voters. It was further stipulated that before the filing of the amended petition nine of the unregistered adults registered as voters thus raising the number of registered voters within the original boundaries to 14. It was also stipulated that the portion of the Bruckner-Lown Annexation territory which overlapped a portion of Oxnard Annexation 55–3 and which we have designated F4 on the map and those portions of parcel F in the original or first Brucker-Lown proceeding and which we have designated F5 and F6, contained three houses inhabited by eight registered voters and that the land upon which each of the three houses was situated was a part of a larger parcel owned by the same owners and included within the Brucker-Lown Annexation as amended. The original Brucker-Lown petition treated the parcels of which F4 is a part as one parcel of land and treated F5 and F6 as a part of another parcel.

[4] The facts we have alluded to support an inference that the voters inhabiting the dwellings situate on F4, F5 and F6 were residents of the parcels of which the lands upon which their dwellings were situate were an integral part and the evidence therefor amply supports the finding that the territory included within the Bruckner-Lown Annexation was inhabited. It is too evident for words that the amendment of the Brucker-Lown petition was but an attempt to leave outside the boundaries of the proposed annexation the places of abode of eight registered voters and thus to sever their places of abode from the parcels of which they were an integral part.

[5, 6] Hueneme, appellant herein, has applied to this court to take further oral evidence and to make submitted findings of fact contrary to the findings made by the trial court. The application is defective as it is not supported by an affidavit setting forth the facts to be proved, as required by rule 23(b) of the Rules on Appeal. Further, the facts related in the unverified application are to a large extent in conflict with facts recited in the stipulation of facts on which the trial court in part based its findings and would require this court to resolve that conflict in favor of Hueneme and then to make findings contrary to those made by the trial court in order to reverse the judgment. This we decline to do. Tupman v. Haberkern, 208 Cal. 256, 266, 280 P. 970; Gantner v. Gantner, 39 Cal.2d 272, 281, 246 P.2d 923; Monson v. Fischer, 107 Cal. App. 55, 289 P. 899. The issue as to the uninhabited character of the territory included within the Brucker-Lown petition is clearly tendered by both Oxnard's answer to the Hueneme petition and by Oxnard's own petition and was tried, argued and determined in the lower court upon the facts stipulated to, and there is no contention that the evidence which Hueneme seeks to produce here was not available to it at the trial of the action.

[7, 8] For another reason the judgment of the trial court that the Brucker-Lown Annexation is void should be sustained. Before property may be annexed under the Uninhabited Territory Act of 1939 that property must be contiguous to the city to which annexation is sought. Gov.Code, § 35302; People ex rel. Paganini v. Town of Corte Madera, 97 Cal.App.2d 726, 218 P.2d 810, and if any part of the territory within the boundaries of the proposed annexation is not contiguous the whole proceeding is void even though a part may be contiguous. That is to say, if any part of the territory is noncontiguous the council does not obtain jurisdiction over any of it. Johnson v. City of San Pablo, 132 Cal.App.2d 447, 454, 283 P.2d 57. As we have heretofore pointed out, the contiguity of all portions of the Brucker-Lown Annexation other than parcel F1 depends upon a less than 40 foot overlap of the easterly boundary of F1 and the westerly boundary of F2.

Section 35002.5 of the Government Code provides: "Territory shall not be deemed contiguous as the word 'contiguous' is used in this chapter if the only contiguity is based on a strip of land over 300 feet long and less than 200 feet wide exclusive of highways." This section was enacted in 1951 at the first session of the Legislature after the District Court of Appeal for the First District rendered its decision in City of Burlingame v. County of San Mateo, 90 Cal.App.2d 705, 203 P.2d 807. In that case the court had upheld an annexation by the city of Burlingame of a horseshoe-shaped strip of land 100 feet in width both ends of which wholly abutted upon the boundaries of Burlingame so that the total width of the abutment was 200 feet. It seems evident that it was the intent of the Legislature to remedy the situation illustrated by the decision in the Burlingame case by requiring that territory to be annexed must be continuously contiguous to the boundaries of the annexing city for a distance of not less than 200 feet if the territory to be annexed is over 300 feet in length and to provide that a contiguity of less than 200 feet at one point should not constitute contiguity. If this is not true then the statute has accomplished no real purpose and a strip of land 200 feet in width but which is contiguous to the city's boundaries for a distance of only two feet would meet the requirements of the statute and a city might checkerboard adjacent but otherwise noncontiguous unincorporated territory without it being practicable to service that territory as a part of the city.

Within the meaning of section 35002.5 of the Government Code that portion of F2 which is within a strip of land of the width by which F2 overlaps F1 is the strip which connects all the portions of the annexation lying south of F2 and which connects the remainder of F2 to the city. F2 and all portions of the annexation lying south thereof were therefore not contiguous to Hueneme at the time of the commencement of the proceedings.

[9] While the question of contiguity of the Brucker-Lown Annexation was not passed upon by the trial court it has, at our request, been presented here on briefs. The facts are undisputed. The trial court could, if this matter were retried, make no finding except one of noncontiguity. We, therefore, make such finding pursuant to the provisions of section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The Oxnard Annexation.

[10] Oxnard's annexation proceeding 55–3 having been first commenced, that proceeding is valid if the territory encompassed within that proceeding was contiguous to Oxnard within the meaning of section 35302 of the Government Code. Govt.Code, §§ 35308–35309. The same is true as to Oxnard's proceeding 55–5 for the Hueneme Brucker-Lown proceeding being void it did not, under section 35308 of the Government Code preclude the presentation of the petition under proceeding 55–5 to the council of Oxnard nor did it under section 35309 of the Government Code keep that council from acting thereon.

It is not and could not be asserted that the territory encompassed in either Oxnard's proceeding 55–3 or 55–5 was contiguous to the boundaries of Oxnard as they existed at the time those proceedings were presented to the City Council of Oxnard. On the other hand, it is undisputed that both of these territories were contiguous to the territory encompassed in Oxnard Annexation 55–2.[5]

The trial court found that the territories within Annexations 55–3 and 55–5 were contiguous to the territory within 55–2 and that at the time of the adoption of the ordinances of annexation as to Annexations 55–3 and 55–5 "absolute contiguity existed between the City of Oxnard and the territory" comprising each of said annexations, and concluded that, as a matter of law, contiguity to 55–2 was "sufficient and adequate contiguity to permit valid commencement" of said annexation proceedings 55–3 and 55–5 and that the absolute contiguity which existed at the time of the passage of the ordinances of annexation made valid the adoption of those ordinances. On the basis of these findings and conclusions the trial court decreed Oxnard's proceedings 55–3 and 55–5 valid.

Oxnard makes numerous contentions to uphold this portion of the decree. It asserts that section 35302, Government Code, does not require contiguity at the inception of proceedings to annex uninhabited territory but only requires contiguity at the time those proceedings become effective and the new territory is in fact annexed. On this basis they contend that inasmuch as annexation proceeding 55–2 was fully effective at the time of the adoption of the ordinances under the proceedings in Annexations 55–3 and 55–5 (Ordinances Nos. 510 and 511) the conditions of section 35302 had been met and the annexations were valid.

5. Oxnard concedes that Ordinance 506 providing for the annexation of 55–2 did not become effective until March 25, 1955, and was not effective at the time of the initiation of the proceedings for the annexation of 55–3 or 55–5.

In support of their argument they direct our attention to the fact that in codifying the "Annexation of Uninhabited Territory Act of 1939" the Legislature combined in section 35302 the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the act and in so doing did not carry into section 35302 the language of section 2 which provided "[a]ny such territory so proposed to be annexed * * * must be contiguous thereto" (emphasis added); thus demonstrating, so they claim, the intent of the Legislature not to require contiguity at the inception of the proceedings.

[11] We do not believe this contention is sound. In the first place, it overlooks the fact that the change in the wording of the statute was proposed by the code commission which, in its report submitting the redraft of the 1939 Act as well as the redraft of the "Annexation Act of 1913" and other statutes for codification in the Government Code, expressly stated that it was not its intention by its proposed codification to make any substantive changes in the statutes codified.[6]

In the second place, the statutes of 1939 and 1913 were re-enacted and codified as a part of the Government Code by one act of the Legislature (Stats.1949, ch. 79). By this act, the statutes of 1913 were codified as article 2, of chapter 1, part 2, division 2, title 4 of the Government Code and the 1939 Act, as article 5.

By section 35101[7] it is provided that the provisions of article 2 alone shall apply to proceedings for the annexation of inhabited territory and by section 35301 it is provided that in proceedings for the annexation of uninhabited territory the provisions of article 5 alone shall apply.[8]

The Act of 1913 as originally enacted and as codified expressly permitted the commencement of proceedings for the annexation of territory, which although not contiguous to the city, was contiguous to territory which had reached a certain stage in the process of its annexation to the city and expressly provided for the termination of annexation proceedings for such noncontiguous territory should the proceedings for the annexation of the territory to which it was then contiguous not become effective. Gov.Code, §§ 35104, 35141.

The Legislature, therefore, in codifying the 1939 Act, was fully cognizant of the provisions of the 1913 Act as codified and it would be unreasonable to hold that, in specifically providing that the provisions of article 5 (Gov.Code, §§ 35300–35326) shall alone govern proceedings for the annexation of uninhabited territory, the Legislature intended, by the omission of the words of "the territory proposed to be annexed" from the original statute, to provide for proceedings such as were provided for in the Act of 1913. See People ex rel. Paganini v. Town of Corte Madera, supra, 97 Cal.App.2d 726, 218 P.2d 810.

That this was not the intention of the Legislature we think is demonstrated by the results that would occur from such interpretation of the statute. If the inter-

"The commission in its work of revision and codification has adopted a definite policy not to make substantive changes, but to confine its work to a compilation, consolidation, and clarification of the existing law. Such changes in wording as are made, are made to resolve ambiguities or to conform with administrative practice and legislative intent. The revision and codification will present the existing law in such form as to facilitate greatly the making of such substantive changes as are found to be necessary." Report of the California Code Commission, Legislative Session of 1949.

pretation contended for should be upheld a city could initiate proceedings to annex territory far distant from its boundaries (Gov.Code, § 35310) and thus under the provisions of sections 35308 and 35309 of the Government Code exclude all other municipalities from initiating proceedings for the annexation of that territory until such time as the council of the city first initiating proceedings had adopted an ordinance disapproving the proceedings which it had initiated.

Oxnard asserts, however, that the result we have suggested may be avoided by the court's interpreting section 35302 so as to make it applicable only when what it terms "intercontiguity" exists, i. e. when the uninhabited territory to be annexed is contiguous to territory as to which other annexation proceedings are pending. In effect it would have us, by judicial fiat, read into the 1939 Act provisions similar to the provisions of sections 35104 and 35141.

[12] We cannot, under the guise of interpretation, in effect legislate, nor can we interpret one act by the provisions of another where the Legislature has expressly provided that only the provisions of the pertinent act shall govern the proceedings had thereunder.

Oxnard also directs our attention to In re Lancaster City Ordinance No. 20–1952, 374 Pa. 543, 98 A.2d 33. It was in this case that the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania coined the phrase "intercontiguity" and while its decision supports Oxnard's contention we are not bound by it, nor does its reasoning appeal to us.

[13, 14] Oxnard also asserts that despite the fact that ordinance Number 506 (annexing the territory without Oxnard 55–2) was not effective (Elec.Code, § 1770) but was subject to referendum at the time proceedings were initiated for the annexation of 55–3 and 55–5 and despite the fact that the 55–2 proceedings only became effective upon the filing of a certified copy of ordinance Number 506 with the Secretary of State (§§ 35316 and 35317), the territory encompassed by proceeding 55–2 nevertheless became a part of Oxnard upon the second reading of the ordinance and that therefore 55–3 and 55–5 were contiguous to that city at the time of the commencement of those proceedings. It argues that the 30 days would elapse in "due course of time" and that the transmission of a certified copy of the ordinance to the Secretary of State and the filing of that document with him were purely administrative in character. This contention is without merit for the reason that until the ordinance was effective the territory included within the annexation was not territory over which Oxnard could exercise governmental function and was still only territory in the process of annexation. Oxnard relies upon Rafferty v. City of Covina, 133 Cal.App.2d 745, 285 P.2d 94, to support its contention. There is language used by the court in this decision (133 Cal.App.2d at page 754, 285 P.2d at page 100) which standing alone would seemingly justify the argument made. The court there, however, did not pass upon the question as to whether or not the mere passage of the ordinance constitutes annexation so as to give the annexing city jurisdiction over a subsequent annexation proceeding at a time prior to the effective date of the original ordinance but only passed upon the question as to whether a statute passed after the adoption of the original ordinance acted retrospectively to void an ordinance passed before the enactment of the statute. The decision has no bearing upon the question presented here, viz., Does the passage of an ordinance effectively annex the territory described therein? This question must be answered in the negative under the express provisions of 35316, 35317 and 35318 of the Government Code and section 1770 of the Election Code, for under these sections the ordinance has no effect until the conditions specified therein have occurred or been fulfilled.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed insofar as it decrees that "Hueneme Brucker-Lown Annexation" is void and is reversed insofar as it decrees that the Oxnard Annexation 55–3 and Oxnard Annexation 55–5 are valid and effective. Each party to bear its own costs on appeal.

In The Matter of the ESTATE of Thomas W. WARNER, Jr., Deceased.

Anita Lipton WARNER, Contestant and Appellant,

v.

Jean WARNER, Petitioner and Respondent.

Civ. 23096.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Jan. 2, 1959.

Hearing Denied Feb. 25, 1959.

Proceeding brought by decedent's fourth wife contesting the admission to probate of a will under which decedent left his estate to his son by his second wife and son's mother. From adverse order and judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Fletcher Bowron, J., the fourth wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that evidence was insufficient to establish that decedent, who allegedly was a chronic alcoholic and who had been drunk on various occasions and had taken several cures, lacked testamentary incapacity at time that he executed will.

Order and judgment affirmed.

See, also, 329 P.2d 79.

1. Trial ⇐139(1), 142

A motion for a directed verdict, after jury has been discharged upon its failure to agree, should be denied when there is any substantial evidence, or from the evidence any legitimate inference may be drawn which would support a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 630.

2. Wills ⇐55(6)

In proceeding brought by decedent's fourth wife contesting the admission to probate of a will under which decedent left his estate to his son by his second wife and son's mother, evidence was insufficient to establish that decedent, who allegedly was a chronic alcoholic and who had been drunk on various occasions and had taken several cures lacked testamentary incapacity at time that he executed the will.

3. Wills ⇐370

Affidavit which was not before trial court when order denying motion for revocation of probate of will was made could not be considered on appeal from that order.

4. Wills ⇐52(1)

It takes more than mere guesswork and general conjecture to support a finding contrary to presumption that a testator is competent.

5. Wills ⇐55(6)

Evidence that a testator was a chronic alcoholic and had been drunk on various occasions and had taken several cures does not prove testamentary incapacity unless it is also proved that time of decedent's drunkenness coincided with time of his execution of testamentary document.

6. Wills ⇐52(1)

In absence of proof that intemperate use of alcoholic beverages has actually destroyed testamentary capacity, no presumption will be indulged that it has thus been destroyed.

7. Wills ⇐55(10)

Devise to testator's only son and to son's mother, who was testator's second divorced wife, and disinheriting of testator's fourth wife, who was supported under a decree of separate maintenance and who denied decedent divorce he frequently requested during last seven years of his life, was not such an unnatural or unjust will as could be considered as any evidence of testator's alleged testamentary incapacity.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Anita Lipton Warner, also known as Nora Warner, appeals from the order and judgment denying her motion for revocation of the admission to probate of her husband's will and codicil.

They were married in 1946. She was the fourth and last wife of the late Thomas W. Warner, Jr. Anita instituted an action for her separate maintenance in 1948. She was given the exclusive use of their home, and her husband was ordered to pay her regularly for her separate maintenance. She then, and continuously thereafter, refused to divorce him, although she instituted and prosecuted many court proceedings against him from the time of their separation until his death in 1955. Examples of such litigous conduct on her part are an attempt to enjoin and restrict decedent's business activity and to impound his assets, and her attempted intervention in decedent's action to recover damages for the loss of his eye which was injured in 1950 by a ricocheting bullet as he walked by a shooting gallery at Catalina.

The will and codicil admitted to probate left the bulk of his estate to his son and to the mother of his only child, his second divorced wife, the respondent, Jean Warner.

About 500 pages of Clerk's Transcript, over 1600 pages of Reporter's Transcript, and 39 exhibits make up the record on appeal.

June 8, 1955, the will dated July 2, 1953 and codicil dated January 27, 1955, were admitted to probate and Letters Testamentary issued to Jean Warner and Manuel Ruiz, decedent's attorney who drew the will for him.

November 23, 1955, appellant filed her "contest of will", seeking revocation of the probate of the will and codicil, on the grounds that at the times of their execution decedent was incompetent and acting under the undue influence of attorney Manuel Ruiz and Jean Warner.

Jury trial was had, three special verdicts returned, and the jury reported its failure to agree as to the balance of the special verdicts submitted. Then, on respondent's motion under Section 630 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California, Judge Bowron directed a verdict confirming the admission to probate of the will and granting a mistrial with reference to the codicil. Appellant's motion for a new trial was denied.

[1] As urged by appellant, a motion under Section 630 for a directed verdict, after the jury has been discharged upon its failure to agree, should be denied when there is any substantial evidence, or from the evidence any legitimate inference may be drawn which would support a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. Only the following verdicts were returned by the jury:

[2] With respect to the due execution of the will dated July 2, 1953, and the codicil dated January 27, 1955, almost identical verdicts were returned, as follows:

"1. That it was signed by Thomas W. Warner, Jr.

"2. That at the time of signing by Thomas W. Warner, Jr. he stated to the two witnesses, Martha Jamin and Olive Kephart, (Alexander Ruiz and Olive Kephart, as to the codicil) that it was his will (codicil).

"3. That when Thomas W. Warner, Jr. signed the will (codicil), Thomas W. Warner, Jr. signed in the presence of the said two witnesses.

"4. That the two witnesses then signed the will (codicil) in the presence of Thomas W. Warner, Jr.

"5. That the two witnesses signed the will (codicil) in the presence of each other."
